3 1430 02937414 9

a31430029374149b
UNIV. OF MD. COLLEGE PARK

LSC

3·2·12·7

H. F. WARNESON & CO.
Bookbinders
PRINTCRAFT BUILDING
WASHINGTON, D. C.

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2015

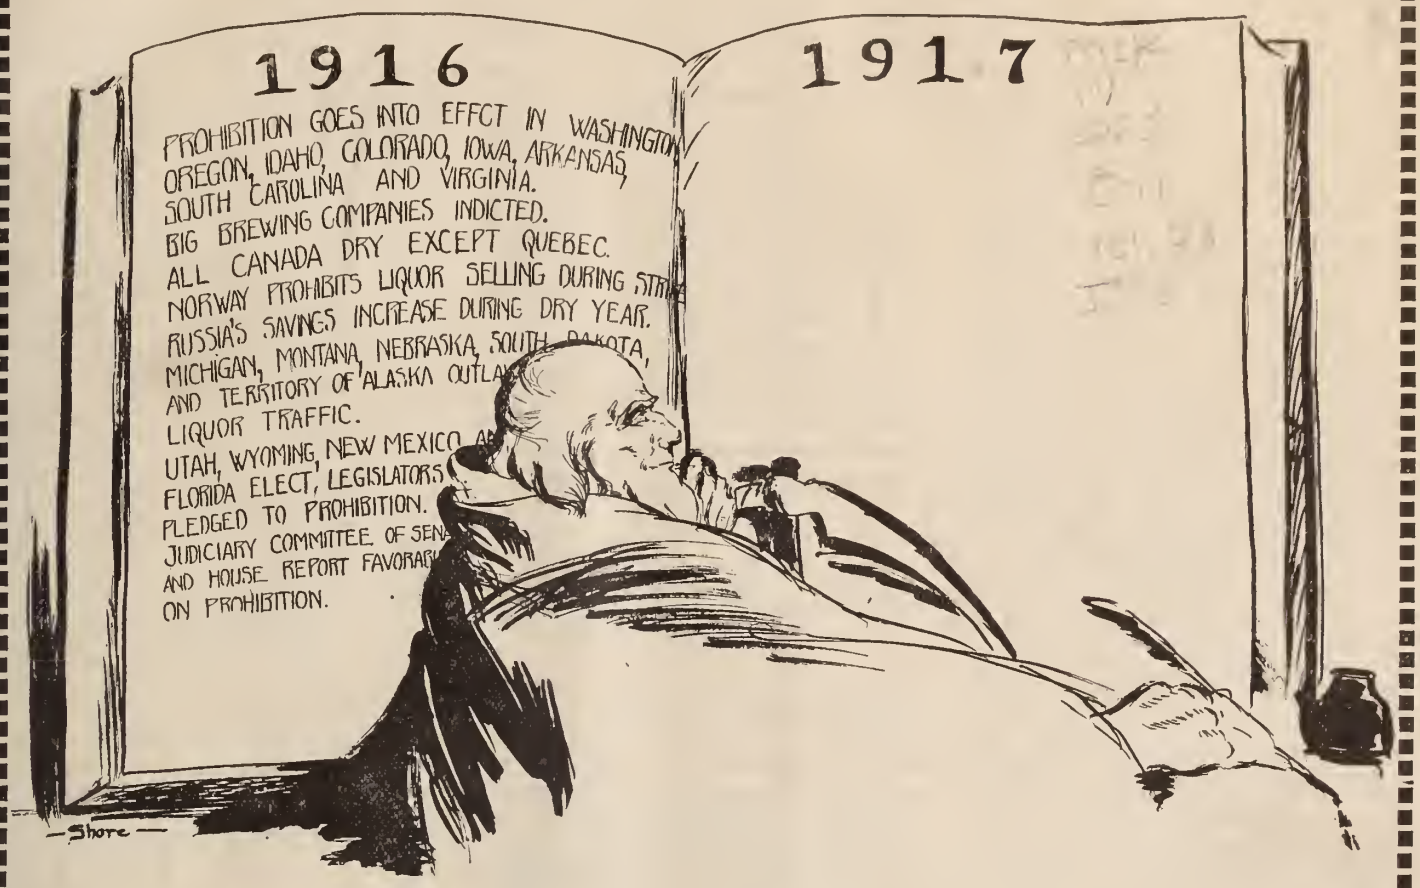
https://archive.org/details/unionsignaljourn43woma

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JANUARY 4, 1917 | No. 1



A New Year Message

A joyful privilege is ours to help chronicle upon the fair white page of the year of our Lord 1917 greater victories than distinguish the glowing record of 1916. The good old year is gone. Encircled with God's power, courageously we face the new. Let us make it the pathway of our King.

Anna A. Gordon

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PROHIBITION BILL TO BE VOTED ON BY THE SENATE JANUARY 9—NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION MEASURE FAVORABLY REPORTED BY JUDICIARY COMMITTEE OF SENATE AND HOUSE—CHRISTMAS IN WASHINGTON

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation

Congress adjourned December 22 for the Christmas holidays, to reconvene January 2. In the three weeks of the session the House passed five government supply measures, the urgent deficiency, legislative, Indian, District, and diplomatic and consular appropriation bills, more than ever were passed before in the brief period preceding a holiday recess. Railroad legislation suggested by President Wilson failed to get much attention in either branch. The House Commerce committee decided to await initiative action in the Senate, where, beginning January 2, the Senate Commerce committee will hold hearings on the proposed railroad arbitration measure and the bill authorizing the President to take over the railroad, telephone, and telegraph lines in case of military necessity. At the conclusion of the hearings the railroad measure in some form will be pressed as an amendment to the pending bill to enlarge the Interstate Commerce commission. Efforts in the House to extend for one year the life of the joint commission investigating railroad problems were checked, to be renewed immediately after the holidays.

STATUS OF PROHIBITION MEASURES

The Senate passed the immigration bill with its literacy test provision and it is now in conference. As has been previously stated in the Washington Letter, the Senate began consideration of the District prohibition bill and fixed January 9 for a vote. The resolution for the national prohibition amendment was reported favorably by the Judiciary committee of the House, and on the day of adjournment the Senate Judiciary by a vote of 13 to 3 reported the amendment favorably with a change of wording, as follows:

Section 1. The sale, manufacture, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes are hereby prohibited.

Sec. 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation.

The amendment will be pressed by its friends in each house at every opportunity, and prohibition senators have announced their intention of attempting to obtain consideration of the amendment soon after the holidays. Representative Aswell of Louisiana announced to the House that he should join the advocates of national prohibition and would vote for the District of Columbia prohibition bill also.

BOTH REPUBLICANS AND DEMOCRATS FAIL OF MAJORITY IN HOUSE

Revised figures on returns of the last election just received in Washington show definitely that neither Democrats nor Republicans will have a majority in the next House, necessary to elect a speaker, and that a handful of members of minor parties will determine which side shall control the organization. The personnel now stands: Republicans, 214; Democrats, 213; Independents, 2; Progressives, 2; Prohibitionists, 1; Socialist, 1; contested, 2. A majority is 218, hence, should either Democrats or Republicans win both of the contests, they still would be short of a majority. All of the Independents are maintaining strict silence regarding their attitude on the speakership, but the leaders in both Democratic and Republican parties are agreed on how most of them will vote, provided caucuses are held and solidarity maintained by the two old parties. There is no question about the Democrats voting solidly for Speaker Clark, but there are sure signs of strife among the Republicans. Prominent members have announced their opposition to Representative Mann. Every effort will be made by leaders, however, to have the solid support of Republicans assured in conference before voting starts.

As soon as Congress adjourned, many members left for their homes, and at the close of the recess will bring back with them members of their families, to remain until March 4 when the Sixty-fourth Congress ends.

CHRISTMAS IN WASHINGTON

Christmas in Washington was observed with all its accustomed fervor. At the White House there was a large family gathering, President Wilson entering into the spirit of the occasion with all the zest of youth. With children and grandchildren the White House family made a happy group. One of the most delightful features of the day was the revival of an old time custom of singing Christmas carols and old familiar hymns in the plaza adjoining the White House, and on the steps of the United States Treasury opposite. It is estimated that between 20,000 and 30,000 voices made up the chorus which, to the accompaniment of the full Marine band of forty pieces, rendered a program of eight old familiar Christmas hymns. Representatives of all the churches and schools of the District were present, as well as groups from various other institutions of the city. The director of music in the public schools led the chorus. A large body of boy scouts assisted in patrolling the crowd, and distributing song leaflets. President and Mrs. Wilson accompanied by members of the family joined the throng, and sang the old hymns with probably the largest chorus ever assembled in the District for the singing of Christmas carols. During the rendering of the program a number of automobiles and auto-trucks were brought up to take groups of carol singers to various hospitals and institutions throughout the city to sing their carols for the inmates.

STATUS OF PROHIBITION MEASURES

Resolution for National Prohibition Amendment Reported by Judiciary Committees of House and Senate, with recommendation that it pass.

District of Columbia Prohibition bill to be voted on January 9 in the Senate.

CHRISTMAS DINNER FOR SENATE PAGES

Though Vice-President Marshall was in Arizona spending Christmas, he had instructed Col. Halsey, assistant on the floor of the Senate, in charge of the pages, to see that his annual custom of giving the pages of the Senate a bountiful Christmas dinner was carried out in his absence. The manager of the Senate restaurant provided an elaborate menu for the boys. The Vice-president is ever thoughtful of the lads, and has given them this feast each Christmas since he has been in office.

Another glimpse at Washington's Christmas shows one hundred needy boys standing outside one of the large clothing stores waiting their turn to enter and be fitted with brand new overcoats and shoes, the annual gift of this generous firm to white and colored alike, and as the boys filed in a few at a time, they were fitted as carefully as any paying customer. Those receiving coats had in their possession a certified card given them by the Associated Charities which they presented to the treasurer of the firm who was in charge of the distribution. The careworn mothers accompanying the boys were given a dollar bill to buy the Christmas dinner. There was a doctor in attendance at the store to care for any who should need medical aid. There were also coffee and sandwiches on hand for any who might display signs of hunger, and it is needless to say that corner of the store was well patronized by hungry boys.

FOOD AND CLOTHING FOR DESTITUTE SYRIANS AND ARMENIANS

The United States naval collier "Caesar" sailed for Beirut, Syria, Sunday, December 24, with $250,000 worth of food, clothing and medical supplies for the destitute people of Syria and Armenia. The food and clothing were purchased with funds collected by the American committee for Armenian and Syrian relief and the medical supplies were contributed by the Red Cross. The relief committee have announced that besides this shipment it cabled $410,000 for distribution at inland centers which cannot receive supplies from the cargo of the "Caesar." This is the ship for which Madam Layyah Barakat spoke so earnestly at the Indianapolis Convention, declaring it might help save some of her own loved ones, as she had not been able to hear from them in two long years. Cleveland H. Dodge, a member of the relief committee, said the "Caesar" would be joyfully welcomed by American missionaries and consuls in Syria, who had not seen the American flag in that harbor for many months.

MEMORIAL MEETING IN HONOR OF SUFFRAGE LEADER

Mrs. Inez Milholland Boissevain, the young suffragist leader who lived and died for the emancipation of women, has been honored as she scarcely could have hoped to be honored had she lived out her life and seen the cause of equal suffrage triumph. In Statuary Hall, surrounded by the silent figures of the great, among them our own Frances E. Willard, was held on Christmas day a wonderfully impressive memorial service. Speakers of national repute paid eloquent tribute to her untiring work. The hall was beautifully decorated with the suffrage colors, yellow and purple and white, exquisite music was rendered, and there was a procession from the House office building, led by a boys' vested choir, and prominent people representing labor, peace, prison reform, and other organizations were present.

December 28, 1916

$6,363,897 INCREASE IN 1916 SAVINGS

BANKS SHOW HUGE GAIN, TOTALS IN 24 INSTITUTIONS REACHING $31,924,939—25,233 ACCOUNTS OPENED DURING LAST TWELVE MONTHS

"Evidences of Denver's unprecedented prosperity during 1916 are coming like an avalanche through the medium of annual totals and accountings," says the Rocky Mountain News. "The evidences have been here for many months, manifesting themselves through all avenues of trade and industry, but even the most confident and assured Denverite must experience a thrill of surprise and gratification when he observes some of the proofs in the aggregate," is the comment of the Colorado paper.

"Never before in the history of Denver has there been achievement equal to the new and remarkable record in the number and volume of savings accounts. In twenty-four banks the deposits aggregate $31,924,939 for 1916, as against $25,561,562 in 1915, an increase of $6,363,377, or approximately 22 per cent. The adding of 25,233 new accounts during the year, many of which were deposits of women and children, gives the figures a significant aspect. The total number of accounts is 60,000.

"During the year settlers from all parts of the United States took up public land in Colorado to the amount of 2,327,987 acres. Most of these were taken in 320-acre tracts, the maximum now permitted as homestead entry.

"It is a striking parallel in Denver's financial year that, while her savings were unprecedentedly big, her disbursements indicate a corresponding increase. There is not a branch of civic and commercial life that has not felt the influence of prosperity. Denver has bought more automobiles, built more houses and worn better clothes than ever before.

"Estimates based on close calculations by experts show that the total value of automobiles bought during the year is approximately $13,600,000. The value of accessories sold throughout the state is placed at $5,000,000, which brings the gross total of auto sales to approximately $18,600,000. The total number of cars owned by Coloradoans is 44,000 which signifies that there is a car to every twenty-three persons on the basis of the last census. Seventeen thousand machines were purchased in 1916.

Postoffice Receipts Larger

"Total financial transactions of the Denver postoffice furnish another emphatic proof of prosperous conditions. They will show a gain of more than $1,000,000 over the record of 1915. It is expected that the total business will amount to more than $9,000,000 for the year. In the postal savings bank of the Denver postoffice, approximately $535,000 was deposited, a gain of between $50,000 and $60,000 over the amount deposited in 1915.

"The record made by the banks places Denver in the lead of cities of its size in the country, both in the number of new accounts opened, the number now carried, and in the volume of deposits. The figures indicate both that former depositors are putting more money in the banks than ever before, and that the new depositors are exceeding the average record of former depositors."

"There are many contributing reasons for this wonderful showing," said W. A. Peterson, president of the Pioneer State bank. "We are enjoying a steady increase in population, new business channels have opened new sources of earnings, and there are fewer temptations for spending money than ever before.

"The thrift campaigns and the special purpose accounts started by various banks have given a decided impetus to savings and have resulted in hundreds of people contracting the saving habit. It was six or seven years ago that the German-American bank, co-operating with the Rocky Mountain News, distributed small banks over the city and announced that each person who took $1 to the bank would be given another $1 with which to start a savings account. Other banks started similar campaigns and in various ways sought to encourage the habit of saving.

"The Christmas savings account started by the Home bank, and various special purpose campaigns by the Interstate, the City bank, Merchants, Broadway, one or two national banks and trust companies, started the saving impulse with many people. The growth has been steady but slow until this year, when in January the tide of prospective depositors in the various banks swelled into unprecedented numbers with the results as shown in the statements of the various banks."

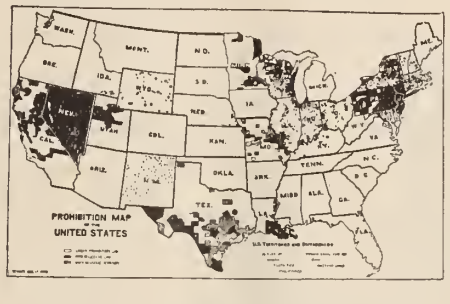
HISTORY IN THE MAKING

France Prohibits Alcoholic Imports

According to a report from the International News Service, the ban on alcohol in France has been further tightened by a decree prohibiting the importation into France of brandies or other alcoholic liquors of foreign origin. The American consul at Paris cabled the news to the State Department December 28.

Illinois Centennial Legislature May Pass Prohibition Measure

An effort is to be made at the coming session of the Illinois legislature to have passed a prohibition measure, with a referendum attachment to be submitted to the people in the fall of 1918, the centennial anniversary of the state of Illinois. In this bill is a provision that women shall be given the right to vote on the proposition. A majority of the upper house of the legislature seems to be in favor of it. It is believed by the prohibition leaders of the state that if the question can be referred to the people, it will receive a majority. Eighty-five per cent of the state is now dry under township option; this includes fifty-three counties. Full suffrage for women is another subject that is expected to receive consideration at the centennial legislature.



HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
Oklahoma	Arizona
North Dakota	Iowa
North Carolina	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
Tennessee	Michigan
Alabama	Montana
West Virginia	South Dakota
Virginia	Nebraska
Washington	Alaska

Third St. Louis Brewery Closes Its Doors

St. Louis liquor men appear to be suffering acutely from the encroachments of prohibition. Within the past few days the Forest Park Brewing company has filed a petition in bankruptcy. This is the third St. Louis brewery inside of two months to wind up its affairs in anticipation of national prohibition. The first two were the Mutual Brewery, which was closed by order of the referee in bankruptcy on November 14, and the Excelsior Brewery, which announced that it would close its doors on January 1.

Boston Roads Interfere with "Personal Liberty"

An order has been issued by the Boston & Maine Railroad that intoxicated persons will not be tolerated within the North Station and its environs, and no intoxicated persons will be permitted to board trains through the terminal station or any other station on the system at any time. Fifteen officers in civilians' clothing have been detailed to enforce this ruling, and three members of the Boston police force have also been informed of the new order.

The Boston Elevated Railway company has taken similar action, and an increased number of officers are on duty to see that intoxicated persons are kept out of the stations and cars of the company. These officers or detectives have been appearing in court to prosecute the persons whom they have turned over to the police.

Song of the New Year

Tonight the deep-voiced bells peal out the dying of the year,
Forever sealed the word, the deed, the laughter and the tear,
The path that stretches there behind, fast fading to our sight,
More wonderful it was than paths men hew by skill and might;
For we who walked that Old Year way kept even step with Him
Whose brightness makes the glory of earth's fairest dawns grow dim.
Peal out, O bells, your triumph tones! This be the truth you ring:
The Old Year path that lies behind was the highway of a King!

This morn, the joy-swung bells proclaim the birthday of the year,
No gray forecasting in their chime, nor any drip of tear;
But Joy! Joy! Joy! they give the world—the good clean joy of men
Who, straightened from the tasks they love, bend to those tasks again,
The New Year path is waiting us, more wonderful, more strange,
Than any roadway hewn of strength, where toiling engines range;
A stately way for stately tread—Bells! know ye how to ring?
O summon men, this great New Year, to walk forth with their King!

—Ada Melville Shaw

MOBILIZING FOR PEACE

JANE A. STEWART

"Let Us Mobilize for Peace!" This is the clarion call which has gone out among the peacemakers upon whom there has never been a greater demand than now. That this call has been heard is shown by the response. Surprising as it may seem to the uninformed never were peace agencies more active in this country than today. The old, established groups are hard at work. Strong and flourishing new movements have sprung up. All are laboring in diverse ways to minimize the war menace; to prevent and expel the serious attacks of the war infections sent broadcast by the frightful conditions of Europe.

It should be more generally realized that since the European war began there has been a big boom in peace activity in the United States. At least a dozen notable new organizations have come into being.

The Woman's Peace Party, formed January, 1915, with Miss Jane Addams, Chicago, as president, aims to enlist all American women in the effort to arouse the nations to respect the sacredness of human life and to substitute law for war; to educate youth in the ideals of peace; to enfranchise women; to substitute the "concert of nations" for the "balance of power," and international police for rival armies and navies; and to oppose militarism everywhere.

NATION-WIDE CAMPAIGN AGAINST WAR BUDGET

A nation-wide campaign against the huge war budget and militaristic spirit has been actively conducted during 1916 by the newly formed American Union Against Militarism, led by Paul U. Kellogg, Lillian D. Wald, Prof. George Kirchwey, Rev. J. H. Holmes and other New York humanitarians, among the chief endeavors being a remarkably appealing exhibit; mass meetings in large cities; and a public appeal to President Wilson, "against the 'preparedness' program, so-called, because it is unnecessary, because it endangers our most precious institutions, and because, in the last and true analysis, no one can measure its cost."

The Association to Abolish War (formed recently in Massachusetts) urges the abolition of force as an expedient or justifiable means for nations to employ in advancing their interests and also that the United States, as the only great power not at war, owes a duty to the world to exert a positive influence for enduring peace by a policy expressing good-will.

High ideals are held by the Fellowship of Reconciliation (started in England and in the United States since the war) whose members base their personal refusal to take part in war or training for war upon universal brotherhood as expressed in the life and teachings of Christ. Prof. Walter Rauschenbusch of Rochester University, N. Y., and Dr. Rufus Jones of Haverford College, Pa., are among the leaders of this fine, spiritual fellowship, which has held successful meetings in many places.

PEACE

What was the first prophetic word that rang
When down the starry sky the angels sang,
That night they came as envoys of the Birth—
What word but peace, "peace and good will on earth?"
And what was the last word the Master said
That parting night when they broke brother-bread,
That night He knew men would not let Him live—
Oh, what but "peace I leave" and "peace I give?"
And yet behold; near twice a thousand years
And still the battle-wrath, the grief, the tears.
Let mercy speed the hour when swords shall cease,
And men cry back to God, "There shall be peace!"

—Edwin Markham.

Another active new organization is the International Army for the Promotion of World Peace, one of whose propositions is to "pair off" the amicable citizens of one country against another in order "to dissolve the standing armies of the future."

A new compromise group which has made great headway during 1916 is the League to Enforce Peace, which now has branches in over thirty states, for "preparedness and peace," that is, to use force to compel nations to arbitrate their differences.

WANTED—BOYS FOR PEACE

"Two million boys to join the peace movement for every one million the war party gathers," is the plan of the World's Federation of Boys, that "they may be led to think out the right and to attain unto it through the paths of reason and the processes of peace."

Other manifestations of the peace spirit are found in the organization of the Committee on American-Japanese Relations; the American Neutral Conference Committee, which is circulating peace petitions among the citizens of every belligerent nation, and proposes a Peace conference of neutral nations; the Inter-American Peace Committee for the mutual discussion of problems affecting this nation and Mexico, and the Collegiate Anti-Militaristic League, composed of college men opposed to militarism.

ANTE-BELLUM PEACE ORGANIZATIONS

This country at the outbreak of the war already rejoiced in great peace organizations, including the veteran American Peace Society; the well-endowed World Peace Foundation; the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, with its great $600,000 yearly income; the American Association for International Conciliation, formed of eminent thinkers; the American Interparliamentary Union, made up of legislators; the American School Peace League, composed of educators; the Peace department of the National W. C. T. U., formed of temperance reformers, and the endowed Church Peace Union, with a membership of clergymen and church members.

All of these organizations with hopeful peace propaganda have been actively and efficiently at work since the war began in constructive public service. The Carnegie Endowment for International Peace alone distributed a quarter of a million publications last year, sent emissaries to the South American republics and among other efforts made possible the final organization of a society of international law in each of the twenty other American Republics.

Courses of instruction in such subjects as international relations, also peace prize essay contests, are among the varied activities of the American Association for International Conciliation.

Other societies are co-operating along similar lines, holding peace meetings, distributing literature, circulating petitions and enlisting members, with greater activity than ever before.

With true and steady conviction the tremendous peace army of the United States, well disciplined and well organized, is constantly adding to its numbers and efficiency for the promotion of a lasting and definite peace around the world.

BOSTON TEMPERANCE FORCES MAKE BRAVE FIGHT

SIX MASSACHUSETTS CITIES WON FOR PROHIBITION

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON, President Massachusetts W. C. T. U.

"Are we down-hearted? No." It is not alone Great Britain's soldiers who cheer one another by these brave words for hardly had the news of our defeat come to the allied temperance forces of Boston before the telephones were ringing with our cheery calls: "Well, we just have it to do all over again and soon we must win."

It is a little difficult to account for the overwhelming majority for license when so much genuine effort had been put forth and the signs seemed to point so unmistakably to a greatly increased "No" vote if not to a complete victory. And yet it ought not to be strange for us who know "the tricks and the manners" of the liquor trade to account for anything at their hands. Unquestionably they had the scare of their lives so far as Boston is concerned and they put forth almost superhuman efforts. In one precinct alone nineteen automobiles were in their employ all day long and the number was doubtless as large in other parts of the city. The temperance forces put up a brave fight but when it comes to competing with the money of the liquor men we are far from being on an equal footing in the Old Bay state.

Billy Sunday's appeals aroused intense enthusiasm but, alas, his audiences came from all over the state and from other states as well and probably not one-tenth of those who heard him and recorded their determination to vote against the liquor traffic cast their votes in Boston. We shall hear from them later when the towns vote in the spring. Already we are hearing from them in the six cities won from the wet ranks during the past fortnight. The last two of this number are Fitchburg and North Adams, the latter voting "No" for the first time in twenty-nine years. The sentiment created will not go for naught even if it does nothing more than bring forth fruit in the lives of the young people, under the voting age, who have been inspired in this campaign. My own grandson said the other day: "My, if Boston votes dry and then gets woman suffrage won't I be proud of it!" He will have the chance to be proud, please God, by the time he casts his own first ballot.

It is almost impossible for one at a distance to realize all the forces which enter into the life of a great Eastern city. It has its problems quite as distinct as those of the West or South. Conservatism and self-satisfaction are perhaps the two elements which most characterize the Boston of today. There are certain distinct religious cleavages, also, which are doubtless apparent in other parts of the country but which come into especial prominence here. When the official leader of a great church not only fails to give his influence for no-license but lets it be distinctly understood that he favors the other side of the question—although making no official declaration—the conclusion is almost a foregone one. An unquestioned desire that "the fanatics" at the Tabernacle should not feel that they were ruling Boston entered in as another factor.

Perhaps the real "No" element of the city was shown in the 30,000 odd votes which were registered against the saloon. They very closely approximated the number voting "No" last year, although the "Yes" vote was so augmented this year as to raise the majority from 14,000 to 23,000. The Boston Post in commenting on the result said the vote must not be construed as one against temperance, or even against the policy of prohibition for state or nation. It was simply the registering of the conviction of the voters of Boston that for this city at the present time license is the best method for dealing with the liquor question. The editorial also gave the saloon men of the city warning that they must not construe the vote as being in favor of their business or as warranting any looseness in the enforcement of the license laws. Rather, it said, they must expect to find the public holding them to a stricter accountability than ever before because it had been the faith of the citizens in the efficacy of the present license laws and their enforcement which had called forth the large vote. To such strange logic are the advocates of license driven in explaining their desire to hold on to a system which the age has outgrown.

Well, Boston must ultimately see the abolition of the license system but there are many of us who doubt whether the vision will come before nation-wide prohibition is the law of the land. It is not a pleasant mental picture to think of the land of the Pilgrims being dragged in reluctantly at the tail end of the great triumphal procession. But then, Massachusetts long since ceased to be distinctively the land of the Pilgrims, save in retrospect. The Pilgrims, or their descendants, went West and Massachusetts' past is the nation's heritage. Come back and help us, you Pilgrim descendants of the triumphant states, "till we make the map all white."

Washington Should Be the Model City of America

SENATOR JAMES K. VARDAMAN of Mississippi

In urging the passage of the District of Columbia prohibition bill, Senator Vardaman of Mississippi pictured his ideal for Washington in the following language:

"Washington ought to be made the model city of America. I want it clean morally as well as physically. I want it to be a city set upon the hill, leading all America by the excellency of its splendid example. I desire its parks and its statuary, its architecture, beautiful drives, and clear lakes to be the finest in all the world. I should like to have it the most beautiful city in all the hemisphere. I would have everything about it calculated to develop the ethical nature and satisfy the tastes of our people. I want its moral and intellectual atmosphere so clean and pure that none can come from the country round about without feeling its stimulating effect. In a word, I want to see it a city suited in all respects for the capital of the greatest nation and the most enlightened government beneath the stars today. But it can never reach that eminence—it can not accomplish that which I would have it accomplish as long as these places of infamy—the saloons—are kept open and recognized as legitimate. Washington ought to reflect everything that is good in this Republic. It should embody in its art the aspirations of our people. Its government should exemplify the moral progress of our people in governmental matters, and its intellectual and moral atmosphere should be the essence of the ethical and intellectual attributes of the entire people. The greater part of the area of this country is saloonless today. A majority of our population live in dry territory. The consensus of opinion of the civilized world is that whisky is a curse—the most insidious enemy to the human race of which we have any knowledge. I repeat, that it is not becoming the capital of this nation for the open saloon, the acknowledged enemy of society, to exist within it with the consent of the Congress."

—From Grit of Australia.

Arguments in Favor of Woman Suffrage Unanswerable

FIVE ADMITTED FACTS UPON WHICH RESTS PRESUMPTION IN FAVOR OF WOMAN'S CAPACITY FOR SUFFRAGE

WILLIAM JENNINGS BRYAN

Address Delivered at Indianapolis National Convention

I wish to remind you that this great cause of woman suffrage has won a most remarkable victory. It took us twenty-one years to secure the election of Senators by the direct vote of the people after the measure had passed the House of Representatives the first time. It was necessary to pass it through the House six times before it was passed through the Senate once, and yet that great reform only concerned the method of electing the members to one branch of the Federal government.

The extension of suffrage to woman practically doubles the voting population of this country, and brings into the arena of politics a moral force whose influence must be felt in the settlement of every ethical question that shall hereafter come before our nation, and yet before this great reform has ever received endorsement of either branch of the National Congress we have seen it endorsed by every party of any importance in the United States.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE THE ONLY ISSUE ON WHICH POLITICAL PARTIES ALL AGREE

It is a sudden triumph for a cause in whose behalf pioneers have labored for lo! these many years, and it is only in recent times that it has come to be an important issue in many of the states, and yet in spite of the fact that it has not yet received endorsement at the hands of either branch of the Congress at Washington, it has so impressed itself upon the political thought of the nation that all of the parties unite—and it is the only thing upon which they do unite—in saying that the time has come when woman should stand by the side of man and share with him the responsibilities of the government under which they both live.

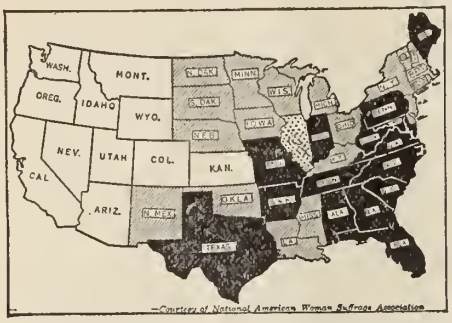
How is it that this wonderful victory has been achieved? I believe it has come about because the country at last realizes that the arguments in favor of woman suffrage cannot be answered.

Let me remind you of the value of presumption of law. The side in court that has the presumption is not compelled to produce testimony until that presumption has been overthrown by testimony introduced on the other side. I ask you to consider five admitted facts, upon each of which there rests a presumption in favor of woman's capacity for suffrage, and these facts and the presumption resting upon them throw upon the opposition the burden of proof to show why woman who has shown herself fit for all of the other duties that have been placed upon her, is not able to discharge the duty that the ballot would place upon her.

The first fact is that man trusts woman, as shown by his act in giving himself into her keeping. From the time the man is married, the wife, more than anyone else, yes, more than all others, determines his happiness and his success, and if a man has enough confidence in a woman to put his happiness and his prosperity in her hands, it raises the presumption that he can safely entrust her with the ballot, unless he has concluded that the ballot is more important than the man, the more difficult for woman to understand.

The second fact: The father trusts the mother with the care of the children. I need not tell you that it is the mother, rather than the father, upon whom rests the responsibility for bringing the children through the dangers incident to youth, and building them up, and making them strong to endure fatigue and to resist disease. Neither need I remind you that it is the mother more than the father who superintends the intellectual development of the child. It is the mother who helps the child through the difficult passages in the reader, over the hard words in the speller, and helps in the solving of the troublesome problems in arithmetic; and still more, it is the mother, rather than the father, who superintends the spiritual development of the child.

It is at the mother's knee, not the father's, usually, that the child learns to lisp its first prayer, and it is the mother, rather than the father, who plants in the child's heart the ideals that control the life; and if a father is willing to trust the mother with the care of the body, the mind, and the soul of a child, it raises the presumption that she is fit to be trusted with the right of suffrage.



—Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:
ILLINOIS

The third fact: Man trusts the wife as the partner in the finances of the family, and the more completely the husband trusts the wife as his financial partner, the better, as a rule, are the family finances managed. I know the papers have their cheap wit about the amount of money that women spend on Easter hats, but men might as well be honest with women and admit that if men spent no more money foolishly than women do, the bank accounts would be larger and more money would be laid up for a rainy day. Upon this fact, that man can trust the wife as the partner in the finances of the family, there rests a presumption that he can afford to trust her as his partner at the polls.

The fourth fact: A majority of the men who vote never go beyond the eighth grade of the common school, and all they ever learn of the science of government from books they learn in the graded schools, and nearly all the teachers therein are women, and if women have sense enough to teach men all they ever know from books about the science of government, they should, themselves, be able to vote.

Here are four undisputed facts, and on each one of them there rests a presumption in favor of woman's capacity for suffrage.

Having stated the facts and the presumptions resting upon them, I want to tell you a story. It is of a woman who was an active partner in the business affairs of the family. When she found she was about to die she gave her husband some parting instructions as to unfinished business. She said, "When I am dead, don't forget to collect from Mr. Smith two dollars that he owes us for chickens and eggs." And the husband assured her, "I will attend to it, you may be sure of that." She grew weaker, and she called him to the bedside a second time and said, "Don't forget to collect four dollars that Mr. Brown owes us for milk and butter." He replied, "I will remember it." And turning to the friends around the bedside he said, "Hear the woman, will you; sensible to the very last." She became weaker still, and she called him to her a third time and said, "Don't forget to pay the thirty dollars that we owe at the corner grocery." And turning to the mourning friends, he exclaimed: "Hear the woman raving, will you! Hear the woman raving!"

I need not make the application. It is rather inconsistent for the man who boasts of a wife who makes his home a real home, of the mother to whom he so confidently entrusts the care of the children, of the partner who helps him in the finances of the family; and of the girl who teaches the boys in the schools the science of government—it is a little inconsistent to boast about how woman rises to every other responsibility, and then as soon as she expresses a desire to vote, say, "Hear the woman raving; hear the woman raving!"

SUFFRAGE TOO GOOD A THING TO LOSE

But there is a fifth fact upon which there rests an even more conclusive presumption. It is this: That in no state or nation where suffrage has ever been tried have they ever returned to man monopoly of the ballot. The test of any political theory is experience under it, and when you find that everywhere the experience under woman suffrage has been the same, and that nowhere is there even a suggestion of return to the old system, it seems to me that the question is settled beyond the point of dispute.

Whenever the question of woman suffrage is submitted in a new state there are some who call themselves anti-suffragists who go out and appeal to men not to put upon women the burden of suffrage! Do they really mean what they say? Do they believe that suffrage is a burden, and that it has been forced upon woman against her will in the states where women vote? If they think so, why don't they go where women do have the ballot and there organize a movement by which women may relieve themselves of this burden whereby their vote is demanded? The fact that these opponents of woman suffrage never go into suffrage states is to my mind proof that they, themselves, are aware that the franchise is not a burden in a woman's mind, and that the women who do vote will not give it up under any persuasion.

Let me remind you that it is not every question that can be settled by one trial, as woman suffrage has always been settled. Take the question of the tariff. That has now been under discussion in this country for a century and a third; it is thirty-six years since I began talking in favor of a low tariff. In my youthful enthusiasm I supposed that all you had to do was to explain a thing to a Republican and he'd understand it. For three and a half decades I have been going up and down the land, and I have been making this subject so plain that it seemed to me anybody could understand it, and yet every once in a while I find a Republican who still cherishes the delusion of a high tariff; and what is worse, they were working at it a hundred years before I commenced, and it looks now as if it may be a hundred years after I am gone before this thing can be gotten out of their system.

Whenever the tariff is put up, there is a party wants to lower it; when it is down, there is always a party seeking to raise it; so it doesn't matter whether you put it up or put it down, it doesn't stay "put," and what a consolation it is to find something in politics that stays "put" when you put it there, as does suffrage. I am mighty glad to get on the side of some question that can be settled finally.

Upon the fact that wherever woman suffrage has been tried it has so far succeeded, that never has there even been a suggestion of, or an organization having for its object, a return to man suffrage of old—upon this fact, I contend, there rests an unanswerable argument in favor of votes for women.

ONLY TWO PER CENT OF PENITENTIARY PRISONERS WOMEN

These presumptions I have named have been growing in the public mind, and that is why so many men who started out to oppose woman suffrage have ended by espousing it. In politics we find that time is very precious, and the decision is always and ever for the argument that can be stated in a few words and cannot be answered in a number of words, and I have one of that kind. You can all remember it without difficulty, and I guarantee that it will silence any man who raises in your presence the objection that woman is not competent to vote.

I have been a student of the science of government since I was a young man, and if I understand what citizenship means, and what the voter requires, there are just two things that stand out above all other things as essential. One is intelligence, and the other is morality, and unless you can show that women lack one or the other, you cannot successfully contend against the right of woman to suffrage. Does woman lack intelligence or morality? Let me give you the evidence. It is easily secured, and it cannot be disputed. I sent to our penitentiary to find out the number of inmates two years ago, and I found there were 359 prisoners in the institution. I asked how many were women and the answer was 5—354 men. More than 98 per cent of the inmates were men, and less than 2 per cent women. And that is true of every penitentiary in the land. The women are never in a majority, but go to church and there you will find them in the majority. If women have sense enough to keep out of the penitentiary, and morality enough to go to church, aren't they fit to go to the polls?

Some people are very deliberate. They don't want to decide great questions in a hurry. The more deliberation a man uses in deciding a question, the more careful he ought to be to find a temporary place to stand while he is making that investigation, and if there are any of you who want time to study this subject, let me tell you where to stand temporarily while you are doing it. I get the idea from one of the first lessons taught in the family, and that is that you know a man by the company he keeps, and it is just as true of a cause as of a man.

Judge the two sides of this cause by the company they keep, and it will enable you to know where to stand temporarily while you are making your investigation. You can go into any state where woman suffrage is an issue and into any city and you cannot find a single man who profits by vice or makes money out of sin who is on the side of woman suffrage. Why? Why do the wicked unite against woman suffrage? It is because they know instinctively that woman's conscience is against their business, and here is the question: Why do the wicked have more sense than the righteous? Why is it that the wicked know enough to combine against woman's conscience while the righteous divide and split hairs and quibble, and allow a wicked minority to triumph over a righteous majority?

LOGIC OF EQUAL RIGHTS

JEANNETTE RANKIN, U. S. Congresswoman from Montana

The men and women of the West have come to a realization of the logic and wisdom of political equality through their common battle with the elemental forces of a new country. These forces, the recognition of which led logically to the enfranchisement of the western women, are not peculiar to Montana or to the West. They are universal forces. But in the West, where conventions have not yet obscured the fundamental principles of nature, it has been easier for men and women to come to a mutual understanding; it has been logical for them to transfer their equality in the struggle for existence to the formal control of civic affairs. In the East it is merely a matter of time when men and women will penetrate the confused web of convention and will see clearly the same forces which led to the enfranchisement of the western women. The result must be universally what it has been in the West. The recognition of the wisdom and the common sense of embodying the viewpoint of both the man and the woman in the conduct of external affairs must soon be felt throughout the civilized world, and the time cannot be distant when men and women in all the thinking countries of the world will participate equally in the political government of their common affairs.—The Chicago Herald.

Reference has been made to one of the arguments used against woman suffrage, that woman must not be allowed to vote because she might hurt herself with the ballot. Well, my friends, I'd have more respect for that argument if it had not been used so often on former occasions, but as I look back through history I find no reform that was ever undertaken in behalf of woman that was not met by the same objection, that it would hurt women to have the reform. Go over into the Orient, where at the age of twelve or fourteen, girls must cover the face with a veil and after that must never enter the presence of men outside of their own family with their features revealed. When they attempt to overthrow the practice they are told "No, women must not be allowed to injure themselves by taking off the veil!" In this country women are not compelled to wear the veil, and who will say that the women of America are inferior to the women of the Orient because they are not compelled to abide by this custom that still prevails there? There isn't a country in the world where the women are better or stronger in character or more virtuous than in the United States!

Not only has woman profited by this ability to mingle with men, but our society has been infinitely blessed by the improvement. When it was first suggested that woman should be educated, the same answer was made, that it would injure her, and yet it is true that it has been stated that the average woman of the rising generation goes farther in education today than the average man, and we find that instead of injuring our women, it has made them better wives, better mothers, better sisters, better daughters, better members of the church and of society.

So that argument falls, and those who conscientiously believe that woman will be injured by exercising the ballot need only go into the states where women have the vote, and their fears will be removed.

I am so much in favor of woman suffrage that I endorse all the arguments in support of it and I will go far enough to say that I will endorse any claim for it without stopping to see the argument; and I am willing to condemn any argument against it without waiting to read it! I am so thoroughly convinced that woman suffrage is good that I want it in every state and I wouldn't wait for a national amendment to get it in any state, but I wouldn't wait for any state to get it before having it made nationwide.

STATE RIGHTS ARGUMENT OF NO WEIGHT

You will find this—that the objections that are made to woman suffrage, based on what is called state rights, will not have any weight after a state has itself experienced the advantages of it. I am in favor of woman suffrage in any state where it is an issue, and I want it to be an issue in all the states; and I am in favor of it as a national amendment to the constitution, without waiting for the aid or consent of any other state before the national amendment is submitted.

I believe the greatest argument in favor of woman suffrage is the mother argument, the right of a mother to a voice in the environment that shall surround her child. I have three children, and I love my children, I think, as well as a father can, but I am not in the same class with my wife when it comes to the love of the child, and I do not put any father in the same class with the mother in the love of the child.

Why is it that the mother's love for the child is the strongest, tenderest, most lasting thing in the world? The Bible tells us, "Where your treasure is, there will your heart be also." The child is the treasure of the mother. She invests her life in her child. Two thousand years ago when the mother of the Gracchi was asked, "Where are your jewels?" she pointed to her sons and said, "These are my jewels." The mother's life trembles in the balance at the child's birth and for years the child is the object of her constant care. She invests in it her nervous force and energy, and endows it with the wealth of her love; and she dreams of what that child is to be and do, and if a mother's dream only came true, what a different world this would be! The most pathetic struggle that this earth knows is not the struggle between our men upon the battlefields; it is the struggle of the mother to save a child when wicked men lay snares for it, and set traps for it, and as long as you give the ballot to the man who conspires to rob a home of a child it isn't fair, and you know it isn't fair, to tie a mother's hands while she is fighting to protect the home and her children!

Because I believe that there is in every human heart a sense of justice and because this mother argument more than any other appeals with irresistible force to the universal sense of justice, it will at last batter down opposition, and open woman's pathway to the polls.

Let me add to the argument that women make in their own behalf this one that men ought to make in women's behalf: That we need the conscience of

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane
CIRCULATION MANAGER, Miss Addie A. Austin

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, January 4, 1917

MISS GORDON SPEAKS AT CONFERENCE OF INTERCOLLEGIATE PROHIBITION ASSOCIATION

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, left Evanston Friday evening, December 29, for Lexington, Ky., to represent the National W. C. T. U. at the annual conference of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, which met in that city December 28-30.

MRS. HOGE'S ILLNESS

Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, assistant recording secretary of the National W. C. T. U., for the past two weeks has been seriously ill with typhoid fever. Letters from Mr. Hoge report a slight improvement in her condition. She is being tenderly cared for in a hospital in Washington, D. C. Fervent prayer will daily be offered by Mrs. Hoge's white ribbon comrades for her early recovery.

TWELVE MONTHS OF TRIUMPH FOR TEMPERANCE

We are writing the last chapters of a spiritual adventure of gigantic proportions—the movement to abolish the legalized liquor traffic. The "charm of the impossible" has lent interest to every step of progress in our great reform. From the time when the little company of "undismayed" women visited the saloons of an Ohio town to plead with the keepers to close their doors, to recent days, our efforts have been met with the cry, "You are attempting an impossible task. The alcohol habit is as old as the race. You can make no headway against it." From year to year this opposition has become less insistent until today it comes only from those whose personal habits or commercial interests make them desirous of having the liquor business continue.

Ten years ago, the suggestion of the abolition of such valuable vested interests as distilleries and breweries excited scorn and ridicule. Today the prophecy, "A saloonless world in 1930," calls forth expressions of but mild skepticism. In the face of the achievements of the past year, foolish would be the individual who should insist that anything in the line of our great reform is impossible.

The past year has been one of wonderful victories, nation and world-wide in scope. Russia's unexampled prosperity under prohibition has led to serious consideration in the council chambers of other great nations of the anti-liquor policy. Roumania followed the example of her big neighbor. France has announced that soon it will put into effect a prohibitory law relating to all liquors except wine and beer, and barring the importation of liquors from other countries. England's new ministry is confidently expected to enact similar legislation in the near future. So thorough has been the work done in the Dominion of Canada that in all her vast territory the dram shop is permitted only in the Yukon territory and sixteen per cent of the province of Quebec. Canada's near neighbor, the territory of Alaska, has declared by popular vote her determination to have the saloons eliminated. In the United States the accession of new dry territory since January 1, 1916, has been very great. On the first day of the year the law went into effect in Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Idaho, Arkansas Iowa and South Carolina, and later in the month in Virginia, and last November the four states, Montana, Michigan, South Dakota and Nebraska, were by popular vote emancipated from the liquor traffic. In addition, many cities, towns and counties have turned the cold shoulder on the liquor traffic.

Prohibition Policy Tested

The year 1916 has witnessed a triumph perhaps even greater than the mere gaining of territory—a thorough and satisfactory testing of the prohibition policy. During the past fifty-two weeks the new prohibition states have so convincingly demonstrated the economic, social and moral benefits of the law that they are quite sufficient refutation of the false charges made by the liquor publicity bureaus that prohibition does not prohibit; that it is a failure; that it leads to economic disaster, and other statements of like tenor. As to the satisfaction of the residents of these states with the new régime, the magnificent vote in Oregon, Washington, Colorado, Arizona and Arkansas on November 7 against the measures initiated by the liquor interests to weaken or nullify the new laws, furnishes abundant testimony.

It has been pre-eminently a year for the perfecting and strengthening of prohibition laws. Legislators have devoted much time to study of the laws of the older states in an endeavor to detect weak points in their own laws and make them invulnerable to the attacks of the liquor law-breakers. Arizona, Oregon and Idaho last November adopted "bone dry amendments"; Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi adopted anti-liquor advertising measures, and Georgia re-enforced its law in a way to cause the liquor interests to despair of circumventing it.

It has been a gratifying year in an educational way. Never has there been put in circulation so large an amount of information concerning total abstinence and prohibition; never have the people been so eager to read and study and investigate; never have the press and the pulpit been so energetic and enthusiastic in doing their part for the enlightenment of the people. More than 850 newspapers have refused to accept liquor advertising and an increasingly large number have championed the cause of prohibition. State and city boards of health, great industrial enterprises and charitable organizations have inaugurated and carried forward anti-alcohol campaigns, and the truths of science and of economics relating to alcohol have been proclaimed on billboards, posters, in leaflets, in circulars, through the newspapers and magazines.

It has been a year notable for the conversion of prominent individuals, influential organizations and political parties. Editors of great newspapers, and city officials, like Mayor Gill of Seattle, have admitted that actual contact with prohibition as a working principle has convinced them that it is a most valuable civic asset. Members of legislatures and of Congress have had a new vision on the subject and now declare they will cast their vote for prohibition. Ex-Secretary of State William J. Bryan, always an advocate of total abstinence and of local prohibition, now becomes an outspoken champion of national prohibition. Especially noticeable has been the change of attitude on the part of leaders in the Roman Catholic and Episcopal churches, many of these men enthusiastically lending their influence on the right side of the state-wide battles. It has likewise been a year remarkable for the stand for prohibition taken by societies and political organizations. In the states of Montana, Michigan, South Dakota and Nebraska the political parties which, before this year, had carefully refrained from committing themselves on the prohibition issue, finding it this year overshadowing the political issue in their respective states, put into their platforms a prohibition plank.

It has been a significant year in the winning of big cities, those formerly impregnable strongholds of liquordom. The experience of Denver, Seattle, Portland and Spokane under prohibition has shown indisputably that prohibition is the solution of many of the difficult big city problems. By the November statewide victories, Detroit, the fifth city in size in the United States, was added to the big dry cities.

Disastrous Year for Liquor Interests

It has been a discouraging, disastrous year for the liquor interests. The recent report of the Internal Revenue department states that thirty distilleries have abandoned business; three of St. Louis's large breweries have gone out of business during the last few weeks, and places for the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in large numbers have been changed into plants for legitimate business. During the past year seven big brewing companies were indicted by the Federal Grand Jury and rather than produce, at the dictate of the court, evidence which would have incriminated them in the eyes of the public, the secretary of the U. S. Brewing Company went to jail. One liquor journal sums up the desperate situation in these words: "We must not lose any more ground or we shall be dangerously near national prohibition, and that means the destruction of our vast industry in all its branches."

It has been a satisfactory year in the progress of our national measures. The first day of January, 1917, finds the situation in Congress most auspicious. The resolution for a referendum on the national prohibition amendment has been reported out by the House and Senate Judiciary committees, with recommendation that it pass. The District of Columbia bill is to be voted on January 9 in the Senate, and the anti-liquor advertising bill has been reported out with a recommendation that it pass by the Post-office committee.

The program for 1917 is a full and fascinating one. In addition to pushing the above-mentioned measures in Congress, state-wide campaigns will be inaugurated in probably twelve states, with four, Utah, Florida, Wyoming and New Mexico practically certain of winning through legislatures pledged to enact prohibition.

In the words of our National W. C. T. U. president, "Let us, engirded with God's power, meet triumphantly the challenge of our big task—a challenge that calls for a sober America and a sober world."

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

The liquor interests see in the possible passage of the District of Columbia prohibition bill a prophecy of the success of the national prohibition amendment. On the hearing in the Senate, evidence was produced by Senator Thompson of Kansas showing that telegrams had been sent by the liquorites to every hotel association in the nation, urging them to "deluge the U. S. Senate with an avalanche of telegrams," explaining that "immediate action" was the watchword, and that if the District bill should pass it would place the Senate on record for national prohibition.

"Every disreputable saloon should be closed," says August Busch. "If the brewers want to render the greatest possible service to their own interests, they should insist upon strict enforcement of the dramshop laws and co-operate with the proper authorities in closing every saloon that has not been conducted strictly according to these laws." The public might look upon such advice to the saloonkeepers with greater approval had there ever been any effort on the part of the brewers to make the saloons they own observe the law. Only a week or so ago, Judge Landis of the United States District court, called attention to the fact that the law-violating saloons of East St. Louis, owned by the Busch brewery, were responsible largely for the crimes committed in the city.

"And this is the twentieth century!" cries the Brewers' Journal, as it dolefully contemplates the situation in which the liquor interests find themselves after the November election. "With ignorance and stupidity even gods cannot fight," wails the Journal.

"To destroy, over night, without compensation, economic values amounting to millions of dollars; to deprive thousands of children of the inheritance of their father's property, accumulated through a lifetime of honest and legal industry and commerce; to throw into the street the families of thousands of workmen by depriving them of their employment, is as barbarous as the destruction of cathedrals with 42-centimeter guns, the killing of innocent men, women and children who dare to defend their homes against ruthless invaders."

Wonderfully tender hearts these men seem to have for the families of the liquor trade, apparently not realizing how utterly forgetful they have been of the families of the victims of their traffic.

The San Francisco Wholesalers and Retailers Review does not seem highly elated over the outcome of the recent election in California. It says: "The work done in California by the wets was as good and possibly better than any accomplished in any previous wet campaign. Yet the vote shows the regulation growth in dry strength. This growth was apparently not affected in any way by the campaign of the wets. Similar progress will result in California going dry in two years from now. So, if California is to be saved from the blight caused by prohibition, something will have to be done which is entirely and radically different from anything which has ever been done before."

The most despairing cry from the liquor traffic is voiced by Mida's Criterion:

"Only eleven more states need adopt prohibition to give the required two-thirds to adopt an amendment to the Federal Constitution, and then—curtain!

"But in the wet states there are many dry communities!

"True, with most of the great cities on our side, we still have a tremendous population with us—but let us not sink into any smug content, because we might have a fearful shock some bright morning.

"Boston, New York, Rochester, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Baltimore, Washington City, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Louisville, Chicago, New Orleans, Kansas City, St. Louis, Minneapolis, St. Paul, Milwaukee, Jersey City, Newark, Camden, San Francisco, Los Angeles, and a few others are with us—and their total population is tremendous.

"But the outlying communities in these states are enough, in many instances, to put the states themselves dry!

"Don't overlook that serious fact.

"Detroit, Denver, Portland, Spokane, Seattle! They have been taken from us. So the time has come when it is possible to capture the larger cities by capturing the states!

"If we are going to stay in business, it will be by the force of our united efforts, and in no other way.

"The public shows no change in heart. There is no indication that the prohibition forces are weakening any. They are growing stronger, and the recent election must be our battle cry!

"It is now up to us, and up to nobody else. Unless we carry our message all over this great land, there will be one unbroken stretch of hot sand from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande!"

BREWERS URGE CHICAGO SALOONS TO "BE GOOD" FOR THE GOOD OF "THE BUSINESS"

The Chicago Sunday closing law has discovered a new champion in the brewers' association of the city, which has made the following appeal in a letter sent to Chicago saloonkeepers, urging them to obey the law of the state not because as law-abiding citizens it is the only course for them to pursue, but because in the present attitude of mind of the public, "the law must be respected for the good of the liquor business":

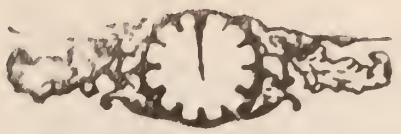
"We must again strongly recommend that you close your saloon and refuse to sell drinks Sunday, thereby complying with the state law and also carrying out the wishes of the city authorities. Even if the sentiment of the majority of the people of Chicago is to the effect that the saloons ought to be allowed to operate Sunday, the law must be respected for the good of the business.

"We earnestly believe it will be to your advantage, both directly and indirectly, in that the violation of the law is apt to result in a fine or revocation of your license, which in itself will be a big monetary loss to you.

"Then again, the future of the business undoubtedly will be benefited by compliance with the rules and regulations. A good part of the public that ordinarily would be friendly to the saloon interests feels that you have no right under the circumstances to violate the law, which also should be taken into consideration by you."

NO "BOOZER" NEED APPLY

The city commissioners of Paris, Ill., as a New Year's resolution, declared against the employment of users of intoxicating liquors. "You cannot think clearly and act safely if you are a boozer," declared Mayor Hoff.



TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

THOUGHTS FOR THE NEW YEAR

"Let us walk softly, friend;
For strange paths lie before us all untrod;
The New Year, spotless from the hands of God,
Is thine and mine, O friend.

"Let us walk quickly, friend;
Work with our might while lasts our little stay,
And help some halting comrade on the way,
And may God guide us, friend."

NEW YEAR'S MOTTO

I asked the New Year for some motto sweet,
Some rule of life with which to guide my feet.
I asked and paused: he answered, soft and low,
"God's will to know."

"Will knowledge, then, suffice, New Year?" I cried,
And ere the question into silence died
The answer came, "Nay; but remember, too,
God's will to do."

Once more I asked, "Is there no more to tell?"
And once again the answer softly fell:
"Yes; this one thing, all other things above, God's will to love."
—Record of Christian Work.

BOUND FOR THE CONTINENT OF IMMORTALITY

We have cast anchor just for a little while beside this island of a world, but we are bound for the continent of "Immortality," and since the ship must so soon lift its anchor, since its gleaming sails beckon us now, even as a friend's hand toward yonder fair and mysterious horizon, let us take on board a cargo that shall be worth something in the country where we are to spend the longest time. Then fix your eyes upon the fadeless vision of immortality, for whoever has that hope or expectation in his soul cannot be balked or daunted. He fixes his hopes firmly on the heavens; he lets the earth roll under him. Upon the conflicts and the turmoil of the world he looks with calmness, and with the strength that God supplies through his eternal Son he can

"The crumbling universe defy
To quench his immortality,
Or shake his trust in God."
—Frances E. Willard.

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION DAY, JANUARY 18

It is hoped that every local union in the United States will plan for the observance of January 18, National Constitutional Prohibition Day. Program and suggestions for this meeting appeared in the issue of December 21, and can be obtained in leaflet form from your state headquarters.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

MRS. LUCIA FAXON ADDITON

Greeting to the state superintendents and state presidents: We have much to cheer our hearts as we enter upon another year of work.

It must be clear to you that the campaign against alcohol waged in the commercial world has been a strong factor in our dry victories. Let us redouble our efforts in the economic line. My first appeal is for a superintendent in every state. Do not say yours is not an industrial state, and therefore you do not need a Labor department. There is no hamlet so small or so remote that it has no labor problem. It is only a matter of difference in social conditions. My second appeal is that every state president and superintendent will read carefully and thoughtfully the following recommendations of our National president in her annual address:

(1) "That we carefully study the United States Labor Department plan for the establishment of a public employment service to help find jobs for the jobless and workers for waiting work. The provisions of this plan, as they relate to women and girls, should have our special attention." In this connection, let me urge every state to at once send to the U. S. Department of Labor for full particulars as to rendering aid to the woman and girls division of the employment service.

If you find that either the Consumer's League or the Woman's Clubs of your state have started the movement, cooperate with them fully. If nothing has been done, let the W. C. T. U. initiate the work at once. Send at once to W. B. Wilson, Secretary of Labor, or to A. Caminetti, commissioner-general of Immigration, for full printed directions and information. Report your progress to me, please.

(2) "That local unions endeavor to establish social centers, both in license and in prohibition localities as substitutes for the saloon." This is in line with the Plan of Work as sent out by this department, and it has great possibilities for good. Let every school house have an evening forum for discussion of the vital problems of the day, as found in the great industrial conditions. I would be glad to correspond with anyone concerning the best methods of procedure, etc.

(3) "That the prohibition pronouncements of prominent labor leaders, and National W. C. T. U. literature showing that prohibition promotes prosperity, be more widely circulated among all wage-earners." The Labor department will take great pains to have published the most convincing facts in this line that can be obtained.

(4) "That we observe a 'Welfare' campaign week with the use of charts, posters, exhibits, etc. I want to urge the carrying out of this recommendation in every community, but especially in industrial communities, and I further suggest that wherever practicable this week will witness scores upon scores of poster hikes.

I have sent out my first circular letter to every state president and every state superintendent.

The success of any department depends largely on co-operation in every section of the country, and I earnestly ask for the hearty co-operation of every state. Will you not give it to this most needy line of constructive work? The railroad work has been merged with that of this department, and some special thought will be given to it later.

We all want National Prohibition, and to gain it we must have the aid of the labor vote. I wish I might hear from every state.

Hotel Seward, Portland, Oregon.

MEDAL CONTESTS

MRS. A. E. CARMAN

All who are familiar with the work of the Medal Contest department are doubtless interested in the problems connected with the management of it, and the efforts to make it more efficient in its various methods of work.

At present one of the most important questions to be considered is the abnormal advance in the price of paper. The stock used for our books and literature has doubled in cost the past two years, and it now becomes necessary for us to charge two cents for postage on each book ordered. This will be but a small burden upon the individual, but will mean much to the publisher and state superintendents. To avoid delay, in ordering books, please enclose postage. The price of all other supplies will remain the same, although there has been an advance along all lines.

The contest work this past year has been very encouraging. Schools and colleges, which are becoming more and more interested, afford a great opening for contest workers. Try to have the work endorsed by the county and state superintendents of public instruction, with credits given for public speaking or oratory.

The programs are now being prepared. The first will contain selections pertaining to seven different departments, and will interest audiences especially in localities where the work is limited to a few departments, giving the local superintendents, also, opportunity to explain the scope and magnitude of W. C. T. U. endeavor.

The second program is particularly recommended when there is a desire to increase the funds in the treasury. If well advertised, it will attract a large audience. Those reciting the selections, which are given in Scotch, Irish, German, English, Italian, Indian dialect, etc., dress in native costume. Songs to be sung to different national airs, are printed in the program.

The department hopes to publish soon a special program containing some new selections on Peace and Arbitration.

Copies of the National department report are being printed. You will want one. Do not forget to ask for it when ordering other supplies.

There was never a time when the work of this department should be pushed more earnestly. The states that have won prohibition will not cease their efforts, and states that are working to secure prohibition should have in the field contest workers who can give readings, conduct contests, train contestants, and organize. This method is the best possible one to interest the people of any locality. The admission charged will pay the expenses of a competent superintendent and be the means of securing new members. Try the plan. Not necessarily a long pull, but a strong pull, and a pull all together will help us to get National Constitutional Prohibition.

5414 Broadway, Chicago.

HEALTH

MRS. FRANCES WAITE LEITER

Plans are completed to make 1917 a most significant year under this department. Early in January the series of Heredity leaflets, now in press, will be ready to mail. This series consists of the following: 1—"Eugenics." 2—"What Is Life?" 3—"Inheritance." 4—"Alcoholism and Heredity."

These leaflets are the result of months of careful research work. They will furnish material for two important meetings which should be the means of securing attendance of those not members of the W. C. T. U., if proper effort is made; and should be in the hands of each member of our organization, for careful study and conscientious consideration.

Another important matter comes fittingly under this department. Special attention is called to the movement that is gaining headway over the country, which is aiming to substitute military training for physical education in the schools. Most adroitly are the advocates of war preparedness endeavoring to make it appear that military training covers the entire ground, which is far from being the case. In the centers of military discipline directly under the auspices of the national government, gymnasia are considered an absolute necessity to overcome the consequences

(Continued on Page Eleven)

BISHOP WALTER T. SUMNER COMPARES CONDITIONS IN LICENSE CHICAGO AND PROHIBITION PORTLAND

Oregon temperance forces observed December 10 as National Constitutional Prohibition day, and a large meeting was held in the Central library of Portland in the afternoon. At this meeting resolutions were adopted calling upon Senators Lane and Chamberlain, and Representative McArthur to vote for the National prohibition amendment. Those in attendance at this enthusiastic rally agreed to send personal letters to the Oregon Congressmen making the same request.

Bishop W. T. Sumner was the principal speaker. He reported the results of investigations that he has made into the prohibition question covering a period of more than a decade. As dean of the Cathedral of St. Peter and Paul in Chicago he engaged in social service that brought him into close contact with the horrible results of the liquor traffic. In contrast with such a situation, he pointed out, is the improved moral, social and economic tone of cities that enjoy the advantages of prohibition. He declared that the testimony of business men, manufacturers and nearly all intelligent observers is overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition.

Beer drinking, he said, is a greater evil in many instances than whisky drinking. It ruins thousands of people who are too poor to buy stronger drinks.

"They used to tell us," he continued, "that the saloon was the poor man's club. I agree with the use of the term, but not with the way it is accented. The accent ought to be on the first word. It certainly is a 'poor' man's club—the poorest that I know of."

Church Advocates Prohibition

He told, too, of a pastor of an Episcopal church in Oregon who recently preached a sermon favoring prohibition. The next day one of the richest and most influential members of the congregation threatened the pastor and actually cut his subscription for support of the church in two. The pastor went to the bishop, troubled.

"I told him to preach prohibition," declared the bishop. "If the church can't be supported unless the pulpit is muzzled on questions that are moral as well as political, it may just as well close its doors."

Other speakers were J. P. Newell, A. C Newell and Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U.

Mrs. Kemp spoke briefly of the National convention, and the victories of the past two months, putting a special emphasis upon the fact that so large a part of the United States has banished the saloon.

THE UNION SIGNAL FOR 1917
SPECIAL FEATURES

Current History, World, National and State. The latest news of prohibition legislation in the United States Congress will be given each week in the Washington Letter by Mrs. Margaret D. Ellis, our National Legislative superintendent.

Current history of total abstinence, prohibition and law enforcement progress in every state of the Union and in the nation and world will be promptly reported.

Campaign Clearing House Campaign plans and methods that made Nebraska, South Dakota, Michigan, Montana and other states victorious will be presented by experienced workers.

Votes for Women Up-to-date news regarding suffrage legislation and articles dealing with the merits of the question will be given frequently.

Stories, Poems and Music Arguments against the liquor traffic and in favor of prohibition will be attractively presented in stories for adults and children. Prose and poetical selections adapted for public readings and words and music of songs for use in temperance meetings will appear from time to time.

Illustrations Original cartoons, pictures of striking anti-alcohol exhibits and prohibition parades will be among the attractions.

Special Editions Once a month there will be published a Campaign Edition, the prominent features of which will be special articles, statistics and other material designed to help in campaigns, national, state and local. Each number will be essentially a "vote-maker."

In one issue each month several pages will be devoted to the news and plans of the Young People's Branch. The National Y. P. B. general secretary and the National college secretary will enliven these pages with contributions. Reports of work of Young Campaigners for Prohibition will appear frequently.

New Features Columns of special interest during the coming year will be "Feeling the Pulse of the Liquor Interests," comments on statements made by liquor men; "Survey of the States," brief notes of the legislative or other prohibition activity in different states, and "What the Magazines are Saying," calling attention to articles on the liquor evil appearing in different magazines.

Help Us Carry the Message The liquor interests are saying, "Unless we carry our message all over this great land, soon there will be an unbroken stretch of hot prohibition sand from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande." Help us meet this campaign of mis-education by sending a message of truth concerning total abstinence and prohibition to all the people of every state through THE UNION SIGNAL.

ENGLAND'S NEW PREMIER FRIENDLY TO "VOTES FOR WOMEN"

The cause of woman suffrage has long had a friend in Hon. David Lloyd-George, premier of England, and the accession to power of this liberal-minded statesman may mean a final triumph for the feminist movement in Great Britain. It is recalled that while at the time the Conciliation bill, extending the suffrage to women of property, was before Parliament, Mr. Lloyd-George gave it no assistance, explaining that he was not interested in a law that did not include working women, yet when the bill failed to pass, he said:

"I have long been a convinced advocate of woman suffrage and am now firmer than ever in supporting it. It seems to me a necessary and desirable consequence of the vast extension of the functions of government which the last century and a half has witnessed. No franchise bill can ever again be brought forward in this country without raising the whole problem of whether you are going to exclude more than half the citizens of the land. Women have entered pretty nearly every sphere of commerce and industry and professional activity and public employment, and there never was a time when the nation stood more in need of the special experience, instincts and sympathy of womanhood in the management of its affairs."

HEALTH

(Continued from Page Ten)

of the one-sided tendency of the military regime, and to get and keep cadets in good physical condition.

Send ten cents to the superintendent (address given below) for the Heredity series, and copy of leaflet, "Military Training in the Public Schools."

Send two cent stamp for copies of Plan of Work, and suggestive programs, with list of department literature and prices of the same.

220 West Park Ave., Mansfield, Ohio.

Popular Campaign Songs

A thirty-two page song book for temperance meetings compiled by Anna A. Gordon.

Not only for use in mass meetings but for the meetings of the local union, for the institute and the convention.

Let us sing our songs in our meetings. They add greatly to the enthusiasm. Teach them to the children.

Price, 5 cents each. 50 cents per dozen. $4 per 100.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Ill.

SALLIE HENDERSON'S "ADVANCED IDEAS"

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

Sallie Henderson had made a special effort to have the simple six o'clock supper appetizing and wholesome. The corn muffins were browned to a turn and the golden butter, crisp bacon, and milk were exceedingly tempting.

"Seems like father is taking a long time to sell the cotton and buy our shoes," sighed little Tom as he stood by the window watching the lane. "Reckon he could have—er—anything could have happened, mother?" He asked the question in a whisper, but Annie's quick ear caught the note of anxiety. She dropped her doll and crept to her mother's side.

"He promised he would never, never drink too much again, didn't he, mother?" the little girl asked.

"Maybe the wagon broke down," suggested Tom. "It's getting awful rickety anyway, and Uncle Ned said—there is Uncle Ned with the wagon now! Father just waited to come with him, and there wasn't any need of worrying, mother."

It was growing dark and Mrs. Henderson hurried into the hall with a light. The children ran to the gate.

"Let me carry the box with the shoes," begged Tom.

"And I will carry the bundle with my dress and jacket," cried Annie.

"Go 'long, chillun! You worries a body mighty nigh 'stracted," grumbled the old negro. "You-uns run 'long fur dar ain't nothin' in dis wagon fur you to tote."

"Why is father's horse hitched to the back of the wagon?" asked Tom.

"So's he could lead. Go on in, chillun," he added kindly.

"Where is Mr. Henderson?" asked Mrs. Henderson unsteadily from the porch.

"He ain't feelin' well, Miss Sallie, and he's layin' down in de wagin bed. I'll he'p him in de house soon's I take dese fidgety mules outen de gear."

"How did it happen, Ned?" Mrs. Henderson asked faintly as she was aiding the old man in lifting the limp form from the wagon.

"I jest couldn't he'p it, Miss Sallie. De Lawd knows I wouldn't er let him tetched a drap, but he got de prize Mr. Mitchell had put up for fetchin' to market de fust bale er cotton dis year, and it was a hat and a jug er whisky. Dat started him to treatin' de crowd and dey got him to bettin' soon's he got his cotton sold—and we ain't got you and de chillun nothin', Miss Sallie."

The disappointed children and sad-faced mother discussed the situation in low, sorrowful voices while Joe Henderson slept off his spree.

"We can't start to school Monday, can we, mother?" asked Annie. "We haven't shoes or hats or anything but patched clothes, and—"

"And we haven't money to buy books," interposed Tom. "I could hire out to Mr. Bray and make some money picking cotton. May I do it, mother?"

"Yes, Tom, as it will be impossible for you to go to school."

"Don't cry, mother. I'll make some money and maybe the next bale of cotton will not—"

"We never can tell when every dollar will be scattered to the winds, child," replied the mother.

Joe Henderson was deeply repentant when he awoke next morning. He vowed, as he had done many times before, that he would never take enough liquor to make him lose his head.

"The boys were so elated when I got the prize Mitchell offered that I had to stand treat and—well, I forgot myself, Sallie. I will sell another bale next week and pay something on the supply bill. Johnson and Green have agreed to wait until I sell all the cotton."

"That is because they hold a mortgage on our home."

"Oh, it will be paid off in time. I will get you and the children what you need without fail next week."

"Taxes must be paid, Joe, and the interest on the mortgage will be due the first of January. We haven't another cow to sell. Remember this happened last year after several bales of cotton had been sold."

"I'll keep straight as a parson from this on, little woman. I will be ready to meet the interest on my note when it falls due. We will pull through, so don't worry."

In two weeks Joe Henderson marketed another bale of cotton at a fair price. He returned home maudlin drunk, without a bill receipted, or a dollar of the money received for the cotton.

"I don't know how I lost that money," he confessed penitently after sobering up. "The boys must have got me to betting again. But it won't happen again, Sallie."

"You've been making such promises for years," declared the indignant, long-suffering wife. "And you are going to break them, Joe, as long as Blankton grocers and druggists sell whisky as they please. We will be homeless in a few more years and you unfit for even farm work. I am going with you the next time you take a bale to market, and the money that cotton brings is not going to be thrown to the birds. For the sake of our children I am going to do it, Joe."

"All right, Sallie," Joe agreed hastily. "You can go with me and see how every dollar is spent. I will have two bales ready to sell next week."

One morning late in September Sallie Henderson accompanied her husband to Blankton. She persistently followed him around the court house square as he offered his samples of cotton to buyers and when the two bales were sold to the highest bidder, she went to the bookkeeper's desk and saw the amount of money placed in Joe's hands. She went with him to the "long credit" merchant who had furnished them with supplies and named the amount to be paid on the account, appearing blandly indifferent to the staring men and their whispered comments. She also ignored the evident surprise of her acquaintances.

She seemed unconscious of the look of astonishment with which people regarded her when she entered a doctor's office and stood by her husband's side while he paid the bill for the year's services. The remainder of the money she appropriated, and walking over to a dry goods store, spent it for shoes and much needed clothing for herself and children.

Driving homeward that afternoon Joe Henderson was unusually quiet, but his wife chatted gaily of the experiences of the day.

The next afternoon Joe went over to the cross roads store for the mail and returned with a downcast, sullen air.

"Are you sick, Joe?" Sallie asked anxiously.

"No," he replied shortly.

"What is the matter?"

"Nothing."

Sallie was busy next morning making a school dress for Annie when Tom ushered Colonel James Clayton, his mother's uncle, into the sitting room.

"Good morning, Uncle James," greeted Sallie cordially. "How are you today?"

"I am worried half out of my senses, Sallie Henderson," replied the old gentleman grimly.

"What has happened?"

"You have disgraced the family, madam."

"What do you mean, Uncle James?"

"You forgot that you were—a Southern lady—that you were born a Clayton—and actually followed your husband around the court house square when he sold cotton Tuesday. You even went to a doctor's public office—to see that the doctor's bill was paid. Watched your husband."

"What was wrong in that, Uncle James?"

"Wrong! It was disgraceful. A lady never meddles with her husband's business, nor lowers herself by entering a public office."

"Let me explain how it came about, Uncle."

Briefly she told of Joe's temptation to drink in Blankton, and his failure to use the money received for cotton to pay debts or taxes. "I went with him to save enough money to keep us from want, and to give the children suitable clothes for school. I am not ashamed of what I did."

"Every man in the county is laughing at Joe for being henpecked. You have not only done an unladylike thing but you have made your husband ridiculous. I am ashamed that you are my brother's daughter."

"And I am ashamed of my kinship to a man who is so narrow and prejudiced as to think it better for a woman and her children to suffer for food and clothing than for a wife to claim her part of the income. This plantation—or what hasn't been sold off bit by bit—to pay debts—was given to me by my father when I married and I have a right to a part of the crops produced on the land."

"A married woman cannot own property in this state. Her husband is the proper one to dispose of the crops and attend to other financial matters. You are guilty of a very unwomanly act, madam, and I would not blame the ladies of the community for cutting your acquaintance. You deserve a reproof for your indiscretion."

"I don't care a snap what you or any other old fogy who is too narrow minded to be just, thinks of my conduct," retorted Sallie, "I am going with Joe when he sells cotton as long as there is a drop of liquor sold in Blankton, or there is a law which makes women beggars as soon as the marriage vow is taken."

Colonel Clayton arose in wrath and strode majestically from the room. He turned when he reached the hall and said with great dignity:

"If your husband wants to be tied to your apron string and be the laughing stock of the community—I have nothing more to say, but my wife will have nothing more to do with a woman of your—ahem—advanced ideas."

"That will not matter in the least," replied Sallie smilingly.

(To be continued)

IT'S GOOD FOR ALL

A. H. LATHROP, Ph. D.

Here's to you, whisky and beer—
Death-sweat of corn and rye,
Ruin's open gate to man—
Man's open gate to ruin.
Killer of the living,
Preserver of the dead,
Hip, Hip, Hurrah!

Prohibition!
It's good for all.

Here's to you, saloon—
Crime's foul spawning bed, and
Boy-fed drunkard mill.
Hell's open breathing hole.
Hope's bier, and crepe-hung hearse.
Life's grave, and leap to hell.
Hip, Hip, Hurrah!

Prohibition!
It's good for all.

—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

From west to east, from south to north
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

THE SERVICE OF A CAMP FIRE GIRL

MRS. CARL BILBY

For several years Millicent had admired the Camp Fire girls and longed to become one of their number. Imagine her delight when Mrs. Webster, guardian of the Pocahontas group, invited her to join the camp. At the next monthly meeting of the Council Fire, Millicent announced her desire to become a Camp Fire girl by repeating, "It is my desire to become a Camp Fire girl, and to obey the law of the Camp Fire, which is to seek beauty; give service; pursue knowledge; be trustworthy; hold on to health; glorify work; be happy. This law of the Camp Fire I will strive to follow."

It was not long before Millicent had fulfilled the six requirements necessary to become a Wood-Gatherer. These were:

(1) To be a member of the Camp Fire at least two months.

(2) To attend at least six weekly meetings and two ceremonial meetings.

(3) To select a name and a symbol.

(4) To make a headband.

(5) To have the ceremonial dress.

(6) To win in addition at least ten honors.

Millicent's name was Minnetoska, meaning Happy Laughter, her symbol the Black-Eyed Susan, because Millicent's eyes were brown as the center of this flower whose yellow petals stand for sunshine, such as the girl's eyes held for every one. Unaided, she fashioned the loom upon which she wove her headband of brown and yellow beads. Her ceremonial dress she earned and made herself. It was of stout yellow canvas cloth, trimmed with brown leather fringe. Indeed, Millicent, in her Camp Fire costume, was as sweet and charming to the eye as her name and symbol indicated.

While striving to achieve the next rank, that of Fire-Maker, she sat poring over the "Book of the Camp Fire Girls." After reading the first discussion, "Seek Beauty," she turned to the next, "Give Service." "Service is meaningless unless it grows out of, or grows into, love of others. A mother who takes care of her child because it is her duty is missing what is most vital: to realize the wonder of a little child, and to know that the greatest service one can render God and man is to watch the unfolding of a soul and with kind understanding help it to grasp the right meaning of life. 'Love your neighbor' and service will be as unconscious and beautiful as the service of a father or mother, brother, or sister, or friend. Therefore, let us seek to establish love in our hearts. Service will follow. Though not so easy, the opposite is also true: serve your neighbor and love will follow."

Literal-minded Millicent made direct application of what she read. "What! serve and love the McGruders who rented the shabby house next door, which was a neighborhood eyesore. Why, there was Mr. McGruder nearly always drunk and out of a job; Mrs. McGruder was always worried and busy and disheveled. The Babies McGruder, Margaret aged three and Mary aged ten months, were shabby and neglected.

"To 'give service' sounds beautiful; but then, the McGruders are so impossible," mused Millicent sadly, laying aside the "Book of the Camp Fire Girls" to take the morning paper. "W. C. T. U. Arranges Baby Week," was the first headline she read. The article stated that noted physicians and educators were to be brought to the town to speak to mothers and examine babies, and prizes were to be awarded and a baby parade planned.

"I wonder if Mrs. McGruder wouldn't like to attend all that?" flashed into Millicent's mind. "I can keep Mary for her while she takes Margaret and Margaret while she takes Mary," for the sessions for children of different ages were not at the same time. Millicent at once spoke to Mrs. McGruder about the "Better Babies" movement, and she found her neighbor greatly interested. Indeed, to Millicent's astonishment, Mrs. McGruder proved to be a very "likeable" person, except that she was overworked and worried. Gladly she took Baby Mary and attended the earlier sessions while Millicent played "Ring Around the Rosy" and "Hop Scotch" with three-year-old Margaret, to whom she became very much attached. How Millicent learned to love Baby Mary, as she took care of her during the latter part of the week. The time fairly flew as Millicent sat on the shabby McGruder porch, watching Baby Mary's sunny head bob up and down, her blue eyes sparkling, and "toofies" and dimples showing in childish delight.

Happy New Year

"Isn't she the sweetest baby in the world, Mama?" Millicent called across the lawn to her mother. "It's her nappy time now and I must put her to sleep," continued Millicent, and the little girl began to sing, "Out for Prohibition," which she had learned from her mother's "Temperance Songster." And so it transpired that when Mr. McGruder returned home partially drunk and jobless as was his custom and seated himself in one of the shabby rockers on the porch, he found Millicent lustily singing as she gently rocked the sleeping baby. Unconsciously, his fingers beat time to the lively strains of "Dixie," then gradually the lines of the song began to fasten themselves into his consciousness:

"We're out for prohibition,
Hurrah! Hurrah!
We're out for prohibition,
Yes, we're out for prohibition!
Hurrah! Hurrah!
We're out for prohibition!"

Wholly unconscious of the impression she was making, Millicent sang on:

"Traitors' money take no longer,
License makes the evil stronger,
Come out! Come out!
Come out for prohibition!
Don't you know from the beginning
There's one way to deal with sinning?
Come out! Come out!
Come out for prohibition!"

All Mr. McGruder's benumbed mental and physical faculties slowly awakened.

"Little girl, I wish I had heard that song before election!" exclaimed Mr. McMcGruder. "If I had I'd have voted differently that day and lived differently since. Maybe it isn't too late yet! I've traveled the wet road all my life and met failure. Now I'm going to try the dry road and see if I can't meet something that looks like success."

Thus Millicent's effort to "give service" brought many happy results, in addition to the honor beads which she won.

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

"Who is the first man mentioned in the Bible?"

"Chap 1."—Boston Transcript.

"What do you suppose has come over my husband this morning, Sophia," exclaimed a conscientious little bride to the new servant. "I never saw him start downtown so happy. He's whistling like a bird!"

"I'm afraid I'm to blame, mum. I got the packages mixed this morning and give him birdseed instead of his regular breakfast food, mum."—United Presbyterian.

Caller—"So your son Willie has started work as an office boy. How is he getting on?"

Fond Mother—"Splendidly! He already knows who ought to be discharged, and is merely waiting to get promoted so that he can attend to it."—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

The Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon's keen wit was always based on sterling common sense. One day he remarked to one of his sons:

"Can you tell me the reason why the lions didn't eat Daniel?"

"No, sir. Why was it?"

"Because the most of him was backbone and the rest was grit."—Tid-Bits.

WHAT THE MAGAZINES AND OTHER PERIODICALS ARE SAYING

Colliers' "Comment on Congress" is a comprehensive review of the situation in Washington.

The Independent discourses on the prohibition question in an article entitled, "Congress and Prohibition."

The American Magazine for January publishes an article entitled "Nipskillions," giving Booth Tarkington's own opinions of drink founded upon his experience and his knowledge of experiences of men he has known.

Eugene Lyman Fisk writes in the January Atlantic on "Alcohol and Physiology."

The Christian Endeavor World of December 28 has a fine character sketch of Maine's Christian Governor, Hon. Carl E. Milliken, written by Rev. J. K. Wilson of the Watchman-Examiner. "When Mr. Milliken's name was mentioned for the nomination for governor," says the writer, "it soon developed that there were two classes of people who didn't want him: the saloon interests, because they had ample proof of his uncompromising hostility to them; and the politicians, because they knew that they could not use him. Well, he has been elected; now it will be fun to see them try to 'use him.'"

The December number of the Machinists' Monthly Journal contains an article by Emmett L. Adams, organizer of the International Association of Machinists, telling of the writer's personal experience with Mr. August Busch, head of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing Association. Mr. Adams says:

"Mr. Busch is no different from any other type of industrial vulture, seeking to add to his ill-gotten gains at the expense of the working class. Every dollar that he controls is probably massed and coined out of the misery of men, women and children, and it is not surprising that the people of this land are condemning a traffic which indicates so little interest in the welfare of the workers, and, for my part, I say: God speed the day when the Anheuser-Busch Brewing company will understand in dollars and cents what it means to incur the displeasure and wrath of those who are doing the world's work. I am sure, from my limited knowledge of the trade unionists of this country, that, if they could come in contact with this autocrat at the head of the Anheuser-Busch Brewing company, not another drop of his vile concoction would pass their lips."

The Sunset Magazine, which has never been an advocate of prohibition, makes an interesting admission concerning the likelihood of prohibition being successful in California in 1918:

"If the liquor interests and the wine grape growers of California cannot read the handwriting on the wall they should go to an oculist immediately. The saloon business as at present conducted in most of the wet California communities, with San Francisco in the van, is doomed."

The only way of escape for the liquor interests of the state, as the magazine sees it, is for the saloon men of the state to get together, cut the number of saloons in half and pass drastic regulations governing the traffic. The drawback to this plan, as the magazine candidly admits, is to find the men who are willing to sacrifice their interests for the good of the traffic as a whole.

"Perhaps the best method of solving the difficult problem," says Sunset, "would be the appointment by the government of a non-political commission to make a thorough study of the liquor question in California; the commission to embody the results of its investigation in a comprehensive legislative measure to be submitted to the voters for adoption. Unless something of this character is done and done at once prohibition, as distinguished from temperance, in one form or another, will most certainly win in 1918."

NEW BOOKS BY SUSANNA COCROFT

"It was formerly held by physiologists that alcohol was a food, because its oxidation liberates heat, and it was assumed that this liberation of heat was the same as that freed by the combustion of fats, starches and sugars uniting with oxygen. More recent knowledge, however, has unquestionably determined that the body decomposes alcohol into carbon dioxide and water, thus liberating heat, yet the reaction produces cold and the body requires more heat to warm it."

This is the explanation of the effect of alcohol on the body as given by Susanna Cocroft in a new book, "What to Eat and When," in which this widely-known and successful woman teacher of physical culture discusses the problem of proper nourishment for the human body, the importance of foods, purposes of foods, food elements, and the classification and chemistry of foods. Miss Cocroft says further concerning alcohol:

"Alcohol was formerly used by physicians for its supposed stimulant action, but it has been determined that the apparent stimulant effect is due to irritation of the nerves, particularly of the nerves of the stomach; the temporary spur to activity is followed, however, by depression of the body forces.

"The habitual use of alcohol, from overstimulation of the nervous system, affects this system, deranging it permanently, gradually lowering both mental and physical ability, and causing a catarrhal condition of the stomach and intestines. Alcohol, therefore, even in small quantities, is a poison, and not a food."

Companion volumes by Miss Cocroft which cannot fail to be an inspiration and aid to the seeker for health and happiness are, "Let's Be Healthy in Mind and Body" and "The Woman Worth While." The first of these tells how to build and retain health; how the body is made; describes the digestive canal, the kidneys, the circulatory system; the lungs and respiratory system, the nervous system and the derangements of all of these.

In this volume, in the chapter entitled, "Abuse of the Nerves," Miss Cocroft describes the effect of beer on the human body. She says:

"Many regard beer as a food. It should be known how far this is true. There are eighty times more proteins and sixty-one times more carbohydrates in a nickel's worth of flour than in the solids contained in a nickel's worth of beer.

"Alcohol absorbs water from the tissues, as is shown by the rapidity with which it dries the skin. It hinders digestion by preventing the natural processes from taking place. The ferments contained in beer set up chemical changes in the food, and require a far greater action on the part of the body to eliminate the broken-down materials.

"Heart and kidney diseases are often found in the beer drinker. In America the habitual drinker of beer to excess gives the best evidence of the slow disintegrating action of this substance. The man gradually loses his capacity for his particular calling, that is to say, though he may perform the routine duties, he is incapable of any fine work, or of any advancement in such. There is a progressive lowering of the mental tone."

The third book, "The Woman Worth While," deals with the absorbing question of how a woman may make the most possible of herself, the successful life for a woman and her place in business and the home. Worth while books, all three, on topics of vital interest to women.

The Demand for

Good Temperance Music

is met by the use of the following:

PROHIBITION'S IN THE AIR.
Price, 10 cents per copy.

THE WORLD WIDE JUBILEE.
Price, 15 cents per copy.

PAEAN OF VICTORY.
Price, 10 cents.

The above may be used for solos or quartets.

IS YOUR SCHOOL OR COLLEGE SUPPLIED WITH OUR REFERENCE LIBRARY?

NOTE THESE LISTS—ORDER SOON

Ten Dollar List

The Liquor Problem, Richardson, 1915
The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon
Evils of Alcohol, Dr. W. A. Chappel
Alcohol and the Human Body, Sir Victor Horsley
The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon
The Economics of Prohibition, J. C. Fernald
Alcohol and Health, Edith Smith Davis
Does It Pay? Prof. John Nicholls
Alcohol and the Government, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson
Good Health, Luther Halsey Gulick
Town and City, Luther Halsey Gulick
Emergencies, Luther Halsey Gulick
The Body at Work, Luther Halsey Gulick
Control of Body and Mind, Luther Halsey Gulick
The Body and Its Defenses, Luther Halsey Gulick
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Harry Warner
The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. or, Alcohol—Its Influence on Mind and Body, Edwin F. Bowers, M. D.
A Compendium of Temperance Truth, Edith Smith Davis

Five Dollar List

The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Harry Warner
The Man Who Forgot, James Hay, Jr. or, Alcohol—Its Influence on Mind and Body, Edwin F. Bowers, M. D.
A Compendium of Temperance Truth, Edith Smith Davis
The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon
Alcohol and the Human Body, Sir Victor Horsley

Stories

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster; postpaid, $1.30.
Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray; postpaid, $1.42
John Barleycorn, Jack London; postpaid, $1.42
A Singular Life, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward; postpaid, $1.25
A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley; postpaid, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

AMERICA'S FIRST DUTY

Strong words from Ex-Governor Patterson of Tennessee

The greatest need in America today is the formation of a new national mind, the construction of a new national conscience and a reformation that will bring about a new nation—a nation with a firmer purpose, a clearer vision and a complete understanding of the words patriotism and Americanism.

To bring this condition about, the first problem to be solved is the liquor problem, and the liquor problem's only solution is wiping it entirely and unequivocally off the map. To accomplish the coming of the "New America," every saloon beneath the stars and stripes must be closed.

The great political parties have failed to respond to this call, for they do not want the responsibility, and the time has come for the American people to disregard political parties and rise up in a great army and with all their strength solve the question themselves.

America's danger is not from without; it is from within. Whatever crisis the United States is facing or will face is coming, or will come, from internal causes. It is the American people who have their own problem to settle, their own future to decide. And the first step in this settlement and decision is the elimination of the saloon.

ARGUMENTS IN FAVOR OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE UNANSWERABLE

(Continued from Page Seven)

woman in politics more than woman needs the ballot. I want woman suffrage not merely because it is right that women should vote, but because of the use that women will make of the vote when they have the right to it. I want woman suffrage in state and nation, that we may drive the saloon out of every state and out of the United States.

There is another reason why I think we need to have woman's conscience joined to man's judgment, and that is to create and develop a peace sentiment in this country. I will remind you that the war across the ocean is not a woman's war; it is a man's war. Woman has furnished the husband and the son to die in the trenches, but man is responsible for the fact that war rages across the sea.

They have killed 3,000,000 in this war, which has no parallel in all human history, and they have wounded 10,000,000. They are spending $400,000,000 every week, and that is what it cost us to build the Panama canal, and they have squandered, killing each other, enough to build one hundred Panama canals, and have added to the war debt of the world $40,000,000,000, so that the new war debts are now greater than all the war debts that have come down from all the wars of history. Five hundred years from now little children will be born in Europe with their neck under a yoke of debt that this generation has fastened on posterity. That is the war that men have brought upon their countries across the sea, and God grant that the day will soon come when it will be the duty of this nation to help to reconstruct the basis of peace throughout the world, and we need woman to help us in our appeal to the nations at war to turn away from the husks on which they have fed, to rise out of the bloody mire in which they fight, and join us in building a peace that shall endure on love and brotherhood, on friendship, not on hatred.

Have You Placed Your Order for the

Topical Program

for use during the coming year? This program contains outline for two programs each month during the year, with space to write in the name of the hostess and leader of each meeting. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $1.00.

Package of Helps, with which to work out these programs, furnished for 50 cents.

This program has been carefully made up and local unions will find it most helpful, giving them a printed program at nominal expense.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

I know of no way in which the horrors of war may be banished from the world except to build upon the philosophy of the man of Galilee, and if the world is to take the philosophy of Christ as a substitute for the philosophy of Pilot, by which men tried to terrorize the world into peace, then we must have women to help us, for woman, who, as it has been said, was last to leave the cross and first to find the tomb, will be the one to help us when we come to perform this supreme duty to all the world.

JOTTINGS

Governor Whitman of New York is reported to have said recently that he is "heartily in favor of the general principles of the prohibition movement."

Representative E. Y. Webb of North Carolina, one of the introducers of the National Prohibition bill, is optimistic concerning the fate of the measure. "We can already count on stronger support than we had two years ago when the same measure passed the House by a majority of thirteen," said Mr. Webb. "At that time the committee merely reported the hill out. Now the committee recommends 'that the hill do pass.'"

Once upon a time not long ago, in a county convention in a certain state, in a quiet moment during election of officers, all subscribers to THE UNION SIGNAL were asked to raise the right hand. It was found that every subscriber was a voting delegate. Among all those in attendance who were not voting delegates there was not a single subscriber. The inference is plain that the woman who reads THE UNION SIGNAL is alert, up-to-date, intelligent and active. If we believe in the W. C. T. U. and its great propaganda, can we afford to be without THE UNION SIGNAL?

Commenting on a sentence from the annual address of Miss Gordon, that "the warning 'the liquor traffic must go' is writ large upon the whitening map of the United States, and every politician 'who runs may read,'" an Indianapolis daily says, "but after reading, some of them won't feel as if they had any chance to run—for office—and will retire to the wilderness where all undesirable candidates must go."

Have you heard the new slogan Mrs. Etta Shaw is using among the children:

"Choose, choose, choose,
Boys or booze;
If you sell the booze,
Your boys you'll lose."

READY DURING JANUARY, 1917

National Minutes of Indianapolis Convention. Price, 25 cents each.

Annual Leaflet for 1917. Price, 2 cents each; $1.00 per hundred.

Y. P. B. Year Book for 1917. Price, 2 cents each.

L. T. L. Hand Book for 1917. Price, 2 cents each.

Orders for above will be filled in the order in which they are received.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

EARLY IN THE YEAR

Is the Time to Plan for

A NEW W. C. T. U.
A NEW Y. P. B.
A NEW L. T. L.

and to aid in this work of organization use the special ORGANIZING PACKAGES containing all helps and instructions.

Price, 50 cents each

In ordering, state which package is desired.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

LIQUOR SALESMAN MAKES POOR SALES RECORD IN IOWA

One former liquor salesman, at least, is willing to testify to the fact that Iowa is a dry state where even the bootleggers fear to stock up with liquor. This salesman, sent out by a St. Paul liquor firm, found business so poor that his firm became dissatisfied and discharged him. He had not even the price of a ticket back to St. Paul, it is reported, and applied to the associated charities for transportation to St. Paul, where he secured a position to sell shoes—not booze. He professes to have learned by sad experience that there is no money to be made in the liquor business these days.

Prohibition Map

Revised to December 1, 1916
Size 19x25

Price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

W. C. T. U. POST CARDS For W. C. T. U. WOMEN to BUY, to SELL, to USE. Post Cards for CHRISTMAS, BIRTHDAY, INVITATION, CONGRATULATION, CONSOLATION, and General Use. Send 25 cents for One Dozen, or $1.25 for 100 of these very exclusive, unique Cards. Satisfaction guaranteed. Catalogue on application. Address: MRS. L. F. PEASE, 258 Laurel St., Buffalo, N. Y. Dept. U

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES
THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT

Virtually all the religious papers and a large number of other periodicals, daily, weekly and monthly, have been forced by the Increased price of paper, to raise their subscription rates. We had hoped to be the notable exception to this unpopular fashion among periodicals, but an inspection of the books of our National treasurer convinces us that we cannot longer safely continue on the old basis. However, we are not increasing the price of the regular weekly edition, which will remain for the present $1.00—for fifty issues. During the summer vacation months two numbers will be dropped. On and after January 1, 1917, the price of the Campaign Monthly Edition and the Y. P. B. Monthly Edition will be 35 cents per year for a single subscription, and 25 cents in clubs of ten.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

1917—PREMIUMS—1917

SMALL CLUBS Ten subscriptions to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to one free subscription to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, or three subscriptions to the monthly Campaign Edition, or three subscriptions to The Young Crusader.

Five Campaign Edition subscriptions sent at one time, entitle the sender to one subscription to the Campaign Edition.

LITERATURE OFFER Ten subscriptions to the weekly UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, entitle the sender to select literature to the amount of $1.00 from the catalogue of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, the selection to be made in one order, at catalogue prices.

LIFE OF MISS WILLARD Twelve weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL, either new or renewals, sent at one time, will entitle the sender to one copy of "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna A. Gordon.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

CASH PREMIUMS Any person having credit for 250 weekly subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL (on which no other premiums have been taken) between November 3, 1916, and the closing of the books for 1917, will receive a cash premium of $20. If you will unite to credit subscriptions to your state you can secure this premium, and thus honor your state and advance your own work.

Y. P. B. PREMIUMS Anyone sending in or having credit for 150 subscriptions to the Y. P. B. edition (on which no other premiums have been taken) between November 3, 1916, and the closing of the books for 1917, will receive a cash premium of $5.

Credit must be requested on the subscription letter, and in no case are such credits transferable.

YOUNG CRUSADER

GOLD WATCH

No premium is more popular than the handsome Gold Watch which is given for 400 YEARLY SUBSCRIPTIONS TO The Young Crusader. It is to be understood, however, that no other premium will be allowed on these subscriptions.

Subscriptions for this premium need not all be sent at one time; provided, however that every installment sent in is accompanied by the statement that the subscriptions are to apply on the premium.

SIX SUBSCRIPTIONS

Entitle you to a free subscription to The Young Crusader to any address designated, or to a copy of the beautifully illustrated book, "The Story of Frances E. Willard," by Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, written especially for young people. These subscriptions must all be sent at one time and the premium asked for in the same letter.

SCAMP CLUB

Any boy or girl sending in two new names to The Young Crusader at one time will be entitled to a membership in the "Scamp Club" and receive the "Scamp" pin.

All premiums must be asked for when subscriptions are sent in.

"OLD MORTALITY" AND "JOHN BARLEYCORN" GOOD CRONIES

"Figures indicate that saloonkeepers have a death rate higher than that of underground mine foremen; that brewery foremen, maltsters, and the like have a death rate higher than electric linemen, glass workers, city firemen (laddermen, pipemen, hosemen), metal grinders, or hot iron workers, although there is nothing in the brewery or saloon business per se that is at all hazardous or unhealthful, aside from the possible temptation to drink and its collateral hazards," says Eugene Lyman Fisk in an article in The Atlantic Monthly.

"Among hotel keepers tending bar the death rate from cirrhosis of the liver was six times the normal; from diabetes, three times the normal; from cerebral hemorrhage or apoplexy, nearly twice the normal; from organic diseases of the heart, nearly twice the normal; from Bright's disease, nearly three times the normal; from pneumonia, nearly twice the normal.

"For brewery officials insuring under forty-five, the death rate from cancer and other malignant tumors, cerebral hemorrhage and apoplexy, organic diseases of the heart, pneumonia and Bright's disease, among the proprietors, managers and superintendents, is about twice the normal, and from cirrhosis of the liver three times the normal. The death rate from suicide is nearly twice the normal.

"While there are individual differences in various insurance companies, due to varying standards of selection and classification, nevertheless the general trend of mortality is the same in all companies, and shows that 'Old Mortality' and 'John Barleycorn' are exceedingly good cronies. Wherever you find alcohol you find the following formula at work: More alcohol—higher death rate."

For Mass Meetings Use the Campaign Song Book

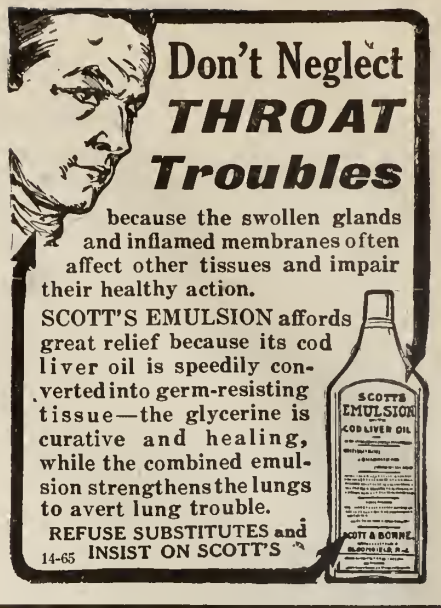
compiled by Anna Adams Gordon.
Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $4.00.
SING PROHIBITION EVERYWHERE

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois



"WE CANT PRAY RIGHT WHEN WE VOTE WRONG"

There are about 200,000 saloons in the United States. "If," says Harry S. Warner, "each saloon controls an average of ten votes (and this probably is a low estimate), the saloon will be able to deliver 2,000,000 votes." This is a menace of great magnitude. Moreover, "whatever purchasable vote there is is almost sure to be within reach of the saloonkeeper." A big job awaiting Christian men is the liquor vote, which could be overwhelmingly defeated if these men went to the polls as they go to their prayers. "We can't pray right when we vote wrong."

"The stay-at-home Christian voter is responsible for the existence of evils in our midst that would be uprooted if Christians would act."—Record of Christian Work.

Commence 1917 in the Right Way

by sending in New Subscriptions to

THE UNION SIGNAL

A most appropriate

New Year's Gift

for your pastor, your lawyer friend, your student friend, your W. C. T. U. co-worker, your family.
Price.....$1.00 per year

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

NEW MUSIC

Home's Love-Light

Words by Anna Adams Gordon
Music by Daniel Protheroe

A solo destined to be the most popular temperance song written this year. Is suited to any voice and equally adapted for soprano, alto, tenor or baritone.
Price, 30 cents; two copies 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JANUARY 11, 1917 | No. 2

WEBB-KENYON "BONE DRY" LAW IS HELD VALID

Supreme Court Sustains Ban on Shipping Into Prohibition States.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 8.—In the most sweeping of all decisions upholding prohibition laws the United States Supreme Court today upheld as constitutional and valid the Webb-Kenyon law prohibiting shipments of liquor from wet to dry states. It also sustained West Virginia's recent amendment to her laws prohibiting importation in interstate commerce of liquor for personal use.

After having been vetoed by President Taft, who held it unconstitutional, and having been repassed by Congress over his veto, the law was sustained by the Supreme Court by a vote of 7 to 2. Leaders of the prohibition movement declare it is to their fight second only in importance to the proposed constitutional amendment.

District of Columbia Prohibition Bill Passes the Senate by Vote of 55 to 32

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

CONGRESS RECONVENES—WARM DISCUSSION IN SENATE OVER PRESIDENT'S "PEACE NOTE"—ALASKA PROHIBITION MATTER LOOMS UP IN CONGRESS—WOMEN SIGNALLY HONORED BY APPOINTMENTS

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Congress reconvened January 2, after a recess of ten days, with a goodly representation in each House.

Senator Stone of Missouri, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, startled the Senate in a speech of sarcastic vein, relative to the accusation of T. W. Lawson, the Boston financier, that by a "leak" Senators and Congressmen, in possession of facts, were able to turn them to personal account in the stock market in Wall street. Senator Stone in the most forceful manner proceeded to flay the accuser, denouncing the methods of assailing public men holding positions of trust and thereby placing them in a false light before the world.

In the House, after a spirited debate, the matter was taken up by the Committee on Rules, one of the most important, if not the most important committee on the list.

Word reached the Capitol that Mr. Lawson would sail for Europe Saturday, January 6. A speedy conference resulted, Speaker Clark, Representative Henry and others being present. A telegram in the shape of a subpoena was sent to Mr. Lawson, summoning him to appear before the committee next Monday to give facts to corroborate his accusations, and a reply from Mr. Lawson said he would be there.

WARM DISCUSSION IN SENATE OVER "PEACE NOTE"

Another very warm discussion was carried on in the Senate by Senator Lodge of Massachusetts, Senator Lewis of Illinois, Senator Hitchcock of Nebraska and Senator Works of California over the President's "peace note" and the position of the Senate in the premises. Senator Works, in a long speech which will probably be his last in the Senate, as he retires March 4, and Senator Lodge took sides as Republicans against the others and for a time it was indeed a fiery peace debate.

Senator Hitchcock had introduced a resolution commending the President's "note" and Senator Lodge denounced the attempt to commit the Senate while ignorant of all the facts. When the Senate recessed last evening it was predicted that several days would elapse before a vote was taken, during which time it would be made clear to European peoples that the sentiment of the Senate in support of the President's "peace note" was anything but unanimous.

"TICKER" AN INNOVATION IN THE SENATE

A form of local "ticker" has invaded the sacred precincts of the United States Senate. Members of that body are to be saved the necessity of entering the legislative chamber, either from the cloakrooms or from their offices to learn what business is going forward. The machine, installed in the chamber and connected with both the Democratic and Republican cloakrooms, gives Senators a running account of what is being done in the Senate. If the scheme works satisfactorily the device will be extended to the private sanctums of each of the ninety-six members of the Senate. After that, no one will come into the Senate chamber unless he is interested in hearing or taking part in the business. The machine, which is a telautograph, is operated from the gallery by a Senate page. It is silent and may have as many receiving ends as desired.

Senator Kenyon, from the Senate Committee on Education and Labor, favorably reported the bill to establish in the Department of Labor a woman's division, with authority to investigate and report on all matters pertaining to the welfare of wage-earning women.

The House Postoffice Committee has agreed on a bill to increase the pay of both rural and urban postal clerks and carriers from 5 to 10 per cent. We shall watch this bill with great interest, for carriers are among the most deserving of men.

AMENDMENTS TO THE RULES OF SENATE OFFERED

Senator Cummins of Iowa offered an amendment to the rules of the Senate for the consideration of treaties and nominations in open session, except where a two-thirds vote decides otherwise. It is the custom now for the Senate to go into executive session when treaties or nominations are to be discussed, everybody, reporters, visitors, good, bad or indifferent, being hustled out of the galleries and down the stairs without ceremony. A red light is placed in front of the main door that can be seen from the House end of the Capitol, and perfect seclusion is observed.

U. S. Supreme Court Sustains the Constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon Law, in Decision Handed Down on January 8, 1917.

Another amendment to the Senate rules proposed by Senator Cummins is to permit the President of the United States to sit with the Senate in secret session for the consideration of treaties with foreign nations, and nominations to office. It would be hard to determine which side would be more embarrassed by the free exchange of views as to persons nominated by the President and sent to the Senate for ratification. Would Senators feel as free to discuss the weaknesses of nominees to offices if the President were present? Would the President feel comfortable while such a discussion was going on? It is said that even the "Father of his Country" was disturbed by sensational criticisms and it is stated on good authority that he once left the Senate chamber in indignation, slamming the door after him. From that day to this there have been no conferences between the President and the Senate in executive session.

ALASKA PROHIBITION MATTER UP IN CONGRESS

The Alaska prohibition matter is looming up in Congress. Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president of the territorial W. C. T. U., has come to Washington to remain until something definite has been accomplished. November 7 Alaska voted out the liquor traffic by a vote of 2 to 1, but being a territory, Congress must take final action. A bill has been introduced by Judge Wickersham, delegate from Alaska, which, with a few minor changes suggested by Mrs. Hatcher and other Alaskans, will be presented to the House Committee on Territories at a hearing to be held January 10. The territory will be represented by Judge Wickersham, Mrs. Hatcher, territorial Senator Sutherland, Mr. Falcon Joslin, a prominent business man of the territory, and Rev. S. Hall Young, D. D., for many years superintendent of missions for the Presbyterian Church in Alaska. The National W. C. T. U. will be represented by Miss Gordon, president, and Mrs. Boole, vice-president, and your legislative superintendent, and the Anti-Saloon League by Rev. E. C. Dinwiddie and Mr. Wayne Wheeler.

Mrs. Hatcher and I had a very satisfactory two hours' conference January 4 with Judge Wickersham and Judge Houston. The latter is chairman of the Committee on Territories and he was greatly pleased with the amount of information concerning conditions now existing in Alaska which was given him by Mrs. Hatcher. As we were walking through the subway connecting the Capitol with the House office building, on our way to see these gentlemen, we saw, probably two hundred feet distant, two members of Congress approaching and heard the words, "The W. C. T. U. is here," the acoustic properties being such as to bring their words directly to us. Two very demure but amused white ribboners passed on to attend to things important.

We cannot tell what the attitude of the committee may be, but the wish of the people was so definitely expressed on November 7 we do not see how Congress can evade or ignore the call for help.

Congress moves slowly. It is almost a year since Dr. Wadman came from Honolulu to intercede for a prohibitory law for Hawaii and he is to have his first hearing before the House Committee on Territories January 9.

The time is growing so short before the end of the Sixty-fourth Congress, March 4, we "must do with our might what our hands find to do."

WOMEN SIGNALLY HONORED BY APPOINTMENTS

Two women have been signally honored in Washington recently; one, Miss Jennie L. Simpson of St. Louis has been granted the privileges of the floor of the Senate. She was appointed secretary to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee by Senator Stone, and is the first woman to serve as secretary of a Senate committee, a position carrying with it the privileges of the floor. Miss Simpson has been the Senator's secretary for a number of years.

For the first time in history a woman has been placed on the inaugural committee. The inaugural chairman announced that he has appointed Mrs. James H. Boggs a member. He is understood to be considering naming her chairman of a sub-committee and allowing her to appoint other women as her vice-chairmen.

Hotel Driscoll, January 6, 1917

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

All Toronto Newspapers Bar Liquor Advertisements

The World and the Mail of Toronto, leading newspapers of that city, are reported to have joined the Globe and the Star in excluding from their pages all liquor advertising.

Dullness Reigns at Hibbing Station Under Prohibition

Such a dullness as there is at police headquarters in Hibbing, Minn., these days! Nobody is getting arrested, and the police do not even have to bother with lodgers. On a recent night one lone man applied for a place "to flop," and that is a record number for the last few weeks. Last year it was a "poor night for business" when less than twenty-six men sought lodgings. Now, the police say, everybody has a boarding house of his own.

Texas Daily Excludes Liquor Advertisements

The list of daily papers in our large cities which do not publish liquor advertisements is growing very rapidly. In view of the approaching campaign in Texas the action of the Star-Telegram of Ft. Worth, a paper which has always been hostile to the cause of prohibition, in ruling against such advertising, is a happy omen. The new order went into effect the first of January. This is but one of the multiplying signs that Texas will soon be added to the honor roll of white states.

Few Prisoners in Prohibition City to Enjoy Christmas Freedom

Christmas week in Macon, Ga., brought to light the changed conditions in police court circles under the new and more stringent prohibition law of Georgia. In considering the number of prisoners who were to be given their Christmas freedom, in accordance with the yearly custom, it developed that there were but three prisoners to enjoy this privilege, whereas in former years the number was never less than twenty-five and often as large as forty.

Crime Wave in Wet Joplin

Joplin, Mo., a wide open license town, is just now experiencing a wave of crime which is causing consternation to law-abiding residents. With a population of approximately 45,000, the police make an average of 9,000 arrests yearly, one arrest for every five residents. Hold-ups, murders, robberies, gambling and vice are multiplying. Recently a mass meeting was called in the Commercial Club rooms at which 200 citizens were in attendance and offered their services in aiding the police to maintain order. One man, a mine operator and a former resident of old Mexico for three years following the beginning of the long revolt, declared that conditions are worse in Joplin than in Mexico among the treacherous natives. Another citizen told of having had his house robbed twice, without reporting it the second time, thinking it would do no good. In his neighborhood alone, he reported that seven or eight robberies had been committed within the past few weeks. Women and girls are unsafe on the streets after four or five o'clock in the afternoon, said another man, who made the further statement that no man's life was safe in the vicinity of the city. And indeed, the murders committed there recently would seem to indicate the truth of the statement. Not long since a man was murdered on the street, in front of a private residence. Disorderly houses are a common sight, even in the residence section. One of the matters brought to the attention of the meeting was the large number of bootleggers in license Joplin, and another was the fact that dope fiends and boys under twenty-two are largely responsible for the crimes committed. In Joplin we have another instance of the evils prevalent in a license community, where bootleggers flourish and drug victims are found in large numbers.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Montana
Arizona	Michigan
Washington	Alaska

Decrease in Breweries and Distilleries

Both breweries and distilleries in the United States are feeling the effects of prohibition. According to the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in 1914 there were 1,413 breweries in the United States. During 1915 this number was reduced to 1,372, a decrease of 41, and during 1916 there was a further reduction of 40, or a total decrease in two years of 81 breweries. Distilleries have fared even worse. A total of 743 distilleries are reported for the year 1914. The report for 1915 showed a decrease of 108, and for 1916 a decrease of thirty more, or a total of 138 distilleries closed during the past two years. The American Contractor tells the same story in a little different form. During the year 1905 there was a total of $14,449,078 spent on new breweries and distilleries. During the year 1915 the amount of money spent in this way was only $429,500. For the intervening years the figures show a steady and even decrease.

Newfoundland Begins 1917 Dry

At midnight, December 31, 1916, the whole island of Newfoundland became dry. The prohibition act stops the import, manufacture, and sale of intoxicating liquors, and no alcoholic compound will be obtainable within the colony, except for medicinal, manufacturing, or sacramental purposes. In order to prevent evasion of the law a long list of patent medicines has been placed under the ban.

Arizona's Streets Sprinkled with Alcoholic Liquors

Five hundred gallons of whiskies, wines and beer, valued at $20,000, were poured into a city water wagon in Phoenix, Arizona, and the streets of the business section sprinkled with the liquor. Automobiles and other vehicles formed a parade and followed the water wagon. The liquor was confiscated in raids by the sheriff under the new "bone dry" amendment of the state.

Insanity in Washington Shows Big Drop

The 1916 report of Dr. W. M. Kellar, superintendent of the Washington state insane asylum at Fort Stellacoom, shows a remarkable decrease in the number of alcoholic and drug insane under prohibition. For the past twelve months there were entered but six cases of this kind of insanity, five from alcohol and one from drugs. The total in 1915 was fifty, forty-four from alcohol and six from drugs, and the records for the three years preceding are very similar to that of 1915: In 1912, forty-eight alcoholic insane and five drug victims; in 1913, fifty-three alcoholic insane and five drug insane; in 1914, forty alcoholic insane and fourteen drug victims.

Sunday Closing in Illinois

The fight to close saloons on Sunday is being vigorously waged throughout Illinois. Mayor Thompson again pledges his support to the movement to keep the saloons of Chicago closed on the first day of the week. Sunday closing went into effect in East St. Louis the first Sunday of the new year, and the brewers announce that they will not fight the new ruling. This action was in large measure due to the disclosures of Judge Kenesaw Landis who found most of the cases brought before him were due to the lawless saloons of the city. Peoria is the last city in the state to hold out against Sunday closing, but the law enforcement element is gaining strength, and the victory for Sunday closing is not far distant.

Rum and Industry Don't Mix

The license court of Delaware county, Pa., in response to the plea that rum and industry do not mix, during holiday week refused three applications for license against which business organizations entered protest. The remonstrance of the Sun Shipbuilding Company, of Chester, prevented the licensing of a hotel within half a square of the pay gate of the company. Licenses were also refused the Millbourne hotel which must be passed by the employes of the traction companies and thousands of passengers, and for the opening of a saloon in Fernwood against which two manufacturing companies protested.

WANTED: A GENERATION OF SOBER MEN AND WOMEN

BEST SURETY OF WELL ENFORCED PROHIBITION LAWS

ANNA A. GORDON, National W. C. T. U. President

From Annual Address

Our faith in young people and in our Young People's Branch makes us feel assured that we shall not only secure National Constitutional Prohibition but also enforce it. We value the mighty impulse given to our work by the individual and united preparedness, push and power of our Young People's Branch. We are in the closing stage of a great warfare against John Barleycorn. In this holy campaign for a high purpose we earnestly appeal to each young man and young woman to think seriously of the vital need of individual preparedness. To the young men in business or professional life who are now assuming the duties of citizenship we send out a special call. The situation is critical. The battle line is drawn. On the side of the home and national prohibition are some of the best, brainiest and bravest men of our country. We ask the young men to line up with them and with us. The home needs their patriotism, their chivalry and their vote.

Our big task is beckoning thousands of students now in universities and higher institutions of learning. Are we adequately helping equip these young people for the mighty responsibilities that confront them? Alcohol has ever taken as a bright and shining mark the young man on the college campus, and the liquor dealer through the trade's mail order department makes him his victim.

Nearly seventy colleges and universities offer courses in the study of the liquor problem for which credit is given, and more than a hundred colleges have volunteer temperance study classes. We believe that college girls as well as college boys will be the trained prohibition leaders of the future.

Survey of the Colleges

A generation of sober men and women is the best surety of a well-enforced prohibitory law. The liquor trade understands this and with ingenuity worthy of a better cause it is presenting to the public and to university and college libraries specious "temperance" books—volumes with misleading titles and still more misleading contents. The liquor men realize that in our public schools the young electorate of tomorrow are being taught the truth about alcohol. Scientific temperance instruction laws have come to stay. Alarmed at the close study of the alcohol question called out by the temperance essay contest work in schools and colleges, the liquor publicity bureau was quick to send to public and college libraries reference books calculated to impress their student readers with the "fallacy and failure of prohibition" and the desirability of "local self-government." That many libraries have accepted these books without knowing their destructive character and pernicious purpose has been proven by a survey made early in the year at my request by the various state unions. Letters addressed to the different colleges and universities suggested as topics for orations and debates by the students: Alcohol and Public Health; Alcohol and Efficiency; Total Abstinence and Prohibition—Their Relation to Social Welfare; Economic Value of Prohibition; Why National Constitutional Prohibition?

The colleges were requested to furnish a list of books on the temperance question already placed in the libraries and were also asked if a gift of temperance books from the W. C. T. U. would be acceptable. Many states busy in state-wide campaigns have not been able to make this college library survey but will include it among their plans for the coming year. About 150 sets of the books suggested by the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House as suitable for reference and study have been given this year by W. C. T. U.'s to the various colleges in their own states.

EX-SENATOR BLAIR WRITES OF PROHIBITION MOVEMENT —PAST AND PRESENT

Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis sends us a very interesting letter recently addressed to her by our good friend, ex-Senator Henry W. Blair of Washington, D. C. Mrs. Ellis desires to share this letter with the readers of THE UNION SIGNAL. It was written from Colorado Building, Washington, D. C., December 19, 1916:

MY DEAR MADAM:

I have just been looking over the address of Miss Gordon to the great Woman's Christian Temperance Union convention held at Indianapolis. All those conventions are wonderful and this last one seems to be taking a fresh flight for the millennium and the song of its enthusiasm seems like that which we might imagine when the angels sang, "Glory to God, Hosanna in the Highest, Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men."

I have followed these conventions from the start, from the time of Mrs. Wittenmyer every year to this latest. The address of Miss Gordon is inferior to none which I have ever perused. She seems to embody in her presentation the strong points of Mrs. Wittenmyer, Miss Willard, Mrs. Stevens and of herself. Very few addresses of the executives of the states, or of the nation, for that matter, manifest the breadth, vigor and elevation of Miss Gordon's address to the convention and to the world at Indianapolis.

I well remember the first great petition of the National W. C. T. U. to Congress in support of the bill for a national prohibition amendment to the constitution which I had introduced and advocated, thus nationalizing the temperance movement.

This petition, as big as a barrel, mounted on a large frame work, was rolled down the aisle and left in front of the speaker. It had been placed in my charge by Miss Willard and the rest, and fearing that my youth and inconsequence would fail to do justice to the occasion I asked the Honorable William P. Fry, then a member of the House and afterwards for many years of the Senate, to introduce the petition. Miss Willard and others rather pressed me to do it myself but I thought it better for the cause and Mr. Fry did it in due form. That original petition may even yet be surviving among the relics of the proceedings of the forty-fifth Congress.

One thing Miss Gordon touches upon in her address which is of importance in the pending momentous discussion of the liquor question in this country: The alleged change of sentiment on the part of Miss Willard in that she is reported to have said that "Poverty is the cause of intemperance rather than intemperance of poverty." For some years while I was in the Senate, Miss Willard, Miss Gordon, Mrs. Sallie F. Chapin of South Carolina and others made their home with Mrs. Blair and myself while in attendance on Congress, so that I knew each year and many times a year by correspondence Miss Willard's sentiments on the subject of intemperance and poverty. She believed that intemperance is the great evil from which mankind is suffering. It is poison for soul and body alike. That was her original fundamental proposition and continued so until our last interview in 1897, and she died the following year. It is also my belief that intemperance is the greatest source of poverty and crime known in our own or other lands.

Quite early I became identified with what is known as the Labor movement and made the earliest Congressional investigations of conditions of the masses of the people of the United States, and the attention of Miss Willard was early attracted to the necessity of reaching those masses with the temperance movement and she made marked and successful effort to bring about friendly feelings and co-operation between the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and the labor associations of the country, in which I participated.

The truth is that intemperance is the greatest cause of poverty in the country, while poverty in reaction becomes one of the greatest causes of intemperance. Intemperance is the supreme cause of poverty in our own and civilized countries. Miss Willard and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union fully comprehended this. They also saw the necessity for the education of the masses of the people in order that knowledge might spread these vital truths and distribute them throughout the land. An uneducated democracy is worse than the worst of all government evils that afflict mankind.

Intemperance destroys the soul and body of the producer. Without production how can there be anything but poverty? A sound mind in a sound body is the natural producer of wealth which alone removes poverty. Remove intemperance and you have the sound mind in the sound body. Remove intemperance and poverty goes with it. We see in the accumulations of the masses of a single year in the great empire of Russia, even in war time, how poverty disappears when intemperance is removed. The savings banks of that great country are now being filled by the money of millions formerly impoverished and degraded by vodka, and all Europe, and the world for that matter, is being elevated by the great temperance reform now being wrought through this terrific war. The world is rapidly climbing and young white ribboners will live to see such a transformation as the old prophets never dreamed of.

(Signed) HENRY W. BLAIR.

CLOSED DOORS—TO YOUNG MEN WHO DRINK

B. H. FANCHER, Vice-President Fifth Avenue Bank, New York, in Association Men

Business activity is making heavy demands on young men and is constantly seeking for the young fellow who possesses the power of physical, mental and moral development.

Keen competition is causing us to strain every nerve, and the very best in young men seems not to be enough. Strong leaders are wanted in business and in the professions. Life must be built up to the highest state of efficiency to meet the requirements, and every observing young man must certainly realize that the door to leadership is positively closed to him if he indulges in the use of intoxicants, which only destroy life instead of building it up. Not all can be leaders, but all have an important place in the world's development. Banks and the great industrial and commercial concerns are constantly calling for young men, but however great their need may be, they cannot risk the man who drinks. Why? "There is as much place in business for alcohol as for sand in an engine," says Edison.

Business has hung this notice outside of its gates: "Wanted: Men!" To these words it has appended this postscript: "But not those who drink."

The world's greatest steel and iron producers, 107 firms with an aggregate capital of more than a billion dollars, absolutely prohibit the use of strong drink in their works. Says C. W. Baines: "Almost without exception they testify that the abstainer is more efficient, more reliable and that teetotalers alone are considered when promotions are made."

"Did booze ever do you any good?" ask several big steel manufacturers, with large electric signs over the entrance to their shops. "Did booze ever get you a better job?"

"For our own sakes we cannot afford to use it," answer many labor leaders. "Rule G" is the railroads' note of warning, and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers backs this up by refusing membership to those who indulge in intoxicating liquors. In fact the United States government discovered that 77 per cent of the 7,000 employers questioned "discriminate" against even moderate drinkers.

This country is not alone in appreciating the immense losses which it has heretofore sustained because of the unfortunate habit so common to many men. "Eighty per cent of our present avoidable loss of time can be ascribed to no other cause than drink," said a deputation with twenty-five to forty years of experience, representing great private shipbuilding concerns in an appeal to Lloyd George, then Chancellor of the Exchequer. "A battleship coming in for immediate repairs was delayed a whole day by the absence of riveters, who were giving their time to drinking and conviviality. And the disposition not to work after the excessive consumption of alcohol is too obvious to need elaboration."

Not only is the seriousness of the situation being appreciated by business men, but professional men and athletes are wide awake to the situation. "Only live men are efficient," says Dr. Edwin F. Bowers. "You can't be strong and well unless you live right—and nature doesn't stand for whisky and lust," says a great athletic champion.

There was a time not so long ago when young men ridiculed the advice of those who were pointing out the danger of using intoxicants, but fortunately the day has come when they are realizing more fully the real situation. We credit most young men with an ambition to succeed and they are loath to deliberately take steps to destroy their prospects for advancement.

Drink closes the doors to complete and efficient self-mastery.

Sobriety is an "open sesame" to leadership, to financial success, and to physical and spiritual happiness.

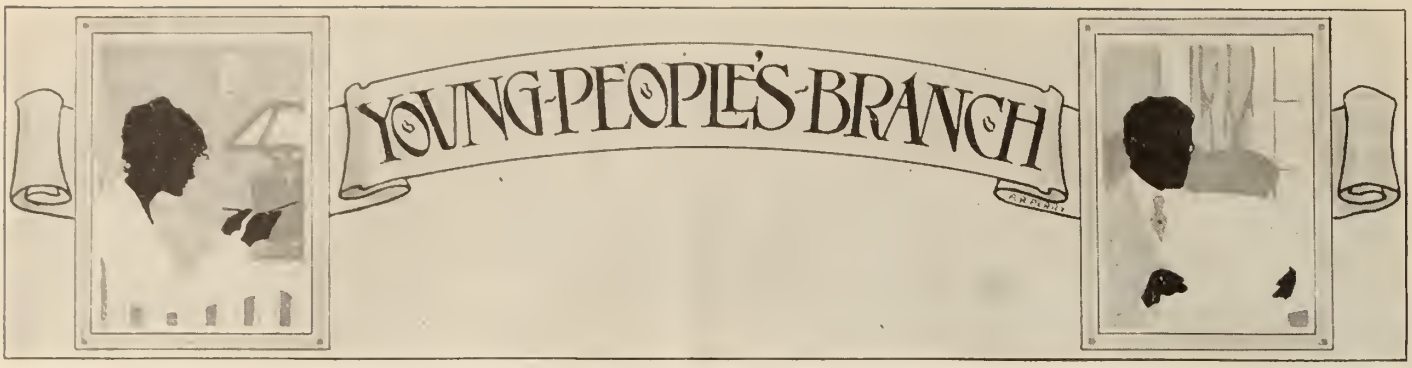
JAPANESE WOMEN IN CAMPAIGN TO ABOLISH RED LIGHT DISTRICT

There is a combined effort on the part of white ribboners and many mothers of Japan to do away with legalized prostitution in the Sunrise Kingdom. Last spring in Osaka space was re-assigned for the location of a red light district. Later the cabinet was changed, and the question was again brought to the front. In Osaka on October 23 all the Christians held a mass meeting, and another day was observed as "Mothers' Cry" day. Two hundred and fifty Osaka women met in a hall and after earnest prayer went to the city hall to present to Governor Akubo of Osaka the petition of 1,200 women. The picture shows the procession of women, led by Madam Yajima, the president of the Japanese W. C. T. U., who though eighty-four years old, is still vigorous. She and Miss Hayashi, an earnest leader of white ribbon activities and a delegate to the World's Convention in Boston, headed the procession. Later these two consecrated leaders went to Tokyo to present the petition to the house minister.

Mrs. O. Kubushiro, the able field secretary, planned a scheme for raising funds for this anti-prostitution campaign. Paper bags three inches long and two inches wide were prepared. On one side was printed, "Fund for Fighting Licensed Prostitution," and on the other the reasons why the system must be done away with. These little bags were distributed and people were asked to contribute five sen a year to this cause. The response has been most generous, and about one hundred yen a month is being received through this method. With this money public meetings are held all over the city in churches, factories and schools, to educate the people on the importance of purity. Two meetings a week are being held, and the audiences are large. Churches are opening their doors, and missionaries and pastors are working hand in hand with the white ribboners.

The new headquarters of the Japanese W. C. T. U. in Tokyo were finished in September, and the general officers have already taken possession. It is a beautifully finished Japanese building with some of the rooms downstairs furnished in European style by the ladies of the foreign auxiliary. The large room upstairs has three smaller rooms opening out of it and in case of need these rooms can be opened into one large room. In spite of bad weather on dedication day the meeting was well attended. After the short service a special committee meeting of Tokyo local unions was held to discuss the feasibility of organizing a Tokyo city union to include all the existing district unions. It was unanimously voted to organize this union at once and Mrs. Ito, wife of Mr. Ichiryu Ito, one of the most active temperance leaders of the country, was elected president. The first undertaking of this union was the opening of a substantial home for working girls, with Miss Moriya, the able leader of the L. T. L., in charge. A course of lectures on general hygiene and massage has been started under the direction of Mrs. Dr. Fujii, national corresponding secretary. The union was fortunate in being able to secure as matron for the new headquarters Mrs. Yuki Kawanaka, widow of the late Prof. Kawanaka of the Doshisha University, who was eager to have this position. Having spent many years in the United States with her husband, Mrs. Kawanaka understands American ways of housekeeping and speaks English well.

The Young Woman's Branch is actively at work. Two new unions have been organized since last convention. Most of the girls are eager to help the cause and are trying to raise money by making pretty things in their spare hours to sell among their school friends and teachers.



"The Master has come and calleth for thee"

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

OUR 1917 PASSWORD

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON

Dear comrades of the Young People's Branch, many times during the past year have I wished that I might meet you, grip your hand, look into your eyes, and say, "God bless you."

It has been my privilege to meet many of our members in several states of the Union and the more I have met, the greater has been my gratitude that we are co-workers in this fight against the liquor traffic.

The struggle has been long and the battle is not yet won, but with youthful hope and enthusiasm, combined with consecration and work, we of the Young People's Branch will hasten the day when the last legalized saloon shall be banished from our land.

During the coming year let us embrace every opportunity to increase our efficiency. Please do not forget that what the Young People's Branch will be a year from today will depend upon what you and I put into it NOW!

There are a few pertinent questions we ought to ask ourselves:

Did we attend our Y. P. B. meetings faithfully last year? No? Let us resolve that we will this year.

Did we support the officers we helped to elect? No? Let us do it this year.

Did we help make our Branch meetings attractive? No? Let us do so this year.

Did we ask our friends to become Y. P. B. members and have a share in this great crusade for the prohibition of the liquor traffic? No? Let us ask many this year.

In 1917 let NOW be our password and do not forget the same letters that spell NOW also spell WON,

Let us march together steadily and work together loyally. "Attempt great things for God. Expect great things from God."

OUR WORLD'S COMRADES

At our recent National W. C. T. U. Convention it was a great pleasure to greet Mrs. Etsu Sugimoto, our Young Women's Branch secretary of Japan. She and Miss Frances Wang of China gave messages at our Sunday evening Y. P. B. rally. Mrs. Sugimoto told what the white ribbon means, especially to the young women of her country. We quote some of her words: "The W. C. T. U. of Japan was formed about twenty-five years ago, but until recent times it was carried on by a handful of zealous women whose interest was wholly of the heart. Gradually they came to realize that progress requires scientific knowledge as well as enthusiasm and that the chief hope for any future good which can be accomplished by social reform lies with our girls. Then with magnificent help from the World's white ribbon representatives, they began to arouse their younger sisters and the 'Y' department was organized.

"The 'Y' Branch in Japan is in its early childhood. It is young and tender but it is beginning to stand upright and to look around with ambition and hope and for it I ask a helping hand. Our ambition is for home betterment and because customs which mar home life also mar national life we claim that we are working also for the glory of our country. As our young men prepare for the best and most successful manhood, so our young women are preparing for the best for home and womanhood.

"Our 'Y' Branch in Japan is marching side by side with all who are aiming for the highest civilization but because of the tendency to lag instead of to push, which has come down to us from hundreds of ancestors, we need the assistance of foreign encouragement.

"In my earnestness I grow bold to ask you to take your eyes from your own busy work for a moment to help us spread our influence and our work. All that you do will be like pouring water on a growing plant preparing for future blossoming and I ask your inquiry, your interest, and your prayers."

NEW PRIZE OFFERED

The General Officers have decided to raise the price on the Y. P. B. monthly issues of THE UNION SIGNAL to 35 cents per year, or 25 cents in clubs of ten—sent to one address. This year a cash prize of $5 is offered for 150 subscriptions to the Y. P. B. Edition. These subscriptions must be credited to one person when they are sent in.

Y. P. B. MISSIONARY FUND

All the Y. P. B. members will be glad to know that Mrs. Fannie Root Danser has again been appointed our National Y. P. B. Missionary Fund promoter and we feel sure you are going to plan right away to help Miss May Mack, our Y. P. B. worker in Burma. During the year just closed, our Y. P. B. members contributed $159.15. We feel sure that this sum will help win many of the Burmese young men and women and we want to double it this year. When preparing your yearly programs don't forget our Y. P. B. Missionary Fund.

1917 Y. P. B. YEAR BOOK

Our 1917 Year Book is ready. Every Y. P. B. member in the United States should study this little hand-book of information.

State Y. P. B. secretaries should order copies at once. Price, two cents each. Address, National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

Y. P. B. PLEDGE

The pledge recommended by the National W. C. T. U. is as follows: "I hereby solemnly promise, God helping me, to abstain from the use of alcoholic liquors, including wine, beer and cider, from tobacco and narcotics in every form and to discourage the use of and traffic in the same."

CONVENTION ECHOES—Y. P. B. CONFERENCES

FANNIE A. DRUMMOND

"Once upon a time" the stock in trade of the temperance worker was sentiment, now it is science; formerly the aim was to produce an emotional reaction, now it is to promote efficiency.

This object is apparent in the topics of discussion in the Convention Y. P. B. conferences, of which topics the following are samples: "How to win and hold members," "The link most needed to strengthen the Y. P. B.," "Our Y. P. B. literature—what is most needed," "How to advertise," "How to plan a state Y. P. B. conference," "Securing leaders from the ranks," "Advantages of a state Y. P. B. board."

Note the probing into needs; note the study of the HOW of things. The old days of haphazard and rule-of-thumb in young people's work are over and the conditions of success are subjected to careful scrutiny.

Leaders from many states in the Union added their words of help. The general secretary and the three field secretaries presided over the Y. P. B. conferences.

The conferences closed with a banquet at the Indianapolis Y. M. C. A. and workers from eleven states pledged their best efforts for the coming year.

A NEW LEAFLET

"The Attitude of the College Man Toward Alcohol," by Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale University, is just what you want to enclose in your letters or messages to your high school or college friends. Price 50, 20 cents; 100, 35 cents. Order of National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

OUR NATIONAL Y. P. B. COLLEGE SECRETARY

We all rejoice that Miss Christine Tinling is to serve as National Y. P. B. college secretary.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

ANSWERING THE CHALLENGE

CHRISTINE I. TINLING, National Y. P. B. College Secretary

" 'Who dares'—this was the patriot's cry,
As striding from the desk he came;
'Come out with me, in Freedom's name,
For her to live, for her to die?'
A hundred hands flung up reply:
A hundred voices answered 'I.' "

That scene was re-enacted on the last day of the year, at the national convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association held in Lexington, Kentucky. Daniel A. Poling, first vice-president of the association and well known to white ribboners as one of the foremost of prohibition orators, had just closed a magnificent address with an appeal for personal consecration to the noble cause. At his request his hearers rose to their feet, and raising right hands on high, with clenched fists, repeated together the solemn promise, "God helping us, we will see this thing through." Then he called for a further and fuller pledge from such as felt able to take it, and asked who among these college men would then and there dedicate his life to this great reform. In response to the call there came out from the audience, one by one, no less than twenty-eight young men, and they filed up the aisles and took their stand upon the platform. In an earnest prayer, Dr. Charles Scanlon, whose own son was in that group, commended them and their future work to God, while of a surety the hearts of the veterans present were bowed in gratitude and praise.

These eight and twenty men were the choice spirits of a remarkable gathering, representative of a remarkable organization, which is doing more than is generally realized towards hastening the day of nation-wide prohibition. The general theme of the convention was "Answering the Challenge of the National Prohibition Movement," and splendidly the colleges are answering it.

90,000 STUDENTS REACHED BY I. P. A. IN YEAR

The I. P. A. is now at work in thirty-three states, and it has no less than two hundred and sixty-six local leagues. During the past year it has carried the prohibition challenge into three hundred and four colleges and reached ninety thousand students. It is indeed the most active organization in America today for enlisting college men and women in public service. The report of the general secretary, Mr. Harry S. Warner, was of special interest. It showed that there has been in the past year a marked increase in the study of the alcohol problem on the one hand, and an even greater advance along the line of practical campaign work on the other. Nearly fourteen hundred college men and women have been actively in the field, and since the last national convention two years ago the number has been almost two thousand. They have labored in many different ways toward the one end all temperance reformers have in view. Many have gone out as speakers and singers in the recent campaigns; others have acted as poll watchers or vote pledgers. They have circulated petitions, collected data in regard to social conditions, conducted automobile tours, and given stereopticon lectures. In the Michigan campaign nearly seven hundred students gave personal service. Almost as many participated in the fight in Ohio. Nor have they labored only for their own home states. Kansas men, filled with enthusiasm for prohibition and eager to tell what a blessing it is to their own state, have gone out to help others to win it, too. Last spring two teams of four men each, representing five colleges of Kansas, went out on ten-day trips, campaigning in the towns of Nebraska. These men gave their services without fee or reward, and their fellow students in the local I. P. A. leagues raised money toward their expenses.

The I. P. A. has also carried on a very active propaganda for prohibition within the colleges themselves. Realizing that if the mountain will not come to Mahomet, Mahomet must go to the mountain, they have presented their cause to the various college bodies they have been able to reach. For instance, they have furnished temperance programs for the Y. M. C. A., have spoken before debating and literary societies and civic clubs, and have introduced their burning question even into mock political conventions. In short, few have been the undergraduates who have not heard something about prohibition within the past year, for in addition to all the above activities of the local leagues the field secretaries have been constantly traveling from college to college and have among them made five hundred and fifty-seven visits, averaging a couple of days each. All this costs money, and the I. P. A. is on a thorough business basis and keeps a financial man occupied all the year round, raising the funds which it uses with such telling effect. At the convention, nearly nine thousand dollars were pledged for the furtherance of the cause, largely from among the students themselves.

CHRISTINE I. TINLING
National Y. P. B. College Secretary

While campaign effort has been specially emphasized this year, the quiet but essential work of study and research has been carried on with great success. More classes have been organized for this purpose than ever before; one hundred and thirty-one were reported, and of these fifty-four were college classes, affording curriculum credit. The others were "volunteer," planned by the students, but usually taught by a professor. There is no more encouraging sign of the ultimate triumph of prohibition than the fact that the colleges of America are so largely providing systematic instruction in regard to alcohol. Considering the progress made along all lines, it is no wonder that the Lexington convention was enthusiastic and inspiring, and that it was two and one-half times as large as any other in the history of the organization.

The society is to be congratulated on its officers. Dr. Leigh Colvin, well known as a writer, brings to it his great knowledge and broad view of the whole national movement. Daniel A. Poling and Harry S. Warner have already been mentioned; the latter is the author of that very helpful book, "Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem."

CONVENTION SPEAKERS

Among the speakers at the convention were a goodly group of men and women of national reputation, including William Jennings Bryan; Dr. Ira Landrith, Prohibition nominee for vice-president of the United States; ex-Governor Eugene N. Foss of Massachusetts, and Professor Charles Scanlon, temperance secretary of the Federal Council of Churches. Lack of space forbids any attempt to report their speeches. Suffice it to say that those who were present at this wonderful gathering will carry its inspiration in their hearts for many a day. Besides the messages of those just mentioned, they will often recall the magnetic and impassioned appeal of Dr. Carolyn Geisel, the clear, convincing presentment by Dr. Winfield Scott Hall of the scientific aspects of the question, Rev. Elmer Williams' thrilling and withal racy account of his experiences in the fight against political corruption in Chicago, and the dozen other addresses weighty with logic, sparkling with humor, and winning with the eloquence of conviction. Most of the great anti-liquor organizations were represented on the platform. Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., made a special effort to be present one day, and to speak a few words of inspiration and encouragement. One of the best addresses of the whole session was made by Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., who is on the advisory board of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association and has been identified with the movement from its inception. The W. C. T. U. was represented also by the National Y. P. B. college secretary.

Quite different from the great meetings, but equally appealing, was that quiet hour of consecration in the hall of the Y. M. C. A. led by the earnest and self-effacing secretary, Harry S. Warner. To that meeting he put the question, "How did the arrest of thought on this subject come to you individually?" One after another the boys rose and in simple, manly fashion gave their reasons for being prohibition volunteers. Here are some of their testimonies:

"I am in it because my sister married a drunkard. For the sake of others like her I am fighting moonshine; I have just been warned not to return to a certain community, but I am going right back there to fight it again."

"I was bossing a concrete job, and

(Continued on Page Eleven)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane
CIRCULATION MANAGER, Miss Addie A. Austin

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Casb is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, January 11, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

MISS GORDON IN WASHINGTON

Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., has returned to Washington, D. C. She will spend some time in the nation's capital in the interests of the National prohibition amendment and other anti-liquor measures. She arrived in time to attend the mass meeting held on Sunday in the National Theater to make sentiment for the District prohibition bill, upon which a vote is to be taken January 9. The meeting was a grand success. It was attended by 3,000 people, two overflow meetings being held. Rev. Sam Small was the chief speaker.

BOSTON'S IDEAL (?) LICENSE SYSTEM

The liquor interests of Chicago, in common with those of every other license city, are framing elaborate "clean up" resolutions. Anticipating in the near future an experience similar to that through which they have just passed in Boston, and hoping they may escape, as they did in the Massachusetts' metropolis, advocates of license in Chicago are contemplating sending a committee to Boston to investigate the ideal (?) license conditions that there prevail, in the hope that they may make the situation in their own city more acceptable to the voters.

The Chicago committee will undoubtedly seek to learn from Boston how the liquor business can be conducted so as to do away with that unpopular and objectionable feature—drunkenness. If they study the report of experts covering the period from 1900 to 1910, they will find that while the population of Boston increased 19.6 per cent, the total number of arrests for all causes increased 111.5 per cent, and the total number of arrests for drunkenness increased 156.5. If they endeavor to question this statement by explaining that the large number of arrests for drunkenness was caused by drunks recruited from contiguous dry territory, they will be brought face to face with the record that the arrests of Boston residents for all causes during the decade increased 84 per cent, while the arrests of residents for drunkenness increased 116.5. As a matter of fact, 63 per cent of all arrests made by the police of Boston were for the single crime of drunkenness, and arrests for drunkenness increased, among residents, more than five times as fast as the population.

If the Chicago committee expects to discover how to eliminate that undesirable adjunct of the trade, the blind pig, let it ponder seriously the figures given by the best authorities for the ten-year period above mentioned, namely, that the cities of Boston proper, Roxbury, South Boston and Charleston, all included in Boston, had, along with their 878 licensed places, an average of 101 illegal places for the sale of liquor; and that East Boston, West Roxbury, Brighton and Dorchester, all parts of Boston, alongside of their 93 licensed places, averaged 20 illegal places. Quite evidently, Boston's model high license system fails utterly to drive out these law-violating resorts.

If perchance the Chicago committee hopes to learn from Boston the secret of conducting the drink trade in a way that shall tend to enrich rather than impoverish the patrons of the saloons and their families, we fear they will be disappointed. The associated charities and the various benevolent organizations of the eastern metropolis unite in saying that they are constantly receiving applications for assistance, not only from the victims of the drink traffic, but from their poverty-stricken families.

The license law of Boston may be the "best liquor law" in existence. If so, it proves indisputably the sad failure of regulation under the most favorable circumstances, for a resident of the city, who is in a position to know the situation, says: "Every restriction of the law is violated. Liquor is sold to minors, to the habitually intemperate, and the initiated can find a way of securing it on all the prohibited days. Some of the so-called hotels in the city of Boston would put ancient Sodom to the blush, so closely is the social evil bound up with the evil of drink."

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

JANUARY 18, NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION DAY

A clear, strong, convincing message for National Constitutional Prohibition should be delivered in every town and city of our land on January 18, National Constitutional Prohibition Day. In the meetings to be held on that occasion every class, sect and party should participate. It should be the aim to make the day in every sense a community event. Through these meetings mobilize the prohibition sentiment of the town for nation-wide prohibition and crystallize it into definite action by adopting a resolution in favor of the Sheppard-Gallinger-Webb-Smith bill.

LET'S MAKE IT TWENTY-THREE!

If by some geographical magic the state of Kansas could be moved for a time over into the New England or the Middle Atlantic states, it would undoubtedly have a tendency to accelerate the prohibition movement. If, for instance, it were set down in close proximity to Massachusetts or Connecticut, before the people of those states were aware the dry breezes from the sunflower state would cause them to change their attitude and they would be voting for prohibition. If by some necromancy Kansas could be temporarily annexed to New York or Chicago, the citizens of those great centers would discover that public sentiment was becoming rapidly prohibitionized.

Nor is this a mere fancy. It is a matter of history that the states bordering on Kansas have, with one exception, adopted her prosperity-promoting policy. Oklahoma was the first to respond to her influence. For years Nebraska and Colorado looked longingly across the state line and wished they, too, possessed a law that would fill their savings banks and empty their jails, and diligently working toward that end, finally secured it. Missouri is the only state that has been able to resist, and the big majority for prohibition given by the state outside of St. Louis on November 7 shows the tendency against the saloon in that commonwealth. As for Kansas City, Missouri, just across the river from Governor Capper's state, it distinguished itself by a majority against the liquor interests, which was a credit to its dry neighbor.

It is not difficult to explain the reason why Kansas is so irresistible as a prohibition argument. Far more than any other state, it has had a fair chance to demonstrate the value of prohibition socially, politically, economically and morally. Its governors, legislatures, merchants, educators, bankers, doctors and common people have united to make it as nearly perfect in enforcement as is humanly possible. What Kansas has done, other states can do. One of the most encouraging signs of the times is the continuance after a victorious election of campaigns of education, agitation and argumentation in the interests of the perfect enforcement of the newly acquired laws. The eagerness of the states, old and new, to strengthen and perfect their laws until they are absolutely impregnable, gives assurance that we shall soon have twenty-three as absolutely incontrovertible arguments for state-wide prohibition as at the present time is the state of Kansas.

MISSOURI W. C. T. U. URGES PATRONAGE OF KANSAS CITY RATHER THAN ST. LOUIS

The Missouri W. C. T. U. is sending out by the thousand the following protest:

"Missouri, outside of St. Louis, gave 5,003 majority for state-wide prohibition November 7, 1916. St. Louis gave a wet majority of 127,541. But for this enormous wet majority Missouri would be one of the dry states today.

"The Missouri Woman's Christian Temperance Union, composed of more than thirteen thousand women of the state of Missouri, protests against the action taken by the business men of St. Louis in opposition to state-wide prohibition.

"We resent the implication that St. Louis must have the revenue from the breweries to be commercially successful. St. Louis is dependent upon the state at large for its trade support and should have carefully considered the result of such an unwise action.

"Kansas City, by a large majority, repudiated liquor domination and supported the principle of prohibition and justly deserves our commendation and financial support.

"The Missouri W. C. T. U. stands for state-wide prohibition and loyalty to friends of this measure. We urge that our membership demonstrate that loyalty by giving our patronage to Kansas City. That we urge the merchants in our various towns and communities to give their preference to the wholesale houses of dry Kansas City instead of wet St. Louis. We urge that protests be sent from each local union in Missouri to such mercantile firms in St. Louis as have had our patronage in the past, giving the reasons for the transference of our patronage to dry Kansas City. There is an old saying that 'Money talks.' Make it 'talk' for prohibition for Missouri."

THE CHILDREN WHO FOLLOWED MY EXAMPLE

G. W. TUTTLE

As I approached the railroad crossing down went the gates. Plenty of time yet, I reasoned, as I noted that the train had not yet appeared on the curve beyond the crossing; so I ducked under the first gate, crossed the track, passed under the second gate, and was about to resume my walk, when—providentially as I believe—I turned around.

What was my horror at seeing two small children about to follow my example and cross the track, while the train was just appearing around the abrupt curve and would be upon them in a moment. I shouted frantically and the children looked up, saw the train, and retreated just in the nick of time.

It was the worst ten seconds of my life for many years. I shall never forget the experience if I live to be as old as Methuselah. Had they been killed would I have been guiltless? Their little faces would have followed me to the grave. God can forgive a man for things he can never forgive himself for doing!

We must not—we simply must not—say, "Is it safe for me?" but, "Is it safe for the children who will surely follow in my footsteps?"

Little eyes! With what confidence they look up into ours! Little hands! They would do the things that we do, all unconscious, often, of good or evil in the doing. Little feet! How the footprints follow ours! Is our path safe for the little feet that follow our footsteps so trustingly, or will we be a stumbling block over which some little child shall fall? Tiny feet will tread the paths that we blaze—let us be careful. Let us look carefully, as we blaze the way, lest the lightning express of strong drink, cigarets or evil habits in any form, bear down upon them behind our backs.

The children are the hope of the home, and they must become the strength of the church and the bulwark of the nation. Keep their pathway clear!

RECIPE FOR SUCCESS

KATHARINE LENT STEVENSON

The other day I came across a newspaper paragraph which gave in succinct summing up the three causes which in the baseball realm, led to the success of the "Braves" two years ago.

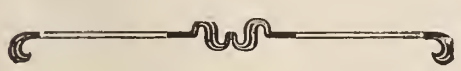
1st. Refusal to accept defeat.
2nd. Denial of any limitation.
3rd. Persistence in effort.

Are they not the same causes which have led to success in any field through all the ages?

Refusal to accept defeat. Let us say together the brave words: Denial of any limitation; all things are possible to him that believeth; persistence in effort. If these things be in us and abound, then our final victory is already assured.

We are told that the sick and wounded British soldiers have a fashion of cheering their own hearts and the hearts of their comrades by shouting in unison: "Are we down-hearted? No." Let us take up the same brave shout of defiance in the face of the foe and in the name of our God anew set up our banners.

Yet, after all, our great cause for confidence lies not in our own courage, not even in the justice of our cause, as we see it, but in the fact that one walks with us whose form is that of the Son of man, who in all our affliction is today afflicted and who yearns over our poor storm-tossed, weary humanity as our own hearts in their tenderest moments cannot yearn.



We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. ANN REBECCA STEWART, Albany, Oregon, mother of Mrs. Henrietta Brown, former president of the Oregon W. C. T. U.

MRS. LOVELA HAGANS, Elmhurst, Ill., for many years an active member of the local union and prominent in W. C. T. U. work. Mrs. Hagans was also a generous contributor to many philanthropies.

MRS. HARRIETTE D. WALKER, for many years a National W. C. T. U. evangelist, on Friday, December 22, died while on the train en route to Walpole, New Hampshire, where she had expected to spend the holidays with her two sisters. The news came as a great shock to her large circle of friends, though there was joy to feel that the transition had been so easy a one for her. She has suffered very much during recent years with a severe heart trouble, and knew that her life was hanging by a thread. Nevertheless, she did not relax in any way such activities as she was able to carry on, and her very last act was the sending of calendars and cards to her dear friends and comrades in the W. C. T. U. and Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Walker was a woman of strong personality and deep spirituality. She was an excellent speaker, and a practical all around worker. For many years she was Mrs. J. K. Barney's private secretary, and she holds a large place today in the hearts of the white ribboners the nation over.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

WHERE I THIS YEAR PASS BY

GEORGE KLINGLE

The pathway of the year just gone leads backward and I stand
To catch a glimpse of flowers or weeds strown by my passing hand.
A little pathway lies ahead—God giveth me anew
The chance to thought-seeds cast about, to drink His wine of dew,
And help the garden-fields of earth give sweetest blooms that blow;
But how have I fulfilled the task He gave a year ago?

We pass but once along the road; we go not back to till—
What did I cast along the way my mission to fulfil,
And who am I that every time God gives the new year's round
He gives me still another one? God grant that there be found
No empty spaces on my path where flowers should bud and blow,
Along this opening year of mine He willeth to bestow,
But that, beneath His guiding hand, my garden-path may lie
All weeded and wreathed round in blooms, where I this year pass by.

—Sunday School Times.

MEDITATION CORNER

Nothing in this world can take the place of daily fellowship with God. "Solitude," Tennyson says, "is the mother country of the strong;" "there they dwelt with the king for his work;" and nothing in this world should allow us to shorten our times of fellowship with God if we are to come forth "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might."—W. H. Griffith Thomas.

Life is saved from narrowing littleness when a man sees God. Then duty becomes Divine, however humble, however great its drudgery, when viewed as a part of a Divine whole. When a man sees God he sees everything else differently. When he sees God he sees everything through God, every common thing is holy, and every bush is ablaze with fire which is never quenched. That is the secret of true life—an expanding consciousness and enlarging obligation.—J. Stuart Holden.

There is very little hope for a man whose life and ideals have become identical. If his ideals do not sometimes discourage him in thinking of what he is, he had better look to them. If he does not sometimes say to himself, "I cannot do it," then he does not exactly see what the will of God for him is. For that Will does not say, "Be as good as you can," but "Be ye perfect." He does not say, "In general, do things to the glory of God." He says, "Whatsoever you do."—Cleland B McAfee.

God holds us responsible not for what we have, but for what we might have; not for what we are, but for what we might be.—M. G. Pearse.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

MEDICAL TEMPERANCE

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN

Copies of the Plan of Work for 1917 have been sent to state superintendents in sufficient number to supply one copy to every local union. The Plan contains a program for a meeting for this department, and suggestions for work. Any state superintendent who has not received from me her parcel of helps for this year should look up her postoffice or her express office for it. If it cannot be found, please let me know soon. A postal card acknowledgment of receipt of package will be appreciated.

There are several new helps for 1917. One of these is a Letter of Questions to Physicians which will be sent free to any member of the W. C. T. U. who is willing to mail these to physicians of her community. It can be mailed by itself, but it is better to include with one or more leaflets of the department. Two of the best new leaflets for this purpose are "New Evidence Against Alcohol" and "Russian Physicians Denounce Alcohol." A third new leaflet is "Some Things Women Should Know About Alcohol." This leaflet is useful for physicians as well as for women. It gives the testimony of medical men of high standing who were called to give opinions of alcoholic medicines for women in the suit of the Wine of Cardui concern against the Journal of the American Medical Association. Physicians who advise liquor for women should be given this leaflet, and doctors who do not believe in liquor will be pleased to find that the W. C. T. U. is distributing such literature. This leaflet is just what many workers have been wishing for to give to women who think they must take liquor of some sort when not in the best condition. It is the most helpful leaflet the department has ever published, and that is saying much for it. The leaflet showing the stand against alcohol taken by the leading medical society of Russia is very valuable for general distribution as well as to give to medical men and women. These leaflets are 40 cents per 100.

I hope that many women will be willing to send out the free Letter to Physicians this year. If it is handed out at medical meetings there will be no cost but the effort. There is reason for making a special work of this Letter this year, a reason which will be made known later.

Some states have specialized in Scientific Temperance Instruction for years. This is fine. But why neglect Medical Temperance, which removes the last excuse for the internal use of alcohol? If the same effort were to be put into Medical Temperance for a few years, as has been put into some other lines, prohibition laws would be wonderfully strengthened. If a mother in the home is induced to throw out the alcoholic medicine bottles, much is being done for the child; yet some workers think this department is not equal to one that works directly with children. It is the best kind of safeguard for children to win physicians and mothers to quit giving liquor as medicine to little ones.

Suggested Program for Medical Temperance Meeting

Devotional Exercises, with prayer especially for this department.

Reading (in sections by different persons)—"Some Things Women Should Know About Alcohol."

(Leaflets of this name, 2 cents each.)

Discussion of the reading.

Reading—"The Medical Profession Officially Divorced from the Liquor Traffic."

(Leaflet of this name, 2 cents each.)

Discussion with Leader—"As Physicians Are Laying Aside Alcoholic Liquors as Medicine, Should Not Women Do the Same in the Home?"

Paper: Reasons why the National W. C. T. U. Convention of 1916 voted not to have any more pledge cards containing the words "as a beverage" sent out from headquarters.

At the close of the program, distribute copies of the leaflets read in the meeting.

How Many Unions Will Try This?

Have one or more members study the department book and leaflets thoroughly in order to prepare themselves to read papers or give addresses on the effects of alcohol upon the body before Sunday schools, missionary societies, teachers' institutes, mothers' meetings, clubs, etc. Openings can be easily made now for speakers who are familiar with the facts about alcoholic liquors.

Never send out a woman who is careless in stating scientific facts. "Study and be sure you are right," is a necessary motto for speakers on a scientific subject.

Persons equipped with the facts can do much good, too, by writing letters occasionally for local papers.

There is frequent need for replies to misstatements by liquor advocates.

A good idea for a meeting of the union is to have medical temperance prescriptions cut from the "Safe Remedies" leaflet and passed around to be read by the members.

Every union should have a sample package of Medical Temperance leaflets (price 30 cents) from which to select the most suitable helps with which to educate against alcohol. There are about fifty leaflets in the package.

Leaflets of this department may be ordered from the superintendent or from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. For the free Letter to Physicians, send to the superintendent, Forest Hills, Long Island, N. Y.

JUVENILE COURTS, INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION AND ANTI-CHILD LABOR

MRS. MINNIE U. RUTHERFORD FULLER

Child Labor Sunday, January 28

This year, the National Child Labor Committee calls "Child Labor Sunday" a look-around-you day. Look around you with eyes open to the familiar forms of child labor all about you.

Federal Child Labor Law

The Federal child labor law goes into effect September 1, 1917, and makes uniform the regulations for child labor in factories, mills, canneries, mines and quarries through interstate commerce, but the street trades, stores, offices, the telegraph service and other forms of employment are not included, because the employes are not engaged in interstate commerce, and are, therefore, left to the protection of the state.

Principal Value of Law

The principal value of the Federal child labor law is, perhaps, its contribution toward the standardization of the various state laws, by furnishing a minimum foundation upon which such laws may be built, and by suggesting machinery and methods for the enforcement of the many poor child labor laws already in existence, nullified, says Mr. Lovejoy, secretary of the National Child Labor Committee, by public indifference and official inefficiency. "The infant street traders, the truck garden workers of Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Ohio, Colorado and Maryland; the cotton pickers of the southern states; the 90,000 domestic servants, under sixteen, who do the menial drudgery in our American homes; the cash girls and errand boys in our department stores and hundreds of other children in a variety of industries, call us to press the campaign into every stronghold of child labor."

Twenty-eight states have no regulation of street trades and twenty states have poor regulations.

Twenty-three states need night messenger laws.

Twenty-eight states permit children under sixteen to work more than eight hours in stores or other local establishments.

Twenty-six states do not require medical examination of children for work permits.

Twelve states have no educational requirements for work permits; 32 states have standards lower than the fifth grade.

These figures, taken from Mr. Lovejoy's report, give us a challenge, a ringing challenge, to move somehow to "quash" the indictment of "grinding the seed corn of the nation." January 28 is some of the men did not come back at all on Monday, and others were not ready for work until Wednesday noon. There was nothing to do but let them lie in the hay until they sobered up. That was what made me a prohibitionist."

(Continued on Page Eleven)

ANSWERING THE CHALLENGE

(Continued from Page Seven)

"Because I came from a drunkard's home." Surely, that short sentence struck a chord of sympathy in every heart.

"I roomed nine years with a widow," said one; "and night after night I hunted for her son in the dens of the city."

"After father died I was cast on the world and learned to drink, but thank God I have gotten away from booze and I am fighting it now."

FILIPINO STUDENT WILL TEACH TEMPERANCE IN HIS NATIVE ISLANDS

A Filipino told of the wine of his native islands and how a missionary had explained to him its harmful nature. "I gave it up and have not tasted any since," he said, "and I intend to go back to the islands and work among my people. I shall try to introduce the study of the effect of alcohol and tobacco."

Said one: "A little more than two years ago I met the man Christ Jesus. The vision of life to me is that men are lost but for Him and the liquor traffic is dragging souls down to the depths of hell. I don't see how I could be a Christian and not be a prohibitionist."

One could not fail to realize the strong deep purpose that animated these young college men and bound them together in service for their country and their God. It was manifest even in the oratorical contest. That was a great occasion; eight men, all winners in college, state and interstate contests, took part in it. In imagination the audience saw behind them more than thirteen hundred men and women each of whom had contributed an original essay on the vital subject of prohibition, each of whom had influenced some audience, large or small. As was to be expected in the final contest for national honors, all the speaking was on a high plane. The prize of one hundred dollars was won by Mr. Joshua B. Lee, of Oklahoma University. The following day, at one of the church services, he spoke most beautifully of the old folks at home and the privations they had endured that he might have an education. The credit for his success, he said, was due far more to them than to him. If the fathers and mothers all over this land could have seen that gathering at Lexington, could but have heard those young fellows speak and have witnessed their enthusiasm for patriotic service, surely they would have said no sacrifice could be too great if recompensed with such a reward.

It is a pleasure to report the very friendly and appreciative spirit of the college leaders towards the white ribbon organization and the full and generous recognition given to its work, both past and present. There is an earnest desire on the part of these men to co-operate with the W. C. T. U. in every possible way. The Y. P. B. college secretary had an interesting interview with Mr. Warner, in the course of which he expressed himself as very anxious that the women students now enlisted in the I. P. A. should, on leaving college, get in touch with the W. C. T. U. through its local unions. Among other things he said: "This movement is based on the psychology of student life and has its principal source of strength among students themselves. We have no place in the I. P. A. organization for men or women after they leave college. In other words, our business is to enlist them and get them interested. When that is done our task is done. We must depend on the great anti-liquor organizations to use the force that we have tried to find. We should get out of our game and fail in the game we are in, if we undertook to carry out a program of practical prohibition outside of college life."

PLAN TO ENLIST COLLEGE WOMEN IN W. C. T. U.

Mr. Warner further said that he would take an opportunity through the Intercollegiate Statesman to urge the women members, on leaving college, to join the W. C. T. U. This paper is put into the hands of all members who pay their dues. Moreover, the central office of the I. P. A. will keep on file lists of earnest, live women students who wish to be identified in the future with temperance work. Any state president of the W. C. T. U., or other leader, can obtain, simply for the asking, a list of such young women living in her own state. She should address the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, 189 West Madison street, Chicago, Illinois. Surely, this ought to be a practical help to the work, and it would be well at least to give to these trained women a personal invitation to join the great organization which offers such a splendid outlet for their energies and their enthusiasm.

It will be apparent from the above that there is not the same opportunity for the W. C. T. U. to organize in the colleges that there was a few years ago. Others have entered where it did not enter and are splendidly doing the work that has long needed to be done. It is for white ribboners to wish them God-speed and co-operate with them as fully as possible. Still there is some room for the W. C. T. U. also, if it will but hasten and "buy up the opportunity" of these wonderful days, for there are still scores of colleges where no definite work has been done. Also a great and effectual door is open in the state normal schools. Let the aim be to have a Y. P. B. in every state normal in the country. Those who graduate from such institutions go out to train young Americans, and their influence is incalculable. They must be won and the Y. P. B. is an organization well calculated to win them, for the vast majority of these students are young women and to them the white ribbon will especially appeal.

The challenge of the National Prohibition movement still rings out; all have not yet heard it. Let white ribboners, in concert with these I. P. A. volunteers, echo it from ocean to ocean with no uncertain sound until it may be said of the men and women of the American colleges, "Ten thousand hands fling up reply, ten thousand voices answer 'I.'"

"IS EVERYBODY HAPPY?"

Indeed, no! Not on this particular occasion! As a matter of fact many people, students, liquor men, churches and newspapers were conspicuously unhappy. A football team may like to see its picture in the daily papers and be glad of a commendatory "write up," but when picture and commendatory words are a part of a large beer advertisement, somebody is bound to object and that without delay. So the Hoster-Columbus brewery advertising manager found when he inserted in two of the Columbus (O.) dailies an advertisement of brewery wares, under the heading, "Is Everybody Happy," and illustrated it with a picture of the university football team. The advertisement came out immediately after a big game. The following Sunday—World's Temperance Sunday—was made the occasion of vigorous protest by churches in the university district. In one of these, King Avenue Methodist church, seventy young men signed the International pledge not only to never drink intoxicating liquors but to do what they could to hasten the coming of prohibition. The student body also greatly resented the advertisement, and at a meeting of the student council ordered a letter written to the brewery officials voicing their disapproval of the use of the football team picture and the name of one of their players. "We trust," said the letter, "that in the name of all that is decent and fair, you will refrain from connecting the university, its activities or members, with your advertisements in the future." The Dispatch, one of the dailies publishing the objectionable advertisement, received 200 letters from readers protesting against it. So great was the opposition to the advertisement that the advertising manager of the brewery who was responsible for its publication was forced to go to the university and sign a paper absolving the boys of the football team from having anything to do with the matter and saying that they received no money.

JUVENILE COURTS, INDUSTRIAL EDUCATION AND ANTI-CHILD LABOR

(Continued from Page Ten)

the time to make a concerted effort from the pulpit and platform. Let us arm ourselves with information for that occasion, by sending postage to the National Child Labor Committee, 105 East 22nd street, New York City.

Food for Thought

Food for thought is also given by the figures for illiteracy in conjunction with the number of child workers in agriculture.

Apparently we are paying too much for cotton production, even when growers get 20 cents per pound for it.

The state having the highest percentage of children working in the fields, 46.9, has the largest percentage of illiteracy—22.9, with the exception of one, which has 45.1 child workers and 25.7 illiteracy.

Much has been said about the necessity of changing the public school curriculum to make education more practical. It would seem that perhaps more should be said about the enforcement of attendance upon public schools, such as they are.

The Maryland bureau of statistics in 1915 reported that 95 per cent of the children committed to the parental school in Baltimore for repeated truancy had been street workers; that 12½ per cent of Baltimore's newsboys were to be found on the docket of the children's court, and that 43 per cent of the children in a near-by reformatory had been street workers. A more close alliance between school and industry is needed. It is stated that if the father leaves school too soon, he will usually be too inefficient and unskilled as a worker to permit his children to stay in school long enough. That the problem of child labor is also the educational problem, cannot be disputed.

While the Federal child labor law is a step in the right direction, certainly it is not a solution of the child labor problem.

Let us all help observe Child Labor Sunday, January 28.

Magazine, Ark.

SALLIE HENDERSON'S "ADVANCED IDEAS"

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

(Continued from last week)

One morning, a few weeks after Colonel Clayton's visit, Sallie Henderson sat on a broken rail near the gate and waited for a possible chance to follow her husband to town. He had gone off without her, refusing to allow her to accompany him. Sallie knew that he had another bale of cotton to sell, and it worried her mightily to feel that, left to temptation, he would squander the money he would receive. Joe needed her, she decided, for protection against himself. As she sat waiting, several horsemen passed and a number of wagons driven by negroes and loaded with cotton. At last a shiny new buggy, to which was hitched a sleek, well-fed horse, came in sight. In the vehicle sat a stout, jolly-faced, middle-aged woman who was driving. She stopped, greeted Mrs. Henderson, and asked her if she had any eggs and butter she wanted her to take to the grocer's. Sallie assured her that her chief desire just then was to ride with her to town.

"Jump right in!" agreed Mrs. Summers. "Glad of your company; going to hear the lecture?" Sallie said she didn't know about it.

"Where are your eyes, Sallie Henderson? Haven't you been reading in the paper about this Miss Woollard's great work in organizing temperance societies and her speeches on woman suffrage? And to think she is to be in Blankton! The Herald boosted her to the skies last week."

"We don't take a paper now, times are so hard," stammered Sallie.

"And you an educated person." Mrs. Summers stared at the woman at her side in amazement. "You've a right to papers and magazines, Sallie, even if times are hard," she said. "I don't see that men give up whisky and tobacco under the same circumstances. My husband used to say they are consolers in times of trouble. So is something to read and divert our minds from household worries. A woman ought to have the same right that her husband has to the family purse—but she doesn't. A woman in this state hasn't any more rights when it comes to owning property and claiming a part of the income, than the negro slaves had before the war, no matter how much she owned before she married. And when a woman's husband dies she gets a child's part, although the children may be step-children, and she the one who brought the money into the family." Sallie remarked that it seemed very unjust.

"It is unjust, but women will have to submit to it until they can get the law changed. 'Justice for Women' is the subject of Miss Woollard's lecture. She has her rights, but she wants to help the women who are being defrauded of theirs. She wants laws that will permit a wife to hold her property when her husband is squandering every dollar he can get. Being a widow in fairly good circumstances, the law doesn't hurt me, but like Miss Woollard I want to see other women have their due. After I finish my business, I will call for you somewhere. You must hear that lecture." The women agreed to meet at a certain place and hour.

Sallie went at once to Johnson & Green's store, where her husband would probably sell his cotton, and asked if he had been there. "We made a bid on his sample," she was told, "and he said when he sold he would make a payment on his account. He has not returned. Have a seat in the front of the store, Mrs. Henderson, and you may see him go by."

For an hour or more the anxious wife sat near a window and watched the motley crowd of negroes and white farmers pass the door. Her anxiety increased as time passed and her husband did not appear. Uncle Ned entered the store, and she inquired about Mr. Henderson's whereabouts.

"He sold de cotton and went off wid some of de boys, Miss Sallie. Dey was treatin' and dar ain't no doin' anything wid him when he gits started to drinkin'. I'll try to look after him, chile."

It was useless to wait, so Sallie left the store and sought the rest room where she was to meet Mrs. Summers. As she seated herself, she noticed a black-eyed woman walk to the table and pick up a paper. Glancing over its contents, she cried excitedly:

"Miss Woollard is to speak this afternoon on 'Justice for Women.' I am going to hear her. If there's any way to give farmer's wives and daughters justice, I want to know what it is. Who's going to the lecture?"

There was a brief silence and a stoop-shouldered woman ventured in a half whisper: "That's a woman's rights lecturer, and the men folks'll think she oughtn't to be encouraged in carryin' on such awful doin's."

"I think the awful part is what most women in this state have to endure from not having any rights at all. I am going," the black-eyed woman declared.

"What'll your old man say about it?" asked an elderly woman, sternly.

"It doesn't matter. I have as much right to enjoy that lecture as my husband and your husband have to loaf around the square and throw away the money you and I helped to earn on 'treats' and other foolish things."

Just then Mrs. Summers came in and called out cheerily:

"Come on, Sallie! Is there anybody else here who wants to hear the lecture? We must hurry and get front seats."

There was a momentary hesitation, and Mrs. Henderson joined her friend. Other women in the rest room followed.

"I do hope she won't paw the air and make us ashamed of our sex," whispered Sallie, as she and Mrs. Summers entered the hall where Miss Woollard was to speak.

"If she says the right thing, I don't care how she says it," replied Mrs. Summers. "I want her to wake up the women of this behind-the-times old county."

The hall was half-filled with representative women of the community and a few men, who were interested in progressive movements.

Miss Woollard was nothing like the woman's rights woman Sallie Henderson had mentally pictured—masculine in build and masterful in manner. Instead she was a medium-sized, brown-haired, blue-eyed woman nearing middle age. Her manner was winning, and she was in dead earnest about bringing justice to her fellow women and stopping by the ballot the wholesale traffic in intoxicants. For the first time in her life Sallie realized her responsibility as an individual in helping to make the world a better place for the next generation.

Miss Woollard spoke of the humiliation a sensitive woman must suffer at becoming a beggar upon her marriage, and cited many instances of poverty and want where the husband—the holder of the purse strings—was a drinking man. Though he might be a spendthrift and profligate, the husband had the right to drag his family to the gutter and the wife could not legally claim a penny even of what had come as her inheritance. Legislation alone, she asserted, could bring about justice and could also hold in check the traffic in intoxicating liquors. It was only a few weeks until the election of legislators and senators. Would the men present pledge themselves to vote for the candidates who advocated a change in the law which would bring justice to wives and daughters and who would vote against the saloon?

The pastors of the several churches of Blankton, and several other prominent men rose, one at a time, and promised their support at election time. A woman editor, whose husband had been killed in a drunken row, asserted her intention of lending the columns of her paper to the advocacy of the bill in the legislature and promised to boost the candidates.

A prominent lawyer, known as one of the most eloquent speakers in the state, boldly offered to help in every way possible. Although the audience did not know it, and he failed to mention the fact, he had two sons on the way to ruin by the liquor route and was, therefore, willing to do what he could to kill the liquor traffic in that section. He proposed a mass meeting of the citizens the following evening, and the woman editor agreed to give the matter publicity. Miss Woollard gladly promised to remain in the town and speak again. She then closed her lecture with an earnest plea to the happy, shielded, money-supplied women to aid in bringing about legislation that would help their drudging, moneyless sisters to happier lives. She begged one and all to join in helping to put the sale of alcoholic beverages out of the community for the sake of helpless women and children.

"We may not be able to do much, Sallie," said Mrs. Summers, as she drove homeward, "but I am going to organize a W. C. T. U. this very week. I'll drive all over the neighborhood and get the people roused and interested, and have a meeting at my house. And we will get the children organized in Loyal Temperance Legions and taught the dangers of alcoholic poison. We women can also use our tongues boosting the candidates who will help us in the legislature."

"Joe and Uncle James Clayton will vio-

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

IT'S COMING

MRS. J. J. RADFORD, President Loveland (Colo.) W. C. T. U.

Air: "Old Black Joe."

Gone are the days when flourished the saloon;
Coming the time—and coming very soon,
When we'll be free from whisky, rum and rye,
The states and counties one by one are voting dry.

Chorus

It's coming; it's coming, the nation's going dry,
We will be free from rum's dominion bye and bye.

Four more great states victorious in the fight
For God and home and justice, peace and right.
Alaska, too, has risen in her might,
Oh, praise Jehovah! We will make the map all white.

We call to men and women everywhere,
Come now and help; together we will share
Patience and toil, the faith, the hope, the prayer,
That by the help of God, we'll win in this warfare.

SHAKESPEARE TO THE RESCUE!

A NEW YEAR'S EVE STORY

DAWLEY PALMER

The last rehearsal of the Medal Contest League for the year was over, and the young men and women had lingered for a half-hour chat.

"As we shan't see much of one another until after the holidays," said Dorothy Jennings, "I invite you all to my home for dinner on New Year's eve."

"Hospitable of you, Miss Dorothy," said Jamie Phillips, the popular new member. "I confess I was caught napping, for I wanted to take the league to the Pittfield Club on that night."

Dorothy Jennings, although not a little vexed by the rudeness of the city chap in supplanting her invitation, could not help smiling over the prospect of an evening at the magnificent Pittfield, famed for its architectural beauty and excellent cuisine, as well as for the gaiety and freedom of its New Year's eve celebrations.

"Always pretty lively there on that night, eh?" questioned Arthur Golden, evincing an interest in Jamie's novel plan.

"It's great!" declared Jamie. "The lid's off, and everybody's in the finest spirits. Splendid clothes, music, fresh entertainment, lasting almost all night if people care to stay. Father and mother usually go down. Last year some trick of a girl—about like little Miss Maxie here—came over from the next table where, probably, she had been sipping sparkling Burgundy all evening, and plumped herself right down in Dad's lap. She said she always did like old men best."

The young people laughed—all except Ben Kendall.

"Who was the girl?" gasped the astonished Dorothy.

"Great Scott! How should I know? You don't exchange visiting cards at such a time and place, Miss Innocent. That's the fun of it. It's the one night when you cast formalities to the winds."

Ben Kendall had looked seriously annoyed, but had remained silent, until the others had all but consented to accept Jamie's invitation. Really, he preferred Miss Jennings', he said. Surely, they could dine in the city some other evening. Quick to divine the unfavorable appraisal of his views, he decided to venture a story apropos of the situation.

"Let me tell you something," he urged. "Many of you know Ned Harris, who married one of the governor's daughters. Two years ago, Letty, his fiancée, wished to see the city's hilarious celebration, so, just to satisfy her whim, they dined at one of the swell places and visited several others. Letty, always attractive, was all dolled up, as they say. When she and Ned started down Jackson boulevard toward the garage where they had left their motor car, half a dozen fellows, full as ticks, surrounded them. One towering giant embraced Letty and kissed her, while Ned raged furiously, but was utterly powerless to avenge the insult. The street seemed to swarm with people who were amused by the act. Had Ned followed his impulse to fight the ruffian, there would not have been enough left of him to take the girl home. That's just a sample of the New Year's stunts that are practiced."

"Oh, I don't doubt your veracity, Kendall," fretted Jamie, "but, really, things like that seldom happen, you know. That's more like a moving picture than the real thing. The others seem anxious to go, and if you don't care to, why—"

Ben Kendall's sunny smile spread over his face, and he laid a kind hand on the younger man's shoulder. "Come, don't be angry. You're new among us temperance folk. I was only putting Clara—Dorothy—any of the girls—in Letty's place. Naturally, a man would wish to shield a lady in his company from such an onslaught as happened on the boulevard, and the best way to do it is to stay away on that night of revelry."

"But we wouldn't misbehave, Kendall," interceded the new member. "I claim that we ought to visit the loop on New Year's eve, to keep ourselves well informed. If we as a league expect to portray the world's tragedies realistically, the world's habits shouldn't be unknown to us."

"That's O. K.," chimed in Golden. "It would do us no harm to watch what goes on. We must know a wrong in order to right it."

Ben Kendall rose to the implied challenge. "Why should a person countenance, by his presence, any doings on the last day of the year which he would be utterly ashamed to witness on any one of the other three hundred and sixty-four days?"

"And what sort of a girl is it who deposits herself in a stranger's lap, simply because her natural sense of propriety has been smothered by sparkling Burgundy, or champagne?" breathlessly exclaimed Clara Graves, rallying to the league's standard.

"Sparkling Burgundy is red, isn't it?" asked Maxie. "She shouldn't have looked upon the wine 'when it is red,' should she?"

"Your education has not been entirely neglected, Miss Maxie," laughed Golden—"not on Bible texts, at least."

"We all know that the Good Book is full of commands on temperance in all things, including drink, but few know how much our own writers—Shakespeare, for instance—have to say about it," commented Ben.

"Are you sure about Shakespeare's attitude toward temperance in drink?" questioned Jamie.

"Well, to change the subject from grave to gay," proposed Clayton Todd, "I suggest that we give the hospitable Jamie a vote of thanks for his invitation and accept Dorothy's on the spot."

"Let's!" "Agreed!" eagerly seconded the others.

"At my home, then, on New Year's eve, armed with Shakespeare as an authority on wine," laughed Miss Jennings, as the Medal Contest League scattered.

By his firm stand, Ben Kendall had strengthened the wavering will of the league's promising new member and far outdistanced his comrades in loyalty to the cause of temperance.

Dorothy Jennings was bestowing the final touch to her novel dinner table as the door opened to admit her guests into the adjoining spacious hall. She smiled with satisfaction as she noted the white "temperance" effect of the tiny square attached to the place-card, upon which each guest was to write his New Year's resolution.

It was after the delectable feast was over and the health of the young hostess had been drunk in sparkling spring water, that her guests introduced the surprise which brought to the face of that young lady a flush of radiant pleasure. They had come armed with Shakespeare quotations, all on the subject of temperance.

"'O, thou invisible spirit of wine, if thou hast no name to be known by, let us call thee devil!'" began Clayton Todd.

Dorothy's bewildered face had scarcely cleared into appreciative smiles as she quickly glanced round the table, when Belle Condon said, "Having committed 'Macbeth' to memory, I cannot forget these lines:

"'When Duncan is asleep . . . his two chamberlains
Will I with wine and wassail so convince,
That memory, the warder of the brain,
Shall be a fume, and the receipt of reason
A limbeck only.'"

"Inflection is fine, Belle. Some day the other members of this amateur league will be falling all over themselves trying to break through the line at the box office to see you act," facetiously predicted Golden. "Do you all remember what good old Kendall here told us about Ned Harris's experience in Jackson boulevard? I cannot help wondering if the highways of old London were not somewhat the same three hundred years ago when, in 'Othello,' Shakespeare wrote:

"'O God, that men should put an enemy into their mouths
To steal away their brains! that we should, with joy, Pleasance, revel, and applause, transform ourselves into beasts.'" and again in the same:

"'I will ask him for my place again; he shall tell me I am a drunkard! Had I as many mouths as Hydra, such an answer would stop them all. To be now a sensible man, by and by a fool, and presently a beast.'"

"It doesn't look as though the wise old Shakespeare favored drinking, does it?" remarked Todd. "Let me add from 'Othello':

"'And now in madness
Being full of supper and distempering draughts,
Upon malicious bravery dost thou come
To start my quiet?'"

"And this is from 'The Tempest,'" repeated the redoubtable Jamie:

"'I told you, sir, they were red hot with drinking;
So full of valor that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces; beat the ground
For kissing of their feet.'"

"Where was that, Jamie?" bantered Arthur Golden, his eyes twinkling. "At the Pittfield Club?"

"I get you, Arthur," returned Jamie goodnaturedly. Jamie Phillips looked with tenderness over at his friend Ken-

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

TINY HEARTS, ACROSS THE WATER

Tiny hearts, across the water,
Life has lost for you its song,
God be with you, little children,
May the New Year right the wrong.
You are lonely, you are grieving,
With the sorrow War has made,
May the God who loves all children,
Let the sun shine through the shade.

Boys and girls of our dear country,
Stretch their hands to you afar,
God be with you, little children,
Soon will shine the New Year star.
Star of hope, all clear and radiant,
Shedding forth its healing rays,
May the God who loves all children,
Bring again your happy days.

—Windsor Grow

RHEUMATISM IS SLOW POISONING

because the entire system becomes permeated with injurious acids.

To relieve rheumatism Scott's Emulsion is a double help; it is rich in blood-food; it imparts strength to the functions and supplies the very oil-food that rheumatic conditions always need.

Scott's Emulsion has helped countless thousands when other remedies failed.

No Alcohol. Refuse Substitutes.

14-48

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

SALLIE HENDERSON'S "ADVANCED IDEAS"

(Continued from Page Twelve)

lently oppose anything I try to do, but I would love to help, Mrs. Summers!"

"You must help, Sallie. You have a right to make a declaration of independence. Tell Joe and old Jim Clayton you propose to help put temptation out of the way of your boy, and to keep your girl from future unhappiness."

When Joe Henderson had sobered up and was meekly repentant again, his wife informed him of her intention of joining a temperance society. He was vehement in his denunciation of an organization which was a tyrannical infringement upon the rights of intelligent, law-abiding citizens.

"What will Uncle James Clayton think of such unwomanly conduct, Sallie?" he demanded.

"I am going to do what I believe to be right," replied his wife; and she stuck to her determination in the face of hot words and much blustering on the part of the Colonel and Joe.

Although it was only a short time till the election, the women of Blankton and vicinity, with the help of the woman editor, the eloquent lawyer, and others aroused the entire county to the danger of the unrestricted sale of liquor, and they won their fight.

Sallie Henderson had entered into the women's campaign with heart and soul and rejoiced when she heard of the election of the candidates who would favor the change in the laws. But the good time coming arrived too late to save her from more disasters. It was a year before these measures went into effect, and her husband continued to drink and squander the income from the farm until his creditors decided to foreclose their mortgage on the homestead, and the place was advertised for sale on a specified date.

On the morning of the day before the sale Joe Henderson started to the crossroads postoffice for the mail, and his wife began packing a trunk with clothing preparatory to moving. She had barely begun her work when Joe came rushing home excitedly.

"We're saved, Sallie! We're saved!" he shouted, waving a letter over her head. "Your great uncle, William Clayton, is dead, and has left you a legacy of five thousand dollars. Isn't it glorious?"

"How did you hear the news?" queried Sallie, her voice trembling with emotion.

"From this letter, of course."

"You opened my letter?"

"Why, yes. Wasn't that all right?"

"No. What is mine—be it letter or money—is mine. Hereafter I prefer to open my letters myself."

"But this money, Sallie, can stop the sale and pay off enough of the debts to hold the place and in a few years we'll be on our feet again. I will go to Blankton this morning and make arrangements to keep our dear old home."

"I do not care to spend my money on this place, Joe. Neither would you care to remain if you had suffered as I have. That money is mine—thanks to our new laws—and I will invest it as I please."

"Sallie! You must be losing your mind," Joe gasped.

"No, I am only coming to my senses, and have grown wise from experiences. I think I will buy a small farm near Blankton and raise poultry and vegetables for the market. I will need help, and if you care to work on my farm for a share of the income, I will take you as a partner, provided you comply with my rules and regulations and sign a contract to that effect."

"Rules and regulations! What do you mean, Sallie?"

"I mean I will have no one employed on my place who will not sign a pledge to abstain from everything in the shape of intoxicants, and also a contract which certifies he will be dismissed and required to leave the place when he violates his promise. Think about it, Joe, and if you care to be my partner I will have the papers drawn up and we will be ready to turn over a fresh leaf early in the New Year. If you decide upon other plans—"

"Good morning, Sallie!" called Colonel Clayton, bursting into the room like a cyclone. "I've just heard of your good luck. Glad that it has come in time for Joe to buy back the place."

"He will not do that with my money, Uncle James," said Sallie.

"What!" exploded the Colonel.

With dignity and decided firmness the assertion was repeated. The little woman stood as straight as an arrow and regarded her husband and uncle with a new air of independence and self-reliance.

The Colonel gazed at her in amazement, then shook his gray head and growled:

"These new laws have made you women daffy, just as I thought they would. You'll be wanting to vote and hold office next." He stalked from the room indignantly.

"I accept the partnership you offer, Sallie," said Joe meekly, a few minutes later. "I will sign anything you wish, and the Lord and the law helping me, I'll be man enough to walk straight the rest of my life."

You Use Post Cards

Why Not Use the

PROHIBITION MAP POST CARD?

which silently carries its message of "dry territory" as well as your word of greeting or notice of the W. C. T. U. meeting.

Price, per fifty, 60 cents;
per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

SCRIPTURE POST CARDS

Beautiful scenic and floral designs, with Scripture verses of Hope, Love, Restitution and Eternal Life. Appropriate for birthday, greeting, instruction, admonition and remembrance. Large variety; 25 cards for 25 cents, postpaid. Send stamps or coin. Address IMPERIAL POST CARD CO., 1404 SCHOOL ST., ROCKFORD, ILL.

IS YOUR SCHOOL OR COLLEGE SUPPLIED WITH OUR REFERENCE LIBRARY?

NOTE THESE LISTS — ORDER SOON

Ten Dollar List

The Liquor Problem, Richardson, 1915
The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon
Evils of Alcohol, Dr. W. A. Chappel
Alcohol and the Human Body, Sir Victor Horsley
The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon
The Economics of Prohibition, J. C. Fernald
Alcohol and Health, Edith Smith Davis
Does It Pay? Prof. John Nicholls
Alcohol and the Government, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson
Good Health, Luther Halsey Gulick
Town and City, Luther Halsey Gulick
Emergencies, Luther Halsey Gulick
The Body at Work, Luther Halsey Gulick
Control of Body and Mind, Luther Halsey Gulick
The Body and Its Defenses, Luther Halsey Gulick
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Harry Warner
Alcohol—Its Influence on Mind and Body, Edwin F. Bowers, M. D.
A Compendium of Temperance Truth, Edith Smith Davis

Five Dollar List

The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe, Ernest Gordon
Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem, Harry Warner
Alcohol—Its Influence on Mind and Body, Edwin F. Bowers, M. D.
A Compendium of Temperance Truth, Edith Smith Davis
The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna A. Gordon
Alcohol and the Human Body, Sir Vietor Horsley

Stories

Dear Enemy, Jean Webster; postpaid, $1.30
Little Sir Galahad, Phoebe Gray; postpaid, $1.42
John Barleycorn, Jack London; postpaid, $1.42
A Singular Life, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps Ward; postpaid, $1.25
A Modern Madonna, Caroline A. Stanley; postpaid, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

Songs for the Children

Marching Songs Number 1, compiled from numbers 1, 2 and 3, retaining the most popular selections.
Marching Songs Number 2, formerly book number 4.

Price, 10 cents each

TEMPERANCE SONGS FOR THE CHILDREN

A Book of New Songs

Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon
Price, 10 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

READY DURING JANUARY, 1917

National Minutes of Indianapolis Convention. Price, 25 cents each.
Annual Leaflet for 1917. Price, 2 cents each; $1.00 per hundred.
Y. P. B. Year Book for 1917. Price, 2 cents each.
L. T. L. Hand Book for 1917. Price, 2 cents each.
Orders for above will be filled in the order in which they are received.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

EARLY IN THE YEAR

Is the Time to Plan for
A NEW W. C. T. U.
A NEW Y. P. B.
A NEW L. T. L.
and to aid in this work of organization use the special ORGANIZING PACKAGES containing all helps and instructions.

Price, 50 cents each

In ordering, state which package is desired.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Miss Gordon has just received a most acceptable Christmas gift of a new namesake Loyal Temperance Legion of fifty members in Platteville, Wisconsin. The Legion was organized by Mrs. Belle C. Kimball of Kirkwood, Missouri, president St. Louis county W. C. T. U. Mrs. Kimball's father, Dr. James C. Campbell, organized the first temperance society in the state of Wisconsin, The Sons of Temperance, and her mother organized The Daughters of Temperance at Platteville. This is one of the wide-awake cities that voted out the saloons for the first time in its history at the last election.

NEW MUSIC

Home's Love-Light

Words by Anna Adams Gordon
Music by Daniel Protheroe

A solo destined to be the most popular temperance song written this year. Is suited to any voice and equally adapted for soprano, alto, tenor or baritone.

Price, 30 cents; two copies 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Demand for
Good Temperance Music
is met by the use of the following:

PROHIBITION'S IN THE AIR.
Price, 10 cents per copy.
THE WORLD WIDE JUBILEE.
Price, 15 cents per copy.
PAEAN OF VICTORY.
Price, 10 cents.

The above may be used for solos or quartets.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, president of the West Virginia W. C. T. U., and her son Leland are spending some months in Washington, D. C., in the absence of Mr. Yost from home on a business trip. The presence of Mrs. Yost in Washington has made it possible for the National W. C. T. U. to secure her services for some special legislative work in co-operation with Mrs. Ellis.

Mrs. A. S. Benjamin, for many years the gifted and able National superintendent of Parliamentary Usage, suggests as a part of the program of every local union meeting, preferably the opening exercises, the repetition of the names of the prohibition states, as given in this week's UNION SIGNAL, in the order in which the respective laws went into effect.

The Christian Advocate, in a recent issue, publishes an article by Helen M. Young on the work of Mrs. Martha M. Allen, entitled "A Temperance Pioneer." Characterizing Mrs. Allen as a pioneer in that most difficult of fields—"clearing away old traditions and customs and making way for modern science and knowledge," it reviews the educational campaigns along medical temperance lines that have been carried on under Mrs. Allen's leadership.

The Whitewater (Wis.) W. C. T. U. held a Christian Citizenship meeting in the public library hall on December 12. An effort was made to interest the townspeople in this meeting, and many of them were persuaded to take part in the program. An opportunity for discussion of subjects of community interest was given, literature was distributed, and the scope of the Christian Citizenship department explained. The crowning feature of the meeting was a report of the Indianapolis convention, given by Mrs. E. C. Fish, a member of the Whitewater union, who was a delegate to the National gathering.

An interesting meeting in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition was that held by the W. C. T. U. of Berlin, Md., on Sunday afternoon, December 10, in the Presbyterian church. It was presided over by the local president; optimistic addresses were made by R. J. Showell, Horace Davis, R. F. Powell, Mrs. R. J. Showell and Senator Orlando Harrison, who emphasized the need of practical effort and urged the sending of telegrams to Washington. This suggestion was later voted upon and a committee appointed to attend to the matter.

The thirty-first annual convention of the W. C. T. U. of Otsego county, New York, held at Milford, was well attended. Mrs. Georgia Weaton, who for twelve years has been the leader of the work of the county, during which time the membership has reached 932, declined re-election, and Mrs. Nellie Finch was chosen to succeed her.

SHAKESPEARE TO THE RESCUE!

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

dall. He missed no opportunity to show his gratitude for Ben's timely direction to the happy path of right living.

"'What's a drunken man like, fool?'" he continued to quote, this time from "Twelfth Night":

"'Like a drowned man, a fool, and a madman; one draught above heat makes him a fool; the second mads him; and a third drowns him.'"

"I chose Portia," said Clara Graves, "who in 'The Merchant of Venice' says:

"'Therefore, for fear of the worst, I pray thee to set a deep glass of Rhenish wine on the contrary casket, for if the devil be within, and that temptation without, I know he will choose it. I will do anything, Nerissa, ere I will be married to a sponge.'"

Just as the applause which greeted Portia's speech had ceased, the clock in the hall musically chimed twelve! It heralded the New Year!

"You haven't opened your kewpie suitcase favor, Clara," reminded Dorothy. At the first gentle tug, out rolled a shining ring, strung on the dainty ribbon, and as Clara blushingly lifted the golden circle, all eyes followed the ribbon's length to discover what they already knew—that the other end was fastened to Ben Kendall's favor. Congratulations were heaped upon the two.

"Miss Portia, your casket is safe. He will be anything but a sponge. You've chosen well—the oldest and wisest among us—the best fellow in the world!" declared Jamie Phillips, with warmth and flourish.

Ben responded from "As You Like It":

"'Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors to my blood;
Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility;
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter—
Frosty, but kindly.'"

"What about those place-card resolutions?" asked Clara.

"Something neat to be framed up and sent to William Shakespeare, Esq.," suggested Golden. "I think we owe him our everlasting gratitude."

"Then, to sum up the master-mind," glibly interrupted Clayton Todd, "the man who freely imbibes is a devil, a fool, a madman, a criminal, a drowned man, a beast and a sponge. Quite clear, isn't it?"

"I am claiming those resolutions as my particular trophies," smiled Dorothy, after all had finished writing. "Perhaps, though, I might be induced to divulge one of them. Which one?" she asked, with charming naiveté!

"Jamie's! Jamie's, of course!" clamored the leaguers, to the evident discomposure of the young man.

"'No loop for mine on New Year's eve, or any other eve,'" read Dorothy, with eloquent voice and look. And the departing leaguers met Jamie's New Year's resolution with a ringing three-times-three, twice over.

Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 pounds, and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for booklet 23. I'd like to tell you of my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Boulevard. Chicago

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES
THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year
Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

"PERSONAL WORK" CAMPAIGNS

No less a personage than the vice-president of one of the big national liquor associations said recently in a trade journal: "It is my belief that all the people engaged in the alcoholic beverage business should be thoroughly prepared and equipped for an up-to-date, authoritative and intelligent discussion of the pros and cons of prohibition. We liquor men may not be eloquent orators, but there is no man engaged in this business who cannot present arguments AGAINST prohibition to at least one man at a time. There are those whose business it is to address audiences on the various phases of prohibition. It is our business to do personal work; to give the personal touch; to work for the personal vote."

In every village, city and state of the United States these "personal work" liquor campaigns are being carried on, quietly, unadvertised, unannounced. After the tumult and the shouting of the election has died away they continue to do this hand-picked work in preparation for the next. How is the W. C. T. U. to meet these tactics? There is but one way. By an equally unobtrusive, unproclaimed but persevering, patient, persuasive "personal work" campaign, conducted and carried on by trained, equipped men and women. Good intentions, burning zeal and exuberant enthusiasm alone will not serve the purpose. Every one of the 400,000 members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union must be enlisted in an effort to counteract these "pussyfoot" methods. Each member must be a peripatetic information bureau, dispensing information on every phase of the liquor question; rivaling the census bureaus in her ability to furnish statistics on the per capita of poverty, insanity, wealth, taxes and sundry other matters in every prohibition and every license state. She must be able to analyze and dissect with consummate skill the subtle half truths and whole falsehoods of the liquor publicity bureaus. There not yet having been established in any university, so far as known, a chair or professorship "for the investigation and refutation of liquor lies," she must educate herself for her important work by painstaking study. THE UNION SIGNAL is well adapted for this purpose.

Prohibition Map

Revised to December 1, 1916
Size 19x25
Price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WHAT THE CURRENT PERIODICALS ARE SAYING

The Ladies' Home Journal tells the following significant incident concerning the personal liberty of employes of the distilleries and breweries: "A driver of a distillery wagon belonging to one of the largest distilleries in the country had just unloaded some barrels of whisky and stood resting for a moment before driving on. 'I suppose,' said a bystander, 'you have all of that to drink you want?' 'Well,' the driver answered, 'I could have it if I wanted it. But I never touch it on or off the job. I see too much of what it does. Then, we are not allowed to drink, you know.' 'Not allowed? You mean by your employers?' asked the bystander. 'That's right,' answered the driver. 'They know the stuff they're handling and it is good-bye to our jobs if we touch as much as a drop. No, sir, the greatest teetotalers in the country are the drivers of booze wagons and don't you forget it! They're like the bartenders. You rarely find a bartender who drinks.'"

In a December number of The Survey there is an article on national prohibition by Robert A. Woods of Boston, entitled "Winning the Other Half," in the closing paragraphs of which the author says:

"A most remarkable fact about the movement for national prohibition, looked at now from the point of view of its strong probability of success and the amazing economic and moral transformation which it will produce, is that, for its specific promotion, it owes nothing to any of the accredited social-reform forces. With substantial accuracy it may be said social workers as a body have had toward it nothing more than the attitude of curious spectators. Yet it will, without doubt, accomplish within their own field more than the total result of all they can hope to achieve with their present programs. On the fingers of one hand can be counted the leaders of organized labor who have shown any kindly interest in what may even double and treble trade-union resources and influence. Hardly even a ripple has been stirred upon the face of socialist discussion by this vast tendency which promises to accomplish the biggest result of deliberate collective action in the whole history of democracy."

The latest issue of the Sunday School Times contains an article by Miss Margaret Wintringer on "How Britain Met Her Greatest Foe," dealing with the liquor problem in England as the writer saw it in her recent trip abroad.

The Outlook for December 27 contains an article on "National Prohibition: What Form Should It Take?" by William H. Anderson.

Moorhead, Minn., which went dry on July 1, 1915, is now free from debt, according to the press. On December 1, the city retired a $40,000 bond, the last of an indebtedness of $200,000, which dates back to the time of the adoption of the present city charter nineteen years ago.

Commence 1917 in the Right Way

by sending in New Subscriptions to

THE UNION SIGNAL

A most appropriate

New Year's Gift

for your pastor, your lawyer friend, your student friend, your W. C. T. U. co-worker, your family.
Price.....$1.00 per year

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

The twelve-year-old son of Clinton N. Howard, the "Little Giant" of the prohibition movement, recently had occasion to fill out an application blank for membership in a branch of the Y. M. C. A. "What is your father's occupation?" was one of the questions. The answer he wrote was brief and to the point: "Dry cleaner."

A man traveling in Maine met a middle-aged farmer, who said his father, ninety years old, was still on the farm where he was born.

"Ninety years old, eh?"

"Yes, pop is close to ninety."

"Is his health good?"

"'Tain't much now. He's been complainin' for a few months back."

"What's the matter with him?"

"I dunno; sometimes I think farmin' don't agree with him."—Western Christian Advocate.

During President Lincoln's first visit to the Springfield penitentiary an old inmate, looking out through the bars, remarked.

"Well, Mr. Lincoln, you and I ought to be well posted on prisons. We've seen all there are in the country."

"Why, this is the first I ever visited," replied the chief executive, somewhat astonished.

"Yes," was the reply, "but I've been in all the rest."—Chicago News.

Przasnysz and Przemysl are not the only things that the Russians have to contend with, for some day their whole advance may be wrecked upon one of the following:

Berezszaz.
Hajdu Szoboszo.
Nyiregyhaza.
Dzialoszice.
Wloszczowa.
Szczuczyn.—Columbia State.

Hewitt—"Don't you think I stand a good chance of making a fortune out of that mine?"

Jewett—"Out of it, yes. In it, no."—Town Topics.

"Perkins is down and out, isn't he?"

"Oh, yes—he told me the other day he was paying cash for everything."—Life.

A COMPENDIUM OF TEMPERANCE TRUTH
by
Edith Smith Davis,
World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction
A reference book which should be in every school library for use in essay work.
A book for temperance workers.
Price, 50 cents net.
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., JANUARY 18, 1917 | No. 3

SIGNIFICANT HEADLINES FROM THE GENERAL PRESS

OREGON PROSPERS UNDER PROHIBITION

Economic and Social ... Made in Year ...

PROHIBITION IS ALL IMPORTANT SUBJECT AT THE STATE CAPITAL

RECORD PROSPERITY TRAMPLES ON HEEL OF DRY COLORADO

WHAT THE GREAT WEST ... S DONE IN A WAY DURING ... YEAR:

OLD MAN 1916 LEADS DEMON RUM AWAY

New Year Greeted by Sobriety and Industry.

BIBULOUS REVELER IS MISSED

Clear-Brained Crowd Grills

UNION PACIFIC IS ... WATER WAGON

Puts Ban on Alcoholic ...

TACOMA HAS LESS CRIME ... for Heavy

BANK CLEARINGS GAIN $16,000,000

Tacoma Is Setting Ne... Record as 1916 D...

LAW IS WELL ENFORCED

ATTORNEY-GENERAL ... SOME VIOLAT...

COLORADO

...nkenness Has Decreased ... 50 Per Cent Dur... Period.

ONE-TIME SALOONS ... NOW BUSY STORES

... Held for ... vacant

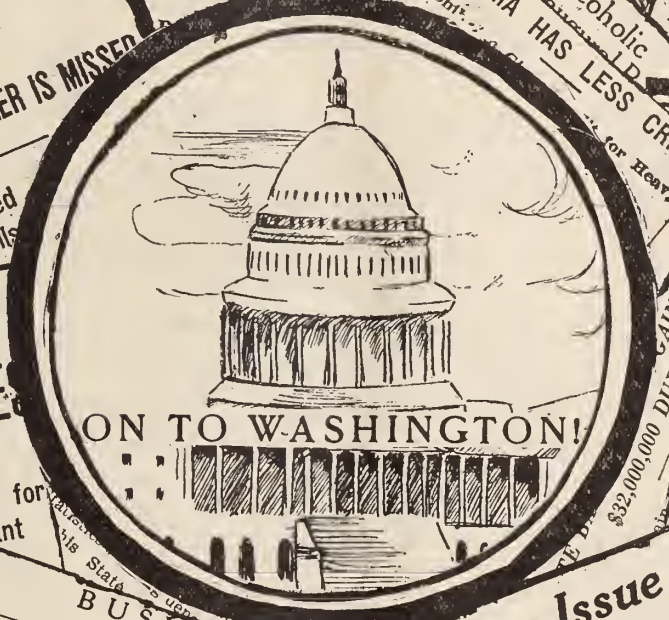
MORAL TONE BETTE...

Mayor Albee S... Has Bee...

...ibition

26

$32,000,000 DURING YEAR



TRUTH ABOUT SEATTLE

BUSINESS ... OF THE PAC...

SEATTLE'S TAXES IN 1916 $183,649 LOWER THAN 191...

TITLE— ...uenti... ...e m... ...tax... ...ith has appeared ...ities

Prohibition Issue Figures in Six State Legislatures

...diana, Colorado, Mai... ...Hampshire

California, Illinois ... Will Have ...

GOOD SEEN IN LAW

"BONE DRY" LAW ... FAVORED BY LIST...

...ROHIBITION

DRY OREGON GROWS

Economic and Social Gai... ...t Year.

CRIME TAKES BIG DROP

POLICE FIND CONDITIONS ARE IMPROVED BY DRY REGIME.

THE DENVER POST—COLORADO

ATTEMPTS AT SUICIDE CUT TO A MINIMUM THIS YEAR, COUNTY HOSPITAL REPO...

$11,40...

...te Equalization Board grant... ...ssessed valuation over esti... ...go as follows:

PASSING OF THE SALOONS MEANT PASSING OF BUMS, DENVER FREE OF HOBOES

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

This has been another busy week of legislation. On the afternoon of Sunday, January 7, more than 2,000 persons crowded into the National Theater to attend the rally held by the Anti-Saloon League of the District in opposition to the Underwood referendum bill. There were two overflow meetings, one held in G. A. R. Hall, across the avenue, and another of equal size in the park in front of the theater. Prominent speakers, headed by former Judge William DeLacy, and followed by Dr. Samuel Small of Georgia, Andrew Wilson, president of the Anti-Saloon League of the District, Miss Anna A. Gordon, "Cyclone" Davis, representative from Texas, and others championed the cause. Judge DeLacy, who was judge of the Juvenile court for a number of years, and who is an honored member of the Roman Catholic Church, made a most telling address. He said, "Now, when victory for the abolition of the saloon at the capital of the nation is in sight, we are told to halt in the name of the people. What a specious cry it is when we remember the people have solemnly said in the Constitution, not that any portion of the people, but that Congress alone shall make the laws for the city of Washington, that Congress shall have exclusive jurisdiction here."

—McCutcheon in Chicago Tribune

When Dr. Small, who followed Judge DeLacy, began his address, he said, "When we find a distinguished Roman Catholic layman and an old-fashioned Methodist preacher pulling together, you can bet your boots it is for the best thing on the map. Congress, by whose grace the liquor traffic exists in the District of Columbia today, did not ask the people if they wanted the liquor traffic, nor did it propose the referendum to find out. Congress simply put it upon the people of the District without their consent, and Congress and no other power set it up and it is the business of Congress and no other power to upset it."

Prohibition Rally a Whirlwind of Enthusiasm

This meeting was a whirlwind of enthusiasm all through the hours it was being held. Miss Gordon represented the National W. C. T. U. in an effective manner. Mrs. Shelton, president of the District W. C. T. U., with her capable band of women back of her, had sent out 1,000 personal letters to clergymen and prominent people of the District, urging them to attend, and the vast throng present showed how well this appeal had been received.

At the same hour, a short distance away across Pennsylvania avenue, a mass meeting was held at Poli's Theater, under the auspices of the District Referendum association. Senator Underwood of Alabama was the chief speaker.

Tuesday, January 9, had been set apart by the Senate for a final discussion and vote on the District of Columbia prohibition measure. When it came up at one o'clock in accordance with the unanimous consent agreement, Senator Underwood submitted a huge petition, containing 47,000 signatures, protesting against the bill. The petition was wound on a garden hose-truck and was wheeled into the chamber by one of the employes. Senator Gallinger immediately went forward to examine the petition and, as he turned to his seat said, "The names on the page of this petition before me are all written in the same hand." Other Senators then crowded around the petition. Senator Underwood, in reply to Senator Gallinger, said, "This is a bona fide petition." The Alabama Senator followed the presenting of the petition with a reading of the resolution adopted at the mass meeting Sunday afternoon at Poli's Theater, urging the adoption of the referendum amendment. The vote was preceded by little debate on the terms of the bill, but the time was devoted mainly to explanations by Senators of their reasons for voting as they would on the measure. The speeches were limited to five minutes and at times there was a manifest spirit of bitterness on the part of some. Senator Kenyon declared "The liquor question is a great national, undodgable question," and he predicted "that if William J. Bryan went on the stump up and down the country in support of prohibition, the great political parties would have to reckon with it."

Finally, when the vote was taken on the referendum, it was a tie, 43 to 43. The vote of the Vice-President was necessary to decide the question, but as he was absent, the referendum was lost.

Party Lines Lost in Voting for District of Columbia Bill

The vote on the Sheppard bill, for abolishing saloons in the District of Columbia, was then taken up and passed by a vote of 55 to 32, as already announced on the cover page of last week's UNION SIGNAL. When the vote was declared, the crowded galleries broke into vociferous applause and for once the presiding officer did not call a halt. The bill now goes to the House and, we believe, will be passed before adjournment. The Act would take effect November 1, 1917. Even the opponents of the measure believe that the bill will pass the House without much opposition.

Monday, January 8, will stand out in history as a day long to be remembered in noted judicial annals, for on that date, as last week's UNION SIGNAL reported, the Federal Webb-Kenyon law, designed to prevent liquor shipments from wet to dry states, was declared constitutional by the Supreme Court of the United States by a vote of 7 to 2. It also upheld West Virginia's prohibition amendment, prohibiting citizens from receiving liquor for personal use shipped by common carriers in interstate commerce.

Constitutionality of Webb-Kenyon Law Settled Once and For All

When we realize that this group of nine men, comprising the highest judicial court in the world, has forever decided the matter of the constitutionality of this law, which was vetoed by ex-President Taft on the ground of its unconstitutionality and his veto set aside by both Senate and House by a majority of 3 to 1 in the House, and 2 to 1 in the Senate, we take heart. The Chief Justice of the United States, in rendering the decision, said: "The all-reaching power of government over liquor is settled. There was no intention of Congress to forbid individual use of liquor. The purpose of this act was to cut out by the roots the practice of permitting violation of state liquor laws.

"We can have no doubt that Congress has complete authority to prevent the paralyzing of state authority.

"Congress exerted a power to co-ordinate the national with state authority.

"Under the Webb-Kenyon act there is no power in interstate commerce to ship liquor from one state into another to enable it to be used in any way prohibited by the state."

This will forever end the efforts of the liquor hierarchy against the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon law.

W. C. T. U. Leaders Appear Before Committee on Territories in Interests of Alaska Bill

Tuesday, January 9, previous to the discussion of the District bill in the Senate, Miss Gordon, representing the National W. C. T. U., appeared before the House Committee on Territories, the Hawaiian prohibition bill being under discussion. In urging a favorable report from the committee, Miss Gordon commended the work of our organization in Hawaii, under the leadership of Mrs. J. M. Whitney, president of the Hawaiian W. C. T. U. Dr. Wadman made a fine presentation and we are hoping and praying the Hawaiian bill will pass both houses before adjournment.

On Wednesday, January 10, a hearing on Alaska was held before the House Committee on Territories. On November 7, as is well known, Alaska voted "dry," but being a territory, a bill must be passed by Congress making prohibition legal.

The W. C. T. U. was represented at this hearing by Miss Gordon, Mrs. Boole, Mrs. Hatcher, and Mrs. Yost; the Anti-Saloon League by P. A. Baker, the general superintendent, Wayne B. Wheeler, general counsel, and E. C. Dinwiddie, Legislative superintendent.

Judge Wickersham introduced his measure and spoke warmly in its favor. He then presented Senator Sutherland, a member of the Alaskan territorial leg-

(Continued on Page Nine)

THE VOTE ON THE DISTRICT BILL IN THE SENATE

For
Ashurst	Myers	Smith (Ga.)
Beckham	Overman	Smith (Md.)
Bryan	Pittman	Smith (S.C.)
Chamberlain	Ransdell	Swanson
Chilton	Robinson	Thomas
Johnson (S.D.)	Shafroth	Thompson
Kern	Sheppard	Vardaman
Kirby	Shields	Walsh
Lea	Simmons	Williams
Martin	Gallinger	Poindexter
Borah	Gronna	Sherman
Brady	Jones	Smith (Mich.)
Clapp	Kenyon	Smoot
Clark	McCumber	Sterling
Cummins	Nelson	Sutherland
Curtis	Norris	Townsend
Dillingham	Oliver	Watson
Fall	Page	Works
Fernald
Against
Broussard	Harding	Reed
Culberson	Lee	Saulsbury
Hardwick	Lewis	Smith (Ariz.)
Hitchcock	Martine	Stone
Hughes	Newlands	Tillman
Husting	O'Gorman	Underwood
James	Phelan	Bankhead
Johnson (Me.)	Pomerene	Penrose
Brandegee	Lippitt	Wadsworth
Colt	Lodge	Weeks
Du Pont	McLean

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

San Francisco's City Health Officer Says, "Don't Drink Booze"

In "Hints to Prolong Life" by Dr. William C. Hassler, city health officer of San Francisco, published in a recent issue of the San Francisco Daily News, the following warning is given:

"Don't drink booze. Drink pure water instead. Alcohol lowers the mental efficiency, poisons the nerves and impairs the body's resistance to infectious diseases."

United States Court Rules That Brewers Must Stand Trial

Judge W. H. S. Thomson, in an opinion handed down in the United States District Court recently, directed seventy-two indicted brewery corporations of Pennsylvania and the United States Brewers' Association of New York to stand trial on 101 indictments for alleged corrupt use of brewery funds in the 1914 election of a United States Senator and thirty-six members of Congress in Pennsylvania. This is probably the first time that a Federal court has laid down the proposition that "The United States government has equal concern with the different states in preserving the freedom of the voters and the purity of the ballot."

Low Per Capita Consumption of Liquor in Kansas

Senator Curtis of Kansas, in answering the attack of Senator Reed of Missouri upon prohibition in Kansas in the United States Senate recently, submitted the following telegram received by him from Prof. E. W. Blackmar, of the University of Kansas:

"As assistant attorney general, I made careful investigation of liquor shipments into every county in Kansas in 1914. Average per capita shipment of all kinds of liquor, including alcohol, was 2.47 gallons. Allowing for consumption not recorded in shipments, the annual consumption did not exceed three gallons per capita. In the same year, the average per capita consumption in the United States was 22.5 gallons. In their vilification of Kansas, liquor advocates seem to have lost all standards of truth and honesty."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska

A Year of Prohibition in Council Bluffs

A year of prohibition in Council Bluffs, Iowa, has resulted in a thirty-three per cent decrease in arrests; a seventy-three per cent reduction in the number of vagrants picked up by the police, and sixteen per cent fewer arrests for all causes. This record is particularly remarkable considering the fact that there are more than 300 saloons within trolley distance of the city.

Drunkenness Chief Cause of Family Trouble

Director Julia L. McGuire of the Domestic Relations court of Chicago, in her annual report for the year 1916 names drunkenness as the chief cause of family trouble. "Many of those brought into our court are mental defectives," says Mrs. McGuire, "but the majority of cases are caused by drunkenness. This is the chief danger that is striking at home happiness."

Sober Holiday in Prohibition Richmond

Speaking of the popular observance of a recent holiday in Richmond, Va., the Virginian of that city remarks that "advocates of the liquor traffic would find little comfort in the comparison of scenes on Broad street last night and those of the last several years. . . . The crowds were there, but the drunken revelers, the horn-blowers, the bell ringers and rough and tough element were lacking." Prohibition in Virginia, manifestly, "prohibits."

Denver Hotel Makes Big Gain Without Bar

Mr. Irvin B. Allen, manager of the Shirley hotel, Denver, after a year's trial, has no complaint to make of prohibition, for he has more than made up the anticipated deficit of $5,000 in his receipts due to the closing of the bar in the hotel. Mr. Allen says:

"I have run a bar in the Shirley hotel for many years. It used to turn us in an annual net profit of around $5,000. Our business since prohibition went into effect January 1, has more than made up for this loss.

"The readjustment became noticeable along about June. Our June, July and August returns from our dining room and rooms were greater than our returns in any previous year with the bar included. Our net profits in August and September were better than our net profits in any August or September before. Since then they have continued to grow.

"I notice that since prohibition went into effect we have many visitors from neighboring towns of Colorado, men bringing their families for a holiday. Since they have stopped spending their money for liquor many men are now able to give their families these outings and it has proved a good thing."

REORGANIZING THE BREWERIES

The brewing business in Colorado has adjusted itself to the new conditions under prohibition in a most satisfactory manner, says the Denver (Colo.) News. "The Coors plant at Golden has been converted into a factory for the manufacture of a malted milk which is finding a ready sale and which is declared to be superior to many older and better established brands on the market. It has also used a part of its plant for the manufacture of near-beer and has entered into the business of making a high-grade of pottery which has proven a success. The Capitol Brewing Company has been reorganized into the Lewis-Colorado Dairy Company and, as its name implies, has entered into the dairying business on a large scale. The Tivoli Union Brewing Company installed $40,000 worth of improvements and remodeled its plant for the manufacture of near-beer and for use for other purposes.

The Ph. Zang Brewing Company has been engaged in the manufacture of near-beer and has plans under way for the utilization of a large part of its plant. These include dry and cold storage facilities, the conversion of its stables into a garage and the enlargement of its near-beer department.

Evidently discouraged from further attempts to restore the booze business in Washington, the immense plant of the Seattle Brewing and Malting Company is being equipped for the manufacture of denatured alcohol for mechanical purposes.

On the site of the old Acme Brewing Company in Macon, Ga., is to be erected by the Block Brothers, a one million dollar packing plant. The old brewery will be practically rebuilt and new buildings will adjoin it. The plant will have a capacity of 1,000 hogs a day, and will be the largest packing plant in the south.

In preparation for state-wide prohibition several Detroit (Mich.) breweries are being converted into artificial ice plants, says the Detroit News, and the Independent Brewery, at least, will be making ice long before prohibition goes into effect. Many breweries have gone out of business in the dry counties of the state since 1908, and according to the Detroit Citizens' League, in only one instance has property decreased in value in prohibition territory. Most of the former brewery plants, indeed, have greatly increased in value by reason of the change to productive industry.

Few of the old breweries of Oregon are idle, despite prohibition. One or more are making loganberry juice. Several are making soft drinks. Another is to be converted into a condensed milk factory.

The Astoria, Oregon, Brewery is to be converted into a condensed milk plant. The Interstate Brewery of Sioux City, Iowa, will become a paint factory.

SEATTLE NOT PROSPEROUS UNDER PROHIBITION? PROVE IT!

MRS. MARGARET B. PLATT

In a recent number of the Business Chronicle of the Pacific Northwest, a twenty-eight page weekly journal devoted to the discussion of business interests, an editorial referring to conditions in Seattle after one year's enforcement of the dry law, says:

"Seattle, occupying the unique position of being the largest city in the United States to be placed under a dry law, has, because of that position, become the most maligned city in this nation. Since the dry law became effective January 1, 1916, Seattle has been pointed to as a horrible example of the effects of prohibition. In every section of the country where the liquor issue was fought out in 1916, mendacious and avaricious newspapers, at the strong urge of full-page anti-prohibition advertisements, willingly perjured themselves in describing the ills from which business in Seattle suffered. Something akin to a plague had fallen on a thriving community. A general exodus of inhabitants was under way. Blocks of buildings were vacant. Business was at a standstill. The city had sunk to the depths of poverty and crime. Alleged Seattle citizens, eastward on business, were 'interviewed,' and the 'interviews' —pure fakes in many instances—were printed as corroborative evidence of defamatory assertions. Other newspapers, reputable but ignorant of the true situation, reprinted the slander. It is time the nation should know what the real situation is out here. Lacking a day, a year has passed since the dry law became effective.

"During that year the city has gained in population.

"Building occupancy is greater than ever.

"Bank deposits have increased.

"New industries have sprung up.

"More tourists have visited Seattle.

"The amount of taxes to be raised on this year's valuation is less than a year ago.

"Delinquent taxes have been reduced.

"Bank clearings and transactions are greater than last year.

"Postoffice receipts are larger.

"Payrolls have been increased.

"Savings institutions have opened more new accounts and received a greater aggregate of small sums from workingmen than in any other year.

"Merchants have sold more and better goods, and collections have been vastly improved.

"Bond dealers find a new class of investors, and have had the best year ever experienced. Mortgage money is more plentiful in supply than in demand. Seattle today is sounder and more prosperous than ever."

The Chronicle also calls attention to the fact that the 1916 city directory showed an increase of 4,102 names over 1915, and that the canvassers who are now preparing the 1917 directory declare without exception that every district thus far canvassed shows a greater population than ever. The United States Census Bureau estimated that the population of Seattle, July 1, 1916, was 348,639. The city's area in land is 58.56 square miles; water 35.91 square miles, and it has a harbor frontage of 130 miles. It was thought by many that enforcement of prohibition in such a city was absolutely impossible and all opposing forces joined hands to break down the dry law and secure its repeal. Despite all this the city of Seattle, which in 1914 voted wet by approximately 15,000 majority, declared in favor of the existing law. Further evidence that the people of Washington as a whole are satisfied with prohibition is found in the vote given November 7, 1916, against the liquor dealers' proposed amendments. No. 18, called the hotel keeper's bill, received 42,704 votes in favor and 231,915 against. No. 24, which proposed to legalize the manufacture and sale of beer in the state, received 89,997 for and 214,813 against. "Let the heathen rage," and the saloonatics "imagine a vain thing." The people of the state of Washington have registered their will regarding the liquor traffic and there is not the least hope for the brewer's and distiller's business in that splendid home-building and home-protecting commonwealth. On to National Constitutional Prohibition!

A Sane Mind in a Sane Body

A report prepared by Dr. W. N. Keller, superintendent of the Western Washington Hospital for the Insane, states that on account of the operation of the dry law and the anti-drug act, the population of the asylum has been considerably reduced. The doctor states that 308 less patients were admitted during the year ending September 30, 1916, than during the previous year, the smallest number since 1904.

Aberdeen's Mayor Now a Prohibitionist

Aberdeen, Washington, was formerly noted as one of the wettest cities in the country in proportion to its population. The finding of "floaters" in the harbor back of its long "string" of saloons was a matter of common occurrence. The authorities were hand in hand with the saloon powers and booze and vice reigned supreme. The following excerpts from a recent address by Mayor J. M. Phillips of Aberdeen will serve to illustrate the change effected under prohibition:

"I have not touched a drop of whisky, brandy or beer since the dry law went into effect on January 1, 1916," said Mayor Phillips. "I have not suffered. We are all better off without the booze. City Attorney A. E. Cross has gone me one better for he has not touched either tobacco or booze. No member of our force should touch a drop. Every good citizen should be dry, and they should desire to see the dry law enforced. Booze does no good. Drinking intoxicants is an artificial appetite. Dogs and horses will run away from liquor. The boy, when he first tastes it, does not like it, but out of a spirit of daring he drinks again. Every time more liquor is needed to satisfy his desire to get the effect."

Mission Closes Because of Small Need for Charity

The Open Door Mission, formerly conducted by the Seattle Brotherhood Club, was recently abandoned on account of the small number of men needing accommodations. Probably the discontinuance of the saloons in other large cities would render unnecessary a continuance of various forms of private charity and public aid such as open door missions, "bread line" institutions, etc., etc. Men who are prevented by prohibition from spending their money for booze are able to pay for lodging, food and clothing and soon acquire a feeling of self-respect and independence. True, their personal liberty to get drunk is invaded but there is conferred upon them the liberty to pay their own bills with their own money and to become self-supporting citizens instead of paupers, bums, "down and outs" and criminals to be maintained at the expense of the general public.

Prohibition the Tendency of the Times

GOVERNOR ERNEST LISTER of Washington

The tendency of the times is toward elimination of the sale of intoxicating liquor. I do not believe there is a speaker in the state who would have nerve enough to say it was his honest opinion that the state a year ago today was better off than today. Conditions in Seattle are one hundred times better than a year ago today. I think we are rapidly approaching the time when we will be able to say that the United States has gone dry.

Building on the Increase in Dry Washington Cities

Building permits in Seattle during 1916 exceeded in number and value those for the preceding year. Permits for the year, with the exception of the last business day, numbered 8,460 for buildings valued at $8,276,249, as compared with 8,314 permits for 1915 for buildings valued at $6,470,655, a gain for the dry year of $1,805,594 in the value of buildings erected.

In North Yakima, Washington, building permits for work amounting to $262,385 have been issued this year. This amount is an increase of 71 per cent over last year's total, and 95 per cent over the total for 1914. The permits issued were confined mostly to warehouses, residences and garages. A number of business blocks were also remodeled.

Suicides Lessen as Saloons Go

A report from the Commissioner of Public Health of Seattle showed thirty-six deaths from suicide in the first nine months of 1916 as against seventy-two for the same period of 1915; eighty-nine deaths from external injuries in the period, as compared with 122 in 1915, and seventeen homicides in 1916 against twenty-one in 1915.

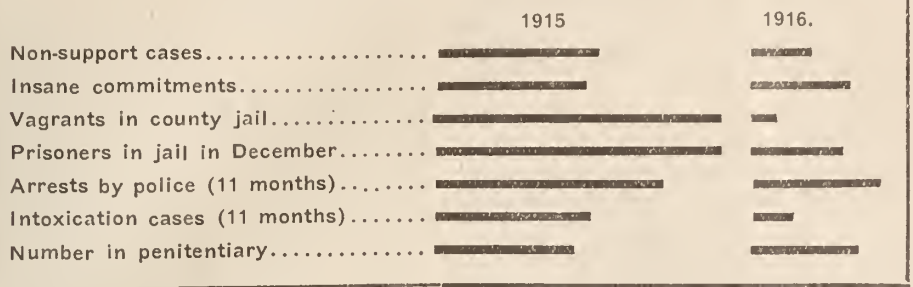
Tacoma Bank Clearings for Dry Year Set New Record

Bank clearings in Tacoma, Wash., for the year 1916 were more than $16,000,000 in excess of the figures for 1915. While monthly bank clearings for 1915 in no single instance exceeded $9,000,000, for October, March and June, 1916, the clearings ran above $10,000,000.

TWELVE MONTHS UNDER PROHIBITION

HAS LAW HAD ANY INFLUENCE ON OREGON? IF SO, WHAT? AND WHY?

SOCIAL CONDITIONS BEFORE AND AFTER ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION IN PORTLAND, OREGON



The state of Oregon has given a twelve months' trial to prohibition, and finds it a social and economic asset of great value. The Oregonian, one of the big city dailies of Portland, made a survey and analysis of the situation, broadly summarizing the effects of the law into two classes—social and economic. It presents the following findings:

DIRE PROPHECIES FAIL

The facts presented offer little consolation for the prophet who predicted a year ago that the state was going straight to perdition as soon as it rid itself of the saloon. Nothing of the kind has happened and the figures indicate that nothing of the kind is going to happen.

Portland has just closed one of the most successful commercial and industrial years in its history. Bank clearings, postoffice receipts and bank deposits—three most excellent barometers of trade—have broken all records.

The recent holiday business was by far the heaviest ever done by the Portland merchants. Some of them attribute much of this improvement directly to the beneficial effects of prohibition.

Portland now has more telephone stations, more electric service connections, more gas connections and more water connections than at any time in its previous history.

School enrollment and school attendance are higher and the circulation of books at the public and private libraries is greater.

Building operations have increased more than 40 per cent over the previous year and real estate movements are more brisk. The real estate market is not active though. It has been stagnant for the last four years. It was better this year—without the saloon—than in any of the last four years with the saloon.

So much for a preliminary statement of the economic effects. What are the moral effects? The only reliable gauge is furnished by the reports of the police bureau, the sheriff's office, the criminal records of the several branches of government, the penal institutions of the state and like public and quasi-public authorities.

Crime has decreased. It has decreased materially, wonderfully. Public drunkenness has almost entirely disappeared. Many petty crimes, such as assault, larceny and the like, have been reduced more than fifty per cent. Vagrancy has been cut to an unheard of and almost undreamed of minimum. John Clark, chief of police, credits prohibition with these results.

Non-support complaints have been reduced from 91 cases in 1915 to 31 cases in 1916. All authorities are agreed that these changes are due almost entirely and directly to prohibition.

Accidents, especially automobile accidents, have decreased more than 60 per cent, because drivers are more sober now.

Insanity cases have been substantially curtailed and commitments to the penitentiary have been cut about 30 per cent.

All kinds of social diseases have been noticeably suppressed and many professional women of the streets have left the community. Victims of social diseases at both the free dispensary on Burnside street and at the public hospital have been greatly reduced in numbers.

The number of inmates at virtually all the homes for indigent and dependent people is lower now than a year ago.

GOVERNOR WITHYCOMBE SAYS PROHIBITION IMPROVES HOME LIFE

"The passing of the barroom has certainly exerted a happy influence upon home life and especially as regards the upbringing of children," said Governor Withycombe when asked his opinion as to the influence of the law. "Soon there will be many boys in Oregon who will never have seen the swinging doors of the old-time saloon.

"Without doubt prohibition has brought about a material lessening in crime. Roughly speaking, commitments to the penitentiary have decreased more than 30 per cent during the year as compared with the last few years, and I believe that the percentage will show even larger within the next twelve months. Police officers throughout the state report to me a lessening in crime and especially, of course, the many minor crimes which hinge directly upon drinking.

"Bankers, and particularly those in communities where there are extensive payrolls, report that savings and the creation of small bank accounts is far more widespread now than ever in the past.

"A large employer of labor, who conducts a mill in Oregon and another in a non-prohibition state, estimates that prohibition benefits him directly some 25 per cent in increased labor efficiency. He declares that at his other plant a large number of mill workers and employees in the wood camps especially, either fail to report or are unfit to work for several days after payday.

"In short, I feel that prohibition is proving a phenomenal success from an economic and moral standpoint. It seems to me inevitable that national prohibition will come, and it appears extremely probable that before many years have elapsed the civilized nations of the world will have adopted it."

MAYOR ALBEE OF PORTLAND SPEAKS ENTHUSIASTICALLY OF ANTI-LIQUOR LAW

"One year of prohibition in Portland has demonstrated it to be of great moral and material benefit to the community," writes Mayor Albee in the Oregonian of January 1.

"Among those who were either opposed to the prohibition law or who worked and voted against it are some of the most substantial business men of Portland, and today, after seeing with their own eyes what has been accomplished, they frankly admit that this city has been vastly benefited and they would not think of such a thing as a return to former conditions.

"Bank clearances have greatly exceeded the record of 1915, indicating a general substantial improvement over previous conditions.

"To my personal knowledge conditions as to collections in all lines of legitimate business, such as grocers, clothiers, etc., have been wonderfully improved. Large numbers of working men, who formerly expended very large sums in the aggregate for liquor, are now taking home their earnings, and are giving the benefit of their changed habits to their families.

"The moral conditions are so remarkably changed for the better that it is difficult to realize what has come to pass. Large numbers of men and women of the underworld have left Portland, since prohibition became effective and are continuing to leave.

"Industrial conditions are better than ever. Building operations are improved and Portland has become the center of a large shipbuilding industry, which bids fair to prove of vast commercial importance of a permanent nature.

"A great reduction in the needy poor is noted by charitable organizations and five-cent eating houses have had to go out of businesss.

"Police records show great reductions in crime, the number of arrests for drunks and vagrants from January 1, 1916, to December 1 being 2,507, as compared with 9,008 for the same period of last year."

WHAT PUBLIC OFFICIALS IN OREGON AND PORTLAND THINK OF PROHIBITION

JAMES WITHYCOMBE, Governor—It is proving a phenomenal success from an economic and moral standpoint.

H. R. ALBEE, Mayor—It is one of the greatest forward steps ever taken by the city.

L. R. ALDERMAN, City Superintendent of Schools—The school children are better clothed, better fed and better shod. Attendance has improved materially.

WALTER H. EVANS, District Attorney—Crime has been cut in two.

JOHN CLARK, Chief of Police—From the police standpoint it has proved a good thing.

T. M. HURLBURT, Sheriff—The moral effects have been wholly good.

DR. R. E. LEE STEINER, Superintendent Oregon State Hospital for the Insane—It already has decreased the number of insane commitments and is bound to decrease the prevalence of paresis.

ARTHUR LANGGUTH, Municipal Judge—It is a good thing in every particular.

PROHIBITION IN COLORADO GIVES AN ACCOUNT OF ITSELF

$18,000,000 DIVERTED FROM THE LIQUOR ROUTE INTO LEGITIMATE CHANNELS

One year ago this month over 1,600 saloons and a dozen or more breweries were put out of business in the state of Colorado. At that time all sorts of doleful prophecies were made by the liquor interests as to what would happen when this "indispensable line of business" was eliminated from the commercial life of the state. After a twelve months' test, the state is in a position to give an account of itself and inform the public whether in any respect the pessimistic predictions have been fulfilled. The press of the state does not leave us in ignorance as to the opinions of the leading institutions and citizens of Colorado on the question. The New Year's editions of the leading Denver dailies were filled with words of approval and commendation of the law that has proven an unqualified blessing to the city and the state.

RESULTS OF PROHIBITION AS DENVER PAPER SEES THEM

The Denver Post, a paper which until the law went into effect did not favor prohibition, has the following to say on the value of the new law:

"Denver and Colorado now have had a year of prohibition and prohibition is an unqualified success.

"Those who were temperance advocates before the dry law went into effect are jubilant; those who were opposed to the measure are astonished to find themselves won over wholeheartedly to the cause. Here are the facts of Colorado under prohibition rule:

"The state and city are more prosperous.

"The banks are filling up with the people's savings.

"Retail merchants are doing a better business than they ever did before the saloons were closed.

"The county jail is half empty.

"The city jail has fewer occupants than ever in its history.

"Divorce suits constantly are growing less.

"The municipal free lodging house has 40 per cent less applicants for bed and board than it had a year ago and the class is more deserving.

"The state penitentiary soon will have to close down one wing on account of lack of occupants.

"Churches record increased attendance.

"Physicians find the health condition of the people better.

"School children are better clothed.

"Crime has diminished to a wonderful extent.

"Vagrants and tramps have almost wholly disappeared.

"Homes that were made unhappy through intemperance know a hitherto undreamed of peace and contentment.

"Everybody is happier, saner and better able to cope with the business of life.

"Materially and ethically the people have made a stride forward in a single year that could not have been accomplished in a generation with licensed saloons.

"Were the question of prohibition to be resubmitted to the citizens of Colorado today there is no doubt but that a majority of those who voted against the measure before would be lined up solid for it now.

"The saloon has been banished from Colorado forever."

LEADING BANKER OF DENVER DECLARES DRY COLORADO A BLESSING TO BUSINESS MEN

Mr. Gordon Jones, president of the United States National Bank of Denver, writing in the Denver Post, gives his point of view as a banker, in the following words:

"I am compelled to say that prohibition in its effects on the business world of Denver, and, of course, of the whole state, has been a blessing. Evidence in this direction comes from every source—even from men who were, prior to January 1 last, in the saloon business. I do not believe that 25 per cent of our people would vote tomorrow for a restoration of the liquor traffic, and the vote against the beer amendment in November shows that the anti-liquor sentiment has gained, in less than a year, 20 per cent.

"In the banking business, especially in a bank that has a savings department, it is not difficult to trace the benefits of a cessation of common and public drinking. The fact that in the first ten months of 1916, the savings accounts in Denver banks were increased by nearly $20,000 is proof that prohibition has enhanced thrift. Tax collections in six months were as large as for the entire year of 1915, sbowing that the money that went into the purchase of liquor has gone to pay the expenses of government.

"The most remarkable thing about Denver's change from a wet to a dry regime was the ease with which that change was made. There was no crisis in finances, and business affairs were conducted under the new conditions without a perceptible hitch in their machinery.

"The effect of prohibition cannot be measured in dollars and cents alone, however. I had occasion to go into a certain barber shop recently and in talking with the foreman on the subject, he said to me: 'We have a good many customers who used to come in for service once in a while—not regularly. In other words, they were somewhat careless of their appearance. Now these same men come in with the greatest regularity, showing that they have changed their mode of life in some particular. These men used to drink in saloons. They may or may not be teetotallers now. But it is certain that if they drink at all they do so with much more moderation.'

"Now, I say, those men are not devoting all their thought to the improvement of their appearance. Their families must also be in better condition. For I don't believe they would neglect their families entirely under such conditions. They wear better clothes than they did and it stands to reason that their children and wives do the same.

"Another striking point is that we used to have here about 5,000 men who were hangers-on around saloons. These men became derelicts, and it was up to the people of charitable disposition to keep them, at least, from starvation. Jim Goodheart says he used to spent $50 a month to provide these waifs of the saloons with soup, and that $50 came from the business men. Today there are none of these wanderers on our streets. They have left town and their absence necessarily means a betterment of the general citizenship, and what improves the general citizenship is good for the state and the city and the nation. Instead of $50 a month, Jim Goodheart has to spend about $8 a month, and most of that is to feed sick women and children of improvident parents. But the big outstanding fact is that the saloon hanger-on is gone.

EVEN FORMER SALOON MEN SATISFIED

"I have a lawyer friend, who is attorney for five former liquor dealers, and he tells me he has talked over the situation with them and that all declare they would not only never re-enter the business if liquor were restored, but that if the opportunity ever came to them they would vote for prohibition.

"To sum up the effect of prohibition on business, I can say that collections have been generally better; men are buying better goods and better food; real estate men say that their rentals are paid more promptly; there is no idleness among our workers; our people are more thrifty; but above all, there is a spirit of cheerfulness that was never so pronounced as in the first twelve months of 'dry Colorado.'"

COMPARATIVE POLICE RECORDS OF DENVER

CHARGE	1915.	1916.	Decrease.
Assault to kill	18	16	2
Burglary	50	44	6
Drunkenness	3,219	1,549	1,670
Forgery	41	27	14
Gambling	515	252	263
Grand larceny	66	51	15
Murder	10	7	3
Vagrancy	3,713	1,148	2,565

CHIEF ARMSTRONG HAS NO REGRETS WHEN BOOZE MAKES GRAND EXIT

Denver's chief of police, Hamilton Armstrong, says:

"Prohibition has emptied our jails to a large extent.

"It has rid Denver of a considerable number of vags and petty crooks, who formerly made the saloons their hangout.

"It has decreased the number of divorces in Denver, and will, in my opinion, continue to have an even more beneficial effect on this evil.

"It has taken thousands of dollars into Denver homes that would have been spent for beer and whisky if the saloons were operating.

"It has cut down the number of murders and suicides.

"It has done away, almost entirely, with the street fights that used to be daily occurrences and, likewise, it has operated to minimize the number of family quarrels that yearly come to the attention of the police department.

"It has sent many a child to school this winter, warmly clad and happy, who, in past winters, has either been compelled to stay at home because of insufficient clothing or go to school practically in rags.

"It has brought peace of mind, happiness and some degree of prosperity to numbers of wives and mothers, heretofore harassed by the knowledge that husband or son was spending his nights—and his money—in some saloon or cafe, to his physical, mental and moral detriment.

"Denver used to be considered the best city of its size in the country for police news. Now it is running a race for the distinction of being the worst."

HON. CARL E. MILLIKEN IN INAUGURAL ADDRESS ASKS CO-OPERATION AGAINST NULLIFICATION OF LAW

GERTRUDE STEVENS LEAVITT

The state capitol was the center of interest on January 4, when Carl E. Milliken of Island Falls was inaugurated the governor of the state of Maine.

Years ago, when Mr. Milliken was very young (and he is not yet forty years old) Lillian M. N. Stevens said of him: "Carl Milliken will some day be Maine's chief executive." White ribboners of the state are delighted that the prophecy has come true. This cultured, successful, wholesouled Christian gentleman indeed honors the gubernatorial chair.

Because of his public utterances and private practice, we had reason to believe that Mr. Milliken in his inaugural address would clearly state his attitude toward prohibition and its enforcement. We were not disappointed, as the following extracts from his speech show:

PLEDGED TO ENFORCEMENT OF PROHIBITION

"The dominant party is definitely committed to state and national prohibition and to the honest enforcement of the prohibitory law as well as all other laws in this state. Furthermore by letters to thousands of citizens and by public utterances in practically every nook and corner of our state, I am pledged to use every resource at my command as governor of Maine for the honest state-wide enforcement of these laws.

"No more effective weapon can be furnished any official than an intelligent and patriotic public opinion, alive to the urgent need of upholding the majesty of the law. I earnestly urge upon all good citizens their responsibility for giving such active support to all faithful officers.

"Those affluent and ostensibly respectable outlaws both within and outside our state who organize the systematic defiance of our laws in the interest of their own selfish greed, deserve nothing but the contempt of all decent citizens. For the sake of unlawful and swollen profits they are willing to imperil the morals of our youth, inflict needless suffering upon helpless women and children, and bring physical and financial ruin upon many of our citizens. In order to continue their unhallowed business without hindrance they have the audacity to demand that the organic law of the state be administered to suit their convenience. They even have the amazing effrontery to point to the continued existence of their traffic as an evidence of the failure of the very law which by every known method of bribery, trickery and debauchery they are constantly seeking to break down.

"Personal abstinence and governmental prohibition have been forced upon European nations as war measures in the face of national peril. These safeguards of our citizenship are equally urgent patriotic necessities in our own country. I confidently count upon your support for all reasonable measures against that unholy alliance which more than any other internal or external foe menaces the very existence of our nation—a defiant liquor traffic joined with nullification of law."

Governor Milliken does not shut his eyes to the fact that in some quarters of the state there has been flagrant disregard of law, but he wisely points out that the violators are contemptibly seeking to nullify the organic law of the state and as such need to be dealt with. The methods he proposes are sound and necessary, and it is to be hoped that they may be adopted.

It seems to be apparent that the handwriting on the wall has been correctly interpreted by the liquor folk, for with the incoming of the new year and the new sheriffs and county attorneys, the officials in Maine who have been untrue to their oaths have begun to take notice. For instance, in Portland, there was not a single inmate in the police station for twenty-four hours at the time of the incoming of the sheriff and his deputies.

Governor Milliken declared himself in favor of a suffrage amendment which is likely to be voted upon favorably by this legislature.

Taken all in all, the address of the governor is of a high order, manifestly bearing on the best and highest interests of our state. It closes with the following meaningful words:

"Gentlemen of the legislature, a great task and corresponding responsibility are yours! As representatives of a Christian state you will appropriately begin each daily session with devotional exercises. May these express your conscious dependence upon the guidance of Him who holdeth the nations in the hollow of His hand. Thus may you hope to perform a really useful public service and deserve the approval of those who sent you here."

HOME LIFE OF GOVERNOR MILLIKEN

The governor is living in Augusta this winter. His old home was in that city and the family residence where his father and sister live is very large and hospitable. There Governor Milliken, Mrs. Milliken, and their six children, with a corps of servants and nurses, are spending the time of the governor's term of office, for he believes that the chief executive should devote himself exclusively to the interests of the state and live near its state house.

Mrs. Milliken was a classmate of her husband, at Bates College. By the way, she is the daughter of President Chase of that institution. Her large family claims much of her care and attention, but she is thoroughly interested in temperance, suffrage, and all that helps lift the world to the light.

The members of the Maine W. C. T. U. have very thankful hearts that our "first gentleman and lady" are such an honor to our commonwealth and its most sacred traditions.

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

"More than anything else at the present time the trade needs a few victories added to its credit to bolster it up and give it renewed courage," frankly confesses Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular. Alas, the recent victories relating to the liquor question do not seem to be of a character to encourage the liquorites. Great as is their optimism, they can find nothing cheerful in the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the Webb-Kenyon law or the vote of the Senate on the District bill and the Bankhead anti-liquor advertising bill.

The fatal "if" is appearing frequently in the comments of the liquor leaders. Mr. Max Henius, the noted brew-chemist of Chicago, told the brewers and brewmasters, at their recent San Francisco convention, that they must change their methods of business or submit to prohibition. "I am convinced, personally," he said, "that prohibition is the curse of the nation, as is the saloon. Both are roots of evil. California will be the pivotal state. If brewers cannot turn the tide of public sentiment in California, then no state can solve its liquor problem and escape the ever-tightening clutches of prohibition." And had it not been for San Francisco, California would have given a majority for prohibition on November 7.

A Chicago saloonkeeper is reported to have placed in his window a sign reading, "If your children need shoes, don't buy booze." Good advice so far as it goes, but what the children need even more than shoes is a father with a mind and body free from the disease and demoralization caused by the booze in which the saloonkeeper deals. Every man who patronizes a saloon is depriving his family not only of many of the material necessities of life, but of his real manly self.

"I'm dripping wet myself, but for the good of the business, the lawlessness must be taken from the saloons," declares Prof. Robert Wahl, president of the Wahl-Henius School for Brewers of Chicago. "If drastic steps are not taken to improve conditions, we face the alternative of prohibition. Chicago will go dry; the state will go dry, and the nation will go dry."

The "good of the business," not the "good of the people," nor the "good of society" is the dominant motive back of all the so-called reform movements of the liquor dealers. They object to lawlessness only as it injures them in the eyes of the public.

A significant admission was that made in the advertisements of the brewers and distillers which appeared in the Chicago papers of the last day of 1916:

"That a majority of American voters have in one way or another expressed at least a temporary desire to prohibit the liquor traffic, seems a conservative conclusion from the facts and figures."

If that admission does not mean National Constitutional Prohibition in the next few years, what does it mean?

This is the kindly feeling Mida's Criterion has for the prohibition workers:

"They (the prohibitionists) would butcher your wives and children if somebody happened to think it the proper thing to do. They would go up to your homes and wreck them and drag your dear ones out by the hair and slaughter them before your eyes! Thirty million nuts are gnashing their teeth and working up a big mad, in the name of peace, in the name of God, to cut your throats!"

Commenting on these frenzied fancies, the Methodist Temperance Publicity Bureau says:

"This is interesting, but it is strange that we had not learned of this program before. Cannot Mida's give names and dates? We can give the names, places and other details of scores of murders, beatings, dynamitings and similar crimes by the liquor trade against prohibitionists."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane
CIRCULATION MANAGER, Miss Addie A. Austin

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, January 18, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

MRS. HOGE IMPROVING

We are happy to report that Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, National assistant recording secretary, who has been very ill with typhoid fever, is improving.

SEND BRIEF LETTERS AND TELEGRAMS

Our National Legislative superintendent suggests in the Washington Letter this week that brief letters and telegrams be sent to members of the House of Representatives, urging a favorable vote on the District bill in the House, and to both Representatives and Senators asking that they vote for the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition when the question comes up.

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND NUMBER

The next issue of THE UNION SIGNAL will be filled largely with articles by leaders in our recent victorious statewide campaigns, telling how the W. C. T. U. machinery helped them to win campaigns. This material will be especially valuable for use in the Willard M morial meetings. The same number of the paper will also contain a program for February 17. Order a large supply for use in advance. Special price of $1.50 per 100 copies is offered for all orders received by January 23.

THE U. S. SUPREME COURT DECISION

The liquor interests admit that the decision handed down by the United States Supreme Court upholds and applies the Webb-Kenyon law in its fullest sense and that now they have no hope of overturning or circumventing this measure, which at the time of its passage was acknowledged to be "the severest blow ever dealt the traffic." This decision of the highest tribunal in the land ought to give a new impetus to the enactment of state measures for the more strict enforcement of our prohibition laws. The court's interpretation of the Webb-Kenyon law as one that will "cut out by the roots the practice of permitting violation of state laws" and the further assurance that "Congress has complete authority to prevent the paralyzing of state authority" will inspire confidence in the states which are endeavoring to secure from their legislatures strict enforcement laws, the number including the new and some older prohibition states. Kansas has already announced that it will immediately follow up the decision by the passage of a law prohibiting all liquor shipments into the state, to take effect at an early date, and that it will also, at the request of Governor Capper, empower the chief executive to suspend from office any city or county official who fails to enforce the law. This, with the law forbidding shipments of liquor into Kansas, will effectually seal the doom of the bootlegger.

This decision is indeed a most notable triumph for prohibition, for, in the words of ex-Governor Hanly, "it marks the beginni. g of the end of governmental partnership with the liquor traffic."

WANTED: NEWSPAPERS 100 PER CENT CLEAN AND 100 PER CENT TRUSTWORTHY

No self-respecting newspaper likes to be left in the rear in any great advance movement, even though it may cost a pretty penny to keep up with the procession of progress. The Lexington (Ky.) Daily Leader in announcing that after January 1, 1917, its advertising columns were to be absolutely free from all liquor and the general run of patent medicine advertisements, admits that there is a growing demand for newspapers that are "one hundred per cent clean and one hundred per cent trustworthy." To meet such a call it is evident that a paper must sweep from its pages all brewery and distillery advertisements, for they certainly do not come under either classification, "clean" or "trustworthy." We heartily congratulate the newspapers that have had the courage and the foresight to lead in the anti-liquor advertising movement, and who, when the anti-liquor advertising measure that is now before Congress shall become a law, will be able to say, "We long ago severed partnership with the liquor business and do not need to be forced to take such action."

There are twelve states which have anti-liquor advertising laws and the demand for a national measure which will prevent the use of the mails for liquor advertising and solicitation is growing rapidly. It is said that petitions at the rate of a thousand a day are being received by Congress that such a law be enacted. One measure, the Randall bill, providing for protection for all prohibition territory by restriction of liquor advertising and solicitation to the licensed liquor trade, has been favorably reported to the House of Representatives. The Bankhead bill, which has just passed the Senate, provides for relief only to the twelve prohibition states which now have anti-liquor advertising laws and leaves unprotected the remaining eleven states which have no anti-liquor advertising laws and the great extent of local prohibition territory.

We therefore urge that our readers add their petitions to the great volume now being sent, asking that the Randall measure be enacted into law.

THE EVIDENCE OF 1916

The press of the country are accustomed at the close of every year to take an account of stock, as it were, of the cities or commonwealths which they represent, informing the public whether or not the civic ledgers show a balance of prosperity. Particularly significant this year are the surveys made by the newer prohibition states. A perusal of the results of these investigations cannot fail to remove from any reasonable mind the last vestige of doubt as to the value of the anti-liquor laws.

Is an economic argument needed to convert the opponent of prohibition? Let him read what the financiers of Washington, Oregon and Colorado have to say concerning the increase in deposits in the savings banks, always accepted as an indication of prosperity.

Have any doubted the effect of the closing of the saloons on the crime problem? Let them consider carefully the statements of the chiefs of police of Denver, Seattle and Portland, and the testimony of the wardens of the state penitentiaries, showing that jails and penitentiaries are losing their population with the advent of prohibition. Let them note also what the court officials say in regard to the lessening of divorces and domestic infelicity.

Have there been those who really believed the wild predictions of the liquorites that prohibition would precipitate a labor panic because of the large company of men who would be thrown out of employment? Note what the heads of charity organizations in the three new western prohibition states have to say about the diminution in the number of their beneficiaries. The Christmas dinners usually given to the longshoremen of Portland went a-begging for consumers because these same longshoremen have funds with which to buy holiday dinners for themselves and their families.

The evidence of the year 1916 is so overwhelmingly in favor of prohibition that it is difficult to imagine a sane mind so impervious to reason as to refuse to be convinced that it is a public asset which no community can afford to reject.

THAT APPRECIATIVE NOTE—HAVE YOU SENT IT?

The vote of 55 to 32 in favor of prohibition for the District of Columbia in the Senate is a triumph of substantial proportions, but it is as well a prophecy of greater victories for the cause in the United States Congress. Only the other day the liquor interests were circularizing the trade with the warning that it must do all in its power to prevent a favorable vote on the District bill, for if the members of Congress should put themselves on record for that measure, by that act they would virtually pledge themselves to similar action when the vote on the resolution for national prohibition comes up. We are quite willing to accept this far-sighted conclusion of our opponents as being based on reasonable premises. Certainly it is a matter for congratulation that fifty-five Senators have demonstrated their intelligence, good judgment and public-spiritedness by voting for a dry District. On page 2 of this issue will be found a list of the names of the men who voted "Yea" on this measure. There ought to go to them from their constituents hearty words of approval, coupled with an expression of hope and expectation that their championship of the District bill may be interpreted as an indication that their vote will be cast in favor of the resolution for the national amendment.

SURVEY OF THE STATES

South Dakota

Hon. Peter Norbeck, who has just been inaugurated governor of South Dakota, in his address to the legislature, urged the immediato passago of a law putting into effect the prohibition amendment adopted at tho last election.

Nevada

The 1916 prohibition fight in Nevada has already been launched through the filing of a petition for an initiative act to make the state "bone dry." Under the initiativo law in this state the proposed measure, together with a substitute measure in case the legislature passes one, will go on the ballot at the next general election.

Pennsylvania

Governor Brumbaugh of Pennsylvania, in an address to the general assembly of the state, urged the passage of a county local option law and the submission of woman suffrage to the voters of the state.

Minnesota

A bill has been introduced in the Minnesota legislature providing for a popular vote on a constitutional prohibition amendment at the general election in 1918.

Governor Burnquist in his first message to the Minnesota legislature, declared in favor of state-wide prohibition and woman suffrage.

Nebraska

In his inaugural address, Governor Keith Neville suggested, among others, the following measures to make the prohibition amendment effective: Creation of a public welfare department to assist in prosecution; that the penalty for the sale of liquors in business places should fall upon the landlord, as well as the tenant, and common carriers should file monthly reports of liquors delivered.

Virginia

That the prohibition law is proving more successful every day since it went into effect is the opinion of United States Deputy Collector G. A. Jones, who has not had to make one capture of liquor since November 1. Collector Jones was extremely busy during the wet days, when he made many liquor coups every month. "I attribute the fact that we have not had a single case against liquor since November 1, entirely to the Mapp law," said Collector Jones. "The law is a great success, and I am coming to believe in it more strongly every day."

New Mexico

State-wide prohibition and woman suffrage are two issues which will doubtless receive favorable action by the legislature of New Mexico now in session. The platforms of both political parties contained prohibition and suffrage planks.

Wyoming

Prohibition will be the chief issue before the fourteenth state legislature of Wyoming, which convened January 9.

Colorado

"You may rest assured," says Julius C. Gunter, the newly elected governor of Colorado, "that all the power the chief executive of this state exercises will be used in the interest of the prohibition law and in the interest also of any amendment that may make it more effective."

Montana

There is a movement on foot among the prohibition forces of Montana to have the state-wide prohibition law go into effect on January 1, 1918, instead of a year later, as the referendum, passed at the last election, specified.

Florida

"The Florida legislature convenes April 3 for sixty days," writes Miss Minnie E. Neal, president of the Florida W. C. T. U. "The resolution for submission of our amendment requires a three-fifths vote in each house. We have the pledges of more than three-fifths of these men. Of course, we shall vote for other things also. Though we have these pledges, we purpose to arm ourselves with very strong petitions from each senatorial district also, so as to be doubly sure."

Rev. Sidney J. Catts, the newly elected governor of Florida, has pledged himself to state-wide prohibition. Governor Catts was elected on a Democratic-Independent-Prohibition ticket after he had been defeated for the Democratic nomination by a small margin.

The occasion of Governor Catt's inauguration was made memorable by the refusal of the governor to lead the grand march of the inaugural ball, or even to be present on such an occasion and before he would allow the ball to be given, he asked for a pledge that no alcoholic beverages be served.

Texas

The most important question to come before the Texas legislature which convened January 9, is the submission to the voters of the state of a prohibition amendment to the constitution.

Utah

Elected representatives of Utah are at present working on a drastic prohibition bill. Governor-elect Bamberger was elected chiefly on his platform of prohibition, and with both the Democratic and Republican parties pledged to prohibition, it is predicted that an adequate measure, to go into effect not later than August 1 next, will be passed by the legislature. Saloonkeepers are making an effort to sell or are changing the nature of their business in anticipation of the advent of prohibition.

North Dakota

An effort will be made at the coming session of the North Dakota legislature to secure the appointment of a law enforcement commissioner, a woman suffrage amendment, presidential suffrage, and a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools.

California

The California 1918 prohibition campaign has already begun, it is announced. At a meeting in San Francisco of prohibition and temperance leaders from all parts of the state, a committee of fourteen was appointed to carry on the work and a state-wide convention will be held early in the spring.

Oregon

"The first business of the Oregon legislature was to endorse a memorial to Congress favoring prohibition in the District of Columbia," says a telegram from Mrs. Jennie M. Kemp, president of the Oregon W. C. T. U. "The senate vote was unanimous; the house vote fifty-threo to seven opposed. Several prohibition bills will be introduced." Mrs. Kemp will be in the capital city during the entire session of the legislature.

Kentucky

Leaders of both the Republican and Democratic parties of Kentucky are said to have agreed that a vote on prohibition shall be taken in 1918.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

MEDITATION CORNER

This is an imperial era in the history of the world. All doors of opportunity are wide open. Christ calls for high-souled men and women who will go with Him, not in the ignoble spirit of grudging service, but in the joyous spirit of full surrender.—Arthur J. Brown.

What we want is enthusiasm. Do not be afraid of it. Some people, the minute you speak about enthusiasm, think it is fanaticism. Do you know what the word enthusiasm means? In God—that is what it means! I have prayed many times that the Lord would let me die before the enthusiasm departs from my soul. I want to keep full of fire up to the last.—D. L. Moody.

In God's service nothing is in vain. He gives prompting, He gives guidance, He gives strength, He gives help, He gives reward. Work that is of our choice, and for ourselves, is often unsatisfactory and unremunerative; but not so with the work which God calls us to, or which we undertake for Him. Wherefore, "my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmovable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord."—Henry Clay Trumbull.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(Continued from Page Two)

islature, and Mr. Herron, editor of the Anchorage Times, who spoke in favor of the bill. Mrs. Hatcher was then introduced and plied with questions by members of the committee, especially relative to the "Alaska Fund." She made a very fine presentation of the case, being so thoroughly conversant with the situation, and we were glad and proud to have her as a representative of the W. C. T. U. from that far-away territory.

Miss Gordon and Mrs. Boole both spoke, Miss Gordon as president of the National W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Boole from personal observation made during a trip to Alaska last summer.

The transmission in the mails of liquor advertisements, in circulars, newspapers, or otherwise, into states which prohibit such advertising or solicitation, is barred by a bill by Senator Bankhead of Alabama, passed by the Senate.

Now that the District prohibition bill is out of the way in the Senate, the bill for National Constitutional Prohibition must be pushed by brief letters, telegrams and resolutions. Let us put especial emphasis on National Constitutional Prohibition just now and try to follow the victories already achieved by a still greater one.

In the House of Representatives the District prohibition bill must also be helped along by letters, telegrams and resolutions to Representatives. That bill MUST pass the House and become a law. Let our women rally to the support of these bills, for it is the crucial time.

January 13, 1917

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

EVANGELISTIC WORK

MARY E. KUHL

There is cause for increased gladness and a larger hope as we take up our work for another year, since in all Christian churches and Christian organizations there is a special organized plan for concerted prayer and unity of purpose and action in all fundamentals for the spread of righteousness. There has come to the world a new concept of God and His workings, so that the eyes of the nations are turned toward the Christ as the great leader in all movements for civic righteousness, purity, and prohibition; and withal, a dauntless faith and courage that cannot be shaken from a wise and holy purpose with a sense of responsibility for a larger breadth and scope of spiritual activities.

We have just passed the week of prayer; now comes the council for the World's and International Alliance, and the observance of January 18 as the day of prayer set apart by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union to pray definitely for state-wide and nation-wide prohibition.

Each state Evangelistic superintendent has been urged to co-operate in the observance of this prayer day. A nation-wide revival is sure to come if there is a volume of prayer going up as sweet incense before God.

There are some things that can only be accomplished through definite prayer. Jesus said, "This kind can come out by nothing save by prayer." Mark 9:29. Prayer is the beginning of all reform movements. "This kind," the liquor traffic, cannot be cast out of the land, "save by prayer" and prayer put into action.

The Crusade movement was a movement of prayer and gave rise to the organization of the W. C. T. U. To this end, and for the establishment of righteousness on the earth, the Evangel is definitely called. "He hath chosen you and appointed you, that ye should go and bear fruit, and that your fruit should abide."

To be a worker with God in winning souls for the kingdom, to go forth in His harvest field, to help put away the evil and build up the good, means to be filled to the full with the Christ spirit, to have inwardly the real consciousness of His presence, to feel His spiritual uplift at all times, to know the word of truth and give it out for "The word is quick and powerful"—to rejoice always, is the Evangel's great privilege, and these are the essentials for every true worker.

The Evangelistic Work Day Plan is now ready, also the new questions for the Bible contest and the new leaflet, "Fruitage." Each state superintendent can have the supplies by designating the number of copies needed and the helps desired. Now is the time to be busy, while all things are ready and all peoples are astir with faith and a holy zeal—while God is marshalling His armies in favor of our righteous cause.

Be busy to win, busy in prayer, busy to secure new members, busy for new subscribers to our periodicals, busy for neighborhood and national revivals that will count for the glory of God and for Christ's kingdom on earth.

For supplies, address Mrs. Mary E. Kuhl, 92 E. Eleventh Avenue, Columbus, Ohio, or the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. Work Day Plan sent for postage.

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

A New Year's greeting to every local union, and may this be the best of all the years for our department. Now is the time to plan social meetings and meetings for the observance of the Red Letter Days, so that during the winter and spring months a large number of these gatherings may be held. It has been written, "The hand that rocks the cradle rules the world," and an ancient orator bestowed a flattering comment upon Roman mothers when he said: "The empire is at the fireside." That the children in the home may be taught the principles of total abstinence; that they may become good citizens and wise rulers, great persistency on the part of the workers of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be required in entreating the women and men of our nation and the world to join our organization. When wine and beer are served upon many dinner tables, at afternoon teas, and dispensed to young men and women during an evening call, we certainly should not refrain from warning our friends of approaching danger. Let not the people perish for lack of knowledge, through our negligence. Distribute literature pertaining to cider and beer, both of which I find are stumbling blocks in securing members. Send to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for "Truth About Beer," "Beer an Insidious Poison," "Disease and Degeneracy the Heritage of the Drinker's Offspring," "Beer a Dangerous Drink." Price, per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents. Circulate these among your friends.

I have written a new leaflet, "What? When? Where? Who? Why?" which will take the place of No. 9, as it better explains our methods and can be distributed as literature at our meetings.

Do not forget at all meetings to emphasize National Constitutional Prohibition—the paramount issue this year.

212 E. 7th St., Plainfield, N. J.

THE W. C. T. U. FREE PLATE SERVICE

CLARA C. CHAPIN, Director of Publicity Bureau

One of the recommendations in our National president's annual address is, "that we send out free plate matter." A free plate service was also urged by the Bureau director in her report given before the Official Board at the National convention, and in order that the board might have some definite plan to consider, Mr. Patterson, editor-in-chief for the Western Newspaper Union, came by invitation to Indianapolis and presented a printed proposition. At a later meeting the matter was referred to the General Officers. After careful consideration they decided to make a beginning in the campaign states, provided these states were willing to pay one-half the expense. On this basis half a column of free plate matter will be supplied to one newspaper in each county of these states, the Western Newspaper Union securing the names. Eleven states are now counted in the prohibition line-up for this year. Three—Missouri, Iowa and Florida—have already accepted the proposition, and the machinery for supplying the service is started.

Money? Of course a free plate service costs money. That is why, under the Publicity Bureau's present appropriation the National is not venturing outside the campaign states. That is why the "Press Paragraphs" have been discontinued—we must use the clip sheet money for dry plates to offset the wet, dripping wet, plates sent out by the liquor organizations.

"The great majority of the publishers of country papers of America are favorable to the cause of prohibition, and they will support the cause to the limit of their ability if they are urged to do so, and if they are assisted in doing so," says Mr. Patterson out of a wide experience. An editor he tells us, "is, as a rule, willing to give space in his newspaper to arguments for prohibition, if others who are interested in the work will provide the arguments in a form in which he can use them. When he has done this, when he has furnished the paper on which these arguments are printed, when he has operated the presses with which they are printed, when he circulates them, he has given more generously to the cause than any other contributor. To enable the publisher of the country newspaper to do these things he must be supplied with the matter in a form in which he can use it with the least possible expense to him. That means newspaper plates."

No better investment of money could be made these campaign days than in the free plate service for the country papers. The pen is mightier than the big stick, and a dry argument is mightier than a wet argument because it is truth.

Evanston, Ill.

SENATORS EXTOL PROHIBITION IN THEIR OWN STATES

The discussion in the Senate on the District of Columbia prohibition bill gave opportunity for the introduction of some telling evidence by the Senators from prohibition states.

The members of the Senate were not left in ignorance as to the success and popularity of prohibition in Kansas. Senators Thompson and Curtis took pleasure in giving them full information on that subject. Senator Curtis, on one occasion, presented the facts tersely when he reminded a colleague from a license state who questioned his statements:

"The very fact that the state of Oklahoma, to the south of Kansas, years after Kansas adopted prohibition and after the law had been tested in that state, adopted prohibition; the fact that Colorado, upon the west, some few years ago adopted prohibition; the further fact that Nebraska, on the north, and Kansas City, Mo., went dry on November 7 last, is the best evidence that the people who know Kansas and her conditions are willing to follow her lead."

Senator Gronna, of North Dakota, also took occasion to pay the following tribute to his state:

"I want to say that the prohibition law has been one of the most beneficial laws upon our statute books. It has done more to make North Dakota what it is today, one of the most prosperous states in the Union, than any other law."

The high regard in which prohibition is held by the people of Mississippi was evidenced by the words of Senator Vardaman, who said:

"Prohibition has been an issue in the state of Mississippi for a number of years. The first ballot I ever cast was in favor of prohibition. In those days to be a prohibitionist meant a fight for every inch of ground the prohibitionist stood upon. We undertook first to solve this problem by local option. The liquor traffic had a great hold upon the people. The foolish argument that it was sumptuary legislation and the beginning of a regime which would ultimately lead to unbearable proscriptions had a powerful influence upon the thoughtless, democratic mind. We made headway slowly, but by persistent efforts—appealing to the good judgment and common sense of the most—we finally succeeded in driving whisky out of every county in the state, except about seven. In those days I believed myself that the matter ought to be determined by the voters of the counties where the liquor was sold. I held the erroneous view that if a man wanted to go to perdition and carry his family with him he should not be molested or restrained in his folly. Yes; I believed in local option; but the sentiment grew, and my mind and soul expanded with it, and when I became convinced of the far-reaching deleterious effects, morally, physically and politically, which emanated from the open saloon, I changed my conduct. Those seven counties that persisted in the nefarious business of selling liquor became festering set-fasts upon the body politic. They were veritable running sores. Their poisonous influences were felt beyond the county lines, like 'the foul breath of the upas tree'—everything that came within the purview of its pernicious influence was injured. So in order to rid the state of the plague, the legislature passed a statewide prohibition law, and the saloons in those unfortunate counties were closed, I hope, forever. That was about eight years ago. I do not exaggerate when I say that in those counties that had prohibition forced upon them not fifteen per cent of the white voters, if the question were again submitted, would vote for the return of the saloon. As long as the whisky interests control the community there will be advocates of the saloon in that community. The presence of the saloon seems to be able to stifle the nobler qualities of the mind and paralyze the better aspirations of the soul."

STUDY OF LIQUOR CONSUMPTION RECORDS

PER CAPITA CONSUMPTION OF ALCOHOL IN THE UNITED STATES DECREASED TWENTY PER CENT 1907-1915

JOHN F. CUNNEEN

In 1907 the per capita consumption of distilled spirits in the United States was 1.58 gallons; of wine .65 gallons; of malt liquor 20.56 gallons. Allowing 50 per cent alcohol for distilled spirits, 15 per cent for wine and 4 per cent for malt liquors, there was a per capita consumption of 1.70 gallons of straight alcohol in the fiscal year of the United States government ending June 30, 1907. In the year ending June 30, 1915, the per capita consumption of distilled spirits was 1.25 gallons; of wines, 32 gallons; of malt liquor 18.24 gallons. At the same percentages of alcohol as noted above, the per capita consumption of straight alcohol was 1.33 gallons, or 20 per cent less than was consumed in 1907.

The per capita consumption of liquor varies from year to year. When there is an increase, the liquor interests make much of it and try to get people to believe that it is an argument against prohibition. When government reports show a decrease, the liquor interests will go back ten or twenty years for a statistical argument.

The consumption of liquor increased by leaps and bounds until 1907, when prohibition territory began to spread. Not only has the consumption of liquor been checked, but government reports show a decrease of 20 per cent since 1907. The increase in the consumption of liquor in some years, notwithstanding the spread of dry territory, is easily explained. In years of panic and hard times 2,000,000 to 4,000,000 working people in the United States are thrown out of work. "The last man hired and the first man fired is the man who drinks." In slack times 1,000,000 to 3,000,000 drinking men are thrown out of work. They can drink little because of lack of money to buy. When times get prosperous and there is great demand for men, employers of labor must put on drinking men because they can get no others. The drinking man with plenty of money indulges heavily as long as money lasts. One million drinking men who in prosperous times consume an extra quart of liquor per day, will increase the consumption of liquor 91,000,000 gallons in the country in one year. When hard times come and drinking men are thrown out of work and cannot buy liquor there is an enormous decrease in liquor consumption.

Times are now prosperous. There is a great demand for labor. The check on the liquor traffic in such prosperous times shows the tremendous power of the prohibition movement. It foretells complete victory in the very near future.

PASSING OF THE SALOONS MEANS PASSING OF BUMS—DENVER FREE FROM HOBOES

Denver, until January 1, 1916, was a favorite congregating place of the hobo and saloon bum. The police here had the reputation among these undesirables of being "kind and considerate."

Now the town is marked up by the traveling fraternity of the box car, blind baggage and rods, as being "undesirable."

They keep going when they get in from the east, heading for Cheyenne and for the coast.

And it is because of prohibition. No tramp with any self-respect and pride in the fact that his initials are carved on every railroad watering tank from New York to San Francisco, would stop in Denver any longer than necessary to get the next rattler out.

"No barrel houses, no free lunches, no nuthing," as one of them might state it. —Denver Post.

NEW LIFE PATRON AND MEMORIAL MEMBERS

Mrs. Mary L. Collins, of Pennsylvania and Washington, has been made a life patron of the National W. C. T. U. by her husband, Mr. E. S. Collins, by the payment of $100.

Since the first of the year, the following promoted comrades have been made memorial members:

Mrs. Margaret Johns.
Mrs. Lydia F. Nichols.
Rev. Lewis A. Parsels.

A WORD OF EXPLANATION

Many have written to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House concerning orders for pins placed at the National W. C. T. U. Convention and since that time. Explanation has been made in each instance that orders would be filled immediately upon receipt of goods from the factory, and that the manufacturer is doing his best is shown by the following letter:

Chicago, Jan. 5, 1917.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, 1730 Chicago Avenue, Evanston, Ill.

Dear Mesdames:

This acknowledges receipt of your letter of January 3rd, in reply to which we wish to say that we will make a shipment of pins, which will leave Chicago not later than Saturday.

We are very sorry indeed that there has been a delay in filling this order, but under existing conditions it cannot be prevented.

We are experiencing the greatest amount of trouble in getting raw material, and this is true of every manufacturer in the industry. Our raw material suppliers are loaded beyond capacity, and are making shipments in lots that are a very small portion of the orders placed. Even that small portion is a very long time in coming.

At the present moment we are working twenty-two hours per day in an endeavor to take care of all our people, and when delays occur they cannot be prevented.

We assure you that we are watching your order and will make shipment on Saturday.

Very truly yours,
MANUFACTURING COMPANY
J.A.-M.D.

We are sorry to disappoint our friends and we thank them for their patience. Customers will be served in turn, orders being filled just as rapidly as the manufacturer supplies the pins.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois.

WITH BANDS OF LOVE

M. PELTON WHITE

The Story of a Church that Furnished a Substitute for the Saloon

Andrew Reese had been superintendent of the Malden Avenue Sunday school for six months. Suggested for the place by Rev. Abbey, he was the first choice of children and young people, and was willingly accepted by the majority of the congregation, though barely tolerated by a few straight-laced conservatives with a hawk-eyed surveillance for faults. Deacon Layhue was the leader of this element. "Drew (no one ever called young Reese by his full name) is in his early twenties," he had objected when the matter was being discussed. "What our young folks need is an older man."

"Why, Drew is a born leader. Look at him now." Rev. Abbey's tones had expressed the utmost surprise.

The deacon's glance had traveled to the choir loft and rested disapprovingly on the clean-cut, straight-limbed, boy-faced fellow whose infectious smile and magnetic voice were inciting a band of children to better work.

"Mighty faint praise for the Master," he was saying. "We can do better than that. Now everybody"—the hand that held a stick of kindling, in lieu of a more polished baton, swung vigorously—"SING."

A joyous burst of music filled the air. "'Praise Him, praise Him, Jesus, our blessed Redeemer.'"

With a satisfied smile, Rev. Abbey had turned to Deacon Layhue to be met with a mournful shake of the head, and the comment that it was this everlasting levity of Reese's that unfitted him for the office he held.

What the deacon was pleased to call "levity" Drew himself would have labelled joy. He could have told the day, almost the hour, when he had found this wonderful, all-abiding happiness.

On a stifling hot Sabbath, the summer before, Rev. Abbey had led his congregation to the woods and held the morning service beneath the cool shade of pine boughs. At its close, a picnic lunch was spread, and the remainder of the day was spent in enjoying nature, or, as the Rev. Abbey expressed it, "God in nature." The experiment having proved successful, it was repeated several times.

It was on the occasion of the first out-of-door meeting that young Reese and June Shipley—the nicest girl he'd ever known, according to Drew's statement—wandered a bit apart. Seated on a projecting boulder, they watched a shining stretch of water swirl and eddy at the base of the bluff.

Suddenly, Drew broke the silence, a radiant smile lighting his face. "It's great, June, simply great, this having God with us the whole time."

In ready sympathy the girl laid her hand on the blue serge sleeve near her. She abhorred irreverence, but she had good sense. Drew's utterances, punctuated with the slang of the day, were received in the spirit in which they were spoken. More than once she had been heard to answer carping critics with an indignant: "The greatest sticklers would probably not be eligible for purists' diplomas had they started life as newsboys, nor would they have plodded through the workaday world to a trusted position." Drew was a bank cashier.

He had reached for the hand that rested on his arm.

"I don't suppose you can realize what it means to me to have God as a companion—a dear personal friend. Why, do you know, until today I've always thought that he was a sort of shadowy something shut behind church doors—who could only be approached with a long face and one's Sunday-go-to-meeting clothes."

His joyous laugh had set the air vibrating and furrowed a frown on Deacon Layhue's brow. The frown had deepened a few weeks later when Drew, the door of "Billy-the-Mug's Saloon" slamming behind him, almost ran down the good brother.

"It's all right," he panted. "God was with me." And to Deacon Layhue's shocked silence he had only insisted that there is no place a fellow needs the company of his God more than he does in "Billy-the-Mug's" dive. Thin-chested, sorrow-eyed Widow Blair, her good-natured, easy-going son, Jimmy, and the bartender could have explained Drew's visit to the saloon if anyone had taken the trouble to ask them, but no one did.

And now, on this Saturday half-holiday, young Reese's boot heels clicked determination as they carried their owner in the direction of the church parlors, where the Ladies' Aid was holding a social meeting. That it was a most unpropitious time to make his plea Drew was forced to admit to himself.

Well Drew knew how hard the good women had worked for the past two years to get together a sum sufficient to furnish the parlors and equip the kitchen in a style in keeping with the rest of the church furnishings. There had been rummage sales, basket socials, fairs, moving pictures, in fact every legitimate method of raising money that the inventive brains of the members could suggest. The big Thanksgiving dinner had rounded out the required amount. The buying and placing of furniture had followed, and today's meeting of the women was one of rejoicing over the successful termination of their labors.

"But it's got to be done, and done now." Drew lashed himself with the thought as he found his steps lagging at the church entrance. "With God to champion a cause, a fellow's got to win." He hurled himself against the door as if to vanquish a foe. The enemy yielded, and the young superintendent was in the midst of the elated, chattering throng.

His coming was hailed with delight. Mrs. Abbey seized him by one arm and Grandma Lathrope clung to the other. Together, they piloted him through the rooms, while a medley of voices from an enthusiastic following of matrons and maids demanded his admiration for the new carpet, curtains and "comfortable" chairs. The range, dishes and table utensils—wasn't it splendid to have plenty to set the long table without the bother of even borrowing extra spoons—hot water tank, the big heater, in fact everything from the shining window panes to the freshly tinted walls must be admired by Drew.

And the young man gave unstinted praise that brought a flush of pleasure to many a tired worker's face. And then, with a tensely earnest prayer to his Maker to "stand close" and direct his every word, he straightened himself and—as he afterward confided to Rev. Abbey—"dropped the bomb that burst the earthly joy bubbles," its casing smacking of the gutter, the street, the current slang of shop and office. But what mattered that if in the end his listeners fell victims to the truth-packed shell.

At the last election the state of Washington had voted for prohibition. Drew reminded his audience that the law had gone into effect. Was it not a most opportune time to provide a comfortable meeting place, surrounded by wholesome influence, for those young men who had hitherto found a cordial welcome behind saloon doors? The Malden Avenue Church was ideally located in the downtown district. The Aid Society held its meetings in the afternoon. At other times, except on special occasions, this home-like room was closed. Could not the ladies find it in their hearts to give it over to the "bunch" to enjoy evenings—a sort of clubroom where the fellows would feel free to drop in at their pleasure?

The request was answered by silence—a silence that bespoke an attitude of ignoring—even hostile glances and the pulling away of unsmirched skirts, for the "bunch" referred to was a class of young men with whom Drew was thrown in contact in the business world. They had attended several of the out-of-door services the previous summer and now and then a few of them dropped in to the Sunday evening meetings. The majority of the congregation did not urge them to repeat the offense.

A timid objection, "Mr. Reese must remember that these rooms the ladies have furnished are a part of the house of God," and the avalanche of protest descended.

Did Drew recognize how much labor and expense they had been to? He did.

Would these young men—the tone implied hoodlums—keep things clean and in order? He hoped they would.

Were they not in the habit of smoking? Yes.

Did they play cards—gamble? He was afraid they did.

Drink? Occasionally, but there was nothing to fear from this source since the city was dry.

And they swore? A look of pain swept the superintendent's face as he inclined his head.

His tormentors had cast their last stone. The silence that followed seemed a fitting burial for a lost hope. Sorrowfully Drew's glance searched one after another the countenances of the righteous, then sought June Shipley's face.

Deacon Layhue had once insinuated that it was June and not the Lord that kept young Reese in the Malden Avenue Church. The Rev. Abbey had smiled and rebuked gently: "Sometimes the Master makes the doing of his bidding very pleasant."

Now, the girl's earnest grey eyes met Drew's troubled ones. "Courage, comrade," flashed the signal.

The message routed the expression of bafflement. There was a perceptible squaring of shoulders, protruding of chin, but Drew's voice was quiet, gentle. Though he made no mention of himself, everyone present felt that his words were painted with the pigment, experience. The haunting loneliness of the homeless waif, the tattered newsie, messenger, the leisure hours of the clerk spent in a hall bedroom, were etched with the acid of truth on every heart.

"At first most of the fellows visit saloons for company and entertainment—the thirst comes afterward," he said. "As for their profanity—God pity them. They have heard it from infancy. The foulness of the mire contaminated them. Breathing its vileness, how can they be cleansed? Bring them into this pure atmosphere: overcome evil with good."

The enthusiasm of the young superintendent burned his cheek a deeper red and brightened his eye. Raising his arm and pointing to the door that led from the parlor to the church he made his final appeal: "May that be the 'open sesame' to the Master's house."

Grandma Lathrope furtively wiped a tear from her faded eyes. "The boy's right," she quavered brokenly. Nor was there a dissenting note.

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

TRUE TO LABEL.

Listen to the Voice of Reason and Abstain.

Analysed by Dr. Experience after many hundreds of years of experiment among every class of people and in every part of the world.

—Grit of Australia

WITH BANDS OF LOVE

(Continued from Page Twelve)

"Suppose we could take turns slicking things up mornings a bit," ventured one.

"A few magazines, books and games would make it seem more homelike," added another.

"It's my belief," volunteered a third, "that there's nothing like a plate of homemade doughnuts and a crock of cookies for promoting sociability. And with the kitchen so convenlent—"

"I agree with every one of you," interrupted Mrs. Abbey, adding, while a roguish smile teased her lips: "With Drew to keep things straight there will be no necessity for further chaperonage. Notice: After six p. m., Ladies' Aid please keep out."

The laugh that followed was general, but no one appreciated as did Drew the timelIness of the hint. Well he knew, too, that the pastor's wife was the only one who could have given it without offense. He wondered how she had guessed his fear of a gratuitous censorship by the stralght-laced. He didn't ask, though he did give her hand an extra squeeze when he said good-bye.

She understands the "bunch," he told himself as he swung down the street. "It isn't everybody that knows when to coax and when to drive. God willing, June, the Ladies' Aid and the rest of us will draw 'em into the fold with bands of love."

In the days and weeks that followed, Drew's faith and optimism were put to the test. His invitation to the new club room was received as a joke, if not with downright suspicion by most of the crowd.

Say, hadn't they attended the Malden Avenue Church? Well, they guessed yes, and they weren't blind, either. They could tell a little bit when they were wanted and when they were not. They'd done their little stunt at posing as the "horrible example." If any one was foolish enough to imagine that they wanted to go to prayer meeting every night of the week he had had a bad dream and had better forget it.

A few, disliking to hurt Drew's feelings, accepted his invitation. The first evening they were ill at ease, extremely wary of "traps." Finding nothing more disagreeable than the freedom of a most comfortable room they repeated the experiment the following night and many succeeding ones.

During the next two weeks, curiosity brought, one by one, all of the "fellows" to the church parlors to find out about "this crazy proposition of good old Drew's." Last to arrive was Bud Phillips, mischief bent as usual.

He was a likable chap, good-natured, generous, daring to the limit. If there was "anything doing" Bud was sure to be in the thick of it, if not the actual instigator. The increasing popularity of the "club" had considerably lessened his following and in consequence his pride was piqued.

One evening, finding himself quite deserted by the old crowd, Bud turned his steps in the direction of the Malden Avenue Church. To use his own expression, he "just blew in to see what was doing." And Drew was forced to confess within the next fortnight that it was an ill wind that bore the late comer through the doorway.

On his first appearance Bud feigned surprise at the selection of books and magazines. The following night he presented the boys with several nickel thrillers from which he read aloud and led the uproarious laughter that followed. It was Bud who remarked in a jocular vein: "Gee, thought kids left off playing checkers with their knee pants," and took from his pocket a much-thumbed deck of cards and invited the boys to join him in a little game. It was Bud, too, who generously provided cigars and invited the club to "smoke up." No wonder there was a perceptible lowering of standards. Though Drew's patience was sorely tried he was not discouraged, nor did he lose faith. With God on his side he would win certainly, but it was going to take time—and time was his weakest asset.

The Ladies' Aid had been most lenient. However, tobacco-smoked curtains, scratched furniture, mud-stained fenders, the litter of cigar stumps and ashes, smeared and marred walls and, above all, an ugly hole burned in the new carpet were trials that decidedly roughened the surface of good nature.

Then, to cap the climax, Deacon Layhue surreptitiously appointed an investigating committee of one and donated his services. He started for the club on a cold, rainy night when his rheumatism was bad. Long before he reached the church loud and unseemly noises vexed his sharpened sense of hearing. Bud Phillips was parodying a hymn and syncopating the good old church tune to ragtime atrocities. His efforts were ably seconded by the voices and feet of a few of "the boys."

The windows of the parlor were above the deacon's line of vision, but a stone coping at the rear of the church aided and abetted the stiff-kneed investigator in gaining a view of the interior.

"Humph! Just as I thought it would be," he rasped to himself, "smoking and card playing in the Lord's house. It ain't a-worrying Drew none, either." He eased his aching joints from their perch on the wall and turned his face toward the parsonage.

A wait of fifteen minutes would have added color to the already damaging story; a half-hour—the tale would never have been told. True, Drew's face expressed unconcern when the spying old eyes looked in on him. He had been beating a punching bag and had stopped for a few minutes to instruct one of the young men how to use a pair of Indlan clubs so as to bring into play certain muscles. It was Bud who had suggested gymnasium work to him as a correction to the downward moral tendency, not that Bud intended to, however. It came about in connection with smoking some two weeks previous. "Don't suppose you'd dare take three puffs at a cigar for fear you'd be killed or struck blind," taunted that young gentleman as he threw a partly burned match at the coal scuttle and missed it.

Drew had leaned forward to pick up the charred splint. "Not exactly instant death," he parried good-naturedly. "But I think I'll go in for a bit of gym exercise —can't do much with that, you know, and smoke, too."

Bud had glanced sharply at his companion's face, but its honest expression disarmed his rising suspicion.

Two days later an expressman had stopped at the church. When the club members arrived in the evening they found Drew busily engaged unpacking a

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

Supplies for Frances E. Willard Commemorative Meeting

FOR REFERENCE:

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Price $1.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said, Anna Adams Gordon. Price 75 cents.

The Story of Frances E. Willard, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price 15 cts.

FOR PROGRAM MATERIAL:

Annual Address, Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, delivered at Indianapolis. Price 5 cents.

Review of Organization Work, given in report of Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary, found in National Minutes. Price 25 cents.

Union Signal (special Willard Memorial number of January 25). Price 2 cents each; $1.75 per 100. Special price of $1.50 per 100 on orders received by January 23.

Frances E. Willard Program for Public Schools, Anna A. Gordon. Price 10 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens.

Flower of Temperance Chivalry, S. M. D. Fry. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, 75 cents.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION:

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, $1.00.

The Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Temperance Jack
Law of Habit
The Shoemaker and Little White Shoes
The Common Joy
Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE Y. P. B.:

Frances E. Willard's Influence Upon the Young People of the Age. Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE L. T. L.:

How a Little Girl Became Famous. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Five Little Word Pictures of Frances E. Willard. Price, per 100, 30 cents.

FOR MUSIC:

Temperance Songster, Convention Edition. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book, Anna A. Gordon.

Home's Love-Light—solo. Price, 30 cents.

A Paean of Victory—solo. Price, 10 cents.

Victory—soprano solo. Price, 15 cents.

Wear Your White Ribbon Wherever You Go—solo or chorus. Price, 5 cents.

A Knot of White Ribbon—solo. Price 25 cents.

The White Ribbon—solo. Price, 10 cents.

FOR INVITATIONS:

Rest Cottage Post Card
Frances E. Willard Post Card
Frances E. Willard Statue Post Card
Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per 100, $1.00.

FOR ROLL CALL:

Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Cards—quotations from Miss Willard's writings, with autograph signature. Price, 12 cents per 100.

FOR SOUVENIRS:

Rest Cottage Booklet. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Willard Birthday Pledge Card, with autograph pledge and signature. Price, per 100, $1.00.

Prices include prepaid postage.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

Frances E. Willard Portraits

For Schools, Libraries and the Home

No. 1

No. 1—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid.....$4.00

No. 3

No. 3—Enlarged Photograph, from a picture taken during Miss Willard's later years, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid 4.00
Special School Picture (a print from this photograph), 18x22 in. Price.. .50

No. 2

No. 2—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00

No. 4

No. 4—Enlarged Photograph, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00
Same photograph, 10x12 inches... 1.50

Name Plate, handsomely engraved, on brass base, gold plated. Price.....$ 1.75

These portraits, suitably framed, with name plate attached, sent by prepaid express, each 10.00

Cabinet Photographs of Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, 25 cents each; per dozen..... 2.40

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

VIRGINIA NEWS AND NARRATIVE

Special Correspondence

All Virginia's Christmastide was made anxious by the illness of the beloved W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, who is at present in the George Washington hospital, District of Columbia, where she was taken December 17. At this writing improvement is reported and prayers are constantly being offered for her restoration.

Prohibition Commissioner Peters has been making a round of the state and rendering invaluable assistance to officers in enforcing the law. Gratifying reports of improved conditions have come from the cities while the mountain region, ever more difficult to deal with, is slower to approve of the new law. The attitude of the moonshiner is gradually changing. Fear of being "ousted" will cause a much stronger enforcement by those in power than could possibly have resulted from any other cause. Already fines imposed throughout the state have more than paid the commissioner's salary.

The state W. C. T. U. paper, the Virginia Call, is now being edited by the Press superintendent, Mrs. Gertrude B. Boss, of Roanoke, who has done valuable work in the local papers of her own town.

In arranging your program for

Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

you will need

"THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD"
By Anna A. Gordon
Cloth bound, $1.50, postpaid
Place your order early

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Mrs. Faith T. Parrott, state recording secretary of the Virginia W. C. T. U., was instrumental recently in having a resolution passed at the annual conference of the Virginia Daughters of the American Revolution providing that liquor advertisements shall be excluded from the D. A. R. magazine.

FORTY-THREE KANSAS CITY BARS TO CLOSE

According to records of the police board, forty-three of the 574 saloons that operated in Kansas City, Mo., the last six months of 1916 have failed to make application for a renewal of their licenses and will discontinue business.

Tired, Nervous Men and Women who are languid, sleepless and physically run-down get immediate relief and lasting benefits from the regular use of Scott's Emulsion after meals.

Its chief constituent is nature's greatest body-building force to strengthen the organs and nerve centers, grain by grain, to rebuild physical and mental energy.

No alcohol or opiate in SCOTT'S.

Refuse Substitutes.

Scott & Bowne, 14-60 Bloomfield, N.J.

Good Campaign Ammunition

GIVE THE PEOPLE THE FACTS

Quiz on National Constitutional Prohibition

The Last Stage of a Great Conflict

Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. Convention

Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents

America's Greatest Foe
The Paramount Issue
Prohibition States
Teach the People
Maine Vindicated
Facts About Kansas
Six Months of Prohibition in Seattle
Kansas Answers the Liquor Argument
The Workingman and the Alcohol Problem
Drink Traffic and Revenue
Reasons for Their Prosperity
Untouched Sources of Revenue
The Drink Traffic and the Taxpayer
Industrial World Against Alcohol

CARTOON LEAFLETS

What Two Beers a Day will Buy
The Workingman Who Pays
What Mother and the Children Get
His Days are Numbered
Boy or Beer Barrel
Your Boy Next
The Liquor Traffic's Vacuum Pocket Cleaner
Accusing Fingers
Is It a Square Deal?

Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

THREE DUES AND AN EXPLANATION

It is due to THE UNION SIGNAL, which advertised my goods, and as surely due to me, the advertiser, and equally due to readers who answered the advertisement that an explanation be made in regard to the difficulties which have occurred in my business the last two months. Many complaints have come from people who have sent both currency and checks with orders for post cards, that they have not received the goods. All such complaints were reported to the local postoffice, and we finally found that there had been wholesale tampering with the mails from which, I regret to say, my customers as well as myself, have suffered heavily. There is only one remedy for trouble of this kind, and that is never to send currency through the mail, but send money order or draft. If these are lost they cannot be cashed.

Regretting any inconvenience which my customers may have suffered, I am,

Very truly yours,

MRS. L. F. PEASE

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.

J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

WHITE RIBBON ACTIVITIES IN MASSACHUSETTS

Special Correspondence

The Frances E. Willard Settlement of Boston is engaged in a gigantic effort to raise the sum of $150,000 to clear the great plant of all indebtedness. The week beginning January 7 was specially given over to this endeavor. Ford Hall was engaged for the entire week and luncheons were served every day to the several "teams" which were out canvassing the entire city and, indeed, the state. Campaign songs were sung at the luncheons and addresses made by some of the best speakers of Boston. This enterprise long ago passed the experimental stage, and is now recognized as one of the most efficient agencies for the social uplift of Boston. Miss Caroline M. Caswell, the founder, is a woman of remarkable breadth of vision and great executive ability. She has been ably seconded by an unusual corps of helpers, prominent among whom are Mrs. Myra L. Higgins, superintendent of Llewsac Lodge, the country home of the settlement, and Miss Nellie Frank Hill, superintendent of the club work.

Massachusetts feels that it has just cause for pride in the Social Service department of its white ribbon activities. Willard Settlement does not stand alone, but in Boston the Harriet Tubman Home provides a much-needed social center for young colored girls. This is under the auspices of the Harriet Tubman local union, although a board of directors from the white ribboners of the state has for years helped it to carry the burden. In Springfield the Goodwill Home is maintaining a much needed work among the younger girls and in Worcester a social settlement is being carried on wholly under W. C. T. U. auspices. One of the most attractive features of the recent state convention at Taunton was an exhibit of these several social activities. The headquarters of the state, at 541 Massachusetts avenue, also furnishes a kind of social center for the neighborhood, and it is expected that this feature will be more strongly emphasized in the near future. On February 22, the fifth anniversary of the occupancy of state headquarters, it is expected that the mortgage will be burned with appropriate ceremonies.

On Sunday, January 7, Rev. Austin DuBlois, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Boston, preached a very interesting sermon to his large congregation on the topic, "Frances E. Willard and the Twentieth Century Woman." He said the two greatest women of the 19th century were Queen Victoria and Frances E. Willard, asserting that Miss Willard's special claim to greatness lay in four facts: First, her clear vision, which enabled her to see the enormity of the legalized liquor traffic and her steadfast determination to sweep it out of the land; second, her advocacy of equal suffrage while it was still so unpopular a cause; third, her perception of and devotion to the single standard of purity in men and women—"The White Life for Two"; and last, her marvelously comprehensive vision and outlook which made possible the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is not often that so fashionable and conservative a church listens to such a forceful arraignment of the liquor traffic or such a clear setting forth of advanced reform questions.

Mrs. Katharine Lent Stevenson, president of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U. since 1898, is rapidly recovering from the illness which detained her from the National convention. She is still largely confined to her home, but accomplishes a full day's work there, with pen and typewriter, and expects by the middle of the month to be once again at state headquarters. She is planning to speak at the memorial service to Mrs. Harriette D. Walker, to be held at the Y. W. C. A. On Jan. 16, the state general officers had their monthly meeting, and on Jan. 18 she will conduct the service of prayer for National Prohibition. The first hour of this service will be given up to a memorial service for Dr. Purington and Mrs. Walker. All the temperance forces of the state are to unite in an effort to have prohibition adopted by the constitutional convention, which is to meet in May. Altogether, the winning of six cities to the dry ranks is a hopeful sign for the Old Bay state, and the temperance forces are taking new heart of hope for state-wide prohibition.

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture
for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

TEMPERANCE TIDE RISING IN MINNESOTA

BESSIE LATHE SCOVELL

The first two bills introduced in the senate of the Minnesota legislature when it convened the first week in January, were temperance measures and the fifth bill, presented by Senator Gandrud, was at the behest of the state W. C. T. U. and provides for state-wide prohibition by constitutional amendment.

The grand jury of Hennepin county, in its final report, left the following record: "On one hand we have considered many cases in which intoxicating liquor has been the cause or a contributing cause of crime. On the other hand, we have been required to inspect the city workhouse, the city and county jails and the poor farm, and in all these cases we have seen the devastating effects of drink. In other words, we have returned indictments against men whom drink has helped ruin and at the same time have commended the management and efficiency of the institutions maintained by the city and county to care for the victims of the liquor business which is licensed by them. The grand jury is of the opinion that the sale of liquor in our midst is taking heavy toll in human souls and money."

The Seventeenth district W. C. T. U. (Minneapolis unions) are holding interesting monthly meetings in the forum of Hennepin Avenue M. E. church, considered by many the finest Methodist church in this country. The white ribboners feel that they have a friend in the new pastor, Charles Wesley Burns, who was once the president of Pennsylvania Loyal Temperance Legion. The district places a speaker in at least one church in the city every Sunday evening. Christmas eve they were given one hour in which to present "The Prospects for National Constitutional Prohibition" before the open forum in the assembly room of the court house.

A line of work emphasized is that among woodsmen, and tons of literature are being sent to the lumber camps of northern Minnesota.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

"ENLIGHTENING THE PUBLIC"

Within the past few weeks a prominent liquor paper remarked that it hoped and expected a great victory on November 7 because "campaigns of education had been and were being waged in the communities that were to vote and the voters had been ENLIGHTENED, and now, no doubt, saw the liquor question in a NEW LIGHT."

Reading this prediction in the light of the events of November 7, we smile at the success of this "campaign of liquor enlightenment" which apparently in most of the states made little impression, if indeed it did not help rather than hinder our cause. But, seriously, the workers agree that the campaigns of miseducation, misinterpretation and misrepresentation that cloud the atmosphere of every state where the liquor issue is before the people, is no laughing matter, but one of the most formidable obstacles they must meet. A falsehood dressed in attractive display type in the advertising pages of a popular newspaper, a cleverly worded article or story composed of one per cent fact and ninety-nine per cent falsehood does confuse and mislead the people. The most independent of voters hearing only one side of a question and that presented in a spectacular fashion may be kept from considering the real merits of the subject.

We quite agree with Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular, when it says: "Education is the need of the hour. Education means getting before the reading public, facts and truths concerning the liquor traffic." Of course we differ diametrically in our interpretation of what are "facts" and "truths." But education is the word that spells success in our great movement for state and national prohibition. And this education, we contend, must be not spasmodic, but regular; not fragmentary, but comprehensive; not occasional, but consecutive and continuous. The ideal way to insure this kind of instruction is to place in the homes of all the people of your community, all the time, all the truth on the liquor question, in the form of a readable temperance weekly, which shall give from week to week that fascinating serial, "Prohibition's Onward March" to victory, the tale of the triumph of total abstinence; the arguments that make the liquor sophistries seem like the foolish babbling of babes. All this you will find in THE UNION SIGNAL.

WITH BANDS OF LOVE

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

box that contained a miscellaneous assortment of Indian clubs, dumb bells, boxing gloves and sundry other muscle developers. There were also books on tests and measurements.

The gym work gained favor at once. Before the week was out two of the boys had given up smoking in an effort to best each other in chest expansion.

"It's good stuff," Drew had confided to June with enthusiasm. "Keep 'em interested—give 'em something to do and everything will work out right. But say," there was admiration in his eyes as his glance rested on the girl's upturned face, "how did you ever get all the paraphernalia together and how am I ever going to thank you for your trouble?"

"No thanks, please," laughed June. "A lot of these dumb bells and things were fairly hidden with dust and cobwebs in the garrets of the idle. If they will only help," she added wistfully.

That they did "help" was the means of inciting Bud Phillips to greater lengths of mischief, for he recognized that this new attraction bade fair to end his leadership.

While Deacon Layhue limped over slippery pavements and Drew twirled a pair of clubs, Bud suddenly ceased his vocal efforts, reached into his pocket and pulled out a flask.

"This singing business is deucedly dry work," he announced, winking wickedly at his companions, then glancing slyly to the opposite side of the room. "Have one on me." He placed the bottle on the reading table in general invitation.

For a moment there was silence, blank amazement on every countenance save his own. "Well," he urged, "don't be bashful. Step lively—wet goods ain't so common these days that you need a second asking."

"Aw, cut it, Bud," admonished a youth at his elbow, a quiet lad who had never been known to question Phillips' idea of a good time. That he dared utter protest on this, of all other occasions, stung Bud to the quick. His lips curled sneeringly.

"You and Drew better have a glass of milk and a prune if you're 'fraid of your digestions being hurt. And, say, you'd better lock the door and pull down the curtains if you're scared—no one can see you then."

Again the ominous silence. Slowly Drew crossed the room. He faced his tormentor squarely. There was neither anger nor resentment in his expression—only sorrow. When he spoke it was in the same quiet, gentle tone he had used at the Ladies' Aid in behalf of the "bunch." Now, as then, there was a deadly earnestness in his words.

"You're right, Bud. We can turn the key and keep people out, draw the shades and prevent them from seeing in. But just remember, my friend, that you can't hide from God, or lock Him out. He is with us always."

The flashing glance of black eyes met the steady gaze of blue ones and wavered. "Aw—shucks—if you're going to—to ring in—" Bud paused uncertainly, then a sheepish grin crept into his face and he reddened uncomfortably. Reaching for the flask he pulled out the cork.

"It isn't so dangerous as it looks, boys—it's only tea. But Drew wins. I thought I could put up a little game on him and make him mad, but instead—well—he's made me feel like—like a cad."

"You're not the only one," broke in one of the culprits, but Bud's uplifted hand silenced him.

"This isn't your little confession," warned its owner whimsically, and with awkwardness, due to self-consciousness, he again addressed his remarks to Drew.

"I just want to say, old man, that your kind of a God makes a hit with me and—and—" he floundered miserably.

Words were unnecessary. Drew's outstretched hand seized young Phillips' in a grip that hurt. "You're right, Bud, God's the best all-around friend a fellow ever had and—"

"Just let me speak of another matter," interrupted Bud, bound to be rid of all his troubles at once. "I've been bell leader to a bunch of swine." He glanced half humorously at his companions. "Say, boys, it's up to us to get in and clean this place, pay for the damage we've done and show the Malden Avenue Church that we've the decency to appreciate the home they've—"

The outer door swung open, revealing the troubled face of Rev. Abbey, the triumphant one of Deacon Layhue.

"All's well," Drew's hearty voice greeted them. "God's in His temple."

Then and there Bud came forward and manfully repeated the declaration he had just finished.

"'And he drew them with cords of a man and with bands of love,'" murmured Rev. Abbey softly.

"Maybe so—that's Scripture all right," admitted the deacon hastily.

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should.

I know I can because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight, in your room, without drugs, by scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

A Compendium of Temperance Truth

by

Edith Smith Davis,

World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction

A reference book which should be in every school library for use in essay work.

A book for temperance workers.

Price, 50 cents net.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

You Use Post Cards

Why Not Use the

PROHIBITION MAP POST CARD?

which silently carries its message of "dry territory" as well as your word of greeting or notice of the W. C. T. U. meeting.

Price, per fifty, 60 cents;
per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII EVANSTON, ILL., JANUARY 25, 1917 No. 4

VISUALIZED SURVEY OF W. C. T. U. FIELD

Nearly 20,000 local unions are working for National Constitutional Prohibition

HERE IS WHERE THEY ARE!

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY NUMBER

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The United States Supreme Court has rendered another decision far reaching in its character. The Federal white slave law was construed by the Supreme Court to prohibit interstate transportation of women for any immoral purpose, including private escapades as well as commercialized vice. In three test cases the court in a divided opinion affirmed convictions of three men. The decision is final. The court divided five to three in broadly interpreting the law enacted in 1910. The majority opinion, given by Justice Day, held that while Congress may have intended the law to prohibit only traffic in women for pecuniary gain, its plain terms include interdiction of their transportation "for any other immoral purpose." If it was not so intended, the majority said, it was Congress' function—not the court's— to amend the law. Whether the law makes "accomplices" of women involved in personal escapades was not definitely decided by the court, but their testimony against men indicted was upheld as permissible. Wider scope in enforcing the law is now open to the Department of Justice, which contended for the broader interpretation.

Senator Jones of Washington has introduced a most comprehensive amendment to the corrupt practices bill that would bar any person, either directly or indirectly identified with the liquor interest, from contributing to any political campaign committee anything of value, or paying any sum of money whatsoever to be used for political purposes.

For three weeks the Department of Justice has been carrying on a "probe" investigation of the working of the District of Columbia excise board. The chief of the bureau hopes to finish his examination of witnesses this week. Just what the Department of Justice is seeking to ascertain has not been divulged, but the laxity of the excise board has been such as to cause almost universal condemnation and a letting in of light, we are sure, will bring relief.

Weighty Hand of Law Laid Upon Notorious Indian Bootlegger

An Indian by the name of William J. Creekmore, known as the "King of Bootleggers," of Oklahoma, who has long defied and evaded the law, his influence being so great that local and state authorities were unable to apprehend him, has at last been caught in the meshes of the law. He has recently been sentenced to the penitentiary at Fort Leavenworth, Kansas. One of his attorneys has been in Washington working every known device to stay the sentence. The case was brought to the Supreme Court of the United States and January 8 this, the last court, decided not to grant the petition to open the case. As a result of this action this noted criminal of the entire southwest will feel the weighty hand of the law, which he has so long defied, resting upon him. Let all lawbreakers take warning! The liquor traffic is doomed. "Those who seek to break the law shall perish by the law."

Washington has been stirred to its depths over the Lawson investigation concerning a "leak," whereby, it is said, numerous parties were thus enabled to buy stocks in Wall Street to their great personal advantage. At the first hearing before the Committee on Rules in the House of Representatives, Mr. Lawson, who had been summoned from Boston, positively refused to give any names, but intimated that he would do so if an investigation was held. He was allowed to depart and the committee adjourned. The House, however, demanded that Lawson be again summoned and forced to give names and information of all he had boasted of knowing, or take the consequences and go to jail. The scenes in the large caucus room of the House office building, where the hearings are held, have been most dramatic. The room has been crowded, hundreds being unable to get within hearing distance. The Committee on Rules occupied chairs on a raised platform. A long table in front was filled with reporters, the witness stand being at the right of the chairman. Mr. Lawson, nervous and evidently realizing his position very keenly, answered the questions propounded him by the chairman, Hon. Robert L. Henry of Texas. He was asked first to tell the name of the Congressman who had told him of a Cabinet officer, a member of Congress and a banker, said to have been connected with the "leak," also the names of others involved. He hesitated, then replied, "The name of the Congressman is the chairman of this committee, Hon. Robert L. Henry of Texas." He then mentioned other prominent names, which came as an explosion. Later Mr. Henry left his seat and, under oath, denied in the most emphatic manner that he had had any such information to impart or had given Mr. Lawson the names mentioned. Mr. Lawson then shouted, "I will make good every statement I have made."

NATIONAL PROHIBITION MEASURES BEFORE CONGRESS

1. Sheppard-Gallinger-Webb-Smith Resolution for National Prohibition Amendment. (Favorably reported by the Judiciary Committees of both Houses.)
2. Sheppard District of Columbia Prohibition bill. (Passed by the Senate. It now goes to the House.)
3. Randall bill to exclude liquor advertisements from mails. (Favorably reported to both Houses.)
4. Alaska Prohibition Bill, to ratify action of people at November 7 election.
5. Gronna prohibition bill for Hawaii. (Favorably reported to Senate.)
6. Gronna prohibition amendment for Porto Rico. (To be offered when Porto Rico bill comes up in Senate.)

For days the hearing has been in progress, the excitement growing more and more intense. This unexpected demand on the time of the Committee on Rules, whose members are chairmen of other committees, will have a strong tendency to retard legislation. There is a movement under way to hold night sessions and this will hurry things along.

The Committee on Territories, having the questions of Alaska and Hawaii under consideration, has been meeting almost daily, but up to this date, January 19, has come to no decision. There certainly never could be a place or a mode of procedure more soul-taxing and where one's faith and courage are put to so supreme a test as in dealing with Congress along legislative lines. I have seen it so often. Persons come to Washington full of hope and expectancy, believing their bills will go through without delay, but many unlooked for obstacles are in the way; "no quorum" of the committee and many other hindrances blocking the way until one loses heart.

Where to Send for Copies of Supreme Court Decision on Webb-Kenyon Law

There have been so many requests for the opinion of the Supreme Court on the Webb-Kenyon law it is to be printed as a Senate document and those desiring a copy should write one of their United States Senators, asking him to forward it to their home address. Write your signature and the name of town or city and street address clearly, not forgetting to give name of state.

The death of Admiral George Dewey is felt very keenly throughout official Washington. The President sent a special message to Congress announcing the death of the Spanish War hero. The message recounts the sixty-two years of active service for his country, beginning with his naval career as a midshipman in 1854 and closing his long, useful life as Admiral of the Navy, this position having been accorded him by special Act of Congress. The message closed with the words, "The people of the government of the United States will always rejoice to perpetuate his name in all honor and affection."

Secretary Daniels of the Navy has ordered all flags in navy yards and on all United States ships over the world placed at half-mast until after the funeral, to be held in the rotunda of the Capitol Saturday forenoon, January 20. The Secretary also ordered each service ship afloat to fire an admiral's salute of nineteen guns at noon on Saturday. The highest public honor that can be given will be rendered. The President and his Cabinet will attend. Congress will recess during the obsequies, and both Houses will attend in a body. The Supreme Court, the Diplomatic Corps and many other noted bodies of men will meet in that world-famed spot, where the bodies of Lincoln, Garfield and McKinley have rested, to do honor to this hero.

The Day of Prayer in Washington

January 18, National W. C. T. U. day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition, was observed in Washington by an all-day meeting held in the First Congregational church, Mrs. Emma S. Shelton, president of the District of Columbia W. C. T. U., presiding. The meeting began at ten a. m. and continued without intermission until nearly five p. m. Twelve denominations were represented by as many clergymen, and eight organizations by their leaders. Miss Gordon was present part of the day and spoke briefly during the W. C. T. U. hour. She enjoyed listening to the stirring words of the pastors of different churches, all commending the work of the W. C. T. U., and they were a unit in their desire for prohibition for the District and the nation.

N. W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll. Washington, D. C., January 19, 1917

LEGISLATIVE VICTORIES

WYOMING

The Gardner bill, providing for the submission to the people in 1918 of a state-wide prohibition amendment, has been unanimously passed by both houses of the Wyoming legislature. Governor Kendrick has announced that he will sign the bill.

IOWA

A bill providing for the submission of a state-wide prohibition amendment has passed the senate of the Iowa legislature by a vote of 45 to 3. This measure was passed by the last legislature and if approved by the lower house insures submission to the people.

NORTH DAKOTA

The first bills to pass both houses of the North Dakota legislature were two equal suffrage measures, one similar to the Illinois law, granting limited suffrage to women and becoming effective July 1, 1917; the other, a constitutional amendment, which must pass another legislature before going to the people.

CANADIAN GOVERNMENT ASKED TO ENACT PROHIBITION LAW

Two demands for complete suppression of the liquor traffic in Canada during the war and for three years after its close were made upon Premier Borden recently, the first by men representing temperance associations throughout the country, the second by the women of Canada.

WYOMING MUST MOVE INTO LINE WITH ITS DRY NEIGHBORS

Governor Kendrick of Wyoming says: "Within the last decade, there has been a tremendous reversal of opinion throughout our country upon the economic aspects of the liquor traffic. There has never been any question as to the moral issues involved, nor as to the desirability of prohibition from that standpoint. But the new angle from which the traffic has been attacked has developed a veritable wave of negative sentiment, until today Wyoming stands in a vast dry area as the one state which permits the sale of intoxicants with little or no restriction. In view of the many petitions presented to the legislature two years ago and the great interest manifested by the people on the question during the last election, I am confident that there is a growing conviction in the minds of the people of Wyoming, that the time has come for the state to move into line with her neighbors. Therefore, I earnestly favor early action on the part of the legislature at this session which will afford the citizens of the state an opportunity to vote upon this question."

BREWERY SOLD BECAUSE OF LAW VIOLATION

The plant of the Lone Star Brewing company of San Antonio, Tex., was sold at auction from the courthouse steps recently in compliance with the court order taking away the charter of the company for violating the state laws by contributing to political campaign funds.

NO PRISONERS—COW GOES UNMILKED

The startling effects of prohibition in Moorhead, Minn., were acutely felt on a recent occasion, when for the first time in twenty-one years there was not a prisoner in the county jail, and therefore no one to milk the county's cow. It was necessary for the sheriff to secure a deputy to perform this task.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska

SENATOR SHEPPARD EXPRESSES APPRECIATION OF WORK OF W. C. T. U.

The following letter very recently received by our National president shows the value placed by our representatives in both houses of Congress on the work of the W. C. T. U.:

United States Senate, Jan. 13, 1917.

Dear Miss Gordon:

I thank you more than I can express for your congratulations on the success of my bill in the Senate for prohibition in the District of Columbia. The bill now goes to the House where the prospect is exceedingly promising.

I wish to thank you and your great organization for the magnificent work you are doing for prohibition in all phases, state and national.

With all good wishes, I am,

Yours very sincerely,

(Signed) Morris Sheppard

LABOR JOURNAL ENDORSES PROHIBITION

The Allentown (Pa.) Labor Herald, heretofore a conspicuous defender of the liquor trade, has announced a change of heart as concerns the prohibition movement. The front page of a recent number contains a double column article setting forth the importance of the national prohibition movement, and an editorial says:

"We have fought against local option and prohibition until, like old St. Paul fighting Christianity, we have had our eyes opened and found that we were on the wrong side. And we have no hesitancy in saying that since we have found out 'where we are at,' we intend to use the future to remedy any mistake we have made in the past, and rectify, if possible, any harm that we have done."

GOVERNOR WILLIS PLEADS FOR PROHIBITION AS HE GOES OUT OF OFFICE

The last official act of retiring Governor Frank B. Willis of Ohio, before handing to Governor Cox his commission of office, was an address in which he declared for state-wide prohibition and woman suffrage. In admitting that he had failed during his term of office in abolishing the saloons of Ohio, Mr. Willis said:

"But the sovereign people can and will soon succeed where individuals and parties have failed, and I am ready now, as I have been in the past, to join with the moral forces of this state and aid in this reform. The saloons can be put out of politics by putting them out of business. I have earnestly tried to get the saloon out of politics and have failed, but the sovereign people will succeed where individuals and parties have failed. They can get the saloons out of politics permanently by putting them out of business in Ohio and I am ready to aid in this reform."

OHIO NEWSPAPERS BAR LIQUOR ADVERTISEMENTS

In view of the approaching state-wide prohibition campaign in Ohio the action of the Ohio State Journal, the Columbus Dispatch and the Newark Advocate in discontinuing liquor advertisements in their columns is particularly encouraging.

FRANCE BARS STRONG DRINK FROM ZONE HELD BY ARMY

Traffic in spirituous liquors has been prohibited by the French military authorities in the zone occupied by the army. Natural wines, beers and cider are not affected.

FRANCES WILLARD'S WIDENING WAY

ELIZABETH P. GORDON

Frances Willard loved folks. With rare magnetic power she reached out to them and drew them to her. She was genuinely human and yet a spiritual dynamo. With refreshing naiveté, spontaneity and delightful wit she charmed people of all ages and conditions. To her, men were brothers, women, sisters, and to young people she was an "elder (ly) sister." Under her magic spell cold, selfish people became responsive and weak wills grew strong. She was a marvelous personality, and because of this her life work was extraordinary. She was one of the greatest women of the nineteenth century.

A Seer and an Organizer

Frances Willard was possessed by a world vision. There were no sky or ocean boundaries to her ever-broadening thought. The people of all lands were her neighbors—the world one great home. In her extensive travels abroad, early in life, she sorrowfully saw the pitiful estate of thousands of women who had no hope in life as did their fathers, brothers and sons. "Why, don't you understand," said an Italian girl seventeen years old to Miss Willard, "I completed my education a year ago. I tell you, Signorina, we have but one vocation. If a girl isn't married she stays in the house and, oh, I do so long to get out into the world." "How often," Miss Willard said, on her return to this country, "have tears blurred the grievous scene as I have watched dogs and women fastened side by side to carts laden with merchandise or a cow and a woman yoked to a plow, and I have felt so helpless; but when my heart was aching, a voice would whisper to me, 'Not to these, but to the dear girls of your home shall you be sent and some day the broader channels of their lives shall send streams of healing even to these far-off shores.'"

Thoughts of these "streams of healing," pent up in Miss Willard's compassionate soul, found adequate expression when as president of the National W. C. T. U. she founded, in 1883, the World's W. C. T. U.; and now a half million women are factors in fulfilling her long-cherished desire to make "the world wider for women and more homelike for humanity." As dean of women and a professor in Northwestern University, Frances Willard had been a remarkable educator who, as one of her young men students said, "made a garden of the classroom." It was inevitable that this national and international leader, now a teacher in the world-university, should cause the fragrant blossom of love to grow—the love "that worketh no ill to his neighbor."

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union today owes largely to Frances Willard the organization plans that are carried on in every state and territory of our country and in over forty nations federated in the World's W. C. T. U. Gifted with a rare imagination, "that searchlight of the soul," Miss Willard had also a genius for constructive detail seldom equalled. Professor James of Harvard College has said that it is not the possession of one fine quality alone, but the "fusion of many strong characteristics" that makes "the completely significant life." Frances Willard was an embodiment of this truth. She had dogged endurance as well as ideal aspirations. With inherited pluck and a Willard's (Will-Hard's) will she wrought out her world vision.

Pioneer Trips

In one year, 1882-1883, Frances Willard and Anna Gordon visited all the large cities and towns of the country organizing state and local unions. Always Miss Willard averred that without Anna Gordon's devotion, versatility and aid in speaking, she could not have carried out so successfully her program of organization. What wonderful trips they had in the twenty-one years of comradeship, and into how many families and churches they carried the thought that "only the Golden Rule of Christ can bring the Golden Age of man." How many hardships they happily endured. The principles of total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the state and nation were from the first reiterated; also the plans for membership and "dry" campaigns, for petition work, and for legislative and congressional hearings and bills. Frances Willard was the pioneer in all these lines. It was she who first asked for scientific temperance instruction in the public schools and for quarterly temperance lessons in the Sunday schools. She always emphasized the importance of the Loyal Temperance Legion. "Everything," she said, "has its temperance aspect, and with that we are to deal;" and so she inaugurated the departmental plan of work.

Frances E. Willard

In her appeals for new recruits, Miss Willard, after speaking of the thorough organization of the legalized liquor traffic, was wont to say, illustrating her remarks with her own right hand, "The fingers alone are almost useless, but correlated into a fist they are formidable. We must meet the organized liquor traffic with organized mother-love." Then in her most persuasive tones she would say, "Won't you join us? It is so much easier taking hold of hands." In Frances Willard's brain was stored the best thought of the ages. The most influential magazines welcomed her articles, for she was at home with poets and authors as well as with the leaders of reform. To the listener, what a revelation of her acumen was one of her delightful talks with an influential man or woman who was her intellectual peer and also sympathetic with her vision. "The hospitality I desire most of all," she often said, "is the hospitality for ideas." Thousands of women owe to her a larger outlook on life. She saw their latent abilities and encouraged them to unlock their hidden powers.

Notable Events

Scenes which occurred all along in Frances Willard's widening way vividly pass before the mind of the writer. They would make a film of wondrous interest. How brave and altogether winning and womanly she was as she stood before one of her first southern audiences and asked them to unite in the peaceful war for God and home and native land! At Bar Harbor while gazing on the majestic views of ocean and mountain scenery, Frances Willard caused her companions to realize the exceeding beauty of the land unseen—the land not far away; and the divine gift of unending life.

"My Life a Vow"

Amid the splendors of Eastnor Castle she declared her motto to be: "My life a vow," and with Anna Gordon and Lady Henry Somerset made more intensive the work of the World's W. C. T. U. At the large mass meetings in London's famous halls, before Edinburgh's classic audiences, in Wales where the tempted men formed a large part of the audience, in Fanueil Hall, Boston, the "cradle of liberty," which for the first time was rocked by women, and where, in 1891, the first delegated convention of the World's W. C. T. U. was held and the world's petition festooned the interior of the historic edifice, in Toronto (1897) where the fourth World's W. C. T. U. convention assembled and one thousand children sang the prophetic song, "Saloons, Saloons, Saloons Must Go," Frances Willard kindled a conscience in the hearts of her hearers and placed the Woman's Christian Temperance Union on the map of the world.

During the visit of Pundita Ramabai to this country, she and Miss Willard, attending a convention in Tremont Temple, Boston, clasped hands over the open Bible while Joseph Cook impressively declared, "This is prophetic of the time when the women of the Orient and the Occident will unite for the destruction of the liquor traffic, the most dangerous enemy of the home, the church, the state and the world."

What a fitting tribute to her memory is the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund! Through it she still lives, for, because of its wide ministrations, her blessed work continues. An intimate literary friend said to Frances Willard after she had been for a few years connected with the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, "Frances, you ought to come back into the educational life, for that is where you belong." Half playfully, Frances Willard instantly replied, "I am now in a great educational work. You may walk on the sidewalk in your high-heeled slippers if you please; but I am going in the middle of the road, in the dust and the dirt with the W. C. T. U. as long as I live!" And so she did.

Won't You Join Us?

Frances Willard's memory and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union have been highly honored by the state of Illinois and the government of the United States. Thousands see in Frances Willard's heroic statue, standing with those of distinguished statesmen and generals under the dome of the nation's Capitol, a prophecy of the protection of the home, and of the glad day when through National Constitutional Prohibition our nation shall be free from the thraldom of the liquor traffic. Today, allied temperance forces are marching side by side with the white ribbon women. May the women of the churches and clubs in all the states hear the call to come to the front. Over half the territory of the country is now under prohibition and twenty-three states are dry. Frances Willard, through the white ribbon hosts, is still saying, "Won't you join us? It is so much easier taking hold of hands." A hearty favorable response to this appeal would send dismay into the ranks of the brewers and distillers and would speedily make the ever-widening way of Frances Willard and her comrades a joyful, victorious way.

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY

The articles published in this issue should create enthusiasm for the work of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The commemorative service should not be one of sadness but of sacred joy. It should not only commemorate the beautiful life and achievements of the founder of the World's W. C. T. U., but should win thousands of new members and thousands of dollars for the Memorial Fund. The program outlined suggests articles which may be used, each union selecting for itself the desired material.—EDITOR.

THE FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND

FRANCES P. PARKS, National Corresponding Secretary

Gifts and benefactions in the United States set a new mark in 1916. Some estimates put the amount of donations and bequests to charity, educational and religious institutions and to public welfare in general, at nearly a billion dollars. Relief for war sufferers made a large item. All records were broken by the receipts of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Over a half-million dollars was expended upon work among our troops on the Mexican border. There were notable gifts and bequests by individuals. Against the grand total of this beneficence the ten thousand dollars received for the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund appears pitifully small and inadequate to meet the crying needs and great opportunities of today. Nothing less than marvelous, however, is the vast amount of good that has been done the past year by a careful expenditure of small sums, always for some special need which could not otherwise have been met. This fund was made to go a long way, even from Alaska to Porto Rico, from California to Vermont, everywhere fulfilling its peculiar mission of expanding the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

The Growing Importance of the Fund

As history is made, as the truth about alcohol unfolds, and the vision of a country redeemed from its domination grows clearer, demands increase, opportunities multiply. "Do everything" means each year a little more than it meant last year. The Memorial Fund is blessed because it blesses the giver and the receiver. It should have a prominent place on the February program of every one of our nearly twenty thousand local unions. The public should be told of the influence of this Fund on public welfare and asked to give largely to it this year.

In 1916, twenty-three states in all had appropriations from the Memorial Fund, most of them being truly missionary territory. Sometimes, however, exigencies call for special means. Comparing the story, as told in this issue of THE UNION SIGNAL, of the great missionary tours of Frances Willard and Anna Gordon in 1882-3, with the story told by the map of the organized field in 1916, as it appears on the cover page, it will be seen that some of the states organized more than thirty years ago continue in our list of missionary states. Sparsely settled, largely by foreigners, with a shifting population, with excessive transportation charges, Nevada, Arizona, Idaho, Utah, Montana, South Dakota, Wyoming and New Mexico have not a membership large enough to make the dues equal the expense of running the state machinery. When special tasks are shouldered by the courageous leaders in these states, the wherewithal to meet actual expenses must be supplied from the Memorial Fund. Time and talent are given without money and without price by these blessed white ribboners and their loyal followers of the rank and file.

There is also a large section of the South where peculiar conditions obstruct the way and where financial aid must each year be extended to keep the state organizations abreast of the times in W. C. T. U. endeavor. It has been held as out of the question for these states of small membership to have a fair show with the eastern and middle western states, which have large populations and easy and inexpensive transportation, conditions which have made possible multiplied unions and large memberships. But Montana narrowly missed getting the prize banner won in 1916 by Indiana for the largest net gain in membership, and North Idaho carried off the first prize for pro rata gain. What may prove even more surprising, a comparison of the number of women in the state (census 1910) with the membership of the W. C. T. U. puts Montana and Wyoming in the class with Ohio, with her big membership of over 40,000. This fact should give zest to the news that Wyoming is entering upon a prohibition campaign. In all the states thousands of women await our call to join hands with us in the final effort to overthrow John Barleycorn. Even where our membership is greatest, as in New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, there is still much territory untouched. Pennsylvania is the only state that shows a local union in every county on the "Organization Map." In many states, this call must be voiced by brave couriers sent out "in memory of" the greatest of organizers, Frances Willard. Through the Memorial Fund her work goes on, the circle of her influence grows wider and wider.

"A DREAMER AND A DOER"

"Behold, a dreamer cometh?" Yes, a Seer!—
One who in vision rapt foresaw this wide,
God-smitten earth, borne on resistless tide
Of spirit forces to the golden year;
A world transfigured to a luminous sphere,
By sun-bright deeds and natures glorified;
A home-like world, so fair it may abide
His coming—the heart-searcher's—without fear.

A dreamer? Yes: but ah! a doer, too,—
Jeanne D'Arc of later time and fairer fame,
In moral realms she conquered; to the Blue
Her soul unfettered rose, 'mid loud acclaim:
"To lead a mighty host to see and do,"
Sang angel choirs, "behold, this dreamer came!"

—Ella Gilbert Ives.

The last year was one of extended service on the part of this Fund. In both organization and campaign fields it found new enterprises to forward. All organizing and campaign work in Alaska has been financed by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The "tale of twenty-three prohibition states," so frequently repeated these happy days, always ends with—"and Alaska." We have every reason to believe that Congress will ratify the prohibition vote of the territory of November 7. This notable victory may reasonably be credited, in large part, to a campaign made possible by the Memorial Fund. Porto Rico has been added to the sisterhood of states by a liberal use of this fund the past year. From the missionary group Wyoming moves into the limelight as a prohibition campaign state and Texas, New Mexico and Nevada confidently expect to join her in a few days. These states will ask largely of the Memorial Fund for their 1917 campaigns, for they have not in their treasuries money enough to buy a sling with which to hurl a stone.

As to what the Memorial Fund meant to the winning states—"and Alaska" in 1916, let Nebraska speak for the group:

How the Fund Helped in Nebraska

"At the time of the organization of the Nebraska Dry Federation, the W. C. T. U. was assigned the management of the literature of the campaign, with carte blanche in the matter of selection and expenditures. Material was sought from literally every source. Wherever prohibition literature is published, there went requests for samples, and the returns were indeed interesting. All classes of literature were found, the out-of-date, up-to-date, aggressive, voluminous, concise, that appealing to the student, and that which must be read as a man runs. All this had to be classified and a time and place found for such as was applicable in the present emergency. It is sufficient to say that no publishing house offered a line more pertinent and attractive than our own, and the fact that the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund made possible a duplication of the state order was a constant source of gratification. No other house offered a better assortment of literature, scarcely any comparing with it. It was, without exception, a pronouncement against the liquor traffic made upon the authority of names well known in letters, in science, or in economics, and it was put up in a style that commended it to lovers of good print. We supplied thousands of pages to the chairmen of county federations, and their commendation was no less enthusiastic than that of our own women. Later in the campaign, much of our literature was issued at home, material from abroad being often used, and into its heading or body some flavor of our own state's condition being injected. The poster campaign in Nebraska was a great one. Thousands of the National W. C. T. U. posters were used, and were so greatly appreciated that the appeal was insistent for a greater variety. In vain did we call attention to the fact that commercial billboards were not frequently changed. Back would come the answer, 'Yes, but these are so full of good arguments that we must have yet other kinds.' Experience has proved to us that for the ordinary reader, other than the student, the brief pages, in good sized type, that will catch the eye and leave its message before the man is scarcely aware, is the best campaign material. By a renewed loyalty to the Memorial Fund, Nebraska will from henceforth express her appreciation of the assistance given her by Mother National."

To the states where victory is deferred, California, Missouri and Maryland, similar aid was offered and accepted and is available in the continuation of their campaigns.

(Continued on Page Ten)

THE W. C. T. U. A MIGHTY FACTOR IN NEBRASKA'S TRIUMPH

MAMIE M. CLAFLIN, President Nebraska W. C. T. U.

It would be a difficult matter to relate the part the W. C. T. U. had in bringing prohibition to Nebraska, without harking back more than forty years to the time when the Crusade mothers had a vision of a state redeemed from the protected devastation of the saloon. Never since the birth of the state union has a convention been held which did not contemplate this "good, glad day," but it was the faith of the seer, and the promises of the Almighty, and not often the hopeful signs of the passing years, which evoked such a prophecy.

As letters filled with reminiscences and offering congratulation arrive from the ends of the earth, we realize anew that Nebraska was not "dry cleaned" in a day. Now that victory has come, credit is due in no greater degree to those who have borne the heat and the burden of the campaign than to those who in pioneer days toiled, and prayed, and supported the fundamental work, without the encouragement and the inspiration which now characterize the movement. They were the real heroines.

For the past ten years the women, if not always the men, have seen the glint of victory in the skies. During this time there have been battles for statutory prohibition, for county option and suffrage, with literally hundreds of local conflicts, all seasoning the prohibition soldiers for the final Waterloo against the saloon system. During the days of struggle, the urgent need of a large membership was persistently pressed home. The W. C. T. U., as the only organization with spiritual nucleus in hundreds of communities, held the strategic position. When other societies began to appeal for the loan of our constituency, our machinery, we learned, as we had not before, the force of this universal possession of the ground. We, therefore, gave particular attention to "the lengthening of our cords and the strengthening of our stakes" until our membership had increased largely when the campaign got under way.

In the early days of 1916 we often heard the expression, "when the campaign begins," or were asked when some special phase of the campaign, the petition work for instance, or the speakers' whirlwind tour (for our work was arranged methodically) would start. We knew, though we did not always say it, that the foundations of all our campaign work were laid long ago, almost antedating the memory of any now engaged in the great reform. Then was the beginning made.

As has before been stated in THE UNION SIGNAL, the W. C. T. U. had charge of the initiative petition, and so thoroughly did the local and county forces carry forward that great work that nearly twice as many names as were required were subscribed. Let it be said that there is no better means of influencing public opinion than the circulation of petitions. It is tedious work, to be sure, but it gives easy, gracious, and early approach to voters who otherwise would be difficult to reach. It is also true that a vote made early in the campaign is worth many gained later.

County and local workers vied with each other in their efforts to thoroughly seed the field with temperance literature. Great care was taken in its selection, not only by the state union—we frequently heard old workers say they did not know it was possible to bring together such an assortment as we had—but by the literature experts of county and local unions who knew exactly what was desirable in their respective localities.

The educational field had long been tilled. For years the essay contest work had been required as a part of the English course in many of our largest high schools. This made it easy to stress it in the grades. Colleges and universities fell in line splendidly, and this question, which so surely transcended all others in politics, became the leading one in the schools. One principal said to me shortly before the vote was taken: "There is a topic that is ever uppermost among us, that is, the election. I have told my teachers not to hold a tight rein, for it is the most important question everywhere just now." The month of October was essay time throughout the state. Thousands of themes were written and the effect on the voter will never be known; but we are assured it was not inconsiderable. In several counties contest work was done in nearly every school; in one, Rock county, not a district failed to report a contest. The final round-up at the county seat, resulted in the awarding of several gold medals, the organization of a good union with the county superintendent of schools, one of the most expert literature users we had, as president. We had first hand evidence that votes were made by these very contests.

Nebraska was one of the first states to make much of the medal contest, and in this campaign it became an important factor. Naturally, the silver medal contests were the most common and in community after community they made votes and prodded inactive workers to their duty. A grand diamond medal contest at the state fair was the topic of the season and was attended literally by thousands.

The press was one of our strongest forces and when, in July, the Prosperity Liquor League came out with glaring advertisements in as many papers as could be subserved by them (with an advance agent in charge at a salary of $1,000 per week) it roused the slothful to interest as nothing else had done. Hundreds of papers would not sell the liquorites space, but others allowed campaigns of falsehood and vituperation, that have only been approached in lack of veracity by Ananias of old, to be begun in their columns. Immediately came a demand for replies which the W. C. T. U. undertook to supply. We prepared advertisements, giving matter, form, size and probable price, and sent them to the local unions with advice that they secure space in every paper possible. Very often the editor, who was not

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

THE MICHIGAN WAY

FORTY-TWO YEARS OF WHITE RIBBON ACTIVITY THE SECRET OF SUCCESS

NORMA MUDGE, Corresponding Secretary Michigan W. C. T. U.

Organized in 1874, the white ribbon women of Michigan have, during all these years, been the faithful tillers and cultivators of the soil of public sentiment without which the abundant harvest of November 7, 1916, would have been impossible.

Under the leadership and following the plan of the state president, Mrs. E. L. Calkins, the women of many of the counties were especially organized for campaign work. The W. C. T. U. was one of over twenty organizations which, early in the campaign, were banded together for a "Dry Michigan." At first some of the leaders thought it would be best to put others than W. C. T. U. women into official positions in these county organizations, evidently believing that our women would work anyway, but it was soon discovered that the women who were interested, who went ahead and undertook things, who took hold and pushed long and hard, were members of the W. C. T. U. In fact, an expression was taken at the first county rally held, to see how many of those present did not "belong," and out of an audience of about fifty only three arose. This ratio held good in the majority of the counties. The women who were present not only belonged but many of them were subscribers to the state paper.

So complete is the chain which reaches from the state on down through the district, county and local unions to the individual workers that a plan once started, a method of reaching and educating the people once tried, was soon spreading out over the state as it could only have done through such close organization.

New unions were organized, new members gained, millions of pages of literature distributed and meetings held in churches, homes, halls, factories, on the streets, any place where a foothold could be found. Of course, it was not all smooth sailing, and there were some things that were discouraging, but "undauntedness" was ground right into those women by their long years of effort and they moved forward as though there were no obstacles to be met, and with the confidence that victory must crown their labor. Permeating every inch of their beings and pervading every act was a mighty faith in God and a purpose in prayer that was unfailing.

Definite Things

The state paper was pressed into service; the size, but not the price increased; the subscription list was practically doubled, and hundreds of extra copies were printed and put into the hands of local workers for free distribution. The free literature and thousands of free copies of THE UNION SIGNAL offered by "Mother National" were well looked after and widely distributed.

Each member was asked to solicit at least a quarter of a dollar from as many voters as possible and to contribute a "penny a day" for a month. This, together with some subscriptions, started and maintained a campaign fund which enabled the state organization to have thousands of leaflets printed for free distribution to the local unions.

State, district, county and local workers spent much time in the field, some of them serving continuously. L. T. L.'s and Young Campaigners were organized and drilled. Window displays showed the amount of groceries and other commodities that could be bought with the money spent for beer. Campaign songs were sung on the streets by women who never before had done such a thing. Posters were displayed, and if mutilated or destroyed, new ones were promptly put in their places. Letters and postals were written; prohibition stickers were used and prayer meetings held. It might be easier to tell what the W. C. T. U. members did not do, rather than what they did. In fact, it is probable that no one person knows it all or ever will until the "books" are opened and the records read.

W. C. T. U. A MOST DISTURBING ELEMENT TO ENEMIES OF PROHIBITION

ADRIANNA HUNGERFORD, President Colorado W. C. T. U.

The organized, systematic, prayerful work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had a great part in winning the 85,789 majority against the beer amendment in Colorado last fall. State W. C. T. U. headquarters was in close touch with every local union; recommendations received quick response in action and supplies were used eagerly and judiciously. The public sentiment created in the state-wide campaigns of 1912 and 1914, and the help of individuals in far away sparsely settled places, who were ready to respond with service, counted for success.

It was through the W. C. T. U. that every school house and country church in many counties was reached with speakers and every political rally with literature. Sections of counties were assigned to local unions for individual work, distribution of literature and posting the posters. The mail carried the truth to voters who could not be reached by other methods. One district W. C. T. U., composed of three large counties, prepared pennant-shaped posters of heavy paper, bearing the words, "Beer is Booze —Vote No," with which they decorated posts and fences on highways and byways.

The determination and thorough work of trained white-ribbon campaigners in difficult places is illustrated by the experience of one of our women who lives far away from a railroad. She drove day after day from daylight until dark, "with two good strong horses and a light buggy, going back to the crossroads, over the mountains to the main traveled roads, then into the almost unreachable places where people live in this part of the state." She reported that "one old boozer said he was convinced that 'beer is booze,' for he had seen so many old posters, that he was mighty near drunk —it made his head swim to see them in every direction."

The detail work in nearly all the cities and towns was in charge of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. Denver white ribboners had entire supervision of that city. A house-to-house canvass was made, leaflets given at every home, some sections were visited more than once, and doubtful voters were followed up through the mails with convincing literature. Our members were successful in interesting many Capitol Hill women, winning their influence, votes and funds, and making possible some large parlor meetings in the beautiful homes of that district. Anti-beer talks were also given in strictly political women's meetings.

Publicity was a serious problem. The city papers were largely neutral. Some outside newspapers were used to splendid advantage. One woman filled space in the papers every day for weeks. Several unions paid for advertising space and were alert in having published truthful, spectacular statements. The state organization published for free distribution two kinds of leaflets, totalling 275,000. These were generally used as the text of speakers who talked on the provisions of the proposed amendment and the results if it were adopted. The National's splendid "beer" leaflets, to the number of 111,000, educated citizens on every phase of that question and furnished material for many addresses. One thousand five hundred posters on "beer" and 500 felt pennants, "Beer is Booze—Vote No," in addition to hundreds of other posters, some of them original, all supplied by district and local unions, warned the people that Colorado's constitution was in danger of being amended with a provision containing a falsehood.

The state, district and local unions made plans and executed them, canvassed, did personal work, dated speakers, conducted meetings, provided campaign materials, secured funds and worked on election day. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is the most disturbing element to the enemies of prohibition. On the number, strength and loyalty of the local organizations depends the measure of success attained. Every temperance woman enlisted in the ranks of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union would insure a victory for state and national prohibition and hasten the triumph of the world-wide anti-alcohol movement.

PREPAREDNESS FOR A HOLY WAR

W. C. T. U. PLANS AND METHODS THE FOUNDATION STONES OF VICTORY IN WASHINGTON

MARGARET B. PLATT

In the light of present day events it may seem like repeating the merest platitude to remark that the value of preparedness can scarcely be overestimated, and in no field is this more surely true than in that of moral reform. The assembling of necessary material and the organization of correlated elements are absolutely essential to success. It was not a sudden onslaught of untrained forces that won the home protection war in the state of Washington but the thirty years of preparatory labor, culminating in a union of all forces for one supreme fight for the mastery over the common foe of all.

The wisdom and importance of the Frances E. Willard "Do Everything" policy have been amply indicated by results. Through its many-voiced calls there were recruited and organized into one superb body, women of all creeds and nationalities, of varied interests and diverse training, whose individual aspirations, hopes, ambitions or longings were limited by meager lines or overleaped customary boundaries; but by that mystic tie that binds the mother hearts of the universe and causes each to beat a swift response to the other's woe or weal, this vast multitude of women, each but a puny atom in her own strength, was welded into one dauntless army that, under God, dared challenge the right of way of the hoariest wrongs of ages. Through this organization, in the wisdom and providence of God, was done the seed-sowing whose harvest is being garnered in these later years, and whose value is reckoned on the fast whitening map which year by year adds to its whiteness another and another and another state.

In Washington the struggle for preparedness took the form of intensive organization and a continual educational campaign that carried the truth about alcohol into the remotest hamlets of the state. Local unions were planted wherever enough women could be found to make organization possible by accepting the offices, paying dues and making even a perfunctory effort to stand as an educational factor in the community. Sometimes these unions promptly died but the remains were not allowed to rest in peace. They were resurrected, put upon their feet and urged to march on with the ever victorious army, and an infusion of new blood in the resurrection process gave new courage and better efficiency. Usually, however, the unions were composed of women of heroic souls who enlisted for life, and were willing to give, if need be, the last full measure of devotion to the cause they deemed so sacred and loved so well.

Every department was made subservient to the educational campaign for total abstinence and prohibition. "What my department can do to help bring prohibition," was one of the most frequent topics in institutes and conventions. Special endeavor was made to secure essay writing in the public schools, thus promoting the study of the relation of alcohol to health, efficiency, prosperity and good citizenship. Our enemies themselves testify that this bore fruit at the ballot box. Through the long chain of local unions, many small, but all possessing at least a few faithful eager workers, the systematic distribution of literature was carried on with persistent vigor. Nothing is easier to do and nothing bears more fruit proportionately. The value of THE UNION SIGNAL as a means of knowledge and inspiration was ever urged and splendid testimony can be presented concerning its worth as an educational factor in the fight against alcohol.

The machinery of a perfectly planned organization possessing adherents and followers in every section of the state and whose name was a household word, thus became the principal medium for the diffusion of intelligence concerning the fundamental reasons why alcoholic beverages should be abolished and so aroused and crystallized public sentiment against the liquor traffic that the abolition of the whole iniquitous business became the paramount issue in the state.

The W. C. T. U. was everywhere. The clergy recognized its excellence and gave it hearty support. No more helpful body of men than the clergy of West Washington ever cheered the hearts and aided the work of W. C. T. U. leaders. The writer will ever cherish with profound esteem the memory of the ministers and the business men who stood so loyally for the W. C. T. U. and did not hesitate in the one case to open their pulpits freely to our speakers, nor, in either case to be known as friends of the white ribboners and by word and gift maintain our case. God bless them! When the day at last arrived in which it seemed opportune to marshal all forces for the grand assault, the importance of our long years of preparation at once became evident. Men and women who had grown up under the training of white ribbon mothers were now voters. The prohibition of the liquor traffic was not to them a new subject. Some of them had in school days brought their mates to see the prohibition map that hung upon the wall at home. The subject had been discussed for years at the cradle side, at the dining table, in the mothers' meeting, the Sabbath school class, the pulpit, the club, the forum—everywhere. The psychological hour was at hand and

(Continued on Page Ten)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane
CIRCULATION MANAGER, Miss Addie A. Austin

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, January 25, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

MRS. HOGE PASSES CRISIS

We are happy to be able to report that Mrs. Sara H. Hoge, who has been critically ill with typhoid fever at a Washington (D. C.) hospital, is believed to have passed the crisis and is slowly improving.

JANUARY 18 IS GENERALLY OBSERVED

Reports received at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters indicate a wide-spread observance of National Constitutional Prohibition Day, January 18, as a day of prayer for our great cause. Let us follow up the interest and enthusiasm generated by these meetings with appeals to our fellow citizens to communicate with their Representatives and Senators, urging them to vote for our prohibition measures now before Congress.

THE CHALLENGE OF THE MAP

Last year the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U. and of the state organizations collaborated to make a survey of the organized field, county by county, state by state. At the W. C. T. U. headquarters of every state there was prepared a state map, with county lines well defined, and tiny stars indicating the location of the local unions and Young People's Branches. From these state maps there was made the large map of the United States, displayed at the National Convention at Indianapolis. This year it is proposed to indicate, by red pins, on each state map the location of all new unions and Branches, and finally to duplicate this information by the same method on a national map to be exhibited at the National Convention in Washington, D. C.

This organization map, pictured on the cover page this week, is marvelously interesting as a record of history, but is equally fascinating as a prophecy of what may and shall be. It shows the approximately 20,000 local organizations, centers of education, many of which have proved to be storm centers, sufficiently cyclonic in force to sweep from the community the legalized liquor traffic. Every one of these centers is a potential factor of immense importance in our work for National Constitutional Prohibition. In the light of the history, related in this issue, of the state-wide campaigns won in so large a measure through the agency of the W. C. T. U. machinery, one can easily believe that nothing is impossible of achievement by "organized mother love."

We suggest that every white ribboner post this map in some conspicuous place in her home as a reminder not only of the sacred past of the organization to which she is proud to belong, but of the privilege that is hers to help win recruits for our holy war and to aid in claiming for prohibition the great stretches of unorganized territory. Along what special lines can work be done to accomplish this end? By encouraging our own local unions to reach out and establish new organizations in adjacent territory; by doubling, trebling, quadrupling our membership, and by giving generously to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund.

Let the map be to every one of the half million members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union a challenge this year to invest in the cause more time, strength, talent and substance, that when the victory for National Constitutional Prohibition shall be realized, she may have the joy of the true patriot—the knowledge that she has had a definite part in making our nation safer and cleaner for the next generation.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAM FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY

Music—"The Triumph Song," page 5, "Popular Campaign Songs"
Scripture Reading
Response to Roll Call—Quotations from Frances E. Willard
Reading—"Frances Willard's Widening Way"
Poem—"A Dreamer and a Doer," page 5 of this issue
Reading—"The Frances Willard Memorial Fund," page 5 of this issue
Music—"Hark, the Temperance Bells," page 15, "Popular Campaign Songs"
Reading—"Christmas on Ellis Island"
Symposium—"Organized Mother Love a Factor in Campaigns," participated in by members of the local union. For material see articles in this number showing part played by W. C. T. U. in recent state-wide campaigns
Offering for Memorial Fund
Aaronic Benediction

MAKE THE CRY LOUDER

In its summary of the events of the past year Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular admits that "men in the liquor business have just cause to worry" for "now the cry for national prohibition is louder than ever before and the trade wonders where it will end."

The advocates of prohibition have long ago ceased to wonder, if indeed they ever did, "where it will end." To them the only unknown quantity in the equation is the exact date when there shall be added to the federal constitution an amendment providing for prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages. The liquorites are right. The cry for National Constitutional Prohibition is growing louder and louder. At first it was only the plaintive cry of a few grief-stricken mothers; today it is a mighty chorus of voices, from the church, the business world, and the common people.

In the exact ratio that this articulate demand for National prohibition reaches the ears of the members of Congress, will our cause progress. Every delivery of mail at the Nation's capital contains many letters from agents of the liquor interests to your Representatives and your Senators, urging them to work and vote against measures that will injure the liquor trade but will benefit society. Have you seen to it that in that same mail there are letters from you and your neighbors, friends, acquaintances and business associates, appealing to the better judgment of the men who make our laws, to vote for these beneficent laws?

Many times a day, telegraph messengers deliver to your Representatives and your Senators messages begging them to work and vote in the interests of the breweries and the distilleries. Have you used your efforts to have sent over the wires to your Congressmen and your Senators equally urgent appeals in as large numbers, to vote and work in the interests of the boys and girls of the land?

The members of the two houses of Congress who will decide these questions have been elected to represent your views, to stand for your principles, to protect your interests, to enact laws that will be to your highest advantage. Let them know by petitions, resolutions, letters and telegrams, that you expect them to work and vote for the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition, for the District Prohibition bill in the House of Representatives, and for the Randall Anti-Liquor Advertising bill. Delay not to do this before such action may be too late; and multiply your influence with Congress by getting your friends and associates to do likewise.

LIQUOR INTERESTS WELCOME DECISION (?)

One cannot help admiring the obstinate optimism of the liquor interests in the face of repeated defeats. They are now insisting that they "welcome the decision of the Supreme Court on the Webb-Kenyon law, as holding out a hope for the elimination of the movement for nation-wide prohibition."

Let the liquorites indulge in no such vain hope. It is true the decision does provide the protection for dry states which the advocates of prohibition have been demanding, but that is only one feature of the national program. National prohibition is needed as probably the speediest and most effective method of bringing the relief of freedom from saloons to those states in whose large cities the liquor interests are strongly entrenched.

This pronouncement of the Supreme Court gives assurance of a mighty impulse to prohibition sentiment. The states now dry will enact laws to perfect enforcement and thereby make possible a fair demonstration of the value of the prohibitory law. Other commonwealths that have been deterred from stepping across the line by the bugaboo, "Prohibition does not prohibit," will adopt the prohibition policy and thus be added to the states to be counted upon to ratify the action of Congress.

Survey of the States

Oregon

One joint memorial to Congress asking for the submission of the national prohibition amendment, and another, urging the passage of an anti-liquor advertising measure, passed the senate of the Oregon legislature and were ratified by the lower house.

North Dakota

Two suffrage measures have passed both the senate and house of the North Dakota legislature. One of the measures, modeled after the Illinois law, grants the vote to women on all offices except those provided in the constitution. The other provides for a constitutional amendment giving full suffrage. The former goes at once to Governor Frazier, and if approved by him becomes effective July 1. The constitutional measure must be acted upon by another legislature before it goes to the voters.

New Mexico

Governor E. C. de Baca of New Mexico, in his message to the legislature recommended for submission to the voters of the state the question of a prohibition amendment to the constitution.

Mississippi

Governor Bilbo of Mississippi is reported to have announced recently that he will call an extra session of the legislature in a short time to pass an absolute prohibition law.

Texas

Resolutions providing for the submission of the question of prohibition to the voters of the state have been introduced in both houses of the Texas legislature, notwithstanding the fact that Governor J. E. Ferguson made no mention of prohibition in his message to the legislature.

Indiana

A state-wide prohibition bill, approved by the Dry Federation, was introduced in both branches of the legislature of Indiana on January 12. A bill for woman suffrage was also introduced in the house. A bill prohibiting the selling of intoxicating liquor on trains has been reported favorably to the house.

Utah

There has been introduced in the Utah legislature a bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors in the state after August 1, 1917, and declaring that the possession of intoxicating liquors after that date within the boundaries of the state is a crime. To make the provision effective the bill declares that there shall be no property right in intoxicating liquors.

Washington

A measure to insure absolute prohibition in the state of Washington was urged by Governor Lister in his second inaugural address. The first business of the Washington legislature, after being organized, was to adopt a memorial endorsing national prohibition and recommending campaigns to submit to the states for ratification the prohibition amendment to the federal constitution.

Tennessee

Anti-liquor bills are holding the attention of the Tennessee legislature now in session. There seems to be a determined effort on the part of the legislature to rid the state entirely of the liquor evil, and in both houses probably there cannot be found more than a dozen men who will vote against any of the anti-liquor measures. The four measures under consideration are an anti-storage measure providing for a fine of from $100 to $500 and confinement in the workhouse for violation, an anti-locker club measure with a penalty of $50 to $500 and imprisonment for violation, a measure prohibiting receiving orders for liquors with fine and imprisonment as provided in the anti-locker club measure, and a measure making a second conviction for bootlegging a felony punishable with imprisonment for one or two years.

Kansas

In accord with the decision of the Supreme court in upholding the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon law, Kansas is planning to introduce a measure that will entirely do away with liquor shipments into the state. In three weeks, it is estimated, it will be a violation of state law to ship liquor into Kansas. Governor Capper has also requested that the legislature enact a law empowering any governor of Kansas to suspend from office any city or county official who fails to enforce the law.

Articles in Current Periodicals

The Survey of January 13 publishes the first of a series of articles by Elizabeth Tilton, "Turning Off the Spigot." "The scientific man who now stands outside the world prohibition movement is really harkening to the things he despises—tradition and prejudice," says Mrs. Tilton. "Already scientific evidence is beginning to oust tradition; and if we are to bring our country abreast of our sister lands, by leaders and not laggards, we must educate not only the immigrant, but the influential. This should be the task of social workers, for there is no one tangible thing that would remove such cumulative costs as would the elimination of alcohol."

The Sunday School Times for January 13 contains an article on "France—Prohibition's Most Determined Foe," by Margaret Wintringer. "Experiments in the laboratory of Europe are working out with startling celerity," says the writer. "Temperance history is being made so rapidly that the pen of the historian cannot transcribe with sufficient speed its victories. Alcohol is the most moving figure of the war."

January Everybody's has an article on "Industry, War—and Rum." "Moral issues are pretty lonesome when the returns are read on election night unless they have taken into partnership convincing economic issues. Something of that sort happened to prohibition during the past decade. Dollars and cents, looking around eagerly, as always, to make more dollars and cents, decided that prohibition was worth backing as a money-making game."

"In a few years statisticians ought to have some curves showing what no booze really means to our big cities," remarks Collier's Weekly. "Under decent and good government the results are startlingly similar. For example, here are Seattle and Birmingham in opposite corners of the U. S. A., different in almost every detail of racial make-up, business interests, etc., but both telling the same dry tale. About one-half as many arrests, fewer murders and suicides, but more bank clearings; less fire and more building, increased trade and empty jails—such are a few of the items. The drug problem is easier because whisky hasn't done any subsoil plowing for it. These facts, and more like 'em, are noted by such papers as The Manufacturers' Record and by keen business men who wonder now why on earth they ever thought prohibition would hurt business. (Probably they had read it in the liquor ads!) The sameness is tiresome except to those who like to note social progress, and to the unfortunate women and kids who sometimes wonder drearily how long it will be before their homes, too, are in out of the wet."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

Frances E. Willard

Some work for fame and some for paltry pelf,
Some for the hour's joy and pride of self;
She wrought for man—the lifting of the race,
To wipe the tears that stained her sister's face—
And God has given her peculiar place.

Her voice was heard amid the din and strife,
Pleading the weakling's cause, claiming his life.
Of yore men sainted those who hid the face
In convent-cell, who fled the ties of race—
This woman lived within the market-place.

Sainted? Ah, yes! And loved? O rarely so!
Queen of all hearts is she—most high, most low!
Not her rare knowledge, not her honeyed tongue,
Not her mind's mighty reach, her keen wit flung—
Not these, her gifts, make still her praises sung.

Fame comes to some through pen of priceless art;
Hers through the pulsing of her matchless heart
Which spent its tireless love, its deathless flame,
Not without sacrifice, and toil, and pain,
Yet counted all—if but for others—gain.

She brought her woman's heart—as rare and sweet
As Mary's spikenard!—to the Saviour's feet.
Its perfume spilled, filled all earth's lofty space,
Made the world richer, since her dwelling-place,
Set her apart for aye, crowned by God's grace!

—Mrs. S. R. Graham Clark.

Meditation Corner

Religion is not a strange or added thing, but the inspiration of the secular life, the breathing of an eternal spirit through this temporal world.—Henry Drummond.

What is the standard of right? It is the law of the Kings. What is the line of rectitude? It is the will of God. In our dealing with individuals, in our dealing with society, in our dealing with the nation, both in speech and life and conduct, we must face the age as men and women who believe that righteousness is the one necessity.—G. Campbell Morgan.

There is a chance for all of us; for some to go into the thick of the fight, some to give their money, plan and provide; and certainly for all of us to pray. This trinity of forces is going to bring an end to the selfishness which we see around us. Some must go to the front, some pray, some provide. There is a place for all. Let no one be found wanting.—Samuel B. Capen.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

THE FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND

(Continued from Page Five)

States of a third group were plunged into campaigns to retain their prohibitory laws by the brewers, who initiated beer measures. Special anti-beer leaflets, anti-beer posters and revenue leaflets were prepared to meet this emergency and, by the aid of the Memorial Fund, widely distributed in Washington, Oregon and Colorado. Colorado speaks for this group of states:

"The proposed constitutional amendment in Colorado 'declared beer a non-intoxicating liquor,' and the enemy's campaign was one of free literature distribution. The arguments advanced were not so much on the point involved in the wording of the article as to prove the benefits which would accrue to the state from the manufacture and sale of beer within the state instead of importing what is allowed for personal use. The generous assistance given by the National W. C. T. U. in the 'double-your-money' offer of literature, made it possible for the state W. C. T. U. to meet the enemy with its own tactics. The splendid National leaflets giving the truth on every phase of the beer question, were supplied by the Colorado W. C. T. U. at nominal cost or absolutely free to every section of our commonwealth, and because of this help from the National W. C. T. U. the state union was enabled to supplement these with three hundred thousand free leaflets, giving facts as to the conditions which would exist if the amendment carried. The Memorial Fund literature made possible the education of Colorado citizens and the retention of prohibition unamended."

Special help was also extended to Idaho, in her campaign for constitutional prohibition, to Arkansas and Arizona in their defensive campaigns, and to Mississippi when her prohibitory law was threatened and a whirlwind campaign seemed imminent.

In all of the plans financed wholly, or in part, from the Memorial Fund, work among foreign-speaking people, Indians and negroes, had their place, in addition to the department appropriation of eleven hundred dollars. Our alien population, to whom has so long been attributed the strength of the city saloon, is found to be turning prohibitionward as rapidly as the American-born citizens. They are proving the falsity of the statement that the foreigner will not work where alcohol is unobtainable by moving into sections of license cities which are free from saloons and giving their votes, when the opportunity arises, for prohibition. Mrs. Spencer says of the Indians, "Their faces are set toward citizenship." In California and South Dakota, temperance principles faithfully instilled through years of patient teaching of the race were called into action by the prohibition campaigns. Mrs. Peterson, National superintendent of the Work Among Colored People, gave practically all of her time last year to campaign work, special aid being given to the colored unions of Maryland and North Carolina.

The Annual Leaflet of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union continues, apparently, to be one of the chief indispensables of the worker's desk. A proposition to drop it from the list of publications met with the protest, "We could not keep house, or home, or office without its cyclopædic aid." New members and new unions find in this little booklet—the primer of the W. C. T. U. curriculum—information necessary to the equipment of good workers. The Memorial Fund, as usual, paid for publishing the Annual Leaflet for 1916, and for the distribution of fully two-thirds of the issue of fifty thousand.

The general observance in 1917 of the "Two-Dollar-a-Union-Plan" guarantees an organization fund approaching forty thousand dollars. Let every union do its part!

PREPAREDNESS FOR A HOLY WAR

(Continued from Page Seven)

it needed but the word to set the machinery in motion that should grind the liquor traffic to atoms. Without the machinery of thorough organization and an outpouring of willing service given by seasoned veterans from every section, the fight could not have been won. Years of preparation through the volunteer labor of a great army of devoted, mother-hearted women, a long campaign of education by both the spoken and written word, the co-operation of all who loved home and its interests more than the liquor traffic and its bribes and the votes of men and women together, under the blessing of God, brought victory.

Future historians of moral reforms will write upon the pages devoted to the Evergreen state a record unsurpassed, of the power of womanhood organized for home protection. Their story of moral heroism will be unexcelled. The history of their thirty years' war will ring in every line with the glory of self-sacrifice and the thrill of conquest. Every page will be an eloquent tribute to the courage and untiring energy of a womanhood which had heard the call to service and responded, "Here am I—send me!" Good women and noble men will look with pride upon that record and rejoice that they are of a race capable of such devotion. Frances E. Willard was a prophet of a larger day, a wider hope, a fuller service for women. Thus is her vision fulfilled.

"She knew the power of banded ill
But felt that love was stronger still,
And organized for doing good
The world's united womanhood."

PEACE AND ARBITRATION

Mrs. William J. Bryan, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Peace and Arbitration, requests that all communications in regard to the work of her department be sent to her associate, Mrs. Jennie L. W. Rooke, 3200 Pawtucket avenue, East Providence, Rhode Island. Orders for department literature should be sent to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. ANNA M. BAIN, wife of Colonel George W. Bain, the well-known temperance lecturer. Mrs. Bain was president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U. in the early days of the organization and always retained a deep interest in temperance, missionary and charitable work. Mrs. Bain's death came only eight weeks after that of her daughter, Mrs. Calvert Roszell, news of whose promotion was received during the National convention.

MRS. SUSAN L. LOCKE, for years president of San Joaquin county (Calif.) W. C. T. U., a woman of faith and works. Though past the general activities of life, her heart and mind were always alert to the opportunities of the work, and she gave generously of her means and herself to promote it.

MRS. HERMAN C. JONES, vice-president of the Macon (Ga.) W. C. T. U., a devoted Christian woman and a faithful white ribboner, known and loved for her good works.

MRS. J. L. KENNEDY, Barnesville, Ga., for seven years state L. T. L. secretary, and former county and local president. Mrs. Kennedy will be greatly missed by her Georgia comrades.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp, president of the Kentucky W. C. T. U., entertained recently at her home in Lexington, in honor of Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, and Miss Christine Tinling, National Y. P. B. college secretary, both of whom were in Lexington for the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association convention. Among the guests at this delightful affair were leaders in the prohibition movement in the United States who were also in attendance at the convention.

Mrs. Frances Axtell of Bellingham, Wash., a white ribboner, has been appointed to a high federal government position. President Wilson has selected her as one of three members of the United States Employees' Compensation Commission which will administer the Federal Workmen's Compensation act. Mrs. Axtell was elected a member of the Washington legislature in 1912.

How the Montana W. C. T. U. Helped to Win Prohibition

MARY L. ALDERSON, President Montana W. C. T. U.

The Montana Woman's Christian Temperance Union was one of the important factors in the Montana campaign for prohibition, because it was the best organized force in the field. For thirty years it had been building up its membership, establishing its official paper, securing legislation, carrying on work under the various departments which touched, to uplift, the life of infant, child and adult.

When our campaign opened in 1915 wo called upon our 1,750 women to line up for the extension of organization, as the basis of educational work for prohibition. Using our established unions as the basis of operation, we sent speakers and literature into all parts of the state. From the unions already formed we radiated in all directions, local unions stretching out friendly hands into neighboring sections, and National and state speakers planting new unions at all accessible points. Before the end of the campaign, we had increased our membership to nearly 4,700 and our unions to over 200.

Each union was "dry-cleaning" its corner, according to the state plan and our workers were uniting the locals into county organizations. This done, we were in line to accomplish much. The state president sent instructions and suggestions to the county presidents and each county president in turn sent the same to the local unions. Sentiment for prohibition was made by all the unions singing the same songs, putting up the same posters, listening in turn to the same speakers, reading the same literature, and organizing and training the young campaigners along the same lines. All this helped to make the people think the same thought—"The Liquor Traffic Must Go"; and the result was a mighty, spontaneous, patriotic outburst for prohibition on November 7, which surprised even the prohibition workers themselves. Montana cast the largest majority for prohibition in proportion to the voting population—28,886—of any state that voted in 1916. Michigan's dry majority was 75,000, but its voting population was six times that of Montana. Nebraska's dry majority was about 35,000, but its voting population was one and one-half times that of Montana.

The value of the W. C. T. U. organization was recognized by other organizations, and requests for the W. C. T. U. roster and the mailing list of the state paper were numerous, and many were the attempts to get the W. C. T. U. machinery at work for other societies.

We tried to impress upon our members the importance of being loyal to their own organization and the necessity of working as a unit if they would retain their power. They responded nobly, and their practical work in securing the registration of the new women voters was as earnestly and enthusiastically carried on as was the organization and educational work.

A pleasing tribute to the Montana W. C. T. U. was paid us by the president of the state Anti-Saloon League, A. J. Wairath, who spoke at our state convention. Among other things he said:

"No other organization has done so much for prohibition as has your organization. In the present campaign, not only have you disseminated all sorts of educational literature, but you have carried your organization work to the utmost parts of the state, enlisting the women voters in the movement. In most of the counties the chief work done in registering new voters in this campaign has been done nobly by your women. If this campaign is won, the chief credit will be due the Montana W. C. T. U."

This could not have been said but for the wonderful machinery of our organization, by which we are able to turn wheel within wheel until the whole organization moves as a unit.

W. C. T. U. Instrumental in Bringing Victory to South Dakota

RUBY R. JACKSON, Corresponding Secretary South Dakota W. C. T. U.

South Dakota came into the union in 1889, with a prohibition amendment in its constitution. The W. C. T. U. tried to have the constitutional convention incorporate prohibition in its organic law, but the liquor power defeated the measure. Through the machinations of the liquor trade and the liquor politicians we lost our law in 1896 through non-enforcement. Eighteen years passed before we could get a legislature dry enough to resubmit the question to the voters. In 1914, the legislature submitted a prohibition amendment to the voters of the state. The W. C. T. U. kept a committee at the capital during that session, and we owe much of the success of bringing the prohibition and suffrage amendments before the voters of the state to this committee. The usual telegrams, letters and petitions were sent out. The fight was on. Every white ribboner felt that we were in to win and plans were made for a campaign to cover both of these amendments.

We carried on a quiet campaign through our two lines of work: organization and education. As a culmination of the preliminary work, our National and state officers organized a mid-continent conference at Sioux Falls. The mid-year executive was planned for the same place so as to bring the leaders of the state to Sioux Falls to receive the inspiration and instruction brought us by the National workers who met with us. Following this conference, which was a great success, our president, vice-president, corresponding secretary and the president of the Kansas W. C. T. U. made a tour of seven other large cities in South Dakota, holding city conferences with the women of these places. The results of these conferences were far-reaching in arousing the women. Then followed the district conventions, our president attending all east of the Missouri river. Mrs. La Mance and Miss Davison, National organizers, those west of the river. At these conventions, plans were made for thorough organization for personal work and the raising of money to finance the campaign. The National W. C. T. U. came to our rescue with its wonderful offer for campaign literature. We received a double supply for one price, and ordered by state, district and local unions. Because of the generosity of Mother National, many thousands of pages were distributed.

Public meetings of all kinds were held, the children and young people doing their part. Many "ready made" audiences were reached also by our workers. Chautauqua speakers were made interested in our campaigns and gave us helpful words along the way.

Taken all in all it was a complete victory at the polls for state-wide prohibition, for we carried the state by 11,775 majority, and we are all singing and will continue to sing, "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

W. C. T. U. a Recognized Force in South Carolina State-Wide Battle

JOSIE SPROTT, President South Carolina W. C. T. U.

In the battle for state-wide prohibition in South Carolina the organized force of the W. C. T. U. was recognized and appreciated. Our state and National organizers traveled from mountains to seashore, penetrating the rural districts, speaking at outdoor meetings and picnics, in schoolhouses and churches. In many counties local flying squadrons were organized under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. Each group was composed of several speakers, when possible, a doctor, a prominent business man, a lawyer, a farmer and a promising young man, and a number of singers with a repertoire of temperance and prohibition songs. Automobiles were loaned for the use of the squadrons, and appointments were made and meetings thoroughly advertised several weeks in advance. Two and sometimes three meetings were held at different places in one day. Occasionally, the workers carried lunches which they ate en route, but often invitations were extended beforehand by the communities to be visited. The squadrons carried quantities of literature for distribution, most of it bought from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. In this way every nook and corner of a county was reached with almost no financial outlay, and the fact that these busy men and women, in whom the people had the utmost confidence, were willing to lay aside their business and give themselves, their time, talents and influence to help drive out liquor, had a most wonderful effect. All things considered, I believe these county flying squadrons, thoroughly organized, prepared and advertised, were the most effective of any of the campaign plans used in South Carolina.

The National W. C. T. U. donated 2,000 copies of the Campaign Editions of THE UNION SIGNAL. These were sent principally to preachers and speakers who made good use of them. A preacher seldom served as a member of a flying squadron—these were strictly "laymens' movements"—but the preachers, from pulpit and platform, proclaimed the truth and faithfully performed their duty.

Medal contests were also a prominent factor, and a program arranged by the state superintendent of Temperance and Missions, primarily intended for use at missionary meetings, became so popular the central committee in Columbia asked that it be used at other meetings all over the state, and a second edition was printed to supply the demand. The W. C. T. U. furnished "Vote Dry" buttons, and put up thousands of posters. We do not feel that it is claiming too much to say that the W. C. T. U. of South Carolina deserves much of the credit for moulding public sentiment and making possible the victory of September 14, 1915.

A PARENTAL CURSE

A TALK BETWEEN DOCTORS

DAWLEY PALMER

"Paralysis from forced alcoholism, you call it?" asked Pennington, who had dropped in on his friend Watson. "It's an interesting case, but of course it's hopeless."

"Perhaps not," said Watson, who never would acknowledge defeat. "I myself doubt very much whether little Hedvig Sorensen can grow up to be what the Lord intended her to be, but I shall use my utmost skill to bring it about. It's an example of the sins of the parents. They're the kind of foreigners who are used to their drinks, and it is next to impossible to convince them of the harm they're doing. Once upon examining the child's tonsils, I recommended their removal. The mother gave the youngster whisky instead. Later, bronchitis developed, and, ignoring my advice, the father filled the girl with brandy."

"And now you aid in the kidnapping of the girl, carrying her off to her married sister's home for a month or more, though she is beyond hope. I declare, Watson, you amuse me," said Pennington.

"I know, but I wish you could see that beautiful girl, only twelve years old, confined to her bed for twelve long weeks, her right side and throat paralyzed—abundant auburn hair in rich ringlets upon her pillow—great dark eyes, wistful and yearning for the health which youth is entitled to—red lips that cannot utter one word. Think of it, Pennington! It would excite any doctor's pity. What a crying shame to rob the future of a woman such as this little Hedvig might be!"

"Yes, you're right. I've seen similar cases, and invariably the parents love their children dearly, but do not realize the peculiarly evil effect of alcohol upon the growing child," said Dr. Pennington.

Watson, the benign and warm-hearted, could not enter so impersonally into a professional discussion. His mind was filled with thoughts of little Hedvig Sorensen and many like her.

"Why, from babyhood Hedvig has been fed milk mixed with brandy. When thirsty, she has been given water flavored with wine. Her body, apparently, is not stunted by such food and drink, and her brain does not seem to be affected, either, though as to that, the future must answer. It is her nerves that have given way. Alcohol has actually been forced upon this poor little creature until she is a complete wreck." Dr. Watson's voice was very tender.

"What wretches bearing the sacred name of father and mother!" exclaimed Pennington. "How can we excuse their ignorance?"

"Come, now," returned his colleague, who was quick to see in his visitor's remark the apathy of many, "are the parents alone to blame? This Sorensen girl's father has been an efficient engineer in his time. Evil influences and associations have made of him an habitual toper and have led to a loss of position. Once he took 'the cure,' but returned home only to find his former friends in their former ways and grog shops on every corner. He tried. Do you know, these saloons are most obliging—extending credit, cashing checks—anything to obligate customers and be sure of their patronage?"

"Yes, yes; men fall for that sort of thing, but his wife—" interposed the other, "a woman intoxicated seems so much worse."

"You're right—it only seems worse. This poor woman started in to keep the man company, rather than have him away from home."

The bell rang, and Dr. Pennington arose to go, but his friend waved him back to his chair. "Sit still—glad to have you! It's Hattie, Hedvig's married sister."

The young woman entered.

"Good morning, Hattie! How is the little sister today?" asked Dr. Watson.

"O sir, she is still as helpless as ever, but when I bathed her I asked if her foot felt prickly, and she tried to nod. I'm sure she's beginning to feel. I rubbed her throat to help her swallow. I've done as you told me with the hot applications and the ice."

"Very good. Have your folks been up yet?" he asked, kindly.

Pennington was listening eagerly to the woman's answers, which were given without embarrassment, but in a patient tone showing that she was used to trials.

"No, Doctor. Pa's cried a good bit, sayin' it's Ma's fault that Hedvig is sick, and Ma's so angry with me for takin' Sis to my home, that— I'm afraid— something dreadful will happen. Ma never used to be angry— she was so gentle and kind— but— well, of course, she and Pa are gettin' old now."

"How old are they?" inquired Dr. Watson.

"Pa's near fifty, and Ma's forty-six."

Watson smiled grimly as he noted the astonishment on the face of his friend. Competent doctors are only beginning to enjoy life at such age. Old at forty-six and fifty!

"Keep up your courage and treatment, my good woman. I will drop in to see the little girl in the morning." The kind physician stood with his hand upon the doorknob, but the young woman hesitated before passing out.

"Is there anything more?" he asked.

"Why, no, I guess— I only wanted to know if you think Pa and Ma can ever be cured—and will Hedvig get well?" There was a catch in her voice. In her wistful eyes there was a world of worries and heartaches. Dr. Watson laid a gentle hand upon her shoulder, and, ignoring the first question, replied to the second.

"Perhaps patient care will pull your sister through. You and I are going to fight for her, and it will be such a fight as Dr. Watson never before has put up for anyone. Dear little Hedvig is one of the women of tomorrow."

He stood watching the big sister, who tried to smile bravely as she descended the stair. His duty as physician would always be conscientiously fulfilled. He saw clearly another duty—enlistment for a great battle—a struggle for the safety of countless future beings. The sympathetic look disappeared from his noble face, his brow wrinkled, his firm jaw settled with determination. He was ready for the fight—such an encounter as he never before had made. Facing his friend, he brought his powerful fist down upon the oak table.

"Pennington, answer me this," he thundered: "How long shall you and I vote to license saloons on every corner, to ruin parents of today, and thereby to crush the little men and women of tomorrow? I say, how long?"

CHRISTMAS AT ELLIS ISLAND

ELLA A. BOOLE, President New York W. C. T. U.

Each year the missionaries at Ellis Island plan Christmas trees and an entertainment for the "strangers" in our land. Immigration has fallen off very much on account of the war, but many immigrants are still detained at Ellis Island because no steamers are sailing to the countries from which they came, so they may not return. Some have been at the island for more than two years. There are, however, a good many people coming from Italy and from the Balkan states, mostly women and children, young boys and men too old for military service. In all, there were about four hundred immigrants at the island.

It was interesting to see them file into the great dining-room where seats had been provided—children dressed in native costume, sad-faced women, and downhearted men. Commissioner Howe said not long ago that the immigrants could not easily be amused or interested, for the reason that every one is waiting to hear his name called. Why not? Some are on the lookout for friends, some for letters, some to be called before the commission. Relief from suspense is their one thought.

Of course, as they were marched into the hall some of them did not understand where they were going, but imagine their surprise as they saw the beautiful Christmas trees, covered with ornaments, and lighted by colored electric lights. On the front row was one of the most beautiful Italian children I have ever seen, a little girl with a lovely complexion, dark hair, and blue eyes, while a little Scotch laddie in kilts, scarcely three years old, won the hearts of everybody. The Salvation Army band furnished the music.

An address in Italian reached a great many. Tears came to the eyes of men and women and great sobs were checked as these people heard a Christmas message in a strange land but in the tongue which they could understand.

Mr. Marmaroff, husband of the W. C. T. U. missionary, made an eloquent address in Greek, which roused to enthusiasm all who could understand that language. His closing remarks in which he called attention to the opportunities of this country, which was able to build up its people without war, and to the good missionaries who had provided so nice an entertainment, met with hearty response.

Songs were sung by Polish children, one or two other addresses were made, and as the immigrants filed out of the room a suitable present was given to every man, woman and child. It brought the tears to our eyes as we saw the little children hugging their dolls, and the boys showing their delight over ships, puzzles and games. Everybody had a bag of candy, an orange or an apple.

WELL OILED AND WELL OPERATED W. C. T. U. MACHINERY CHIEF AID IN SAVING ARKANSAS' PROHIBITION LAW

MINNIE U. RUTHERFORD FULLER, President Arkansas W. C. T. U.

As soon as it was known that a petition calling for a vote on the repeal of the prohibition law at the November election would be filed, the state W. C. T. U. officers met at the home of the president in a three days' executive session.

At this meeting the whole campaign was planned. A letter was written to the ministers and one to the club women, asking their active co-operation in fighting the repeal and calling attention to a resolution (a copy of which we enclosed) for adoption by all meetings of churches and clubs and at public gatherings. These resolutions were distributed by the thousand and they met with a ready response. The club women joined us early in the fight and stayed in it till the end.

Cards pledging the voters against the repeal, known as Act No. 2, were sent everywhere through our local unions and from every section of Arkansas they came back signed, and formed one of the most unique of our state convention exhibits. Fastened carefully together, they were festooned over chancel rail, piano and choir rail and presented such an appearance of overwhelming numbers that one wondered if there would be any voters left to cast their ballot for Act. No. 2.

A letter of instruction to our local workers was also prepared at this meeting. This letter they were requested to post upon the head of their bed that it might be the first thing visible at dawn and the last thing at night. A half dozen leaflets were compiled, each presenting some phase of our own liquor problem in this state; speakers were planned for and letters written to them. Fortunately, thanks to the foresight of our vice-president, we had funds enough to meet the expenses of the campaign as planned. The printers were prompt (we selected those heartily in sympathy with us) and soon our literature was literally flooding the mails and the response was prompt and hearty. Our plans for poster hikes and picnic speeches were eagerly followed. The local unions sometimes planned their hikes so that two parties met at some halfway place and there organized a new union.

Speakers were constantly in the field.

New unions sprang up everywhere. The people did not wait for organizers, but wrote for literature and for voters' pledge cards. Rural mail carriers asked for an extra supply, saying they could reach many voters on their routes; postmasters made the same request. With every voter's pledge card went a copy of the leaflet, "Let the People Rule." This explained Act No. 2 in all its infamous details. It is safe to say that a more popular piece of printed matter never was circulated before or since in the state. It went to every polling place throughout the length and breadth of Arkansas. Every post brought requests for more copies of it. It was unbelievable that any one could be so stupid, as well as culpable, as to draft a measure of that kind, which sought to destroy every bit of temperance legislation on our statute books and put us back to the status of the middle of the nineteenth century, speaking from the prohibition standpoint.

The leaflet, "Let the People Rule," whose title was borrowed from the campaign slogan of the enemy, aroused the people to state-wide indignation. It was circulated at picnics, plastered upon barns, trees and billboards, quoted from pulpit and platform, recited in clubs and used as a responsive reading in public meetings.

Negroes Aid Materially

Negroes aided in circulating literature and their preachers explained the import of the Act to their congregations. One negro woman did some field work and our own women went to many of their public meetings and talked with them about Act No. 2. Several negro unions were formed. It was certainly true that the "better class of negroes," as it is claimed, voted against the Act, many of them saying that they had more money than they had ever had before in their lives. Counties where the negroes comprise 50 per cent to 80 per cent of the entire population went on record two or three to one against the Act.

As election day drew near we began circulating cards showing the ballot marked against Act No. 2 and everywhere our women stood ready at the polls with these cards and the leaflet, "Let the People Rule," but by this time local unions were having printed their own cards, showing how to scratch the ticket, and we shall never know how many of these found their way into the hands of the voters. At some of the polling places refreshments were served, booths for literature were erected, children were organized into parades and in many places the churches were thronged all day with our women, in relays, praying for the defeat of Act No. 2. When the first returns came in it was apparent that the battle was won three to one and in all the subsequent returns this proportion held. The measure polled the heaviest vote cast.

State Convention Influenced Votes

It is the general opinion that the state convention made a great impression and was responsible for the rolling up of a large majority against the Act, even after the warning of the people of the convention town that the dry majority had been only six votes at the last election. The attendance upon the convention throughout was limited only by the seating capacity of the church.

Without doubt Arkansas owes the retention of its prohibition law to the machinery of the W. C. T. U., ready to operate without a moment's delay, and to that host of faithful women who compose its membership and lubricate and set the wheels in motion, but much of the success is due, also, to the fact that the measure "out Heroded Herod." If it had been less sweeping in its "iconoclastic" tendencies, we should have won, but by a much smaller majority.

It is not generally known, perhaps, that we had a double battle on all the time because of the efforts necessary to defeat the measure providing amendments to the initiative and referendum, which was voted upon also at the November election. If it had won it would have operated to repeal the prohibition law, under the guise of "local legislation," but our women quickly grasped the situation and included this measure, "Amendment 13," in their destructive efforts.

We are now planning for legislation limiting the shipment for personal use and excluding advertising matter from the state. These measures we are sure our legislators will give us within the next few weeks.

Our God is marching on.

"I Can See My Finish!" —Atlanta Constitution

Supplies for Frances E. Willard Commemorative Meeting

FOR REFERENCE:

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Price $1.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said, Anna Adams Gordon. Price 75 cents.

The Story of Frances E. Willard, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price 15 cts.

FOR PROGRAM MATERIAL:

Annual Address, Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, delivered at Indianapolis. Price 5 cents.

Review of Organization Work, given in report of Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary, found in National Minutes. Price 25 cents.

Union Signal (special Willard Memorial number of January 25). Price 5 cents each; $1.75 per 100.

Frances E. Willard Program for Public Schools, Anna A. Gordon. Price 10 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens.

Flower of Temperance Chivalry, S. M. D. Fry. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, 75 cents.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION:

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, $1.00.

The Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Temperance Jack

Law of Habit

The Shoemaker and Little White Shoes

The Common Joy

Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE Y. P. B.:

Frances E. Willard's Influence Upon the Young People of the Age. Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE L. T. L.:

How a Little Girl Became Famous. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Five Little Word Pictures of Frances E. Willard. Price, per 100, 30 cents.

FOR MUSIC:

Temperance Songster, Convention Edition. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book, Anna A. Gordon.

Home's Love-Light—solo. Price, 30 cents.

A Paean of Victory—solo. Price, 10 cents.

Victory—soprano solo. Price, 15 cents.

Wear Your White Ribbon Wherever You Go—solo or chorus. Price, 5 cents.

A Knot of White Ribbon—solo. Price 25 cents.

The White Ribbon—solo. Price, 10 cents.

FOR INVITATIONS:

Rest Cottage Post Card

Frances E. Willard Post Card

Frances E. Willard Statue Post Card

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per 100, $1.00.

FOR ROLL CALL:

Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Cards—quotations from Miss Willard's writings, with autograph signature. Price, 12 cents per 100.

FOR SOUVENIRS:

Rest Cottage Booklet. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Willard Birthday Pledge Card, with autograph pledge and signature. Price, per 100, $1.00.

Prices include prepaid postage.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Ill.

Frances E. Willard Portraits

For Schools, Libraries and the Home

No. 1

No. 1—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid.....$4.00

No. 3

No. 3—Enlarged Photograph, from a picture taken during Miss Willard's later years, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid 4.00

Special School Picture (a print from this photograph), 18x22 in. Price.. .50

No. 2

No. 2—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00

No. 4

No. 4—Enlarged Photograph, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00

Same photograph, 10x12 inches... 1.50

Name Plate, handsomely engraved, on brass base, gold plated. Price.....$ 1.75

These portraits, suitably framed, with name plate attached, sent by prepaid express, each 10.00

Cabinet Photographs of Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, 25 cents each; per dozen..... 2.40

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

PROHIBITION AGREES WITH VIRGINIA

At a banquet recently given under the auspices of the South Western Medical Society of Virginia at the Ponce de Leon hotel, Roanoke, not a drop of intoxicating liquor was served. Notwithstanding the absence of the convivial bowl, the wit and repartee surpassed that of former occasions, says an observer.

Less Poverty

The reports from Virginia cities are to the effect that there is much less suffering among the poor than formerly. Those having charge of the distribution of Christmas baskets found many families who in other years welcomed the donations now saying: "We appreciate your thought for us but since our men cannot buy liquor, we have plenty and no longer need assistance."

Not An Arrest

Petersburg's first dry Christmas presented the remarkable record of not a single arrest on that day nor on the following day up to a late hour. The police court records for Christmas day, 1915, show fifteen arrests, most of them for drunkenness, as against none in 1916; and 24 arrests in 1915, "the morning after," as against none in 1916. The surprising record is made of 777 less arrests in December, 1916, up to and including December 26, than in December, 1915.

LIQUOR RESPONSIBLE FOR CRIME WAVE IN HARRISBURG

The greatest crime wave in the history of Harrisburg, Pa., occurred during 1916, and according to the annual report of Superintendent of Detectives William L. Windsor practically all of the 3,857 arrests made during the year were due to liquor. This number was approximately 1,000 greater than the 1915 arrests.

"Nearly every one of the men and women arrested," said Mr. Windsor, "was either drunk or to some degree under the influence of liquor. The crime wave hit the colored element of the city particularly."

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.

J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

A very few of the

Gospel Art Calendars for 1917

are left in stock and as it will be impossible to secure more, kindly order yours at once. A calendar of twelve pages, each page containing a reproduction of one of the masterpieces and a scripture text for daily reading.

Price, 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Have you called upon your school board? If not, do so at once and tell them of the

Graded Charts on Alcohol and Tobacco

a set of eight in colors, with the manual fully explaining the charts and containing supplemental lessons for the public school. Prepared by Edith Smith Davis, National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction.

Price, per set, unmounted, $1.50
Price, per set, mounted, $4.50

Teachers are asking for these helps and many school boards are placing them in their schools. Ask your board to do the same.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SUPPLY

the pupils in your public schools with the

"Liquor Traffic Must Go" Lead Pencils

Price, per dozen, 35 cents;
6 dozen, $1.50

Also

With the Anti-Cigaret and Temperance Blotters

In Prohibition Maine
Be Strong
Who is the Coward
Blot Out the Saloon
A Cigaret Arithmetic
A Cold Water Blotter
Big Business
John Barleycorn, Goodbye

Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Printed in assorted colors; blue, pink and buff.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

THE W. C. T. U. A MIGHTY FACTOR IN NEBRASKA'S TRIUMPH

(Continued from Page Six)

in sympathy with the league beyond the color of its money, would line our advertisements up in a most advantageous position opposite that occupied by the enemy.

In the last month of the campaign, the unions did most effective work in organizing schoolhouse campaigns, either local workers or those from outside speaking to the rural voters. The men in these communities were largely friendly to our cause, and we realized early in the struggle that all over the state they were with us if they could only be induced to come out and cast their ballots. Nebraska has but a small per cent of colored voters, but those of foreign birth and descent were a large factor in the result. Speakers were sent out to influence people of each nationality, although, in the main, Nebraskans speak the English language. To teach the physiological effects of liquor drinking, however, Bohemians were sent to talk to Bohemians, Germans to Germans, etc. Quantities of literature in each of these languages, as well as in the Scandinavian tongue, were distributed. Those of the latter race are usually prohibitionists, however. The change in sentiment among the foreigners was remarkable. Over and over, the most conservative of them declared they were tired of the rule of the saloon. Fathers testified to the fact that "The boys do not know how to drink moderately as I have done, and I am ready to put liquor away for good and all." One father voted dry to save his three boys; in another family the boys voted dry to save their old father.

The voting Indian was a factor in the success of the campaign, though not a large one. The fact that every Indian agent in the state was a dry "booster" accounted for a large percentage of the friendly votes cast. A "straw in the wind" on one of the last days of the campaign proved amusing. One of our organizers was invited to speak at the close of a meeting in the Indian reservation. She supposed she was to follow a dry speaker, but was astonished, on arriving, to find she was preceded by one of the "big guns" of the wets. As she listened to her opponent she thought she detected mutterings and guttural sounds which might indicate approval or quite the reverse, but when she was announced as speaking against the saloon a great wave of applause greeted her, and as the gentleman who had just held forth excused himself from staying to hear her remarks, saying he had a previous engagement, they fairly clapped him out of the house, even turning in their seats to watch him go. They then listened attentively to all our speaker had to say.

The State Sunday School Association was one of our most efficient aids. Its entire machinery was devoted to pushing prohibition, and the schools everywhere became storm centers of sentiment.

This was largely due to the fact that the Sunday School department of the W. C. T. U. had been at work for years, not only teaching temperance truth, but how to use it effectively, and that so large a proportion of our women are Sunday school teachers and officers.

Books might be written on the fine work accomplished by the men and women of Nebraska. At the state convention an hour was devoted each day to "Moving Pictures" when a member of each local union outlined in one minute some particular kind of campaign work done by the W. C. T. U. of her town. It was one of the hits of the annual meeting, and displayed the originality of the workers. Everything that had been tried in any other state had been tried in Nebraska, with 1,000 brand new devices put to the test.

And now that the state has bade John Barleycorn take his hat and cane and go, there seems to be exactly as much determination on the part of white ribboners to go on from grace to glory.

You Can Be So Well

Don't you know, all health of chronic ailments, in nine out of every ten cases, are due to improper food, poor circulation, insufficient exercise, incorrect breathing, incorrect poise and restless slumber!

I give exercises that strengthen the impaired organs.

Remove those unnatural conditions and your ailments vanish. This may surprise you, but I am doing it daily; I have done it for eighty thousand women.

No Drugs or Medicines

You follow my directions in your room.

Are you too thin or too fat? You can weigh exactly what you should.

Medical magazines advertise my work, leading doctors approve it; their wives are my pupils.

Regain Health, Poise and Cheerful Spirits. You can. Tell me your faults in health or figure. I will help you. And I want to, so much. I will respect your confidence. Write for my Free Booklet No. 21.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

W. C. T. U. PUBLICITY CAMPAIGN IN ARIZONA'S PROHIBITION BATTLE

IMOGEN LA CHANCE, President Arizona W.C.T.U

In the state-wide campaigns for prohibition in Arizona, the work of distributing literature was carried on systematically and effectively because of our thoroughly organized forces. The W. C. T. U., through the state and local organizations, reached every town where friends of the cause could be found.

Taking advantage of the offers of the National W. C. T. U. of campaign literature at half price by having it sent to one address, our state officers took charge of the work of receiving literature and posters and distributed them among the local unions throughout the state, where they were used to advantage. A poster day was observed by the local unions throughout the state. Petitions for our state amendment were sent through our state officers to local unions and by them brought before the churches and other organizations.

During the whole campaign appropriate literature was sent to different parts of the state to refute the falsehoods of the liquor publicity bureaus as fast as they appeared.

The W. C. T. U. is the greatest organization in the world composed entirely of women who are working for humanity, and yet its machinery is most economical and simple.

A Compendium of Temperance Truth

by

Edith Smith Davis,

World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction

A reference book which should be in every school library for use in essay work.

A book for temperance workers.

Price, 50 cents net.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

A CIRCULATING LIBRARY

Quoting from a recent liquor publication: "We receive repeated requests from authors and debaters for detailed information on our side of the prohibition question. We are always glad to assist in the preparation of short articles or discussions, as the case may be. This form of assistance is constantly increasing. We have received over 200 special requests for literature and information in the last two months. Sixty of these were from debaters in high schools and colleges." "In time, with proper educational and constructive work, all the so-called prohibition territory will be reclaimed."

Vain hope of the friends of John Barleycorn, we say; the prohibition territory that has been gained will never be repossessed. But the only way we can make that assurance doubly sure is to train the rising generation to know the real character of John Barleycorn; to become acquainted with him as a destroyer of health, an enemy of efficiency, a producer of crime and a retarder of civilization. For the education of these young people our friends tell us they find no better text-book than the official organ of the National W. C. T. U. If it could be placed on the library table of every home, be found in the reading rooms of the city and college Y. M. C. A.'s and Y. W. C. A.'s, in the rest rooms of girls' clubs and department stores, in the railway waiting rooms, it would prove itself a veritable university extension course in temperance to those who frequent these places.

We are reminded that one at least of our state unions is using THE UNION SIGNAL definitely to counteract the very form of liquor publicity to which reference has just been made. We refer to the fine work being done by this state W. C. T. U. in sending to the secretary of the extension department of the state university six copies of THE UNION SIGNAL weekly, from which the secretary clips articles, pastes them upon cardboard, and sends them out again and again, circulating library fashion, in response to the many requests that come to her for material for debates, public addresses, etc., on the liquor question. Has your university an extension department? Do you send them THE UNION SIGNAL? If not, may you not be losing an opportunity to defeat the miseducation of your young people by the liquor interests?

YESTERDAY AND TODAY
a new Franchise play suitable for the W. C. T. U. and the Y. P. B.
Any society will find this admirable for an evening's entertainment.
ENTERTAINING AND INSTRUCTIVE
IT IS SURE TO PLEASE
Price, 15 cents
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

HOW THE AMENDMENT WAS WON IN IDAHO

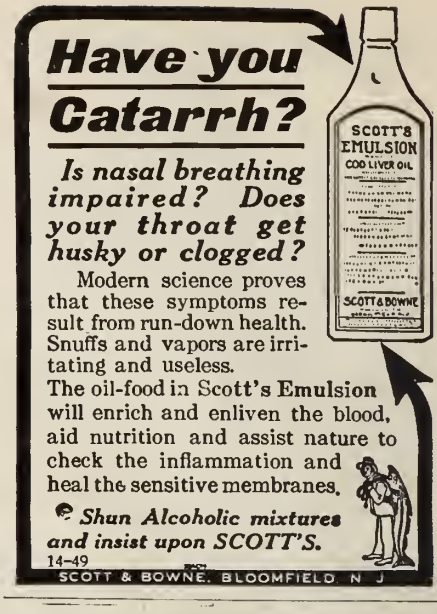
ANNETTA R. CHIPP, President South Idaho W. C. T. U.

Idaho's prohibition campaign was unique in that it was a double-header—statutory and constitutional—both in one year. A retrospect of the situation is helpful, not only to ourselves, but to other states in campaigns. The W. C. T. U. has been organized in the state for more than thirty years. The building up of the membership has progressed slowly, but we have made a steady gain. All these years the state and local unions have been especially active along legislative and educational lines, also working department plans. We have won the respect, sympathy and commendation of the people not affiliated with our work, in the capital city and smaller places, by our efforts in the soldier's home, prisons and jails, by installing drinking fountains, maintaining reading and rest rooms, and through the department of Flower Mission. Although we had less than one thousand members, by faith we established headquarters, printed the Idaho White Ribboner, including the subscription in our membership dues.

We organized South Idaho in seven districts, planned spring institutes for the discussion and presentation of department work, and made special appeals for new unions and new members. According to the National plan, each district president appointed a literature agent. Excellent work was accomplished, and the women became acquainted with their territory. Thousands of leaflets, besides campaign numbers of THE UNION SIGNAL, were distributed at picnics, fairs, public meetings and in house-to-house visits. Everywhere the women were urged to wear their white ribbon badge. The state president sent out a request before the primary election to prominent men in the state asking them to give three reasons "why we should vote for the constitutional amendment" and many responded. We used these statements as campaign literature, and they won many to our cause. Thousands of letters and pages of literature were sent out in unorganized territory during the year.

Most discouraging was the outlook two months before election. Our favorite text, "Be not weary in well doing, for in due season ye shall reap if ye faint not," came to us as a warning. We feared for the friends of the cause because of their ignorance or indifference. What could we do in so short a time to arouse and enlighten the people? Fall conventions had been planned for. Sample amendments on cardboard had been printed to be presented in schools, clubs, churches and Sunday schools. Arrangements were made to present to the various state church meetings, women's clubs, and teachers' institutes the need of special effort for the amendment. Thousands of slips with the amendment on one side and a prohibition quiz on the other were distributed. Blotters, post cards, posters in street cars and on billboards were used.

Special work was done among the Scandinavians, efforts were made in some of the German settlements, the Church Federation of Boise worked among the Orientals, the state president had organized the colored people in Boise some years ago, and our state superintendent of Indian work reported continued efforts. But the special need was to arouse our very own, the church and temperance people. Results show how we succeeded. Three to one the people registered their votes to keep our state dry. First, last and all the time we pay our respects to the enfranchised women of our state. We have proved to the people we are worthy to be called citizens.



The National W. C. T. U. donated 1,000 campaign SIGNALS and duplicated all our literature orders.

Of all these things the one most important in arousing the workers was the spot map, showing the local unions in the state. One dear white ribboner after seeing it, dreamed she was distributing amendments in Silver City, an isolated mining district. Every one who saw it felt the need of work in unorganized territory. Next was the organizing of districts and the holding of district meetings.

We appreciate the help given us by the coming of our beloved National president, Miss Anna A. Gordon, and our vice-president, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, both bringing words of courage and helpfulness at a critical time. All honor to our fine temperance men, senators, congressmen, governor, and the hosts in the rank and file of civic life. The prevailing prayer of the Christian people of Idaho gave us the victory.

In arranging your program for

Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day

you will need
"THE LIFE OF FRANCES E. WILLARD"
By Anna A. Gordon
Cloth bound, $1.50, postpaid
Place your order early
NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

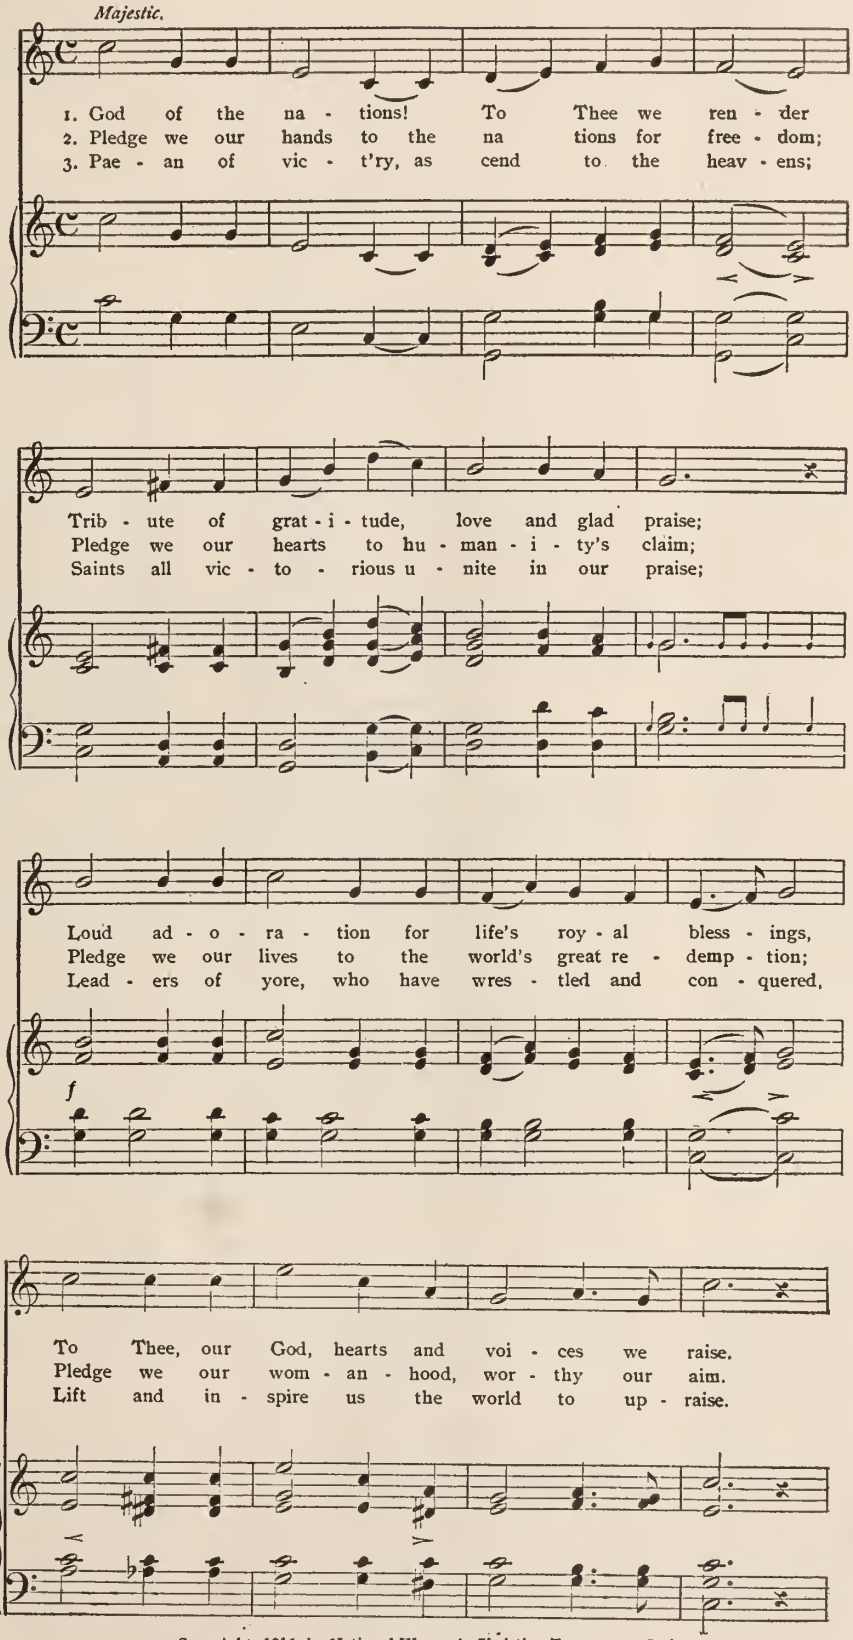
OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., FEBRUARY 1, 1917 | No. 5

Paean of Victory.

M. C. B. MARGARET COOTE BROWN.

Majestic.



Copyright, 1916, by National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Again casting aside all precedent, the President of the United States has dared invade what has been looked upon as the sacred dominion of the legislative body, Congress, by appearing in the Senate of the United States on Tuesday, January 23.

It was an epoch-making occasion. Not since the foundation of the republic has a President of the United States, in public statement, declared the right of this nation to be heard in the terms which will settle a war in which this country has no active part. Not since the days of Washington has a President of the United States laid bare the foreign relations of this government before the Senate in open session. The dignified Senate, taken by surprise, sat in amazement as the President, speaking to the body which shares with him the conduct of foreign affairs, announced his tradition-defying doctrine. But two short hours before he appeared at the Capitol, the President had notified Vice-President Marshall that he wished to be heard, and there was no warning of the nature of his talk. It fell upon ears startled and astonished. A few members of the Cabinet were seated in arm chairs across the front of the Senate, the galleries were jammed even to the stairways, and a full attendance of Senators heard the speech. In quiet, low tones that reached every part of the chamber, President Wilson read his carefully prepared announcement. The United States found itself an aggressive, vigorous claimant for a place at the council board which shall frame the terms to end the European war and insure future peace.

As soon as the President had delivered his message, the text of the peace demands was speeding by cable and wireless to the capitals of Europe. It left behind an astonished, amazed diplomatic corps. The American ambassador at Paris and the one at Petrograd the same evening delivered the President's message to the foreign offices.

There is great diversity of opinion in Congress concerning the President's address. Senator Cummins of Iowa, a Republican, offered a resolution in the Senate to take up the President's message on peace and discuss it. Senator Stone, chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, and a Democrat, opposed the resolution, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and 25,000 copies of the message ordered printed as a public document.

PRESIDENT WOULD SPEED UP HIS LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

The President remained at the Capitol three hours, discussing matters of legislation with Senate leaders in an effort to speed up his legislative program. It was announced that he would go to the Capitol three times weekly, until the legislation he desires is carried through. Mr. Wilson will probably give particular attention to the Senate. The House, through the means of the previous question and the Rules Committee, can be driven at top speed. Not so the Senate where, as yet, debate is not at the mercy of the majority. No order to "cut out talk and get down to work" can, as matters stand, be executed in the Senate.

Nothing like this has ever "gone" before. Will this "go?" The President has great power and he does not shrink from executing it. He takes his party leadership seriously. At present he sees a congested legislative situation, with some measures in which he is much interested threatened with failure. He wants to save them, and so takes charge in person.

ELECTORAL VOTE COUNTED

A concurrent resolution was read in the Senate Wednesday that, pursuant to the requirements of the Constitution, on the fourteenth day of February, 1917, the electoral vote shall be counted in the Hall of the House of Representatives, both Senators and members of the House being assembled. Two tellers from the Senate and two from the House having previously been appointed will read aloud the names of the states and count aloud the electoral vote. Upon the conclusion of the count, the presiding officer, who shall be the president of the Senate, shall announce the result of the vote which shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice-President of the United States.

The House Committee on Territories, after days of discussion over the Alaskan and Hawaiian bills, has decided upon bone dry prohibition for both territories.

The Wickersham bill, to prohibit the manufacture, sale, gift, possession, or transportation of liquor in Alaska, was ordered favorably reported to the House.

The Hawaiian bill was then taken up and the main features of the Alaskan bill written into it.

ALASKA BILL INTRODUCED IN SENATE

Senator Jones of Seattle, on the twenty-third of January, introduced the Alaska bill in the Senate and it is hoped a hearing can be arranged this week; if so, the bill will probably be favorably reported and passed during the session. Mrs. Hatcher, president of the Alaska W. C. T. U., has been untiring in her endeavor to get this bill through Congress, visiting the members of the Committees on Territories, placing a statement of the situation in the hands of each member of the committees, appearing before them when called, replying to numberless questions, keeping the people in Alaska in touch with the situation, and in every possible way throwing light upon the question under consideration.

Dr. Wadman, who has worked unceasingly for a year, is hoping for favorable action at this session on the Hawaiian bill which, with the Alaska bill, was favorably reported this morning.

There has been a stirring, breezy time in the Senate this week over an effort to secure a raise in the pay of government clerks receiving $1,000 and under a year. There has been such an alarming increase in the expenditures of public funds during this Congress that Democratic members of the Appropriations committee, especially, are endeavoring to keep everything down to the lowest possible figure. It was good to hear such words as these by friends of the measure in the Senate: "Parsimony is not economy. We believe in economy in governmental expenditures as thoroughly as does anybody, but it is a mighty poor policy to enforce upon clerks who receive now less than they can live on." After lengthy discussion, the amendment which had been offered carried by the small margin of 33 to 29.

WOMEN'S VOTE LARGELY INCREASES NUMBER OF VOTES CAST

Senator Shafroth of Colorado has called the attention of the Senate to the following figures, showing by comparison with the vote in non-suffrage states how the woman's vote has increased the number of votes cast. In 1916 Colorado cast 294,375 votes and Maine 136,405. In 1916 Washington polled 370,000 votes and Connecticut 214,283. In 1916 Kansas polled 629,813 votes and Oklahoma 292,416. Illinois uses a separate ballot for women and again and again in local elections the count has proved that the vote cast by women, who are in a minority in the city of Chicago, was large in proportion to their numbers. The presidential election of 1916 is representative. In Chicago 504,674 men and 303,801 women registered and of these 96 per cent of men and 95 per cent of women voted. Chicago women themselves not only registered but apparently stimulated men to enroll in larger numbers than ever before. The results show a poll list for 1916 three times that of Chicago in the presidential election of 1912.

As may be remembered the District of Columbia has no Sunday rest law. A bill introduced by Representative Heflin of Alabama provides that Sunday work on streets and buildings be prohibited. The bill has a preamble, stating that Washington should be a model city, at least in the observance of the Sabbath, but that construction work is carried on in violation of the general rules regarding a day of rest. Provision is made for emergencies arising on Sunday, making work necessary, but a permit from the commissioners would be needed. Fines running from five dollars to fifty dollars are prescribed as penalties for violation.

A fraternity of Georgetown University has taken the lead in a movement that is expected to bring about total prohibition at student social gatherings at Georgetown.

FRATERNITY BANQUET DRY

Announcements were sent out today for the annual Delta Chi banquet at the Hotel Lafayette on February 10, and which will be held as a joint function of the Georgetown undergraduates and the Washington alumni chapters. The banquet will be dry. George B. Cortelyou, Dudley Field Malone, and Representatives Neely of West Virginia, Bennet of New York, Smith of Minnesota and Haskell of New York are among the members who are expected to attend. Should the other fraternities at Georgetown, local and national, follow the lead of the oldest of the chapters in the university, Delta Chi, Blue and Gray student gatherings in the future will be decidedly dry affairs.

A meeting of three pioneers at the University Club one night this week was history-making. These men were Roald Amundsen, Norwegian discoverer of the South Pole and finder of the magnetic pole; Captain Robert A. Bartlett, Admiral Peary's lieutenant on the last discovery of the North Pole, and General Greely, who in 1881 penetrated the frozen north and returned to tell a tale of horror unparalleled in arctic exploration. They all made most interesting speeches and the occasion was a notable one.

N. W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, January 25, 1917.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Thirty Per Cent Cut in Beer Production in Great Britain Probable

Baron Devonport, food controller of Great Britain, has recommended that the quantity of beer to be brewed for the year beginning April 1, shall be restricted to 70 per cent of the output of the previous year. The war cabinet, it is reported, has approved this proposal and has decided that a corresponding restriction shall be placed upon the release of wines and spirits from bond and a bill for the above purposes will be introduced in the coming parliamentary session. These restrictions will reduce the output of beer to 50 per cent of the figures for the financial year 1913-1914.

Mrs. Lloyd George and Miss Agnes Slack Address Large Audiences in Wales

White ribboners of the United States are gratified to hear constantly of the enthusiasm of Mrs. Lloyd George for the cause of temperance. Like her noted husband she is a loyal advocate of total abstinence and prohibition. The December number of the White Ribbon, the official organ of the National British Women's Temperance Association, says:

"Mrs. Lloyd George and Miss Agnes Slack visited Swansea quite recently, on the occasion of the annual meeting of the Welsh Women's Temperance Society, when the Tabernacle Welsh Chapel, holding 2,000, was crowded to its utmost limit, and the vast audience was much impressed by the earnest and eloquent speeches delivered by Mrs. Lloyd George and Miss Slack."

Legislative Victories

South Dakota

"Full suffrage amendment submitted by South Dakota legislature," says a telegram from Mrs. Anna R. Simmons, president of the South Dakota W. C. T. U. "House vote sixty-six to twenty-seven; senate thirty-six to twelve. Amendment passed by both houses without discussion. Bone dry law sure to be framed, and things are coming our way."

Indiana

By a vote of 70 to 28 the lower house of the Indiana legislature on January 25 passed the Wright bill, providing for state-wide prohibition. It now goes to the senate which appears to be about evenly divided on the question. The bill provides that after January 1 "It shall be unlawful for any person to manufacture, sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquor, with intent to sell, barter, exchange, give away, furnish or otherwise dispose of the same, except as in the act provided."

Missouri

"House bill No. 123, providing for Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of Missouri, passed the Missouri house of representatives by a vote of 123 to 18," writes Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U. "This bill now goes to the senate and speedy action is expected. Our efforts for a prohibition referendum for 1918 and for honest election bills, protecting the ballot upon amendments will undoubtedly pass this session of the general assembly."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska

Arkansas Governor Signs "Bone Dry" Law

While five hundred business men sang "How Dry I Am" at a banquet on the evening of January 24, Governor Brough, who was a guest, signed the "bone dry" bill, which became effective immediately. All shipments of liquor found in transit or express offices will be seized.

Arkansas' Prohibition Legislative Calendar

Special Correspondence

Arkansas has a "bone dry" bill in both senate and house which will prohibit the shipment of liquor into the state, or between towns in the state, except for medicinal, mechanical and sacramental purposes.

Our bill to admit women to the bar was considered by the senate judiciary committee and has been reported back with the recommendation that it do pass. Our bill providing for a girls' industrial school and the establishment of a new industrial school for boys is scheduled to come up soon and will pass, without any doubt.

Bills providing for a state institution to care for the feeble-minded, a general charity hospital and the placing of the state charity institutions in the hands of a state charities and correction commission are in and have received favorable consideration.

Our social legislation program is a very full one and has every chance of success, since the incoming governor, in his inaugural address, declared for every item of it and the legislature is manifesting every desire to support the administration.

Prohibition Magic Word in Oregon

Any measure relating to the prohibition question is sure to receive favorable consideration in the Oregon legislature, according to the Portland Oregonian:

"Let any member so much as breathe the word prohibition, no matter how softly, and twenty-nine senators straightway sit upright in their chairs, compress their lips and make haste to vote Aye on the question, whatever it is," says the Portland paper.

"Do they argue? Nary a quibble. Nobody even discusses it, except, possibly, the member who proposed the question, and he touches only the very high spots. All he has to do is to say, Mr. President and Senators, this is a joint memorial, or a resolution, or a bill dealing with the prohibition question, and then and thereupon the vote is as good as unanimous in its favor. Apparently the senators have made up their minds that prohibition is here, that instead of there being less prohibition in future there is going to be more, and that they might just as well save themselves unnecessary trouble and reproaches by passing any prohibition measures the people want, or the senators think they want, without further ado.

"This attitude of the senatorial mind was well illustrated one morning when two more of Senator Eddy's joint memorials to Congress on the national prohibition issue came up for adoption. One of these memorials petitions Congress to make haste and submit to the states for ratification a national prohibition law. The other memorial urges Congress to pass a law barring liquor advertisements from the mails.

Both Adopted in Ten Minutes

"There have been sessions of the legislature, and not so very long ago, either, when a memorial of this kind would have been good for half a day's impassioned talk. Today it took the senate just ten minutes to adopt them both by unanimous vote."

Law Enforcement in China

"The ten years for opium trade with England are now up and the governors of the provinces, without waiting a minute, are issuing orders demanding total abstinence from the use of the drug and its prohibition everywhere," writes Miss Jennie V. Hughes, a Methodist missionary who is a white ribboner. "The mayor of Canton has also forbidden gambling of any kind with severe penalty for breaking the law.

"The new president of China seems to have the sympathy of the Chinese and he is most tactfully gathering about him the strong men of the progressive party. Dr. Sun Yat Sen and Dr. Wu Ting Fang are both working in Peking now and are very much liked. Much graft has been unearthed and the false officials are being dismissed. At present there is another attempt to make money out of the breweries and the temperance people are planning a very active campaign throughout the country."

Liquor Publicly Burned in Washington

At Aberdeen, Wash., recently, liquor valued at $1,500 was burned on a vacant corner lot in the presence of several hundred persons. The liquor had been confiscated from steamers and boarding houses for some months past. Mayor Phillips and Chief of Police Schmidt superintended the destruction.

The Sober Judgment of the American People for Prohibition

U. S. SENATOR VARDAMAN OF MISSISSIPPI

I shall vote for prohibition because I believe that traffic in alcoholic beverages is contrary to the best interests of the American people. I believe the use of intoxicating liquors is deleterious to the human body. It lowers the morals, it destroys the physical strength, it has made more lunatics and idiots, it has filled the jails with more criminals, and it has caused more poverty and distress than has any other evil with which the human race has to contend. My judgment about that is the sober judgment of the American people. You cannot answer the argument for prohibition with a sneer, nor can you defend the saloon with a bald and unsupported assertion.

THE WORKINGMAN VS. THE SALOON

JOHN F. CUNNEEN

(From Address at National W. C. T. U. Convention)

Workingmen should be leaders in the movement to abolish saloons, for the liquor traffic stands today the greatest enemy of the workingman. For twenty-five years I have been working in workshops. In peaceful times and in times of strikes, in prosperity and adversity, I have noticed that drink and the saloon have proven the greatest impediments to the workingman's success.

WAGES LOW IN PROPORTION TO PER CAPITA DRINK CONSUMPTION

The liquor traffic advocates claim that the saloons bring prosperity, good times and high wages to the workingman. They boast that more money was spent for liquor in the United States in 1907 than ever before. But a panic followed with over four million people out of work, hard times, low wages and starvation in the land. In 1892 the consumption of liquor increased over two gallons per capita, and the terrible panic of 1893 followed. When the consumption of liquor decreased good times returned. The people of Great Britain drink one and one-half times as much liquor per capita as do the people of the United States, but the workingmen of Great Britain do not get half the wages paid the workingmen of the United States. In Germany, where there is more liquor consumed than in Great Britain, the workingmen get only half the wages paid those of Great Britain. In France, where there is more pure alcohol consumed than in Germany, the workingmen get only about two-thirds the wages paid those of Germany. The workingmen of those countries who come to this country receive the same wages as other men here, showing that they are as good workmen. This shows plainly that the workingman receives the lowest wages and he and his family must suffer the most where the greatest amount of liquor is consumed.

The difference between the combined amount that goes to labor and the farmer or miner, goes for profit, rent, interest, taxes, etc.

Capital required to keep one person employed in the following industries:

Boots and shoes	$ 770
Clothing	1,018
Furniture	550
Brick and tile	1,720
Printing and publishing	1,376
Slaughtering and meat packing	1,481
Iron and steel	2,200
Liquor	8,837

It would take $77,000 of capital to keep one hundred boot and shoe makers at work. If the amount of capital were turned into manufacture of liquor, it would give employment to only eight persons, throwing out of work ninety-two persons. If the capital required to keep one hundred persons at work in the iron and steel business were turned into the manufacture of liquor, it would give employment to only twenty-four persons, throwing seventy-six persons out of work.

There is a brewery in Chicago capitalized for $300,000, and it employs only sixty-seven men, while near it is a glove factory capitalized for $500,000 that gives employment to twelve hundred people. The stock yards and packing industries of Chicago give employment to twenty-five thousand persons. If the same capital used in the conducting of this business were turned into the manufacture of liquor it would give employment to only six thousand persons, which would throw nineteen thousand persons out of work.

There are more than two hundred and fifty thousand persons employed in the various manufacturing industries of Chicago. If the capital used in the manufacturing industries of Chicago were to be used in the manufacture of liquor it would give employment to only about forty-five thousand persons, thereby throwing more than two hundred thousand persons out of work in the city of Chicago alone.

UNDER PROHIBITION 1,600,000 MORE EMPLOYES WOULD BE REQUIRED

If the money now spent for liquor were spent instead for shoes, clothing, food, furniture and building of new homes, it would give employment to 1,600,000 more persons than are engaged in the liquor traffic.

The saloon pays rent, taxes, cost of heat, power, light and living expenses of those conducting the business, and of their families, but so do the grocery, meat market, dry goods and furniture stores.

One wagon will supply the needs of twenty or more saloons. Most of the other stores will have at least one wagon, some of them several, to bring goods to their stores, and to their customers. That gives work to the farmer that raises horses, and the feed for them, the harness maker, the horseshoer and the wagon makers and drivers.

The liquor traffic costs more money than is paid to the railroads in freight and passenger rates. Compare the insignificantly few persons employed in the liquor traffic with the vast army of people employed in the railroad business of the country.

Workingmen, vote against your worst enemy, the saloon. When the workingmen down the whisky trust, and the beer trust, then will they get their just rights. No one claims that the saloon is a moral institution. Facts prove that it is an enormous financial loss as well as a moral degradation to the community which maintains it.

The workingman will help himself most when he places himself in opposition to the saloon and the liquor traffic —his worst enemies.

If all saloons were put out of business, it would throw some people out of work temporarily, but conditions would be speedily readjusted and more work would be given to more people as money cannot be spent for anything that will give less work to fewer people than when it is spent for liquor. It would be of benefit to mankind to throw out of work the grave diggers who dig the graves for the 80,000 to 100,000 persons that drink kills in our country every year, and also the coffin makers who make coffins for them.

THE SALOON THE POOR MAN'S WORST ENEMY

All of a poor man's wealth is invested in his children. The poor man sacrifices his whole life to raise his children and hopes that when they grow up they will be a help to him in his old age. If the rich man's children go to the bad the rich man still has money to support him, but when the poor man's children go to the bad all his wealth is lost and he is left in his old age to a life of misery. The saloon is an institution that robs the poor man of his children and he ought to be against it even more than the rich man.

The rich men will not live where there are saloons. They will have their land deeds fixed up so that no saloons can be established, or they will have laws made to bar out saloons. Some Christian people ease their consciences by having laws made to keep the saloons away from the church doors; but when you drive the saloons away from the rich man's home and the doors of the church, you drive them to the homes of the poor people—the least able of all to withstand their ravages. The poor man cannot drive the saloon away from his door with money, like the rich man, for he has not the money; but he has a vote, and with that vote he can, and should, drive the saloon away from his door.

I believe that Almighty God guides the minds and the hearts of the American people and brings them safely through every crisis. I believe that this great moral revolution now spreading over the land has been instilled into the minds and hearts of the people by Almighty God, that this nation of ours might not be destroyed by the liquor traffic. The liquor traffic today is changing this "land of the free and home of the brave" into "the land of the spree and the home of the knave." I believe that if this nation lives, the saloon must die. We are not called upon today to shoulder a gun and go forth to war to suffer the terrible privations of a soldier's life; to, perhaps, bleed or die that our country may be victorious. No; all that we are called upon to do is to go to the polls and cast a ballot that will save our nation. Every voter who loves his country should cast the vote that will crush the American saloon, the worst enemy this country has.

PROHIBITION'S CONTRIBUTION TO SEATTLE'S WELFARE

BANK DEPOSITS SURPASS ALL PREVIOUS RECORDS

Month by month during 1916, Seattle's banking record climbed. On November 17, 1916, the record showed a gain in deposits of over $20,000,000. Total deposits passed the $100,000,000 mark and bank clearings for the same period aggregated $800,000,000, all this without the financial support of a brewery, a distillery or a saloon. No bank failed because booze was outlawed. No meat market, grocery, clothing store or shoe house closed doors because the saloon trade was withdrawn. Verily what a revelation! A great and prosperous city absolutely independent of the liquor traffic! Hasten National Prohibition!

SEVEN MILES OF NEW BUILDINGS

Apropos of the oft repeated statement found in booze promotion literature, to the effect that prohibition kills business, etc., it is quite in order to quote from the resumé of the first year's transactions in Seattle, Wash., under prohibition, as given in the Seattle Times of December 24, 1916.

"Before the last day of December, Seattle will have constructed nearly seven miles of buildings since January 1, 1916—enough to line both sides of First, Second, Third and Fourth avenues from Yesler way to Pike street without a gap, with enough left over to solidly fill both sides of Westlake avenue from Pike street to Lake union and both sides of Pine and Pike street east from Fourth avenue to Broadway.

"The total value of these buildings will reach $8,500,000, a gain of thirty-three per cent over the total for 1915."

That business of the "right kind" does not shun dry cities is evidenced by the fact that $1,000,000 has been invested in factory buildings and $1,500,000 has been expended in the construction of retail store buildings, a gain of 350 per cent over 1915.

During 1916 "Seattle dry" set a trade record of over $400,000,000. Despite all the predictions of the saloonatics, it is amply proven that great cities can live, grow, prosper, increase in population, reduce crime and lessen taxation, all without the presence of the saloon.

PROHIBITION AND SANTA CLAUS PARTNERS

The children rejoice when prohibition joins with Santa Claus to give them a good time. Writing recently from Seattle a lady long a resident in that city and a close observer of affairs, says: "This was an unusually happy Christmas in Seattle. It is said more toys were sold than ever before, owing to the fact that men spent for toys the money that they formerly spent for booze. For a number of years I was often in the grocery store with my husband and always at Christmas time we would be very late going home. I used to notice how the saloons were decorated for the Christmas trade and were always doing a big business. On Christmas eve, late into the night, men would be going from saloon to saloon by hundreds and thousands. I always thought of the children's empty stockings at home that might have been well filled with the money spent for drink, and of the fathers going home drunk and ugly on Christmas eve. Now that is changed and thousands know what Christmas means, with a sober father, stockings well filled and plenty to eat. It is worth all the work and sacrifice that were given to make Washington dry."

Praise God, many thousands of homes can testify that prohibition helps to make a merry Christmas! Well may every child exclaim, "Prohibition is a friend of mine."

The report of the county clerk of King county, Washington, for the year 1916, the first year under the dry law, shows a decrease of 165 in criminal cases filed, with civil actions running virtually the same as formerly. The receipts from fees showed a gain of $915.95 despite the decrease in criminal cases, while the prosecuting attorney's office gives an interesting record "of the deterioration of crime since the saloons were abolished."

FEWER JUVENILE COURT CASES

In the Juvenile Court of King county, Judge Dykeman, presiding, notes the fact that 133 fewer children were brought to the juvenile court than in the preceding year. In his statement filed in the superior court Judge Dykeman says:

"The decrease is plainly the most significant factor. When a child comes to the juvenile court it means that the social organization has at some point been a failure. When the volume of juvenile court cases increases disproportionately with the increase of population it means that the social integrity of our citizenship is declining. Conversely, when fewer children drift into perilous conditions of neglect and irregular conduct because of insufficient guardianship, it is the most immediate and reliable evidence of a substantial condition among the people. It is gratifying to observe that the number of children brought to the King county juvenile court during the year 1916 was 133 fewer than during the same period of 1915. If we admit the usual increase in population, this decline is all the more significant.

"Now, as to the cause of the improved condition: It has long been known by sociologists that children have suffered directly and extensively from the traffic in alcoholic beverages and their consumption. I state the influence in this way because children are influenced unfavorably in their development and conduct, not only by the conditions which result from a state of intoxication on the part of the parent, but also from general immoral and degrading influences which inevitably attach to the ordinary saloon. The truthfulness of these observations seems obvious."

DRY VIRGINIA SETS NEW STANDARD

Records of the first month under the dry regime in Virginia show that commitments to county and city jails fell off 1,554 during November from the total of 3,134 for the previous wet month of October.

LYNCHBURG JAIL NEARLY EMPTY

Not in seventeen years were there as few prisoners in the Lynchburg jail as on December 20. Two white men, two negro men and two negro women constituted the number and one of them was being held to serve eighteen years for wife murder committed last spring.

Secretary J. T. Maston of the State Board of Charities and Correction is quoted as follows in the Roanoke World News:

"The assumption that the reduction in the number of commitments bears a direct relationship to the withdrawal of liquor from the people is strengthened by a study of the returns from the cities and counties. During October, 2,140 persons were committed to the city jails, as compared with 845 in November, an absolute decrease of 1,295 or 60.5 per cent. To the county jails were committed in October 994 persons, compared with 735 in November, an absolute decrease of 259, or only 26 per cent. From these comparisons it appears that the decrease in urban commitments was more than twice as great proportionately as the decrease in rural commitments, a circumstance that is explained by the fact that prohibition worked greater changes in the cities where the saloon was the rule, than in the counties where the saloon was the exception.

NOT CRIMINALS, BUT DISEASED, SAYS MASTON

"The figures seem to indicate that during the month before prohibition went into effect there were in jail 1,554 persons who were not criminals, but were diseased through lack of self-control. This means that the state has been sending the sick to jail as criminals when hospital care was what they needed. It means also that if the state had treated these unfortunates fairly, they would never have gone to jail, their homes would not have been overshadowed, and their families would not have been disgraced.

MANY SAVED FROM BEING CRIMINALS

"In prohibiting the sale of intoxicants in Virginia, the state has taken one step toward saving the 1,554 who might otherwise not be in jail. Prohibition seems to have accomplished what his own will power could not do for the individual. It has thus far been a substitute for inhibition. But, if in October there were 1,554 diseased persons who craved alcohol and who, when they could get it easily, became lawless under its influence, then, should interstate shipments of intoxicating liquors become more frequent, many of this number are apt to be subjected to temptation again, and there will then be a corresponding increase in the jail population."

Surely the last paragraph offers sufficient argument in favor of national prohibition and consequent obliteration of interstate traffic in intoxicants.

PROHIBITION PROSPERITY PARAGRAPHS

In emphatic chorus the newly dry states and cities and those which have had prohibition for a term of years are declaring that prohibition is a money-saver and has brought financial prosperity to every line of legitimate business.

BENEFITS OF DRY REGIME IN WEST VIRGINIA

Mayor G. E. Bruce of Charleston, West Virginia, whose city derived $53,000 annually from fifty-three saloons, in a communication to the Los Angeles Tribune, says: "When the city went dry and the fifty-three saloons closed down, within ten days these buildings were all occupied by merchants in legitimate lines of trade and the city began to prosper.

"The city has forged ahead and has built in the last two years forty miles of streets and kept pace with all improvements, kept its streets clean and the city in good sanitary condition. We have reduced the tax levy twenty-four cents and have ample cash on hand to pay all obligations.

"This comes about by a large reduction in the police department, a large reduction in our expenses and a large reduction in the poor fund. These reductions greatly exceed the $53,000 we received from the fifty-three saloons in the city. Real estate is much more valuable and the closing of the saloon has increased the merchandise and food consumption."

EXPERIENCE OF NORTH DAKOTA PROVES PROHIBITION A PRIZE

North Dakota, with a farm wealth unsurpassed in the United States, and a per capita wealth and expenditure for public education excelled by only two states, offers a good example of the sense of the prohibition policy, says the Christian Science Monitor. "Thousands of young men and women in North Dakota have never seen a brewery sign or a saloon. As Thomas Dreier remarks in the Community Forum, the idea that a town which goes dry is headed for hard times has almost disappeared. Experience in North Dakota and elsewhere has proved that there is no truth in the argument that money obtained from liquor licenses is necessary to keep the tax levy within reasonable bounds."

"The banishment of the saloon itself has been of the greatest good, for it is really here that is lodged the seat of trouble caused by drunkenness," says the president of one of the strongest banks in Arizona. "There can be no possible excuse or reason for a licensed saloon."

J. W. Dowell of the Mercantile National Bank of Memphis, Tenn., made the following statement: "While the city and state have lost the revenue from the liquor dealers, we believe it has largely been made up by the saving in court costs and arrests, and we further believe that the workingmen are now paying their debts better than when we had the open saloon."

"If it injures a city to have drunkenness almost wiped out, then Savannah has been injured by such laws and their honest enforcement" was the comment of Mayor W. T. Pierpont of Savannah, Ga., on prohibition in Georgia.

Lee Barnes, sheriff of Walla Walla, Wash., is quoted in a Montana paper as saying:

"I have ceased to attempt to keep account of the numbers of times women have come to me and said something like this: 'I want to tell you how much we enjoy prohibition. My husband took me to a picture show soon after the state went dry, and that's the first time in lots of years that he has thought of asking me to go anywhere with him.'"

"PROHIBITION HAS SAVED ALABAMA"

Lieutenant-Governor Kilby, in reply to the question, "What has prohibition done for Alabama," replied, "In a word, prohibition has saved Alabama." Mr. Kilby in addition to his public office, is the head of several large manufacturing plants and a leading banker. His experience with prohibition dates back to pioneer days when as mayor of Anniston it became his duty to enforce the prohibition law of the city although openly hostile to prohibition. His experience at that time led him to join the ranks of the drys and ever since then he has fought valiantly for prohibition both local and state-wide. In telling of the benefits of prohibition to Alabama to a representative of the Christian Science Monitor, Mr. Kilby says:

"Credit is on a better basis, and individual deposits have grown enormously, particularly in the savings departments of local banks. We now have a home-owning and home-loving people, and crime has been reduced to a practical minimum.

"Conditions in Birmingham, Alabama's metropolis, are very much the same as at Anniston. Mine operators and manufacturers have gone on record to the effect that prohibition has brought about better working conditions. Most of the buildings formerly occupied by saloons have been taken over by other lines of business, and the police records are remarkable by comparison. For instance, in the month of November there was not a single arrest in the city of Birmingham for drunkenness, and during the recent state fair, when thousands of visitors were there from all over Alabama, the lack of drunkenness and every other kind of disorder was so noticeable that it was commented on in the papers by officers of the law.

"A recent grand jury at Montgomery, Alabama's capital city, went on record as paying tribute to the effects of prohibition in that county. The report showed fewer cases had been presented to the jury than at any term held in the past twenty-five years. Grand juries throughout the state have officially noticed a marked decrease in crime under the present laws.

"The civic consciousness has been aroused, and there have been general clean-up campaigns over the state recently, notably at Girard, an Alabama-Georgia border town, where hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of liquor was confiscated by the state and destroyed, and at Huntsville, a former dispensary town. So strong is the sentiment for law enforcement in Alabama that while the governor, elected on a local option ticket, refuses to honor warrants to defray the expenses of the attorney general, who operates under a new state law enacted by the last prohibition legislature, the people of the state are paying for the clean-up campaigns by private subscriptions."

DECREASE IN DIVORCES IN COLORADO

Prohibition, more than any other agency, is given the credit for a most remarkable decrease in the number of divorce suits in the Denver district and county courts, the tribunals having jurisdiction over divorce matters, says the Denver Post. This decrease, according to the court officials, amounts to nearly 40 per cent for 1916 over the preceding year.

SUFFRAGE SIGN BOARD

"MRS. SPEAKER" IN OREGON HOUSE FOR THE FIRST TIME

A woman presided as speaker over the Oregon house of representatives on January 24, for the first time, it is said, in the history of the state, when Speaker Robert N. Stanfield retired shortly after the session opened and turned the gavel over to Mrs. Alexander Thompson, representative from The Dalles. Mrs. Thompson held the chair until noon. It was as "Mrs. Speaker" that members called as they asked for recognition and introduced their bills, and none of the fifty-nine men on the floor lit a cigar during her rule.

WOMAN NAMED AS ASSISTANT ATTORNEY GENERAL FOR ILLINOIS

Miss Jeanette Bates has recently been appointed assistant attorney general of Illinois by Edward J. Brundage, the newly elected attorney general. "I am an eager supporter of suffrage, although I have been so busy being a lawyer I have had no time to join clubs or give speeches," Miss Bates told a reporter for the Chicago Herald. The duties of the new position pertain to the prosecution of violators of state factory laws and will be particularly interesting to women, as so many children are concerned. To our knowledge only one other state confers a position of this character upon a woman, and that is the state of Colorado. Miss Bates is the adopted mother of two children of eight and ten years of age, whom she has had for six years.

NORTH DAKOTA WOMEN TO HAVE SUFFRAGE

Special Correspondence

The first bills to pass both houses of the North Dakota legislature were two equal suffrage measures, one, similar to the Illinois law, granting limited suffrage to women and becoming effective July 1, the other, a constitutional amendment which must pass another legislature before going to the people.

Both bills were drawn by Hon. R. M. Pollock, a prominent attorney and a staunch friend of the cause, and were brought to the capitol by the state president of the W. C. T. U., Mrs. Elizabeth Preston Anderson, who has been in attendance since the beginning of the session, working for this and other reform measures. She is accompanied by the corresponding secretary, Mrs. Barbara H. Wylie. The state treasurer, Mrs. Minette B. Bowe, is also present as senate stenographer. The "Votes for Women" League through its president, Mrs. Grace Clendenning, and vice-president, Mrs. Mary Darrow Weible, has done very effective work. It is a remarkable fact that both these bills were passed, without debate, about ten days after they were introduced, the vote in the senate being 38 to 11, and in the house 88 to 20. North Dakota women are jubilant over the victory.

WHITE RIBBONER IN MONTANA LEGISLATURE

The next Montana house of representatives will have two women members, Mrs. Maggie S. Hathaway of Stevensville and Mrs. Emma A. Ingalls of Kalispell. Both women were suffrage workers in the Montana campaign, and Mrs. Hathaway is a well known member of the W. C. T. U.

California Campaigners for State-wide Prohibition—Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, president of the Southern California W. C. T. U., and Mr. Irvine Among the Number

ANALYZING THE LIQUORITES' FALSE PHILOSOPHY

Robert A. Woods, in the December 30 issue of The Survey, made the statement that "not far from 60,000,000 Americans now live in dry territory." H. J. Kaltenbach, president of the New York State Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, in an open letter in the current issue of The Survey, attempts to correct what he terms a misstatement of Mr. Woods, insisting that the liquor shipments by freight and express into the prohibition states show that consumption of liquor has not materially diminished.

Mr. Woods aptly replies:

"It will be noticed that when Mr. Kaltenbach gives the full figures in support of his claims as to the increase in the use of liquor, this increase represents a period of years and covers the whole country. As a matter of fact, the national rate of increase has steadily declined and has recently passed the vanishing point.

"If it is true that more liquor than ever is consumed in prohibition territory, and under particularly objectionable conditions, Mr. Kaltenbach might explain why arrests for drunkenness are invariably reduced from 40 to 75 per cent.

"It may safely be taken for granted that the liquor interests will from now on make one of those sudden shifts away from this argument which are characteristic of their mode of defense. In fact, such procedure is already foreshadowed by their attitude toward the Supreme court decision on the Webb-Kenyon law which closely restricts, and may even prohibit interstate sales. Their claim has always been that prohibition does not and cannot prohibit. Now with the probability in addition that they will not be allowed the use of the mails in promoting their business in prohibition territory—they are apparently beginning to urge that the reason why prohibition is to be considered a failure and a fraud is precisely because it does prohibit.

"The suggestion on the part of the liquor interests that as soon as prohibition begins to prohibit toward the vanishing point, the prohibition wave will begin to recede, represents in itself a fair challenge; but as the supporters of prohibition have labored unceasingly to bring about this situation, they are quite unconcerned as to any such danger. The overwhelming momentum of the established and ascertained results that will come in from twenty-three de-alcoholized states, including a dozen large cities, will abundantly provide for the reaction of the small number of persons with whom Mr. Kaltenbach and his colleagues are in touch that vote prohibition for others while still insistent upon a supply of liquor for themselves.

"For a whole generation the liquor sellers' propaganda has been successful in riveting it into the minds of a great number of sensible men that state prohibition was not worth consideration because it meant merely an objectionable change in the mode of distribution. A steadily growing proportion of such men in license states are today leaning toward national prohibition as a project essentially different on account of the relative certainty that it would be really effectual. If now they are to be assured by leading representatives of the liquor trade that even individual states can make a success of prohibition, these particular sensible men and many others like them will feel that the defense has thrown up its case—and the abolition of the liquor business throughout the country, allowing two or three generations for the disappearance of all the after-effects of alcohol, will bring about a condition like what would have been if intoxicating liquor had never been discovered."

THE HORRORS OF PROHIBITION

Ex-Congressman Landis Predicts Woes of Dry Era

The "horrors of prohibition" were exposed by ex-Congressman Frederick Landis at the tenth annual dinner of the Traffic Club in Chicago recently. After assuring his hearers that the "dreadful condition" was imminent, Mr. Landis painted a picture of the results.

"The whole hardware industry will suffer," he said. "There will be no demand for padlocks or prison cells, and I am not taking into consideration the great number of men who are engaged in the business of making brass knuckles, but that is only one of the minor evils which will come from prohibition.

Hard for Gamblers

"Gamblers will not only be reduced to want, they will be forced to go to work and stay there. The industrial depression which will follow will extend beyond the shores of this country. It will reach the Philippines. When the multitude that blocks the approaches to the scaffolds is reduced there will be a great decrease in the hemp rope market.

"Free lunch—being free, it costs us only $2,000,000 yearly—will disappear and the pretzels will vanish from the market and from politics. Who will buy us on election day when there is no more alcohol? The citizen will no longer be able to go into the voting booth with his conscience and a $2 bill.

"Another question: Is it constitutional? The constitution guarantees every man the right to a trial by jury in criminal cases. The abolition of alcohol will practically remove all necessity for jury trials. What will become of old habeas corpus, if men can't be induced to go to jail?"

LET KANSAS LEAD IN NATIONAL PROHIBITION MOVEMENT SAYS GOVERNOR CAPPER IN INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Kansas may, with all modesty, I think, lay claim to elements of leadership in many political reforms and in many humanitarian movements, but nothing that Kansas has done, not even the heroic part she played in the great struggle for human liberty in the '60s, has added so greatly to the sum total of human happiness as her vigorous espousal of the cause of prohibition of the liquor traffic. In the long struggle for prohibition extending over a generation, Kansas has been the leader, the inspiration, the beacon of hope. In the campaign of 1916, when prohibition was an issue in twelve states and one territory, Kansas played a most important part. And now when nation-wide prohibition is in sight, the battle nearly won, when this iniquitous traffic is making its last stand, Kansas must do still more to hasten the day when the sale and manufacture of intoxicants shall forever be prohibited and the nation be purged of this plague and sore. America is ready for it. I believe we shall see a sober nation without a groggery, a brewery or a distillery within its borders. Until that happy day dawns, Kansas must protest unceasingly against the nefarious partnership of the federal government with the infamous traffic. It is intolerable that the United States government should arbitrarily override and defy the sovereignty of the commonwealths which have prohibition laws. The federal government ignores the laws of our state and

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane
CIRCULATION MANAGER, Miss Addie A. Austin

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, February 1, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

TWO GOOD LEAFLETS FOR FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND DAY

The articles, "Frances Willard's Widening Way" by Elizabeth P. Gordon, and "The Frances Willard Memorial Fund" by Frances P. Parks, which appeared in last week's Union Signal, have been published in leaflet form, and can be procured for 35 cents per 100, from the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.

THE VALUE OF THE "OPEN LETTER"

The open letter as a means of educating the public is not being used as largely as it ought. Many newspapers which have not yet completely emancipated themselves from liquor influence are still willing to publish both sides of the liquor question, and if a subscriber sends in a brief, well-written presentation of the prohibition side of the question the editor will publish it in the form of an open letter. As an illustration, a state lecturer of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., Miss Lila H Matteson, was stirred by an article on "Boston Turns Down Prohibition" in the Daily Northwestern of Oshkosh, an anti-prohibition paper, and sent to the editor a comprehensive and spirited letter convincingly showing that Boston's failure to roll up a majority for prohibition was in no sense an indication of the retrogression of the movement, as the editor had intimated, calling attention to the large number of Massachusetts cities that had voted dry, and citing evidence generally of the popularity of prohibition throughout the country. The article was given a prominent place on the editorial page. The writer incidentally remarked that the reason she was able to refute the misstatements was because she was a constant reader of The Union Signal, and kept a file of the papers for reference.

There are instances of this character of course in every community. They ought to be multiplied an hundredfold. Let us preempt the "open letter" field for prohibition.

A WEAPON MAY CUT BOTH WAYS

The city of St. Louis, Mo., as well as its booze manufacturers, are being aroused to a remembrance of the fact that sometimes a weapon may cut both ways. The "out state" people whose vote was for a dry Missouri realizing that it was the wet vote of St. Louis that held the state in the wet column are transferring their trade to dry cities. The brewers and their ilk have long held the boycott club over people, and many were thus made unwilling defenders of this iniquitous business. From the lowest to the highest, men have feared to offend the liquor barons lest they be made thereby to suffer in their own affairs. Even "a worm will turn," and it is small wonder an indignant contingent turns to the boycott to show its displeasure toward the agency that defeated a measure so manifestly right. But already a change is taking place in St. Louis. On the occasion of Mr. Bryan's recent visit to that city immense throngs crowded to hear him in nine great addresses and large numbers stood for hours in order to secure entrance, even though he spoke on the once tabooed subject of prohibition.

The president of the Retail Liquor Dealers' Association announces that "Prohibition is coming not later than 1924 and the trade may as well get ready for it." Sensible advice. Glad they begin to see the light. If those now engaged in trying to perpetuate a nefarious business will use the means thus expended for the change that is bound to come, they will far more surely add to their own prosperity and merit a helping hand should such be needed.

EVERY MAN A SUPREME COURT FOR HIMSELF?

A group of Chicago aldermen were discussing the introduction of an anti-treating ordinance at the next city council meeting, and the possibility of such a dire calamity as its passage prompted a pro-liquor city father to ejaculate: "If I want to buy my friend a glass of wine I will do it whether there is an anti-treating ordinance or not." It is this habit of being a "supreme court" unto itself that makes the liquor traffic a menace to the American republic. One not infrequently sees articles and hears addresses deploring the laxity of law enforcement and the growing disrespect for law in this country, and far be it from us to minimize the need for such homilies. But how can one expect any other condition of affairs so long as we permit in our midst an institution that not only disregards the restrictive and regulatory laws relating to its business but boasts of this disregard and creates an atmosphere of law violation wherever it exists. Recently in a public debate between men prominent in the prohibition movement and leading liquorites the representatives of the distilleries openly defied the federal government to enforce a national prohibitory law when it should be adopted.

Not until the law-nullifying element—the liquor traffic—is eliminated from America can we hope to overcome this serious weakness in our national life.

LET THE LIQUOR INTERESTS MAKE THE PUBLIC ITS CONFIDANT!!

A writer in a leading liquor paper ventures the suggestion that "he believes it will not be difficult to secure the necessary support 'the trade' needs if 'the trade' will take the public into its confidence."

There is nothing that would so heartily meet the approval of the advocates of prohibition as for the liquor interests to really and honestly confide in the public and that to the extent of telling of the inner workings of the business which heretofore they have so agonizingly endeavored to keep from the knowledge of outsiders.

Let them turn the searchlight upon their devious and unscrupulous methods of securing custom, explain in detail how they are able through graft to systematically evade and ignore the regulations of the various cities in which they do business; let them tell how and why it is that in the dram shops there are concocted schemes for the perpetration of crimes; why invariably vice resorts and liquor shops have an intimate and interdependent relation; and criminals and white slavers find in their places a congenial rendezvous.

If the liquor interests were in truth to make a confidant of the public in these matters as a certain and sure result every decent man would hereafter cast his ballot for the entire prohibition and annihilation of the traffic. Let "the trade" do it.

WHY NOT A PROHIBITION INSURANCE COMPANY?

So pronounced is the belief in the benefits of prohibition from an economic standpoint that men of wealth are willing to guarantee that with proper enforcement of the law the financial gain will be substantial.

A recent illustration is the offer of Mr. Joseph D. Baker, president of the Citizens National Bank of Frederick, Md., to forfeit $5,000 to any charitable institution in the county if the county adopts prohibition and as a result the tax rate increases.

Only a few weeks ago Ex-Governor Foss of Boston issued to every Boston voter this challenge: "The defense of the saloon in Boston makes me tired and I make the following proposition to the voters of Boston: I will agree to see the city of Boston harmless so far as direct loss of revenue from liquor licenses, water rents and all other revenues connected with the saloons of Boston is concerned, provided the city of Boston will enter into a contract with me for a term of five years to give me one-half of any savings the city may make, directly or indirectly, on account of the city going no-license. This matter is to be referred to a commission of three: the mayor of Boston to appoint one, I to appoint one; those two to choose a third member. In reference to people thrown out of work, like bartenders, etc., because of the closing of the saloons in Boston, I will agree to secure positions for them. As to real estate to be vacated by reason of a no-license vote, the experience of cities like Seattle and Denver is that such real estate has been entirely taken up by legitimate business within three months of a no-license law becoming operative. I will put up a bond of one million dollars to protect the city in this agreement."

It might not be a bad investment for men of wealth to form a prohibition insurance company for the benefit of the communities and states which for economic reasons are afraid of adopting prohibition, guaranteeing them against all loss by reason of eliminating the saloons. The reports of the past year in the various prohibition states and cities prove that it would be a perfectly safe venture.

"PUT ME ANYWHERE AND I'LL STICK"

In an address to the students of Wellesley College, Frances E. Willard, after referring to the familiar comparison of the liquor traffic to an incoming sea, and the work of temperance societies to the dikes of Holland, said: "I was speaking of this once on a time, and I noticed that a sailor lad in the audience was listening intently. When I finished, he rose, and, with his clear blue eyes looking steadily into mine, he said, 'Miss, I'm nothing in the world but a cobblestone, but put me in the wall anywhere and I'll stick!'"

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

"If all indications mistake not, the wave of prohibition which has swept from coast to coast, from Alaska to the Gulf of Mexico, during the last few years and has laid desolate hundreds of legitimate establishments with their thousands of human dependents, has reached its high tidal mark," ventures the Brewers' Review in its New Year number.

The editor of this esteemed contemporary must have sources of information not accessible to the general public on which to base his prognostications. He can certainly find no ground for hopefulness that the wave is about to recede in the vote of the United States Senate on the District bill and the Bankhead Anti-Liquor Advertising bill, the decision of the United States Supreme court on the Webb-Kenyon law, the passage of the prohibition submission measure by both houses of the Wyoming legislature, and the recommendations of many governors in inaugural addresses and messages in favor of anti-liquor legislation.

The liquorites of the country seem to find comfort in the thought that by the Supreme court's decision sustaining the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon law, "one of the arguments for national prohibition has been removed." "Perhaps now that a dry state is permitted to wall itself against an invasion of liquor," comments the Cincinnati Times-Star, a pro-liquor paper, "it will permit the world without its walls to live as that world sees fit."

Vain hope. So long as any part of the world is rendered unfit for the rearing of boys and girls by the liquor traffic, just so long will it be opposed.

While some of the liquor journals are declaring that notwithstanding the increase of prohibition territory their business has been wonderfully prosperous, Bonfort's frankly admits that "It cannot be said that the wine and spirit trade has shared in the great prosperity that the country has enjoyed. Handicapped by our conditions, by new revenue laws, by continual agitation and by vicious attacks upon it by organized opposition the liquor industry has not had calm sailing."

Neither do the following incidents indicate the continued prosperity of "the trade":

Passou & Sons Co., manufacturers of bar fixtures, which has just gone into bankruptcy, assigned as the reason therefor, "The great strides of prohibition have hurt the business." The National Brewers' Insurance company of Chicago, which has heretofore restricted its business to brewers, maltsters and the allied industries, has amended its charter so as to give it the right to transact a general business. It will also change its name to the National Trades Fire Insurance Company. The change is made on account of the spread of the prohibition movement, the company fearing that its limitation to the brewery industry will prevent it from making the necessary growth.

SURVEY OF THE STATES

Colorado

The lower house of the Colorado legislature unanimously passed a resolution in favor of National Constitutional Prohibition and the District of Columbia prohibition measure.

New Mexico

Two prohibition bills have been introduced in the New Mexico legislature, one providing for the submission of the question of prohibition to the voters of the state, and the other providing for a "bone dry" amendment, similar to the Arizona measure.

Oklahoma

Mrs. Abbie B. Hillerman, president of the Oklahoma W. C. T. U., writes that the state has a big legislative program ahead. There have been introduced a bone dry prohibition bill, a drastic anti-cigaret bill, and a bill to raise the age of consent. There is also good prospect that a suffrage bill will be submitted.

Tennessee

Governor Rye has signed the three anti-liquor bills recently passed by the legislature. The measures, which become effective immediately, are: To prohibit clubs, lodges or associations from keeping, storing or in any way disposing of liquor; to make a second conviction for bootlegging a felony, and to make it unlawful for any firm or corporation to keep in stock or store liquor intended for present or future sale as a beverage.

Washington

The new bone dry measure has been introduced in the lower branch of the state legislature, and assigned to the committee on public morals.

Arkansas

The Arkansas senate and house have passed a bill that prohibits the shipment of liquor into Arkansas for any save medicinal and sacramental purposes.

Utah

The prohibition measure which is being drafted for presentation at this session of the Utah legislature bids fair to be the most drastic measure yet passed by any state.

New York

A state-wide prohibition measure has been introduced in both houses of the New York assembly.

Minnesota

A canvass of the senate and the house of the Minnesota legislature seems to indicate that a majority of the members of both bodies are in favor of prohibition.

Nebraska

A drastic prohibition measure patterned after the Colorado law, has been introduced in the Nebraska legislature.

Indiana

A measure prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on any railway train operating within the state of Indiana passed the lower house of the legislature by a vote of 87 to 6.

Maine

Prohibition measures in support of Governor Milliken's recommendations concerning the enforcement of the prohibition law of the state have been introduced in the senate. One measure gives the governor and council power to remove from office any county attorney who is lax in the enforcement of the laws of the state, and another bill prohibits the importation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

"There's only one world in favor of alcohol, that's the underworld," is the declaration of Charles F. Whitcomb, president of the Michigan State Gideons.

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

IN COMPANY DIVINE

He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so He bringeth them unto their desired haven. —Ps. cvii. 29, 30.

The day is long and the day is hard,
We are tired of the march and of keeping guard;
Tired of the sense of a fight to be won,
Of days to live through and of work to be done;
Tired of ourselves and of being alone.
And all the while, did we only see,
We walk in the Lord's own company;
We fight, but 'tis He who nerves our arm;
He turns the arrows which else might harm,
And out of the storm He brings a calm.
—J. R. Miller.

BE OF GOOD COURAGE

[Be strong and of good courage for the Lord thy God is with thee whithersoever thou goest.]—Joshua I, 9.

"Be strong and of good courage"
Though weary and long the way,
For the Lord thy God is with thee.
He knoweth how dreary the day.
He has given a faithful promise,
And His promises are sure,
His word and His love are steadfast,
They will unto the end endure.

"Be strong and of good courage"
For whereso'er thou go,
The Lord thy God is with thee
To soothe thy every woe.
No day so dark and gloomy,
No night so fierce and wild,
But the Father is beside thee
To uphold His fainting child.

"Be strong and of good courage,"
And cling to His outstretched hand,
In His infinite love He will guide thee
Safe to the promised land.
Be strong in His mighty power
And trust in His gracious arm,
And know He is ever with thee
To shield thy soul from harm.

"Be strong and of good courage,"
Was there ever earthly friend
Who could go where'er Thou goest,
And be with Thee to the end?
Was ever more cheering message
Flashed to a troubled soul?
"Be strong and of good courage
I am with thee to the goal."
—Margaret B. Platt.

PROHIBITION WILL AID HUMANE SOCIETY

Prohibition for the District of Columbia, according to President Walter Stilson Hutchins of the District Humane Society, will do more to achieve the objects of the society he represents than the society itself can accomplish. "The passage by the Senate of the prohibition bill, which we have every reason to expect will become a law," said Mr. Hutchins, "will put out of business in the district the cause of most of the cruelty we see around here. Poor whisky will no longer convert poor men into beasts."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTE RDAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day
March 1—Union Signal Subscription Day—Birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens
March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow

IN ORDER THAT YOUR PUBLISHING HOUSE MAY SERVE YOU SATISFACTORILY, PLEASE OBSERVE THE FOLLOWING:

BE SURE that you write plainly the address, including your name, street number or rural delivery route, city and state.

BE SURE that your order is mailed in plenty of time before you need the material. Remember that time must be allowed for the letter to reach us, for it to be entered on our books, for the material to be selected, for the package to be wrapped and addressed, and for the journey by mail or express to you.

REMEMBER also that parcel post and express are both slower than first class mail and that may delay the delivery.

IF YOU ASK to have shipment rushed, remember that 100 others may have asked the same thing in that same mail, and each must take her turn, as it will evidently be impossible always to fill every order "by return mail."

BE SURE that you state definitely just what you wish, so delay may not be caused by our having to write for more information.

THE PUBLISHING HOUSE is run by women, so do not begin your letters "Gentlemen" or "Dear Sirs." Why not say "Dear Friends"?

WHEN YOU SEND SUBSCRIPTIONS to THE UNION SIGNAL or The Young Crusader you should allow at least three weeks for the necessary routine of entering the subscriptions, etc., and for the slow carriage of second class mail, before entering complaint that the papers have not been received. But please do not wait a year before making such complaint.

WHEN SENDING SUBSCRIPTIONS and orders for literature in the same letter, please write on separate sheets, as the letters must go to different departments. Money for both departments may be covered by one draft or money order, however.

WHEN COIN is sent, it sometimes wears through the envelope and is lost. It is always safer to send a postoffice order, express order or draft on New York, Boston, Philadelphia, St. Louis or Chicago. If you must send a check, please add exchange. We are charged exchange on all personal or cashier's checks or drafts except those on the five cities mentioned above, owing to a ruling of the Chicago Clearing House. The Publishing House is not a money-making institution, so please include exchange if you must send a personal check. Make all money payable to the National W. C. T. U.

IF ANY MISTAKE is made, write us in a kindly spirit about it before you blame the Publishing House. It is possible that you may have made the mistake.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U.
1730 Chicago Avenue
Evanston, Ill.

MISS STROUT'S WORK IN BURMA

A resolution adopted at the recent national convention of the Burma W. C. T. U. heartily thanks the World's W. C. T. U. for generous help and co-operation in regard to the organizing secretary, Miss Strout. "Her labor among us for the building up and advancing of all lines of our work has been most efficient. We regret that before another convention time comes she will have left us for a much-needed and well-earned rest in her home country, the United States. Her untiring zeal and exceptional ability as a speaker and organizer have won a real success. She has gained access to all classes and communities by her perseverance and tact. We will miss her greatly, but our prayers and interest will follow her. We wish her a pleasant journey to the homeland, and if in the providence of God she should be returned to us after a season of rest, we would most gladly welcome her back."

There comes to our desk, through the courtesy of Emilie Rathou of Sweden, an especially beautiful holiday number of Vita Bandet, the official organ of the Swedish W. C. T. U. of which Miss Rathou is the editor. It contains interesting articles concerning the work and workers, illustrated by pictures of Fru Tora Fries, Fru Ina Rogberg, Fru Nina Andersson, Fru Cecilia Francke and Fru Ester Lutteman.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS

The address of Mrs. Minnie U. Rutherford Fuller, president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U. and National superintendent of the department of Juvenile Courts, Industrial Education and Anti-Child Labor, is now 1815 W. Fourteenth St., Little Rock, Ark. Correspondents are asked to note the change.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. MARGARET INGLEHART, Reedley, Calif., a pioneer worker in Cleveland, Ohio, before going to Chicago, where, for eighteen years, she was president of the Frances Willard Temperance Hospital. At the time of her death she was superintendent of Medical Temperance for Fresno county and also for the Reedley union.

MRS. MARY ADELAIDE CHILDS FIELD, St. Louis, Mo., a member of the W. C. T. U. since its organization. Mrs. Field and her husband were earnest workers for the temperance cause in the early days. Before the use of unfermented wine at the sacrament was general Mrs. Field was instrumental in having grape juice served at the communion in her own church in St. Louis.

MRS. PHEBE AVERY, Belfast, N. Y., mother of the president of the local union, and a long time member of the W. C. T. U.

MRS. JOHN DALE, Omaha, Nebr., a pioneer member of the Omaha union. Mrs. Dale lived to see the liquor traffic voted out of the state of Nebraska and was one of four workers of the early days to attend a victory banquet of Omaha white ribboners.

MR. SYLVESTER BAYES, Everson, Wash., husband of the first president of the local union.

MR. CORRIDON STEWART KALE, Everson, Wash., husband of Mrs. Lottie Kale, a long time faithful worker in the W. C. T. U.

MRS. IDA L. OBER, Newfield, N. J., an active and faithful member of the local union.

PROHIBITION A POPULAR QUESTION IN TENNESSEE LEGISLATURE

GRACE WILLIAMS ROBINS

Since 1909, Tennessee has had prohibition, but when given the "acid test" the laws were found to contain defects and flaws. The present legislature, backed by the W. C. T. U., the Anti-Saloon League and the governor of the state, is attempting to eliminate each and every one of these defects. The liquor forces, once so menacing and vigorous, apparently have ceased their struggles and given up hope.

Prohibition is popular in Tennessee today. It has been weighed in the balance and not found wanting. Tennessee likes what it has, only it wants more of it. In this desire, saint and sinner alike are united. Thousands who fought prohibition ten years—five years ago—are today eagerly clamoring for more.

Last summer it was discovered that the anti-locker club bill, passed two years ago, was, through an apparently negligible technicality, unconstitutional. Liquor began to flow again across the bars of the fashionable clubs. This has been remedied by a new club bill which passed both branches of the legislature unanimously, and goes into effect immediately. Exit the club lockers!

Other bills which have passed both house and senate and are calculated to strengthen our prohibition laws are the bootlegging bill, the storage bill and an amendment to the nuisance law. The vote in the house of representatives on these bills was 85 for and 3 against, 11 absent or not voting for the first; and 88 for, 2 against and 9 absent or not voting on the others. In the senate the vote stood in each case, 31 for and 2 opposed.

The bootlegging bill makes the second violation of the bootlegging law a felony. The storage bill prohibits the storage of intoxicating liquors in Tennessee for sale in this or any other state. It goes into effect July 1.

An amendment strengthening the nuisance act, prohibits the soliciting or receiving of orders for liquors in the state, and also goes into effect July 1. Other temperance bills are to come up later.

The temperance laws have hitherto been such that the Webb-Kenyon bill affected us little or not at all. Because of this, on Wednesday, January 17, Superintendent McAlister of the Anti-Saloon League and President Mary P. Bang of the W. C. T. U., corralled their forces in the capital city and launched a movement to secure the passage of the most drastic temperance measure Tennessee has ever known, making it unlawful for any express company, railroad, common carrier or individual to ship or transport into the state or from one place to another in the state, intoxicating liquors of any kind, to any firm or person, whether intended for personal use or otherwise. This bill, signed by fifteen representatives, has already been introduced in the lower house, its passage has been requested by Governor Rye, and there is every indication that it will be favorably considered within a week or ten days. Thus we hope to make Tennessee a bone dry state.

Equal suffrage is also a top issue in the present session of the legislature, as well as in the minds and hearts of many of the citizens, and it would seem that we are going to have franchise for women sooner than many of us had thought. The lay of the land may be scanned in the following excerpt taken from a personal letter received from a gentleman who went to Nashville for the meeting of the temperance forces on last Wednesday: "In the morning I saw the suffrage fight in the senate. The advocates wanted to postpone it and the fight was interesting. They put it off for a week and a day. Concerning the mid-day meeting of the McAlister-Bang forces, it was a good meeting and practically unanimous for a bone dry policy. A bill leading to that is to be drawn up and presented to the legislature. The afternoon the writer spent in the senate chamber watching the passage of the four liquor bills and they passed by a practically unanimous vote. The judiciary committee of the house gave a public hearing to the suffrage question after adjournment in the afternoon. Besides several good speeches by women advocates General Fitzhugh and General Cates made speeches for it, and they were about to recommend it for passage when the opponents asked for a continuance until today. After some wrangling this was granted. The suffragists seem to have possession of the town. The bill is one granting limited suffrage to women. Evidently woman suffrage is headed this way and Tennessee women are soon to become citizens."

The W. C. T. U. as an organization is active in the fight for temperance laws only, but most of our women favor equal suffrage and many of them are working as individuals for the enfranchisement of the womanhood of the state.

While these absorbing issues are of vital interest to us we are not forgetting the fight that our great organization is making for National Constitutional Prohibition. All over the state prayer services were held and educative and inspiring programs given on Thursday, January 18.

A German musician of renown who is now touring America appeared recently in Nashville. His terse comment on the situation in America was like this: "It's awful, awful—so dry in your land. No whisky, no beer, no champagne. I say 'Waiter, give me a champagne.' He say, 'Not any champagne—law say no.' I say 'Whisky will do.' He say, 'Get prescription from doctor man.' I take prescription to the drug store. Drug man give three ounces and snatch away the doctor's writing. He not let me use it but once. Oh, it awful, awful dry in this country."

NEW PROHIBITION MEASURES OCCUPY ATTENTION OF NEBRASKA LAW MAKERS

Special Correspondence

Both houses of the Nebraska legislature have gone on record by large majorities, in a memorial to Congress, to prevent the government issuing federal licenses within the borders of the state. This is a long step in advance for a state that has been as rum ridden as Nebraska, but our splendid majority of thirty thousand on November 7 has had a mighty influence in changing men's minds. Many of those who were formerly the staunchest upholders of the saloons were found voting on the right side on this measure. Our lawmakers are making a sincere effort to sift out the very best of the bills presented for law enforcement. Two hearings have recently been held by the joint committees on prohibition.

The druggists at their state convention early in January made a strong appeal for laws to protect the drug trade from the incubus of the new recruits that might be expected as a result of the saloons going out of business. We understand that twenty-five saloonkeepers in Omaha are seeking to enter the drug business after the first of May. The character of the men in the profession of pharmacy in Nebraska is very high. We have little to fear from those already engaged in the business, but it is from the new recruits that the danger will come. We are hoping for a provision for a state commissioner of prohibition to help in the enforcement of the law. Many of the counties are already making provision for adequate law enforcement. The W. C. T. U. proposes to retain the services of a high grade attorney in each judicial district who shall be available for counsel and service.

The W. C. T. U. is working for an addition to the anti-cigaret law which will insure its enforcement.

BOYS AND GIRLS ROYAL HELPERS IN THE PROHIBITION MOVEMENT

ANNA A. GORDON, National W. C. T. U. President

(From Annual Address)

Our Young Campaigners for Prohibition and our pledged boys and girls of the Loyal Temperance Legion are royal helpers in our big task. Quickly they respond to the challenge of a great prohibition campaign. Every investment of time for their instruction in the evil effects of alcohol and tobacco and in planning for their public entertainments and parades will bring untold good to the community. The children need careful instruction in all reverent and wholesome living. It should be attractively and sacredly presented. Boys and girls who choose to obey the voice of conscience will make noble and patriotic citizens.

Little hands have been signing a petition to the government at Washington—a petition from the Sunday schools of this great land—praying for the speedy enactment of the bill referring the constitutional prohibitory amendment to the states. "Whosoever," said Christ, "shall offend one of these little ones, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck and that he were cast into the midst of the sea." The suffering of these little ones caused by the iniquitious liquor traffic is unspeakable. The "whosoever" brewer and the "whosoever" distiller may well ponder these prophetic words of Christ. Such "offenders" are today so numerous even in this enlightened twentieth century that were Christ's denunciation to be carried into effect the supply of millstones would be soon exhausted.

* * * * * * *

No gathering so stirs our hearts as a large audience of eager, responsive boys and girls. It is a high privilege to enlist in our Loyal Temperance Legion these young recruits. Earnestly I urge our younger white-ribbon women to devote their best endeavors to this most important phase of our work.

"Miss Mary E. Brown, National superintendent of Moral Education, has been with us over Sunday," writes Mrs. Emma L. Starrett, of Central City, Nebr., National superintendent of Christian Citizenship. "She gave a fine lecture on 'Seen Through the Eyes of a Policewoman.' She also spoke in our junior and high schools on 'Moral Education.' Our city superintendent was enthusiastic over her manner of presenting such a difficult subject. I wish every public school in the land might have her message."

JUDGE JOYNER'S BIRTHDAY CELEBRATION

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

"This is my forty-fifth birthday, Sara," announced Judge Joyner as he arose from the breakfast table one October morning. "I am going to celebrate in the good old-time way with an eggnog. Society people are serving it at many of their social functions, and it is the finest drink ever invented."

"These people are reviving a harmful old custom, too," declared Mrs. Joyner. "It should be condemned by all Christian people. Prohibition and other uplifting movements have been such enlighteners that there is no excuse for backsliding into the demoralizing customs of the past."

"No harm can possibly come of an eggnog, Sara. A few friends meeting together socially and drinking a delicious, invigorating beverage is as harmless as an afternoon tea. I am a deacon in the church and of course I would do nothing to lead anyone wrong. Have you baked my birthday cake?"

"Yes, and it is a success. Mind, though, I will have nothing to do with an eggnog."

"As you please. I will bring a few friends home with me this evening so have the eggs and—"

"I told you I will have nothing to do with an eggnog."

"Then I will order the eggs from the grocer and mix it when I return. Will you permit the cook to have the dining room in order for my guests?"

"The cook is at your command, as you pay her wages."

"Very well. That eggnog is scheduled for six o'clock this evening."

Judge Joyner invited three elderly friends to his birthday celebration who had never been known to be drunk, but who were not averse to a return to old-time conviviality.

As the four stood on a corner waiting for the street car, Tom Jenkins, who drove a jitney for Brown and Smith's garage, came whizzing down the street in a big touring car and stopping near the curb called:

"Come and have a ride, Judge. I pass your house."

"Thank you, Tom. Any room for my friends?"

"Sure. All of you get in."

The judge placed himself by the driver while his three friends occupied the rear seat.

"I am so glad I met you, Tom," said the judge as they spun down the smooth street. "This is my birthday and I want you to stop at my house and drink my health in eggnog."

"I thank you, Judge, but I am on the water wagon and have promised my wife I'll stay on and hold my job. Not a big job, it's true, but it means a lot to a fellow who was out of work for years. It has been two years since I quit drinking and I don't care to take the risk of starting on a spree."

"The idea of a glass of eggnog starting you on a spree! I told my wife when she objected to such an innocent way of celebrating my birthday that it was as harmless as an afternoon tea. I would certainly not invite my friends to anything that I thought would be injurious, so come in and partake of a harmless drink."

"Even one might start me back on the old track. I'm afraid."

"Be strong, old man. Exercise your will power and be able to take a drink as you like. Assert your manhood."

"Don't tempt me, Judge."

"Then come in and have a slice of my birthday cake."

"All right, I will stop and do that, but I can only stay for a few minutes as I am on my way to B——— to meet a party of city people I am going to take out to the Country Club house for an entertainment. I must not miss the seven o'clock train."

"Sorry you cannot spend the evening. Here we are at my gate."

The four men entered the house with the dignity becoming well-bred gentlemen. An hour later the host opened the door for his guests to depart. His three elderly friends were uproariously jolly, while Tom Jenkins walked with an unsteady stagger and chanted a rollicking drinking song. As he entered the car he declared recklessly:

"I'll make it to B—— quicker'n greased lightning, and get back in time for another highball before I sleep."

"Better not take anything more to drink tonight, Tom, and don't drive too fast," cautioned the judge uneasily.

"I'm sorry I invited Tom Jenkins to my birthday eggnog this evening," Judge Joyner told his wife when he entered the family sitting room. "He hasn't the self-control a man of his age should have."

"He was a hard drinker for years," replied Mrs. Joyner, "and alcoholic poison weakens the will as well as the body. You will find that you did a very unwise thing in asking a man who has been trying to reform, to drink eggnog. Tom has had a struggle to keep sober since he got that job with the garage company. There is no telling to what this may lead."

"Oh, I guess Tom will be all right when he drives a few miles in the fresh air. No need to worry over what can't be helped."

"But it could have been helped," answered Mrs. Joyner sharply.

The next day Judge Joyner left G——— to attend court in an adjoining county. He returned two weeks later deeply disappointed in the termination of a murder case.

"John Larkin is no more guilty of that murder than I am," he told his wife, "but the lawyer who defended him was drunk—too drunk to introduce the testimony that would have cleared his client. The stupid jurymen were convinced of the prisoner's guilt by that shrewd prosecuting attorney, Jackson. A drunken man has no business taking part in a case when a man's life and liberty are at stake."

"A drunken man has no business driving a jitney and putting people's lives in danger," replied Mrs. Joyner gravely. "Have you heard of poor Tom Jenkins' misfortune?"

"No. What has happened?"

"After he left here that evening he ran over a small boy and broke the child's leg, drove the car into a ditch and seriously injured three of his passengers. Of course Tom was fired by the auto company the next day. He is still on a spree, and his former employers have been sued for damages by the little boy's father. It seems to me a great deal of harm was brewed in that eggnog."

"I am sorry I tempted Tom, Sara, but I will see what I can do to help him."

On the way to his office Judge Joyner passed the city jail. Two policemen were struggling with an unkempt, cursing, fighting prisoner. In their wake followed a weeping woman. The judge recognized the prisoner as Tom Jenkins and the woman as Tom's wife. The man was finally locked in a cell and the woman turned to leave. The judge met her in the hall and held out his hand.

"I am sorry—so sorry, Mrs. Jenkins," he said. "I will do all in my power to help your husband. I will give him work in my office until he can withstand temptation."

"You don't believe in total abstinence, Judge," the woman answered hopelessly. "Tom can't touch liquor of any kind—not even eggnog—without going on a spree—and then there is no telling when he will stop or where. I thank you for your offer of work, but Tom would be better off where he would not be tempted."

"He will never be tempted by me or in my presence again, Mrs. Jenkins, if example and a bold stand for total abstinence can prevent it. God forgiving me, I will never touch liquor again so long as I live or offer it to others. That pledge and an unceasing fight for prohibition, will I hope, in time, help me to prove myself Tom's real friend."

A very few of the

Gospel Art Calendars for 1917

are left in stock and as it will be impossible to secure more, kindly order yours at once. A calendar of twelve pages, each page containing a reproduction of one of the masterpieces and a scripture text for daily reading.

Price, 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

Good Campaign Ammunition

GIVE THE PEOPLE THE FACTS

Quiz on National Constitutional Prohibition
The Last Stage of a Great Conflict
Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. Convention

Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents

America's Greatest Foe
The Paramount Issue
Prohibition States
Teach the People
Maine Vindicated
Facts About Kansas
Six Months of Prohibition in Seattle
Kansas Answers the Liquor Argument
The Workingman and the Alcohol Problem
Drink Traffic and Revenue
Reasons for Their Prosperity
Untouched Sources of Revenue
The Drink Traffic and the Taxpayer
Industrial World Against Alcohol

CARTOON LEAFLETS

What Two Beers a Day will Buy
The Workingman Who Pays
What Mother and the Children Get
His Days are Numbered
Boy or Beer Barrel
Your Boy Next
The Liquor Traffic's Vacuum Pocket Cleaner
Accusing Fingers
Is It a Square Deal?

Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

From west to east, from south to north
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

FOR LOVE OF MARY ELLEN

MARGARET FOLEY

Mary Ellen plied her dish-mop vigorously. Her heart was heavy. She glanced across where her mother sat by the window making over the old blue dress that she had never liked, and which made her look so homely. To think that she must wear that to the class party! How could she ever do it? But she must be brave for mother's sake. So she sang, in a somewhat uncertain key, to be sure—but she sang and splashed away as best she could.

Mother was not deceived in the least. She smiled at her daughter while her sad heart pondered the problem of their burden. She sometimes wondered if it would not be best to take Mary Ellen far away among strangers, where she would not be subjected to the humiliation of pitying looks, but she never got any further than thinking of that step, for Mary Ellen loved her daddy in spite of his failing, and she, herself—no, she had never been able to forget the solemn "until death do us part." So, when friends would fain sympathize with her, she, with pathetic patience, would tactfully change the subject.

When Mary Ellen had finished the dishes, she unconsciously stood a moment with drooping figure, gazing with ill-concealed disgust at the old blue dress. Mother was doing her very best with it, but how could she appear in it when all the other girls—?

Happening to glance up, Mrs. Browning caught her child's unguarded expression, and hot tears filled her eyes as she threw aside the garment and held out her arms.

"Come to mother, little girl, and tell her all about it," she cried brokenly.

Handsome Jack Browning had been a brilliant, lovable man, but under the influence of drink he had become weak and vacillating—a constant tippler, though seldom really intoxicated. He was a much-sought lawyer when his brain was clear, but with his lessening efficiency people had lost faith in him—he could not be depended upon. In a little town one's failings are public property. Jack's clients had been slowly drifting away, and the sheaf of bills upon his desk mutely told their tale of impending disaster. He seemed not to realize the wrong he was doing his family; he dearly loved his wife and child, but somehow he was kept inadequate. He seemed unconcerned regarding the day's opportunities, and was always waiting for tomorrow's wonderful piece of good luck.

On one of his better days he strode briskly into the "Elite," a rendezvous of Middlebury legal lights, and not seeing any of his boon companions, he stepped to the far end of the bar to order his drink. Picking up a paper, he was soon absorbed in the election news. Presently he heard his name spoken, and found himself a listener to voices issuing from a nearby booth.

"It's a vile shame!" declared a voice raised to the pitch of irritation. "I simply ache to thrash Browning every time I look at him. Such a waste of good material—now, he could handle this matter for Carson better than anyone I know, but you wouldn't dare turn the case over to him—he'd go off on a bat—and good-bye case!"

"That's all right, but it's his girl I think of. My daughter tells me—"

Browning waited to hear no more. He had recognized the voices as belonging to two of his oldest friends, and he grew hot with shame. That he, Jack Browning, should call forth remarks like these! "A vile waste of good material,"—"It's his girl I think of," rang in his ears as he hastened away.

Jack Browning shut himself in his office and faced the issue like the man he was at heart. Now that his eyes were opened, he scorned himself. Lately he had considered that he was a victim of hard luck, but—well, that evidently had been straight talk. Incisively he probed the case of his inefficiency. At last summoning his courage, he walked to the Orville Carson home. The trim maid bade him wait in the library while she called Mr. Carson. With critical eyes he surveyed the perfectly appointed room—easy chairs, soft-toned rugs, rich draperies, inwardly cursing the weakness that had deprived him of similar comforts.

As he waited a bevy of girls came down the stairs chatting gaily. "It's his girl I think of," flashed through his mind with bitter emphasis.

"Get your coat, Ethel, and come over and see my new frock. It's a dream," chirped one of the girls. "Every girl in the class is going to doll up."

Jack Browning started with apprehension lest they discover him, but they had stopped before the hall-tree.

"Not every girl, Grace," broke in a sweet voice. "Mary Ellen isn't even going to the party—says she is going to give all her time to her studies.

"Oh, you know better than that," said Grace with spirit. "Mary Ellen is the cleverest girl in the class—it's because her good-for-nothing father drinks up every cent he earns. It just makes me furious!"

The listening man clinched his hands in anguish.

"You know," continued Grace, "I tried to tell Mary Ellen how sorry I was about everything—and that I'd lend her a dress for the party. She just looked at me in the oddest way, and hurried to the cloak room—she's always hurrying these days!"

The young daughter of the house spoke sorrowfully.

"I'm heartsick over the whole thing. Mamma says Mrs. Browning and Mary Ellen are the most worth-while people in the whole town, and Dad says Mr. Browning is one of the ablest lawyers he ever knew when he's—all right. It's a shame we can't do something to help Mary Ellen.

Out trooped the girls, entirely unaware of their part in the reclamation of Lawyer Browning.

When Browning brokenly repeated to Orville Carson the conversation he had overheard—Carson understood. Some hours later, a new man left the house. As he passed the blazing, alluring entrance of his former haunt, the demon of conviviality tugged unavailingly at his heart-strings. New lines of determination seamed his face—Mary Ellen's love and loyalty, his Catherine's love and forbearance, both would be justified.

When she heard her husband's latch key, Catherine Browning carefully hid the anxiety that possessed her. She had sat up to finish the blue dress, and her heart was heavy; a fierce resentment of Jack's weakness consumed her, and she bent over her work as he entered the room.

He came swiftly to her. "Sweetheart!" he sobbed as he stooped to kiss her in the old way. No sickening odor nauseated her. She looked up in wondering astonishment—he appeared old and haggard. Suddenly he sank to his knees and buried his face in her lap. Then, haltingly, he told her the story.

Finally he drew some papers from an inner pocket of his coat, and carefully extracted a check, which he placed in her hand.

"My retaining fee from Carson—he's turned everything over to me—and buy—buy Mary Ellen just everything for the party—and for always!"

Catherine stretched out her arms to her husband; her tears mingled with his, but her voice was full of mother-love and thankfulnes as she breathed,

"Thank God for Mary Ellen!"

Supplies for Frances E. Willard Commemorative Meeting

FOR REFERENCE:

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Price $1.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said, Anna Adams Gordon. Price 75 cents.

The Story of Frances E. Willard, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price 15 cts.

FOR PROGRAM MATERIAL:

Annual Address, Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, delivered at Indianapolis. Price 5 cents.

Review of Organization Work, given in report of Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary, found in National Minutes. Price 25 cents.

Union Signal (special Willard Memorial number of January 25). Price 5 cents each; $1.75 per 100.

Frances E. Willard Program for Public Schools, Anna A. Gordon. Price 10 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens.

Flower of Temperance Chivalry, S. M., D. Fry. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, 75 cents.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION:

Frances Willard's Widening Way, Elizabeth P. Gordon. Price per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Frances Willard Memorial Fund, Frances P. Parks. Price per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, $1.00.

The Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Temperance Jack

Law of Habit

The Shoemaker and Little White Shoes

The Common Joy

Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE Y. P. B.:

Frances E. Willard's Influence Upon the Young People of the Age. Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE L. T. L.:

How a Little Girl Became Famous. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Five Little Word Pictures of Frances E. Willard. Price, per 100, 30 cents.

FOR MUSIC:

Temperance Songster, Convention Edition. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book, Anna A. Gordon.

Home's Love-Light—solo. Price, 30 cents.

A Paean of Victory—solo. Price, 10 cents.

Victory—soprano solo. Price, 15 cents.

Wear Your White Ribbon Wherever You Go—solo or chorus. Price, 5 cents.

A Knot of White Ribbon—solo. Price 25 cents.

The White Ribbon—solo. Price, 10 cents.

FOR INVITATIONS:

Rest Cottage Post Card

Frances E. Willard Post Card

Frances E. Willard Statue Post Card

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per 100, $1.00.

FOR ROLL CALL:

Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Cards—quotations from Miss Willard's writings, with autograph signature. Price, 12 cents per 100.

FOR SOUVENIRS:

Rest Cottage Booklet. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Willard Birthday Pledge Card, with autograph pledge and signature. Price, per 100, $1.00.

Prices include prepaid postage.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

Frances E. Willard Portraits

For Schools, Libraries and the Home

No. 1

No. 1—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid.....$4.00

No. 3

No. 3—Enlarged Photograph, from a picture taken during Miss Willard's later years, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid 4.00

Special School Picture (a print from this photograph), 18x22 in. Price.. .50

No. 2

No. 2—Enlarged Photograph, size 20x 24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00

No. 4

No. 4—Enlarged Photograph, 20x24 inches. Price, prepaid..... 4.00

Same photograph, 10x12 inches... 1.50

Name Plate, handsomely engraved, on brass base, gold plated. Price.....$ 1.75

These portraits, suitably framed, with name plate attached, sent by prepaid express, each 10.00

Cabinet Photographs of Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4, 25 cents each; per dozen..... 2.40

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

IN HIGH-LICENSE MASSACHUSETTS

There are many people who think that Massachusetts has wisely solved the question of saloon management by its high-license policy. State figures would seem to prove otherwise, for, to maintain the victims of the liquor traffic in state institutions there was necessitated an outlay of $3,202,527, an expenditure three times as great as the total amount of the revenue, which was for 1916, $865,955. This takes no account of the economic loss. According to a recent investigation 300,000 working days are lost to the state by the imprisonment of the victims of the liquor traffic.

MARVELOUS CONSISTENCY

The extent to which the liquor forces go to make a point against prohibition is often most ludicrous. In the recent campaign to make Ohio dry the liquor interests of Cincinnati compassed heaven and earth to frighten the voters and win their votes. In this matter inconsistency did not seem to worry them.

The writer was amused to see the following arguments against prohibition in two windows of the same saloon: One was a large poster filled with statistics showing how many men would be thrown out of employment; how much capital would be destroyed; how much grain would find no market, and how the finances of the state would be brought to ruin if Ohio went dry and closed her distilleries and breweries. About six feet from this poster in another window was a similar display showing how prohibition had failed in Kansas and Maine, and how there was far more liquor sold and consumed in these states than before prohibition went into effect. When the liquor interests are driven like this to take both "horns of the dilemma" in order to prove their point, their day of doom is near.

NINE SALOONS OF TOLEDO CLOSED

Nine saloons in Toledo, Ohio, in the district near the Overland Automobile factory, the largest factory in the city, employing 17,000 men, were closed a few weeks ago through the activities of Ohio white ribboners. Five of these saloons were directly across the street from the main factory entrance, and during the campaign two years ago, after the noon meetings with the employes, these five saloons would throw open their doors and invite the men to come and get free drinks. Local workers ascertained that the daily receipts of these saloons were approximately $1,500 or $9,000 a week.

JUST OFF THE PRESS

LEAFLETS

The Last Stage of a Great Conflict
Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. convention
The Church and the W. C. T. U. (revised)
Women Prisoners
Woman and the Church
Gates Passed Through
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer
Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

America's Greatest Foe
The Paramount Issue
Prohibition States (revised)
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy (cartoon)
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

What Prohibition Will and Will Not Do Economically
The Children Who Followed My Example
Price, per hundred, 15 cents.

Yesterday and Today (a suffrage playlet)
Price, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

LANTERN LECTURES

EDUCATE THROUGH THE EYE

John Barleycorn
30 slides. Price, $15.00
The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two"
51 slides. Price, $20.00
Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story
53 slides. Price, $20.00
The World on the Water Wagon
53 slides. Price, $20.00

These lectures are intensely interesting as well as instructive and make an attractive evening's program.

PLAN TO USE THEM IN YOUR SPRING INSTITUTE

The printed lecture accompanies each set.

Rental schedule furnished upon application.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

LET KANSAS LEAD IN PROHIBITION MOVEMENT

(Continued from Page Seven)

for a consideration grants licenses to men to conduct in Kansas a business which our state statutes have outlawed. Indirectly, it is aiding and abetting violations of our state laws—conniving with bootleggers and outlaws in defeating the will of our own people. Moreover, the government says in effect to Kansas, "No matter what your people may think of this evil; no matter how you may legislate against it, you shall not prohibit shipment of the stuff into your borders, and Washington will license bootleggers to sell the damnable stuff." The government manifests more concern to observe comity between itself and other nations than between itself and the several states. I appeal to you, my friends, individually, to take up this protest against setting our laws at naught.

SENATOR THOMPSON OF KANSAS CONSIDERED PASSAGE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PROHIBITION BILL BEST CHRISTMAS PRESENT CONGRESS COULD GIVE DISTRICT

"I am exceedingly anxious for the passago of the District bill," said Senator Thompson of Kansas, in the course of the discussion on that measure the week before Christmas, "for I know of no better Christmas present that could be given to the people of Washington. Kansas, my state, has had perhaps a longer and better experience with prohibition than has any other state in the Union. As far as Kansas is concerned, the question of prohibition is absolutely settled. There is no political party there which can place in its platform even a hint at a resubmission of the question and hope for success at the polls. Only two years ago a distinguished man of ability, who has many virtues and had been generally successful politically, got it into his head that a resubmission of the proposition, after thirty-five years, would be popular as an issue in a race for governor of the state. As you know, there are a great many people who believe that this question, like every other question, ought to be submitted to the people for their consideration at various times; and although many people believe that who would finally vote for prohibition if it were resubmitted, they voted for this candidate for governor on a resubmission issue. Out of a vote of 528,206, including those who simply believed in the submission of the question, as well as those who were opposed to prohibition, all the votes that could be mustered for resubmission during that campaign from every political party—and there were four or five parties in the field at that time—were 47,201, less than nine per cent of the vote at that election.

"As I said in the beginning, I want to be absolutely fair and frank and tell the whole truth about this matter. It is true that we did not have absolute prohibition in Kansas during all these years, for, greatly to our shame and chagrin, in the early existence of the law there were but few people who felt that it could be enforced strictly to the letter. It is true the saloon was put out of business, but there were many well-meaning and law-abiding people who felt that after all, perhaps, this liquor business was a necessary evil and had to exist in some form or other, and they more or less winked at a violation of the law behind closed doors, in speak-easies, and blind tigers, and joints. But that day has passed. That condition existed more or less throughout the state, principally in the large cities, however, until the memorable crusade of Carrie Nation with her little hatchet along about 1900, or fifteen years ago. By the forcible use of the hatchet, as you remember, she entered the barrooms operated behind closed doors and broke the mirrors and the glasses and the beer bottles and things that were in sight. She announced the doctrine that it was not unlawful to resort to unlawful means to destroy an unlawful business.

"No matter how much we may criticise that doctrine, this forcible crusade brought the attention of the thinking people of Kansas to the unlawful business, those who did not have it pointed out to them before, and it then became an issue as to whether the lawless element of the state was greater than the state itself; and on that issue with the honest, earnest, and law-abiding people whom I claim for the state of Kansas, you may well know the result. Instead of permitting the officials to wink at the loose enforcement of the law as in the past, they called the officers on the carpet and asked for a vigorous enforcement of the law, and against every man who failed they instituted proceedings in court and removed him from office, or waited until they got a chance at him at the polls. So we got officials in every department charged with that duty to enforce the law strictly to the letter.

"For the benefit of the business men, the only men of high standing whom I have found in the city of Washington who fear prohibition for the District, claiming that it would be ruinous to the business interests of the city, let me say that there never was a greater business mistake made in the world. We learned from actual experience that the more vigorously we enforced this law the greater was our prosperity in Kansas. These men seem to forget that the many hundreds of dollars spent for liquor unnecessarily by people who can not spare it will be spent in the dry goods stores, the grocery stores, and for things of necessity which they have to offer, and that they will receive the money instead of the saloon, which has been receiving it for these many years in this city and District.

"On that point I wish to call attention to the fact that after thirty-five years of experience with this law, Kansas, on January 1, 1916, paid the last dollar of its state indebtedness. But few states in the Union are so well favored. When the saloon was in force our state was indebted nearly $2,000,000, and in January last we paid the last cent of this indebtedness. Instead of being one of the poorest states in the Union financially, as formerly rated, we have gradually advanced until now we are the richest state per capita in the entire United States. We have in the banks in Kansas, I know from a recent statement of December 12, 1916, over $290,000,000, deposited by the people of my state, being an average deposit for every man, woman, and child of over $170. In addition to this, practically every bank in my state has an account with the banks of Kansas City, Mo., where millions of dollars go every year. It is safe to say that, including the deposits in Kansas City, Mo., belonging to the people of Kansas, we have to our credit $500,000,000, or at least $300 per capita—greater than can be claimed by any other state in the Union."

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture
for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

NEW MUSIC

Home's Love-Light

Words by Anna Adams Gordon
Music by Daniel Protheroe

A solo destined to be the most popular temperance song written this year. Is suited to any voice and equally adapted for soprano, alto, tenor or baritone.

Price, 30 cents; two copies 50 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

"DO YOUR THINKING EARLY"

A few weeks before election, Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular published the following warning: "Some people are going to be awfully disappointed after the election in November. This is going to be a telling year, and may forecast future events. Do your thinking early."

Judging by the ballot box decision in ten states and one territory on November 7, the majority of the voters took the advice and did their thinking early, and therefore did it right. That is the only way to do your thinking. It is none too early for the people who are to vote next November to begin this very day to think on and over and under and through this important question, and to keep it up for 365 days and to bring to that thinking the accumulated wisdom of the scientist, the jurists of the land, the penologist, the men of affairs, the heads of Big Business, the charity workers. But in order that this thinking may blossom into convictions, it must have a foundation of authentic and comprehensive knowledge.

Our friends tell us that there is no better compendium of information on the liquor evil and its remedies, total abstinence for the individual and prohibition for the nation, than THE UNION SIGNAL.

THE UNION SIGNAL A TEMPERANCE ENCYCLOPEDIA

MRS. AUGUST BURGHARD

If there is anything as helpful all around to white ribboners as reading THE UNION SIGNAL, I have never seen it. The paper tells what to do and how. It tells what to believe and why. It tells what to say and to whom. It tells of temperance progress and where. It tells that there is need of you. For the information which brings inspiration it excels. It tells who is who in the temperance world. It tells what is what with regard to total abstinence. It tells which is which in scientific temperance research, in departmental activities, in temperance sermon, song and story, in prohibitive and legislative enactments, in up-to-date temperance news the wide world over. It is the commander's message to those along the firing line. It is an absolutely necessary part of the preparedness of the white ribbon hosts in the fight for total abstinence for the individual and constitutional prohibition for the nation.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Thursday, January 18, the day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition was observed by the St. Louis (Mo.) W. C. T. U. with a service in the Grand Avenue M. E. church. About one hundred attended and the resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition was heartily endorsed. Interspersed with the prayers and talks of the women were short addresses by several pastors of the city. The special address of the afternoon was given by Mr. Eugene A. Vogt, German-American, suffragist and prohibitionist. Until a few months ago Mr. Vogt was as opposed to prohibition as he is now in favor of it. His topic, "The Money Value of Prohibition," was a logical contradiction of the claims of the liquor interests. "While we have a Meeker as a member of Congress we have gained a 'Vogt' for suffrage and prohibition in the lecture field," writes our correspondent.

A record-breaking audience attended the meeting of the Parma (Mo.) W. C. T. U. in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition, held Sunday night, January 14, in the Methodist church, with all the churches co-operating. Stirring addresses were made by Rev. Harvey, Rev. Moss, Prof. Beatty and Miss Kathryn Goodin. A song by the school children and music by a quartette added to the impressiveness of the service.

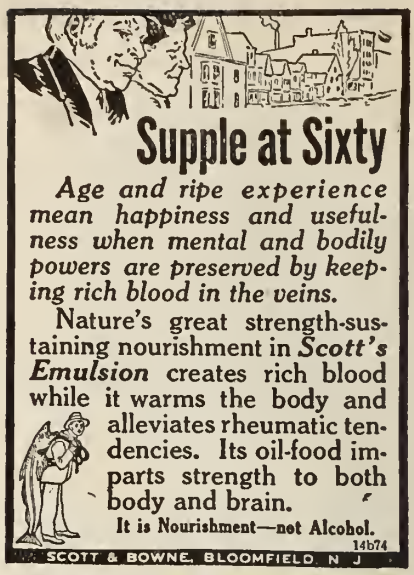
The federated unions of Omaha observed January 18 as a day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition. The service was held in the Y. W. C. A. with Mrs. Dr. Berry, vice-president of the county W. C. T. U., in charge.

Central union of Oakland, Calif., observed January 15 as the day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition with meetings at the Y. W. C. A. Mrs. Anna Marden De Yo, corresponding secretary of the Northern California W. C. T. U., led the thanksgiving praise service, while other speakers brought inspiring messages concerning both local and national needs. Resolutions of commendation of Governor Hiram Johnson for his support during his term of office of all reform measures were adopted. With renewed courage the union is preparing to enter another campaign to make California dry. At a very successful parlor meeting held recently Mrs. De Yo gave a glowing report of the National Convention.

The Day of Prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition was observed in Tacoma (Wash.) by services held under the direction of the city federation of unions, Dr. Eva St. Clair Osburn, president. The attendance was large and the enthusiasm pronounced. The program suggested by the National W. C. T. U. was used.

The Alta Vista (Kans.) W. C. T. U. replenished its treasury recently by holding a market which netted a total of $34.92. The union was divided into three sections, with Mrs. Woodward, Miss Hyde and Mrs. Meseke as captains. In connection with the market a membership contest was begun which was continued for several weeks thereafter, resulting in the enrollment of a large number of new members.

A membership contest and arrangements for the observance of the Day of Prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition, are the two matters occupying the attention of the Erma (N. J.) W. C. T. U. At a social meeting a few weeks ago an interesting program was rendered, and four new members gained. A temperance rally under the auspices of this union, with Mr. John Donaldson as speaker, resulted in the winning of new members.



The Lamoille county (Vt.) W. C. T. U., during the year 1916, held institutes in three of its four unions with fair attendance and hearty interest at each.

The Wichita (Kans.) W. C. T. U. observed the day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition with talks by four ministers, readings, an impressive consecration service and a demonstration by the children. Members of six unions and of several local uplift organizations were present. Three important resolutions were passed.

FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

The cat settled herself luxuriously in front of the kitchen range and began to purr. Little Dolly, who was strange to the ways of cats, regarded her with horror. "O gran'ma, gran'ma!" she cried. "Come here quick. The cat's begun to boil."—Christian Register.

Mr. Curran and Mr. McManus spent their Saturday half holiday in artistic pursuits. Among the objects examined was a fine new public building. The feature of this building that appealed most strongly to Mr. Curran was an inscription cut into a huge stone.

"MDCCCXCVIII," he read aloud. "What does them letters mane, Tim?"

"That," replied cultured Mr. McManus, "stands for 1898."

"O," replied Mr. Curran. Then, after a thoughtful pause, he added:

"Don't yez think, Tim, that they're overdoin' this spellin' reform a bit?"—Epworth Herald.

A certain man about town, known as one who frequently takes his meals through a straw, applied to a Philadelphia hotel for a reservation for New Year's eve in the roof garden cafe. It was explained to him that no reservation would be made unless he guaranteed to spend $4 for each cover.

"Wait a minute;" said the prospective patron, with a puzzled look. "Will there be any drinks served in the cafe from eight o'clock to midnight?"

"No, it will be Sunday night. Can't serve 'em," he was told.

"Does that mean I will have to eat $4 worth of food?"

"Yes."

"It can't be done," the man exclaimed, as he walked out of the hotel.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., FEBRUARY 8, 1917 | No. 6

LATEST LEGISLATIVE VICTORIES

ALASKA

Without the formality of a roll call, both houses of the United States Congress have passed the Jones bill, providing for prohibition in the territory of Alaska.

INDIANA

Both houses of the Indiana legislature, by good majorities, have passed a bill providing for state-wide prohibition, to go into effect, if signed by the governor, on January 1, 1918.

IOWA

A measure providing for submission of a prohibition amendment has passed both houses of the Iowa legislature, and will undoubtedly be signed by the governor. Provision for a special election may be made. Iowa already has statutory prohibition.

UTAH

Both houses of the Utah legislature have passed a bill providing for state-wide prohibition.

The legislatures of Arkansas, Oregon and Tennessee have passed "bone dry" measures, which have been signed by their respective governors. One house of both the Oregon and Missouri legislatures has passed a bill providing for a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools.

Union Signal Day—March 1

The Union Signal is the official organ of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. It is the property of the National W. C. T. U. and every member of the organization is part owner. No white ribboner is adequately equipped for service who is not a subscriber to The Union Signal.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Thursday morning we were startled and shocked at the alarming word coming from Germany, proclaiming ruthless submarine war, beginning February 1. United States ships are barred from allies' ports and all ships warned from approaching within twenty miles of England, France, or Italy. Even hospital ships are not exempt. The German ambassador carried to the State Department Tuesday evening a note sent by wireless from Berlin. This note, the substance of which is indicated above, was at once delivered to President Wilson who shut himself alone in his study with a copy of it, remaining until nearly midnight.

It is just eight days since the President went before the United States Senate with his message, looking toward universal peace, but this act of Germany would seem to close that door with vehemence and open the way to frightful disaster. Senator Stone, chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, is hastening back to Washington from Missouri, where he has been for a few days.

In the Senate Thursday, February 1, Senators Lodge and McCumber, both members of the Committee on Foreign Relations, made speeches in reply to the President's peace message of a week ago, but prefaced their remarks with sentiments of patriotism. Senator Lodge declared that the German note has heaped upon the President a great responsibility and added, "No word shall fall from my lips which might in any possible way embarrass him at such a time."

In the House, Mr. Kitchin, Democratic floor leader, said in an impromptu speech, "It is a grave and tragic situation that confronts us. It is the time for every man who loves his country, whether he be Republican or Democrat, to forget that sectional differences ever existed in the United States. Let all who are patriots consecrate anew all their patriotism, all their courage, all their Americanism for our country, one Union and one flag."

The main dining room at The Driscoll is occupied by the permanent guests of the house, many of whom are members of Congress who with their wives spend the winters here. They are like a large family, the sociability existing being very pleasant to witness. They call each other by their given names and "Hello, Charlie," or "Well, Jimmie, how is it?" and other similar expressions are the order of the day. But when anything particularly serious occurs their sense of the responsibility of their positions is plainly shown. It was so on Thursday morning—there was no chaff, no pleasantry, quiet dignity alone. A grave situation indeed confronted the government and, as its servants they were ready to meet it. What the outcome may be, only the future can determine.

Senate Passes Alaska Bill

Without even the formality of a roll-call, the Senate, on Wednesday, January 31, passed the Jones bill, providing for prohibition in Alaska. This shows how quickly legislation can be carried to a successful ending with a good man ready and willing to "stand by" and wait for favorable opportunities to bring the measure forward, and do his part. Senator Jones of Seattle did all this and, as a result, the Alaska bill went through the Senate in surprisingly quick time. Now it awaits action in the House. As was stated last week, this bill was favorably reported by the House Committee on Territories and we believe it will soon receive the attention of the House and become a law.

The Senate, in order to expedite business, has arranged to meet at eleven o'clock in the morning and to hold evening sessions from eight to ten. At the first night meeting, they began consideration of the Porto Rican citizenship bill. The bill passed by the House last May would give Porto Ricans American citizenship, further self government, and representation in Congress by delegates. The evening session gives opportunity for speech-making, which is taken advantage of by Senators, for they certainly enjoy being listened to with interest by the well-dressed men and women filling the galleries.

The Indian appropriation bill, carrying $12,500,000, passed the Senate January 31. The bill provides that a joint Senate and House commission be created to investigate the bureau of Indian Affairs. This is the third of the big supply measures to get through both Houses. A provision was added, granting the employes of the Indian bureau, whose salaries are carried in the bill, the increase provided for in the amendment to the legislative bill. This means an increase of fifteen per cent for those drawing $480, or less, and ten per cent for those receiving more than $480 and not more than $1,000.

Indians Seek Broader Construction of Dawes Act

Representatives of thirty tribes of Indians have arrived in Washington to appeal to President Wilson and Congress for legislation to relieve the original Americans from what they call oppression. They seek a broader construction of the Dawes act of 1887, allotting the Indians 160 to 320 acres of land, free from taxation, for twenty-five years, but denying the right of franchise because the land is non-taxable.

"We want to get relief from the government having a string on our land," said Dr. Charles A. Eastman of Amherst, Mass., who accompanies the Indians.

Dr. Eastman described the oppression as being an abuse of the law against the Indians by tying up their possessions so that they were not free to make disposition of them without governmental consent. The right to vote and to exercise broader supervision of his land are among the main desires of the Indian, he said.

The delegation represents the Indian population of the middle western states, Oklahoma, the Dakotas, Montana, and the prairie states. The Indians will interview the commissioner of Indian affairs, the Secretary of the Interior, and committees of Congress, before they leave. They also intend to greet President Wilson.

Hearings Begin Before House District Committee on Sheppard Dry Bill

It has been definitely settled that hearings before the House District Committee, on the Sheppard dry bill, will begin next Tuesday, February 6. Members of the labor unions of the District, favoring the enactment of the Sheppard bill, are urged to meet at a certain place when resolutions endorsing the measure for presentation to Congress will be signed. A number of members of the printing trades employed in the government printing office are circulating petitions among the union men of the city and these will be presented to Congress in due form.

President Wilson's veto of the immigration bill, because of its literacy test, was over-ridden in the House by a vote of 286 to 106. Party lines were ignored, Republicans and Democrats being almost equally divided on either side. This bill passed the Senate some time ago and an effort to over-ride the veto there will be made without delay. For twenty years there has been a fight to establish a literacy test as a restriction upon immigration. Four times such a restriction has run the gauntlet of Congress and been vetoed at the White House. President Cleveland first disapproved a bill on this ground and Congress sustained his action. President Taft was the next to reject it. On that occasion the Senate voted to over-ride his veto, but the House failed to give the necessary two-thirds majority. In 1915, President Wilson refused to permit a bill to become a law with the literacy test incorporated. This year the House had 24 votes more than the necessary two-thirds majority.

On Thursday the Senate passed the fortifications bill, carrying a total of $51,000,000 and, although the amount was a vast one, there was very little discussion, a good majority favoring the outlay to make our coast defense as nearly impregnable as possible.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., February 2, 1917.

OFFICIAL CALL TO PRAYER

Members of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union are earnestly urged to observe Sunday, February 11, 1917, as a day of prayer. The power, the guidance and the comfort of united prayer are vitally needed in the critical situation our nation today faces. Let us call upon our God that He may mightily rule in the hearts of those upon whom rest momentous decisions in this hour of a stupendous world crisis.

ANNA A. GORDON,
President National W. C. T. U.

LATER NEWS

The Alaska prohibition bill has also passed the House of Representatives.

HISTORY IN THE MAKING

Governor Frazier of North Dakota Signing Woman Suffrage Bill

At Governor Frazier's left stands Mrs. Frazier, a strong friend of woman's cause, and at his right Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson, president of the North Dakota W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Grace Clendenning, president of the Votes for Women League; Mrs. Mary Darrow Weible, vice-president of the League, and Mrs. Elizabeth Darrow O'Neil, president of the Congressional Union. Behind the governor's chair stand Mrs. B. H. Wylie, state W. C. T. U. corresponding secretary; Mrs. Minette B. Bowe, state treasurer; Mrs. Ella M. Shippy, state superintendent of Franchise. Behind Mrs. Anderson stands Senator Oscar Lindstrom, who introduced the bill.

SURVEY OF THE STATES

Nevada

There are 8,000 signatures to the initiative petition for state-wide prohibition now before the Nevada legislature. Only 2,500 are necessary under the initiative law.

Illinois

A state-wide referendum measure has been introduced in both houses of the Illinois legislature, as has also a bill providing for the prohibition of all alcoholic beverages containing more than ten per cent alcohol.

Utah

The Utah legislature has passed a joint resolution asking Congress to submit National Constitutional Prohibition to a vote of the states. A measure providing for state-wide prohibition has also passed both houses of the legislature.

Oklahoma

The lower house of the Oklahoma legislature passed a bone dry measure, without debate. It now goes to the senate.

California

A measure limiting the alcohol content of whisky, rum, brandy, gin, liquors and wines to 10 per cent has been introduced in the senate of the California legislature.

North Dakota

North Dakota will have limited suffrage after July 1, 1917.

South Dakota

Both houses of the legislature have passed a resolution providing for submission of an equal suffrage amendment to the constitution at the 1918 general election.

Tennessee

A limited suffrage measure, similar to the Illinois law, passed the lower house of the Tennessee legislature by a vote of 59 to 25.

North Carolina

By a vote of seven to four, the woman suffrage bill was reported favorably in the North Carolina legislature.

Ohio

By a vote of 72 to 50 the Ohio house of representatives on February 1 passed a measure giving presidential suffrage to the women of the state. The bill now goes to the senate.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska

STATES TO VOTE ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Wyoming	Iowa

"Keep Whisky Away from Us," Indians Plead

A petition for the passage of a bone dry law for the protection of Indians in the state of Washington, drawn by Chief Joseph's Nez Perces, was presented to the state senate, says the Spokane (Wash.) Chronicle. It is signed by Chief Yellow Wolf and eight of his tribesmen.

The petition of the Nez Perces for a bone dry law follows:

"Realizing that the present laws intended to regulate the sale of intoxicating drinks within the state of Washington are not strong enough for the protection of our people against the mercenary druggists and murdering bootleggers, we, the undersigned members of Chief Joseph's band of Indians, assembled in council and for our tribes, implore you to enact such legislation and laws as will forever stop the introduction of such liquors among our dependent tribesmen. We stand for the complete suppression of the traffic.

(Signed)

"YELLOW WOLF, Chief.
"TOM WATERS,
"WE-UKE-SAN-AT,
"WILLIE ANDREWS,
"PEO-PEO-KOW-NOT,
"TOMES-SAS-TOK-MIN,
"LITTLE MAN CHIEF,
"CHARLEY COMEDOWN,
"ROSE BUSH."

MEDICAL ASSOCIATION CONDEMNS ALCOHOL

The Manatee County (Fla.) Medical Association, at a regular meeting on January 18, unanimously adopted the following resolution condemning the use of alcohol as a medicine:

"Realizing the death-rate caused directly and indirectly by the use of alcohol, it seems a part of the duty of the medical profession, whose work it is to prevent as well as cure disease, to use their efforts to discourage and put a stop to this evil, which is exacting such a heavy toll from mankind.

"Therefore, be it resolved, that the Manatee County Medical Association will discourage the writing of prescriptions for its indiscriminate use.

"Resolved, second, That alcohol as a stimulant, can be eliminated from the Pharmacopœia without in any way crippling the efficiency of the doctors' armamentarium."

The Blessed Tie

What a blessed tie is that of the white ribbon. If only we are true to its holy meaning we never shall be chilled by selfishness, nor daunted by danger, nor weakened by worthlessness, nor stifled by ingratitude, but shoulder to shoulder, heart to heart, shall go on endeavoring every day to follow Him who is "the way, the truth and the life."

Lillian M. N. Stevens

The Union Signal Makes Converts to Prohibition—Try It!

MARGARET B. PLATT

The value of THE UNION SIGNAL is by no means alone that of an organization propagandist. Each issue presents in the variety of its contents a striking outlook and breadth of resource. It ministers to the needs of broad minds and serves world-wide reforms. In phases diverse and yet correlated it is of absorbing interest to man as well as woman, while maintaining its reputation and place as the organ of a great body of women upon whose white banner the sun never sets. Its educational features are valuable, not only for the instruction of the adult whose principles are confirmed, but probably equally so for the child whose mind is in process of growth, whose principles are in the formative stage and whose ideas of the right and wrong of certain great issues are as yet nebulous. For this reason it is particularly valuable in the home, a part of whose purpose should be to safeguard the mind of youth from erroneous impressions concerning fundamental principles of action.

A Paper for the Pastor or Business Man

Not only is THE UNION SIGNAL of prime importance to the white ribboner that she may keep in close touch with the affairs and plans of her own organization, but to the busy pastor or the hurried business man it affords a source of information to which he may turn for facts and figures, news notes or inspirational addresses, stories of sacrifice, examples of loyalty and a record of achievement unsurpassed in the annals of any reform.

To those not quite convinced of the necessity or utility of prohibition, its illustrative stories and its indisputable weekly register of the satisfactory workings of prohibition even under unfavorable conditions, bring conviction and conversion. The student in search of material of such character will find in THE UNION SIGNAL a resumé of the findings of scientific research, legislative enactments and court decisions concerning alcoholic liquors and the war against their use sufficient for any purpose.

To glance through a year's file of THE UNION SIGNAL is to find at one's service in condensed form the essential matter regarding the year's battle against booze in all lands and means wherewith to widen one's mental circle by forming a reading acquaintance with workers and methods at home and overseas.

UNION SIGNAL DAY MARCH 1

It was the oft expressed desire of Mrs. Stevens that March 1, her birthday, should be celebrated in a way to make prominent The Union Signal, our official organ. Select from articles in this issue and make an up-to-date program that will result in each locality in a shower of subscriptions. See page eight for suggested program.

The School Boy Needs Its Help

A constant reader of THE UNION SIGNAL improved opportunities offered when the family were all gathered in the dining room or about the library table to refer to recent occurrences in the field of temperance reform, the progress of prohibition and consequent good effects and items of general interest noted in her favorite paper. One day the elder son hurried in from school and exclaimed, "Oh, mother! Our school is going to debate with the south side on the question, 'Resolved, that Blankton should refuse to license the liquor traffic.' Now, mother, bring out those UNION SIGNALS and help me study up our side. I'm against license." One hardly need say that "mother" lost no time in helping "our side," which, of course, was victorious. But had it not been for THE UNION SIGNAL ammunition, "our side" might have lost! Moral: Be prepared.

The Husband's Point of View

"I would not think of doing without THE UNION SIGNAL; my husband enjoys it so much," said Mrs. Smith, one of the backbone women of a local union. "Mr. Smith always reads the letter from Mrs. Ellis the moment he gets a chance to open the paper and he knows more about what is going on in Washington than any man in this community, all because he reads a woman's letters," she added quaintly.

It Will Convert Doubtful Voters

"There's no better campaign matter to be had anywhere than that CAMPAIGN UNION SIGNAL. If I could put that in the home of every doubtful voter in this county I'd guarantee to carry the county for prohibition," said a business man in a Western state during a state-wide campaign. This gentleman was one of the best informed men in his county and an ardent friend of our cause. He read THE UNION SIGNAL every week. Go thou and do likewise!

The Reason of It

An observer at a county convention noticed that a certain country union was up-to-date on every topic, and far ahead of others in quantity and quality of reports and number of delegates. Later she inquired, "Why is it your country union is so much more active than the others?" "Because nearly every one of us takes THE UNION SIGNAL," was the reply. A good reason!

Mr. Slowman was opposed to prohibition, and, as he said, "agin women's votin'," but his good wife was not so minded. It came to pass that frequently when ready for a "restin' spell," Mr. Slowman found in his own easy chair a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL, apparently hastily dropped there as another vacated the chair. Often certain articles were marked. The paper was at first thrown aside contemptuously, but presently curiosity got the better of contempt and the marked articles were furtively read, then other articles. Ere many moons Mr. S. was enjoying THE UNION SIGNAL greatly and hardly able to remember that he was not always as now "in favor of prohibition and women's votin'." THE UNION SIGNAL is a good converter. Try it!

A Worth While Investment

The latest issue of our National organ, THE UNION SIGNAL, has just reached my desk in the Washington (D. C.) Headquarters of our National W. C. T. U.

How wonderfully it voices the enthusiasm of temperance workers all over the land. How alive, informing and reliable it is. I am impressed anew with its unequalled value as a medium for our educational and prohibition campaigns. It tells the truth about alcohol, the greatest enemy that imperils the home, and in vivid word pictures depicts the revolt against it by all the warring nations. Total abstinence teaching always makes deep and lasting sentiment for prohibition and its enforcement. In our great and glorious campaigns for state and national prohibition THE UNION SIGNAL is invaluable and indispensable. We do not begin to use it as we might. An investment of time and money by each local union in securing subscribers to our splendid paper and in the free use of campaign editions will help bring state and national victories. Already it has proved its value in state, county and local campaigns. As we keep at the forefront side by side with the allied temperance forces let us hold aloft our official organ which so fearlessly stands for the truth—the truth that shall make our nation free.

Anna A. Gordon

ARTICLES IN CURRENT PERIODICALS

The Ladies' Home Journal for February discourses editorially on "Suppose America Does Go Dry," urging that "we cannot spend too much effort or time to educate the people to a conviction that alcohol is an absolute foe of health and efficiency."

"Alcohol and Human Efficiency"

Eugene Lyman Fisk in the February Atlantic Monthly, writing on "Alcohol and Human Efficiency," says: "If alcohol is the key that unlocks the door to the chamber of disease, degeneration and life-failure, we must hold it solely responsible for the results that follow its use. The only safe course is not to use the key. Some individuals may enter the chamber for a little while and escape without injury; but given 2,000,000 supposedly sound, healthy men, and let them, one after another, enter that door and there can be no reasonable doubt of the result. Many will come out smitten as from the war zone; many will not come out at all. Given 2,000,000 men of the same type who pass by the door and do not use the key and considering the exactly measured evidence from so many sources, as well as the evidence of common observation, who can question that at the end of twenty-five years the first group will be decimated as compared with the second? Whether the total effect is directly due to indulgence strictly maintained within the limit of so-called moderation is a purely academic question. As practical men what we wish to know is: What does it cost us in the long run to drink alcohol? The evidence that society is paying a heavy bill for the indulgence cannot be longer disregarded by conservative men entirely outside of the propaganda for drastic methods of reform.

"The contention that there is an inborn social craving for alcohol is pure dogma. Man craves excitement, relaxation, change. He seeks to anticipate good fortune and to quiet the activity of those conservative faculties which cause him to worry over troubles and life-struggle. He finds that alcohol apparently assists him in attaining these ends, and he drinks it for these effects, not because he is 'thirsty,' or 'craves' alcohol qua alcohol, without any previous knowledge of its effects. Many individuals who are wrecked by alcohol would lead normal lives undisturbed by any 'craving' for it if they were protected from the repeated experience of its effects.

Leading Medical Journals Strongly Anti-Alcohol

"Within the past few years medical literature reveals a rapidly changing attitude with regard to alcohol. The leading medical journals are strongly anti-alcohol, and there is evident a growing sense of the tremendous responsibility resting on the scientific man who sanctions an indulgence which may lead to more misery, and disease than he can cure or prevent through a life time of surgical and therapeutic endeavors.

"Furthermore alcohol is alcohol either in whisky or beer. It is nonsense to claim that beer is a hygienic drink. It is drunk chiefly for its alcoholic effect and if the alcoholic effect is produced the danger of alcohol exists. Anyone who doubts that beer can produce a sort of intoxication need only visit the saloon and watch the beer drinker in various stages of bafflement or excitement. If beer does not intoxicate or produce any alcoholic effect what becomes of the 'racial craving for stimulation' which it is said to satisfy? Furthermore, heavy beer drinking, as in the case of brewery employes, adds to the danger of excessive fluid intake entirely apart from alcohol. The heavy mortality of brewery employes is sufficient evidence that beer, so far as its effect on masses of men is concerned, is not a hygienic drink."

Dr. Wiley No Use for Beer

"I have abandoned my temperance propaganda and have come out squarely for prohibition of a nation-wide character," says Dr. Wiley, in the February number of Good Housekeeping in answering a question concerning the desirability of beer with "a lower alcoholic basis, say three per cent."

Business Men Eliminating Booze from Meals

Collier's of January 27 contains the following significant statement: "Is it true that there is less drinking by business men than used to be the habit? Here is a bit of evidence: The entire alcohol bill of all the lunchers and diners at the Advertising Club of New York for a recent month was thirty dollars. There were something like 4,000 regular meals served in the club rooms during those twenty-six working days, not reckoning dinner parties. This makes the average bill for booze not over eight-tenths of a cent per person per meal. In other words not over one diner in forty took a drink with his meal. We find these figures recorded in a recent issue of a New York advertising journal—not a professional organ of temperance. We pass them on to the young men of other cities who can be trusted to draw their own conclusions as to the habits of the successful members of what is possibly the most modern and progressive of professions."

"What Grandfather and Father Thought About Drink," the third article in the series, "Turning Off the Spigot," by Elizabeth Tilton, appears in the January 27 number of The Survey.

"Attempt Great Things for God.
Expect Great Things from God."

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

ON! ON! MY COMRADES!

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON

"Fortresses are falling,
To our conquering band,
After desert journey,
Gleams the promised land."

We Young People's Branch members want to see the dawning of the golden day about which we sing. We want to catch the "foregleam of the glory of the Lord as it breaks upon the world" when the last drop of intoxicating liquor is banished. We know the happy day is coming, but are we working to hasten its dawning as faithfully and enthusiastically as we should? There is now before us

"One last great battle for the right,
One short, sharp struggle to be free!
To do is to succeed—our fight
Is waged in heaven's approving sight;
The smile of God is victory."

TO DO IS TO SUCCEED! Ah! there's the secret!

We all know that "rum is on the run," but we Young People's Branch members are organized to keep him going, for, as Dr. Parkhurst says, "While the wicked flees when no man pursueth, he makes better time when some one is after him."

We'll pursue him and rout him out! We'll work, work NOW, work EARNESTLY and KEEP WORKING to hasten that good time coming!

And let us not forget, dear Young People's Branch members, that as our own Mary A. Livermore said, "Whoever works for the betterment of humanity, for the lessening of evil things in life, and the increase in what is good and helpful, has his hand in the hand of God, and takes on something of God's almightiness, and though victory may be postponed it will surely come. This prohibition movement is a struggle for the right, for a higher manhood, for a nobler civilization; whatever is right is of God, and takes on His omnipotence and immortality; and ultimately must and will win."

Surely the "dawn is glinting the hills"!

Then

"Go forth till you meet the morning,
And hail its first gleam of light.
It comes for every nation,
It comes to set all free;
Then rest not, let us hasten
Truth's glorious victory!"

OUR FOREIGN NEIGHBORS

ELLA B. BLACK, National Superintendent of Work Among Foreign Speaking People

The young men and women of our Y. P. B. have an important part in helping our young foreign friends to become useful American citizens.

Wherever possible, enroll them as Y. P. B. members, having them sign the pledge. If they do not attend church, invite them to become members of your Sunday school class. If they cannot be induced to join the Y. P. B., a friendly interest on the part of the young men, with a warning against cigarets and beer, may help the foreign boys to become good citizens. Our young women can assist in night schools where the foreign girls are taught cooking, sewing, how to feed and clothe children, etc. Let us always remember that we are the examples the foreigners are trying to imitate. Let us be what we would like them to be. Every Y. P. B. member can tactfully distribute literature on temperance and purity.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH NOTES

The Kansas Y. P. B. has started a Y. P. B. Public Entertainment Bureau for the Y. P. B. and L. T. L. Temperance plays, cantatas, dialogues, readings, etc., are to be suggested each month in the state paper by Miss Ollie May McCormick. This is a helpful suggestion for other states.

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMS FOR FEBRUARY Y. P. B. MEETINGS

First Meeting

Frances E. Willard Memorial Meeting

Song—"Crusade Hymn," page 55.
Roll Call—"How May We Perpetuate Frances E. Willard's Influence?"
Brief Talk by Young Woman—"What Phase of Miss Willard's Character has Most Impressed Me."
Outline—"What the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Accomplishes for Young People."
Offering for the Memorial Fund.
Signs of Victory—"Our Whitening Map." (Talk by young man.)
Song—"The Golden Age is Coming."

Second Meeting

Study.
Department—Parliamentary Usage.
Social Hour—Temperance Spelling Contest.

NEW YORK Y. P. B. KEYNOTE FOR THE YEAR

MAUDE B. PERKINS

Prayer.
Reports on time.
Experts on Branch work. Efficiency.
Punctuality. Publicity.
Abstinence, the foundation of Prohibition.
Reading of our papers.
Enthusiasm for Prohibition.
Dependable members.
New members.
Earnestness of purpose.
Strict adherence to the pledge.
Study to show thyself approved.

DEPARTMENT AWARDS

Social Meetings and Red Letter Day Prize

The National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Social Meetings and Red Letter Days offers a prize to the state Y. P. B. securing the greatest number of new members at social meetings and red letter day gatherings.

Christian Citizenship Prize

A prize of twenty-five dollars, to be known as the Frances E. Beauchamp prize, will be awarded for the best cartoon designed by a student in the seventh or eighth grade or high school.

Our Y. P. B. members should take notice of the above offers and compete for the prizes.

DRINK PROBLEM A COLLEGE STUDY

"Social Welfare and the Liquor Problem" is the title of a new course of study in economics introduced this year in the Iowa State college—a course largely the outgrowth of student demand, interest in the question of prohibition having grown so keen during the past two years that many of the students have studied it voluntarily and without credit. The liquor problem is now the subject of systematic study in some two hundred colleges of the United States, and at least sixty-five universities and colleges offer courses in this study for which curriculum credit is allowed.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

YOUNG PEOPLE WORKING FOR A "LIQUORLESS BURMA"

MAY MACK, Burma Y. P. B. Superintendent

DEAR YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH MEMBERS:

When we read of the great temperance victories in America our gains here seem small in comparison. Nevertheless, there is much that is encouraging, especially in our young people's work.

The convention held in October was one of the best we have ever had, both as regards numbers and interest shown. The reception held in the Y. W. C. A. was very largely attended. As our organizing secretary, Miss Flora Strout, reviewed the work of the year our hearts swelled with pride and thankfulness, but not a few, also, experienced a sinking of the heart as they looked forward to the months when they would no longer have her inspiring presence to cheer and guide them. Miss Strout has not only succeeded in winning the love and affection of the young people, but she has inspired them with a high ideal, namely, "a liquorless Burma," and though they fully realize how much more difficult it will be to carry on the work without her to guide and direct, yet they mean with the help of God to keep at it until the goal is reached.

The burden of their prayers for several months now has been that they may prove worthy of this great trust that has been laid upon them, and it is an immense comfort to them to know that their comrades in America are thinking of them and praying that their prayer may be fully realized.

Much has been done this year to educate public sentiment by means of public meetings, temperance entertainments, medal contests and the distribution of literature.

In some places a house-to-house canvass has been undertaken, which resulted in hundreds of pledges being signed both by Christians and non-Christians. Some of our young people, not satisfied with merely distributing temperance leaflets, offered to read them to those who were not able to do so. We have added 577 new members to the ranks of the Y. P. B.

A missionary writing to us says: "Our little band of signers are 'holding out.' Our first meeting after the long vacation was an 'experience meeting.' The members were asked to tell how they had succeeded in keeping the pledge in the jungle away from the strengthening influence of the society; also of any efforts made to get others to give up chewing and smoking. Several told of arguments with friends at home who tried to ridicule them. Only one of the whole number confessed that she had broken the pledge, but she asked to be allowed to try again."

Our greatest need, of course, is leaders. I quote from a letter received from one of our Karen Y. P. B. secretaries. She says: "During my vacation I visited two societies that I organized a few months ago and found them doing well, but more members would be gained if there were some one to give good lectures from time to time."

Distances are great, traveling expensive, and the language difficulty makes work in this country hard. Our Karen worker, Po Thein, is shortly to go on a boat trip, visiting some twenty-five villages. He has done a good deal of touring with Miss Strout, gaining experience which will be a great help to him. The national union is now looking out for a Burmese young woman to work among the Burmese women, as well as the young people, so everything is being done to strengthen our fighting force.

The greatest hindrances to the advance of temperance are Europeans in high social position, who set such a terrible example to these child races. A prominent Mohammedan gentleman, when asked how it was he served alcoholic liquors contrary to the teaching of the Koran, said: "I have to keep them for the English people who visit me."

In a country where it is the custom in all grades of society to offer the wine cup, and where it is looked upon as a necessity to social success, temperance moves slowly, but we see victory ahead.

Not so very long ago the president of our W. C. T. U. in Moulmein protested against a proposed liquor bar at a Red Cross entertainment and gained her point with the committee. Such a thing was never known before and many predicted a financial failure in consequence and were greatly surprised when, on the contrary, the undertaking turned out to be the greatest success in every way.

As our new Burma president truly said, when we contemplate the work of the new year without our organizing secretary, Miss Strout, we feel we are facing a high mountain; but, strengthened with the knowledge that you are thinking of us and praying for us, we mean to climb.

W. C. T. U. Headquarters, M. E. School,
Lewis St., Rangoon, Burma,
November 12, 1916.

THE FOUNDATION OF OUR PLATFORM

ANNA A. GORDON, National W. C. T. U. President

(From Annual Address)

The total abstinence pledge has been signed by each one of our 400,000 members. We have solemnly promised "to abstain from all distilled, fermented and malt liquors, including wine, beer and cider." This pledge is the foundation of our platform for we believe in the Gospel of the Golden Rule and that each man's habits of life should be an example safe and beneficent for every other man to follow. For over forty years we have been asking our sisters and brothers of a common danger and a common hope to make common cause with us in our moral suasion propaganda along total abstinence lines. In four decades we have seen our little group of pledged white-ribbon women grow to be a mighty host—half a million in forty nations of the world. In the old-time singing school the musical vibrations of the leader's tuning fork gave to the singers the correct key. When humanity's chorus catches the keynote of total abstinence now vibrating the world around we shall hear in the psalm of each life the glad harmonies of hope and happiness.

THE BANK THAT NEEDS CLOSING

—Adapted from San Francisco Call.

Hundreds of Millions of Savings Go Into This Hole—Misery and Crime Come Out

"Alcohol has long caught the boy. Now boycott the alcohol."

CIGARETS BARRED BY MANAGER OF NATIONALS

Clark Griffiths, manager of the Nationals, defies an evil in these words: "I am convinced that our failure to come up to expectations this season has been largely due to the fact that some of the players on whom I depended were cigaret fiends. There will be no more of it. Any player who insists on smoking cigarets is through, so far as the Nationals are concerned, and that goes so long as I am manager of the team. No man in athletics for a living can use them."

"HE THAT GATHERETH NOT WITH ME"

We cannot be neutrals in the warfare with sin and Satan. Either we are on Christ's side and fighting with Him, and His light is in our faces and His joy allures us on, or we are ranged with His bitterest foes and are striving against Him. "He that gathereth not with me, scattereth abroad."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

BANISH JOHN BARLEYCORN

"We have with great success made a practice of not leaving arsenic and strychnine, and typhoid and tuberculosis germs lying around for our children to be destroyed by. Treat John Barleycorn in the same way. Stop him. Don't let him lie around, licensed and legal, to pounce upon our youth. It is the healthy, normal boys, now born or being born for whom I write."

JACK LONDON, in "John Barleycorn."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, February 8, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

The National W. C. T. U. gratefully acknowledges the receipt of $325 from Miss Mary E. Olney of Providence, R. I., for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund. Many friends of the cause will wish to observe Mrs. Stevens' natal anniversary by contributions to the fund which bears her name.

WHY TAKE THE UNION SIGNAL

Sacred memories cluster around March 1, the birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens, for so many years the president of the National W. C. T. U. and editor-in-chief of the official paper. No local union will fail to use this occasion to remind its members of her matchless leadership, her consecrated life, her undaunted courage and her rare friendliness. We know nothing would be so gratifying to Mrs. Stevens as to have a large part of the March 1 meetings devoted to discussions of the value to all white ribboners of the official paper, and suggestions as to ways to increase its subscription list. She never lost an opportunity to emphasize the fact that THE UNION SIGNAL is the property of every member of the W. C. T. U. and that ownership and control carries with it a responsibility on the part of each union for the support of the paper.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

SUGGESTED PROGRAM FOR MARCH 1, UNION SIGNAL DAY

Music: "Oh, Sound the Jubilee," page 16, "Popular Campaign Songs"

Scripture Reading:

Introductory Remarks by Leader, referring to the significance of UNION SIGNAL Day, the birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens

Response to Roll Call, from "What Lillian Stevens Said"

Reading: "THE UNION SIGNAL Makes Converts to Prohibition," page 4 this issue

Solo: "Home's Love Light"

Discussion: "Why Take THE UNION SIGNAL," page 8, and "Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals"

Playlet: "The Resurrection of Blanktown Union," page 13

Music: "Paean of Victory," See UNION SIGNAL of February 1

Appeal for Subscriptions:

(See advertisement on page 16 for program material)

Souvenirs for use on UNION SIGNAL Day will be furnished all local unions which agree to observe the day.

On this page there is given a program for UNION SIGNAL Day. The most important feature of it is the discussion, "Why Take the Paper." Let the question be seriously and prayerfully considered and emphasis placed upon the three following reasons why every temperance worker should take THE UNION SIGNAL.

First: A temperance worker to be 100 per cent efficient, must be an up-to-date encyclopedia on the past and present history of the anti-liquor reform. In addition she must anticipate the chapters of that fascinating serial, "The Downfall of John Barleycorn." She must know about the states that are in campaigns, when they vote, what are the prospects of their success, and if they fail, why, and if they win, how they did it. If she is a busy woman she hasn't time to wade through blanket sheet newspapers to find these facts. What she needs and must have is a paper that specializes on the one subject in which she is most vitally interested and that will tell her these things and give her news every week hot from the battlefields.

Secondly, every worker in our cause to be 100 per cent efficient needs to be armed for our holy war with the best and latest ammunition; to be prepared for every kind of conflict, offensive and defensive, with tried and tested arguments, with facts and figures, statistics and statements to meet the sophistries and falsehoods of our opponents. She must be posted on the medical, clinical, pathological, therapeutic argument. She must be equipped with the Kansas argument—empty jails and poorhouses, an automobile to every five farmers, unlimited prosperity on every hand. She must have on the tip of her tongue the state of Maine argument—large per capita deposits in savings banks, decreased poverty. She must be ready to spring the West Virginia argument—crime and arrests reduced more than fifty per cent in twelve months. She must have at her command the North Carolina argument, and that of a dozen other states—real estate values tremendously increased, more money for schools and more children in school.

These are a very few of the things she must deal out to the skeptical, questioning public. Now the chances are that in addition to being a temperance worker she is the wife of a man for whom she must prepare three meals each day, and the mother of a family of children whose clothes wear out and who have measles, mumps and whooping cough. She has no time to delve into libraries, to consult experts along these varied lines, to conduct correspondence with people who have made a study of these subjects. She must have presented to her each week in shape to put into immediate use the arguments she needs.

Thirdly, a 100 per cent efficient temperance worker not only needs to be well posted on the history of our reform and to be equipped with arguments, but she must be thoroughly acquainted with the machinery of the organization of which she is a part. She must be versed in its marvelous history, must be familiar with its peerless leaders, must be cognizant of its nation-wide and world-wide scope, its statesmanlike program for National Constitutional and World-wide Prohibition. She must know the very latest successful methods of work. She must discover the magic recipe that enables certain states each year to add unto their thousands of members other thousands. She must learn the secret by which some unions persuade the local press of their community to give unlimited space to W. C. T. U. propaganda and prohibition preachments. She must find out the way to manage a prohibition parade so that it will not only impress the people but be photographed indelibly on their consciences. She must learn the most approved method of plastering a town with prohibition posters so that they will not only stick to the billboards but to the memory of the men and women who read them. She must discover how to administer skillfully and tactfully a tonic to the sluggish, anæmic voters who stay at home and think the country does not need them. She must find out how to galvanize into action the good people who do not know the feeling of civic responsibility. She must learn how to make the people enter into and go through a campaign for state-wide prohibition or suffrage with the same zest with which football teams go upon the gridiron. These are some of the things she needs to know, and her successful sisters in the organization who have worked them out can, out of their years of experience, tell her, but how is she to secure this information without endless, tiresome letter writing, and how will she know to whom and to which one to write for any given information. When she finds that in "the letter from home," received each week she can get all these things and more, of course she wants to subscribe and inspire all her associates to do the same.

The moral is plain! If the women who read and study the official paper are our most efficient workers, our membership-getters, our sentiment-creators, our successful campaigners, our vote-makers, why not have more of them and that right speedily?

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

"Preparedness" is the slogan of the liquor interests these days. Three Louisville (Ky.) distilling companies have recently announced reductions in their capital stock. This indicates the first movement toward retrenchment in anticipation of the inevitable state-wide prohibition. One large distiller said to a representative of the Christian Science Monitor on the day following the big Bryan prohibition meeting: "It does not look very good, does it? Prohibition is coming in this state. We will be in a great turmoil for the next three years. But what can we do? We have our investments here and we are tied down. I'm perfectly willing to stop making and selling whisky, but I don't like the idea of having my property confiscated. I think whisky is a bad thing, generally speaking."

"For the Senate of the United States to force prohibition upon the people of the District of Columbia, and the capital of the nation, would be an act of tyranny, and would make Washington, as the world is constituted, the laughing stock of all nations of the globe," says the East St. Louis (Ill.) Daily Journal, a pro-liquor paper. Who is laughing at Petrograd since the prohibition of vodka went into effect in Russia? What ridicule has been directed against Toronto since prohibition became the law in Ontario? Have Denver, Seattle, Portland or Detroit suffered in the estimation of the nation because of the elimination of liquor?

The high cost of mere existence is causing the liquor dealers of Boston, notwithstanding their so-called recent victory, a great deal of concern. The Boston Traveler recently said: "One dealer assures us solemnly that he paid so much to political lawyers for his license in the suburbs that he can't break even financially if he is over-scrupulous concerning his methods. That is a phase of the license problem not unfamiliar, of course, to the Boston licensing board." And yet the Boston license system is proclaimed all over the nation as the ideal regulatory system.

"A representative of the United Societies gave a demonstration in Chicago recently to show how to make whisky at home when prohibition is ushered in," says the Northwestern Christian Advocate. "For instance, from a loaf of bread a gallon of seven per cent alcohol can be made—so he declared. New Orleans molasses is another alcohol basis. A tea kettle and long tube will complete the requirements. It is quite probable that such subterfuges will be indulged in when prohibition ensues. But no discouragement need result. Such resort is to be expected. It indicates the dying throes of the evil. The sot, the sport, would persist; but after a while he would cease his autobrew. The truth is thoroughly established that the public saloon is the stay of the drink habit. Remove that and in time—with the passing of the inebriate and the still further development of public sentiment—drink will diminish to a negligible quantity. At any rate, prohibitionists are perfectly willing to risk the result."

The distilleries of Pekin, Ill., a large distillery center, according to the Chicago Examiner, have practically abandoned the manufacture of whisky and are devoting themselves chiefly to turning out commercial alcohol, not alone for munitions but also as fuel for farm machinery and industrial purposes.

COAL MEN DECLARE LIQUOR CRIPPLES MINE INDUSTRY

Startling testimony showing how the liquor traffic injures the mining industry was given on January 25 in Washington, Pa., by the district attorney in equity proceedings against the Western Pennsylvania and Ohio brewing companies and wholesale liquor dealers, when prominent coal men told of the wild revelry of their workmen following pay days and holidays that crippled their plants for days. There are no saloons in Washington county, and the district attorney is seeking to have the liquor men perpetually enjoined from doing business, through agents or otherwise, in the county.

SEATTLE AGAIN!

As an illustration of the satisfaction with which the editorial writers of the Seattle Post Intelligencer regard the operations of the prohibitory law after one year's experience and observation, we quote the following paragraph from a recent editorial relevant to the past and future of Seattle:

"A year ago an economic readjustment, due to a reformation initiated by the people, was impending in state affairs and a national political campaign coming on. Inherent and characteristic optimism was, therefore, tempered by misgivings as to the effect of these. But fearsome anticipation preceded no actual realization of harm in either case. City and state adjusted themselves easily to the new and more wholesome order of things without shock and immediately became the better and stronger for it; and politics served only as a passing distraction without consequentially affecting the even tenor of the business way.

"Now, no fanciful bugaboos in sight and an interlude of political peace assured, Seattle, closing a year of such substantial progress and development, may well greet the year of our Lord 1917 with stoutest heart and highest ambitions, prepared to make every day count for enduring good."

Referring to the second inaugural address of Governor Ernest Lister and incidentally indicating the power of prohibition to win the approval of the people when given half a chance, the Post Intelligencer says:

"His stand for absolute prohibition, a bone dry law, will encounter little opposition among the solons, who are equally responsive to public sentiment."

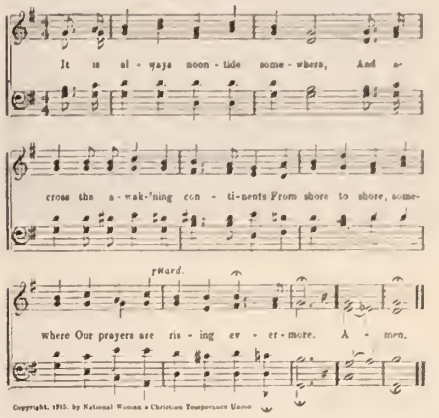
VEHICLE AND HARDWARE ASSOCIATION COMES OUT FOR PROHIBITION

Foes of liquor in Kansas City, Mo., gained another ally recently, according to the local press. The board of directors of the Western Retail Implement, Vehicle and Hardware Association, in a resolution adopted unanimously, went squarely on record in favor of prohibition. The organization has a membership of 4,200.

COLORADO ICE MANUFACTURERS SAY PROHIBITION STIMULATES BUSINESS

Ice manufacturers of Colorado enjoyed marked prosperity last year, and they attribute it in part, at least, to prohibition. "The effect of prohibition has been to increase our business instead of injuring it as many had expected," said W. H. Edwards of Greeley, secretary of the association. "You will find that most of the ice manufacturers will favor a dry state after experiencing its effects for the first year."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



FRANCES WILLARD TO THE YOUNG PEOPLE

What we need to sound in the ears of girlhood is to be brave, and in the ears of boyhood to be gentle. There are not two sets of virtues; and there is but one greatness of character: it is that of him (or her) who combines the noblest traits of man and woman in nature, words and deeds.

God grant that we may be so divinely led that history's verdict upon our work shall be: By God's blessing they helped to make the world wider for women and happier for humanity.

Every considerate word we utter concerning those about us, every time we give them the benefit of a doubt in our judgment of their motive, every time we take occasion to couple with our demurrer from their position some saving clause of appreciation, we are habituating ourselves to that charity which suffereth long and is kind, that heavenly love which alone can make us meet for heavenly company.

The geography of character is a "branch" sure to be taught some day in public schools. Character is bounded on the north by sobriety, on the east by integrity, on the west by industry, and on the south by gentleness.

The spoken word with a life and character back of it, the spoken word, sped home by earnest voice, convincing tone, and punctuating gesture, is the final human factor in the progress of reform.

The most normal and most perfect human being is the one who most thoroughly addresses himself to the activity of his best powers, gives himself most perfectly to the world around him, flings himself out into the midst of humanity, and is so preoccupied by his own beneficent reaction on the world that he is practically unconscious of a separate existence.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

Mrs. Mary Rhodes Holt, Salem, Oregon, a charter member of the local union and for nearly twenty years its secretary.

Mrs. Della Wright, Union, Oregon, a charter member of the local union which was organized forty years ago.

Mrs. J. C. Curry, Diagonal, Iowa, the enthusiastic and earnest president of the local union.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day
March 1—Union Signal Subscription Day—Birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens
March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow

GROWING POPULARITY OF SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION

EDITH SMITH DAVIS, World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction

Today we are greatly aided in having our leading educators in hearty sympathy with the work of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. From our United States Commissioner of Education, P. P. Claxton, to the humblest county superintendent of schools or rural principal there is unanimity of opinion that all children in the schools should be taught the truth concerning the nature and effect of alcohol.

Present Day Text Books

The text books being issued today so thoroughly discuss the subject of alcohol from every point of view that the instructor finds her task of teaching physiology and hygiene, with special reference to the nature and effects of narcotics, a comparatively easy one.

Three important series of text books have been issued during the past two years. The Gulick Hygiene Series has sent out a two-book course. Health and Safety for the fourth or fifth grade covers the basal facts of hygiene in thirty-three chapters, and Physiology, Hygiene and Sanitation for the upper grammar grades deals with the same problems of hygiene but from a different angle. Here the pupils are introduced to physiology. Scientific saneness characterizes both books and the treatment of alcohol and tobacco shows the same wisdom that has been shown in all the Gulick books. There is no preaching or exhortation, simply scientific investigation and study.

The Health Series of Physiology and Hygiene by Prof. M. V. O'Shea of the University of Wisconsin and Dr. J. H. Kellogg, superintendent of the Battle Creek Sanitarium, consists of four books: Health Habits, Health and Cleanliness, The Body in Health, and Making the Most of Life. To establish health habits is the aim of the series. The subjects of alcohol and tobacco receive the same wise handling that is to be found in the Gulick books.

A two-book series of Practical Health Lessons has been prepared by Dr. Eugene Heilmann, principal of the Heston Public School of Philadelphia. Again the purpose of the series is the intelligent care of the health. These books are to be studied, not simply read, the author asserts, and they merit careful study along the line of the nature and effects of narcotics as well as all other lines.

That the text books of today are keeping pace with scientific temperance investigation is one of the clear signs that the prohibition of the use of alcohol is coming.

Prize Essay Contests

From all over the nation come encouraging reports of the holding of prize essay contests. Let me quote the programs of one or two of the Pennsylvania contests and the far-reaching value of this work will be easily recognized:

"The county prize of $5 was presented by Mrs. Mary V. Stringer, president of the Philadelphia county W. C. T. U., who spoke on 'Gold and Wisdom.' The $10 state prize, in the absence of the state superintendent, Sara Phillips Thomas, was presented by Mrs. Clara Hoover Stilwell, temperance teacher in the Philadelphia schools. An address on 'Real Prize-Winners in Life and How to Become One' was given by Dr. John Garber, superintendent of the Philadelphia schools. A number of the school officials, the officers of the county W. C. T. U., the president and members of the Germantown union were present. The children furnished the music and it was indeed a Red Letter Day."

The following program was given January 16, 1917:

Opening Remarks—Mr. Charles H. Button, president of the Alexander Henry Home and School Association
Singing—School Chorus
Business Session
Duet
Presentation and Acceptance of Presents
Singing—Henry School Song
Remarks—Mr. Frank Smedley, member of board of education; Mr. John L. Shroy, superintendent of District Ten
Presentation of Prizes for Temperance Essays, Mrs. H. B. Antrim
Remarks by Mrs. Clara Hoover Stilwell
Singing—"Pennsylvania Shall Be Free"
Address—"Good Citizenship and Temperance," Mrs. Mary V. Grice, president of Home and School League of Philadelphia
Singing—"O Holy Night"—School Chorus
Medals for Contest Winners

Our National W. C. T. U. Publishing House has arranged to handle the Scientific Temperance Instruction medals. These medals are not to take the place of the money prizes in the colleges, normal and high schools but, if so desired, are to be given in the grades and in the rural schools. They are very attractive and also inexpensive. The gold plated medal sells for fifty cents and the gold filled medal of the same design sells for seventy-five cents.

Department Helps

The Compendium of Temperance Truth is now handled entirely by the National W. C. T. U. Before the year closes it is expected that not one single library will be without this important analysis of the temperance movement. The price of the book, fifty cents, makes it within the power of each union to aid in the dissemination of its truths. A campaign for the Temperance Educational Quarterly has already begun. Franklin county, Ohio, is sending the Quarterly to each of its one thousand teachers. To sow the seed in this way is to insure a plentiful harvest in the near future.

The Scientific Charts and Manual are in demand wherever superintendents are doing special temperance work in aiding the teachers.

Getting Ready for the Observance of Temperance Day

Special legislation, as well as special enthusiasm is being urged for a nation-wide observance of the last Friday in October as "Frances E. Willard or Temperance Day" in the schools. This should become an epoch-making event.

Teachers' Receptions

The present program of having the "Best Methods of Teaching Temperance," or the prize essay written by teachers, read at teachers' receptions and then discussed by the teachers themselves is already bringing in results. The supply of January Quarterlies is already exhausted by the demand for it for these receptions.

Necessity of Temperance Workers Knowing the Nature and Effect of Alcohol

The books and photo-plays of today make it imperative that the workers in the W. C. T. U. should understand the nature and effect of alcohol upon the nervous system. At least this part of the scientific study should be taken up in the union so that each W. C. T. U. shall become a center for the dissemination of light and truth.

LOCAL UNIONS OBSERVE DAY OF PRAYER

The Erma (N. J.) W. C. T. U. observed January 18 as the day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition. Temperance music, prayers and the reading of the address of the National President added to the impressiveness of the occasion.

The day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition was observed by the Vancouver (Wash.) W. C. T. U. with a meeting at which 200 people were in attendance. Mayor Milton Evans spoke on "Law Enforcement," and addresses were made by several ministers and laymen.

The Fargo (N. D.) and Scandinavian W. C. T. U.'s of the city, representing a membership of 400, held a joint meeting at the Y. W. C. A. parlors on January 18, in the interests of National Constitutional Prohibition, with Mrs. Abbie W. H. Best as chairman. Mrs. R. M. Pollock, in the absence of Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson, the state W. C. T. U. president, told of the campaign plans for the coming year. Addresses by pastors, Scripture reading by Mrs. Julia Nelson, president of the Scandinavian union, and music of a high order were enjoyable features of the program.

The Good of the Nation Demands Prohibition, Said Abraham Lincoln

Whether or not the world will be vastly benefited by a total and final banishment from it of all intoxicating drinks, seems to me not now to be an open question. Three-fourths of mankind confess the affirmative with their tongues, and I believe all the rest acknowledge it in their hearts. Ought any, then, to refuse their aid in doing what the good of the whole demands?—Abraham Lincoln, in his Washingtonian Address, delivered in Springfield, Ill., Feb. 22, 1842.

BUSY DAYS FOR COLORADO WHITE RIBBONERS

Special Correspondence

The once famous "Shirley tavern" in Denver was recently the center of unusual festivities, the occasion being the Colorado Woman's Christian Temperance Union biennial reception in honor of the wives of the state officials and legislators. The throng that shook hands and extended greetings to the "first lady" and her associates in the receiving line, included many white ribboners and others from distant sections of the state. The room was very attractive and striking was the change in its use, for the daintily appointed refreshment table stood in place of the bar and on the wall above hung the beautiful state W. C. T. U. banner, bearing the assurance, "O woman, great is thy faith. Be it unto thee even as thou wilt." On entering the room the eye was greeted with the prophecy writ large on a banner, "National Constitutional Prohibition—1920."

The annual "legislative breakfast" of the Central union was given at noon prior to the reception in the beautiful dining room of the same hotel. Over three hundred guests were present and at each table was a white ribbon hostess. At the large table arranged for the speakers were other men and women of prominence, with the president of the union, Mrs. Alice E. Disbrow, as mistress of ceremonies. The speeches, on prohibition as related to the official positions of the speakers, were made by Governor Gunter, Lieutenant Governor Pulliam, Attorney General Hubbard, Senator Schermerhorn, Representative Smith, Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., and ex-Governor Carlson, who emphasized the need for National prohibition.

A legislative conference occupied the evening at state headquarters. A member of the force in the attorney general's office made plain the provisions of the pending temperance measures. The assembled workers also became interested in the bill to prohibit "peyote," a narcotic drug, which is causing loss of health, morals and life itself, among the Indians. The next day was devoted to well attended mid-year official meetings, where definite plans were formulated for increasing the membership, giving honorary members more recognition, better department work and an educational campaign preparatory to anti-cigaret legislation.

The Day of Prayer was generally observed. Legislation to strengthen the prohibition enforcement law is the center of thought. The Anti-Capital-Punishment Bill, mothered by the federated clubs, is also arousing great interest. Courts as well as legislative halls require attention, and these are busy days for Colorado white ribboners.

"THINGS WILL TAKE A TURN"

GERTRUDE STEVENS LEAVITT

A few years ago there appeared a pretty story called, "Things Will Take a Turn." This title might well be applied to the story of law enforcement in certain parts of Maine at the present time. We do not mean by this that the law is persistently violated in all sections at all times. But in four of our sixteen counties there has been lax enforcement for a few years and in these same counties the new officials, aided by the judges, are inaugurating a campaign of law enforcement which will raise these counties to even a higher point of dryness than that which other sections of the state have enjoyed.

Two of the counties where things are "taking a turn" are Cumberland, which contains 112,014 of Maine's 742,371 inhabitants, and Androscoggin, where 59,822 people live.

In the latter county Justice Savage of the supreme court is taking a hand to prevent liquor cases from being too freely put upon the special docket and his reprimand administered to the county attorney will undoubtedly bear fruit.

In Cumberland county, Judge Connolly of the Superior Court has sent out the following warning to would-be violators of the law:

"The citizens of this state have elected a governor who is an avowed prohibitionist. The citizens of this county have elected a sheriff and county attorney, both of whom are pledged to a strict, rigid and impartial enforcement of the law.

"In view of this situation, then, I am going to inaugurate a new policy and through you hope to send a message to violators of the prohibitory law to this effect: that violators of this law henceforth will be punished by being imprisoned.

"I am going to enter wholeheartedly with the sheriff and county attorney in an endeavor to give this county an honest, impartial and rigid enforcement of this statute so far as the duties of my post permit, so that we may know what the law will do when applied in its letter and spirit as the same is now interpreted and reflected in and by the minds of the mass of our people.

"My message then is that all who violate the law after this date, upon conviction, will be punished by imprisonment and fine or by imprisonment alone, as the circumstances warrant. If in any case extenuating circumstances are developed and imprisonment is deemed inadvisable, such a case will be put upon the special docket, there to remain so long as the respondent behaves, and in the event of further violation of any law to be brought forward and imposed."

At the present session of the legislature a few temperance and other reform bills are being introduced and they will be carefully investigated. We trust that only those absolutely needed to strengthen the law will be passed.

Early in the gathering of the legislature, Representative Baxter introduced an order to prohibit smoking during sessions This measure was adopted and is strenuously enforced so that the legislative halls are free from the objectionable odors and fumes which previously have been very noticeable. This order is plainly in the interest of sanitation and reform.

New L. T. L. Pin

in red, white and blue
Price 3 cents each; 25, 50 cents; per 100, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

JUDGED BY ITS EFFECTS

The Lynden (Wash.) Tribune, in congratulations concerning the effects of prohibition, says:

"Crime and booze shrank away to a mere whisper in Whatcom county in 1916. Never have the jails been so empty. It is only a few years ago, in the old saloon days, when the Lynden jail had many an inmate during the course of the twelve months. During 1916 Lynden managed to get along nicely without a prison room at all. Bring on the bone dry law!"

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse"—248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Sixteenth Year

The Chautauqua School of Nursing
513 Main St. Jamestown, N. Y.

EMIL SEVIER'S EMANCIPATION

ELIZABETH WHITFORD

Emil Sevier's eyes were a little glassy and he rose from the table with a suspicious stiffness, yet he walked sturdily enough out of the Pompeian room of the popular Chicago hotel. The three men remaining at the table, one of them a comparative stranger to the others, followed him with ruminating looks. Marston's eyes were sad when he brought them back to the small glass before him, although he spoke with the usual modern flippancy:

"A case of incipient d. t.'s. He's likely to blow up any minute. Knows it, too."

"But," asked the stranger, "he didn't get drunk on what he's had with us, did he? We've only indulged in a couple of cocktails."

"No, he's been drinking all day," Marston groaned, "and all yesterday and all the day before that—might as well say all his life. He began young, before we left school even." Marston paused, then added with a shrug, "Can't help it, I suppose," as he looked hopelessly at Jared Brooks.

"It would seem so." that gentleman admitted. He lifted his gleaming glass and gazed at the alluring amber liquid within.

"It almost makes even such an antediluvian as I want to vote for prohibition and all the new eugenic fads," he sighed.

"He's a fine chap, too," suggested the stranger.

"Yes," acquiesced Marston. "He has a fine brain—a fine heart. There never was such a friend as he was to me all through college. He has only this one weakness."

"Why don't they send him to some sanitarium for a cure?" the stranger questioned hopefully.

Old Jared Brooks set down his glass with a curt positiveness, and his voice rang crisply:

"To cure Emil Sevier you would have to begin three or four generations back. I was lawyer for his father and his grandfather, and they were both downed by strong drink—his great-grandfather, and his great-great, too, they say. I don't know how the family ever managed to hold onto its money."

"An honest lawyer helped, perhaps," Marston advanced.

Brooks half smiled in acknowledgement, but continued seriously:

"His mother, also; fine woman, beautiful, too. Boy looks like her. They say her father died raving from alcohol. But, if the boy ever does brace up, the stamina will have to come from her side of the family." The old man paused, then resumed almost as if to himself:

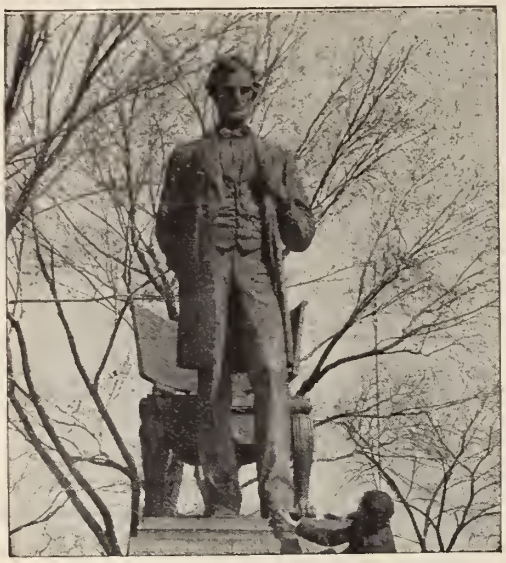
"The longing for excitement, the urge of hot blood, which brought Emil's pioneer forebears from France—the force which made the early Seviers marked men in our history—is the curse of the modern Seviers. There are no foes for them to fight, no territories to explore, no states to carve, no empires to annex. It is said that when the propeller of a modern super-steamship is lifted out of the water, the racing of the screw seems bound to vibrate the ship into those constituent electrons of which everything is made, the scientists now tell us.

"I think these Seviers have a like titanic force within them, that, pent by modernism, makes wrecks of what might have been heroes."

Marston had been waiting restlessly while the other spoke.

"If you and Mr. Sutherland will excuse me, Mr. Brooks, I'll go out and look around," he broke in. "Maybe I can make Emil go home with me." He called a waiter, ordered fresh drinks for the older men, and left hurriedly after paying the bill.

Not perched on some high pedestal
Above men's joys and fears,
But close to life's great throbbing heart,
Through the eternal years.



This story is founded on the beautiful St. Gaudens statue of Lincoln in Lincoln Park, Chicago. The figure is raised only very slightly above the general level of the great stone platform, so that the spectator stands almost face to face with the statue.

When Marston stepped out into the tingling breeze that was romping in from the lake to cool the perfervid city, he saw no sign of Emil Sevier, for that youth was already blocks away, speeding northward in a scudding taxi. Emerging a few minutes before from the hotel, he had come directly upon a taxi about to leave the entrance, had thrust his store of coins into the driver's hand, and ordered hoarsely:

"Take me that far." Then he had sunk back on the seat, sick, remorseful and hopeless. He had held himself erect within the hotel, for he still had pride, but in the depths of the cab he collapsed wholly and noted nothing of its rapid transit past great structures—office buildings, dark through all their upper stories; hotels, whose lighted windows seemed to radiate heat. The swift swirl of the taxi to the left, as the driver turned westward to make the Rush street bridge, threw the youth violently into the corner, but failed to rouse him; nor did he note the fine Lake Shore drive, nor the zestful tonic from the breezing lake that was bringing its sudden relief to the stifling streets.

Still the car swooped silently forward, and still the passenger was oblivious, although now he was passing his own home—a home whose magnificence mocked the mother, weeping over her boy's destruction. On past the desolate home the boy was swiftly carried, along the magnificent drive that edges the great lake, and on into Lincoln Park.

Hours, days, weeks after the start from the Annex—or so it might have seemed to the befogged passenger—the taxi halted.

"Half your money is used up. Shall I take you back, or go on?" the driver demanded.

"How? Yes."

"What? Which? Take you back?"

"I don't want to go back," the youth replied peevishly.

"Where shall I take you then?"

Befuddled but dignified, the fare replied with a sweeping and quite grandiloquent gesture:

"Just keep on driving round—round park—'s beautiful park. Just keep on round," and subsided again into his semi-stupor.

For another long interval the taxi purred steadily along the fine park roads and the meter spun merrily. What to them was a passenger a little more befuddled than the ordinary? But at last the meter's reckoning showed that the passenger had been given the ride paid for, and again the driver tried to rouse his fare, but all he elicited was:

"Just keep on round. That's all right—on round and round."

"But I can't go any further on the money you gave me."

Emil pulled his pockets wrong side out, laughing shamefacedly as each proved empty of cash.

"I haven't any money," he finally announced.

"I'll take you home and you can pay me there," the taxi driver volunteered, for he well knew the type. "What's your address?"

"But I do not wish to go home." The boy was trying to form his words punctiliously.

"Here, man, rouse yourself! Where do you live?" and the driver gave him a shake.

Emil Sevier clasped his throbbing head. "Don't, don't!" he cried. "Don't do that! Don't bother me."

But the patience of the cabman had reached its limits. He laid harsh hands upon the youth's collar and hauled him ungently forth.

"Well, then, get out and stay here, you idiot. I don't care what becomes of you."

The youth, thus rudely thrust into the night, stood, a lax curve of will-less indecision, gazing after the retreating taxi—the taxi that had seemed a home to him. He felt himself cruelly bereft of friends and of family, a lonely wretch. With an overwhelming feeling of self-pity, he went lurching, swaying, on and on over the dew-drenched grass. His feet struck aimlessly into a path; he stumbled up a step—or was it more?—upon a great platform, and next moment had slid gratefully down on a stone bench that seemed to curve itself to fit his limber laxity. He sank almost immediately into a heavy sleep, broken only by the murmured:

"Drive me home. Lake Shore Drive—that's where I live. Told you so long ago."

After a long interval Emil roused to see a tall, stern figure gazing at him.

"It's a policeman," he muttered. "He'll tell me, 'Move on.' Must keep ver' quiet." But his form shook with a foolish giggling.

"Policeman without a helmet! Who ever saw a cop without a cap? Thought they built 'em all in one piece with their helmets."

Again, and yet again, much later, he noted the immobile figure.

"Been standin' there all night? Ought to be pretty tired by now. Come join a fellow hobo on the downy—not so downy as I wish it was, though," he sighed, turning wearily.

The moist breeze blew in from the lake, which lay a dark mystery beyond the trees, and its ozone fought subtly with the poison in the young man's brain. Through long hours the stars waxed, mounted into the zenith, declined and waned; and in the freshening wind as they dimmed was a quickening prophecy. The gloom gradually lightened, and in the east a mounting flush promised the ever-recurrent miracle. At length, in the near greenery, a bird stirred and twittered, then another, and soon the whole

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

THE RESURRECTION OF THE BLANKTOWN UNION

THE UNION SIGNAL TO THE RESCUE

SCENE: Living room of Mrs. Dawes, president of the local union. Ten women with somewhat discouraged countenances, gathered for a meeting, talking among themselves.

DRAMATIS PERSONAE: Mrs. Dawes, president of union; Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Williams, Investigating Committee.

MRS. DAWES (Calls meeting to order): The hour for the opening of the meeting has arrived. As this is a special occasion with a specific purpose, we will omit the usual preliminaries of our regular business meetings. I do not need to remind you of the reason of our coming together. You will recall that the remnant of our union, grown utterly discouraged over our failure to increase our membership; to get anybody to take the superintendency of departments, or to organize the young people, were almost tempted to disband rather than continue an existence at such a poor dying rate. Just as we were about to take such action, two of our members volunteered to make a personal tour of investigation to local unions in neighboring cities that are known to be prosperous and to study the secret of their success. These two members, Mrs. Brown and Mrs. Williams, are today prepared to report. Mrs. Brown, may we hear from you first?

MRS. BROWN (holding in her hand a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL): You've not forgotten, comrades, that I was one of the most pessimistic members of that forlorn group to which our president has referred. Let me assure you that my pessimism has been transformed into the most extreme type of optimism. With confidence, I now say I believe we can do anything that a union ever did. And now for my report: I had heard through friends of the very flourishing union in Briarburg. It was reported to be the most popular woman's organization in the town. Last year in their state-wide campaign for prohibition, the Briarburg W. C. T. U. did such magnificent work that the men conceded that the vote not only in the town but in the whole country was largely won through its efforts. The meeting was held in the parlors of the largest church, as few homes would have been large enough to accommodate it. The first thing that attracted my attention when I entered was that so many of the women had papers in their hands. The program started off with enthusiasm. Each response to the roll-call was a bit of late news concerning the advance of prohibition. Most of the women had an interesting item on the tip of their tongues but some of them, I noticed, consulted the paper. After the preliminary business, the president called for the membership committee's report—but before I proceed farther let me assure you that these women were just like our members, ordinary home bodies, giving to this work their leisure moments in a very strenuous family life. Well, the chairman of the membership committee brought in the names of fifteen new active members and ten honoraries, and apologized for not having a longer list to present. I gasped at that; why, if our union had gained twenty-five members in as many months we would consider ourselves marvels! I was longing to speak right out in meeting and ask how she did it, when she remarked, "Our success in gaining new members is due largely to our study of methods used by unions in other cities and states. As most of you know, for a year or more I have kept what I call my 'Membership Scrap-Book.' I clip every week from my invaluable UNION SIGNAL everything that relates to securing new members, and then I put these plans into effect as soon as possible." It was the same with every report given. The Medical Temperance department superintendent told the most encouraging things about the changed attitude of the local physicians, and said most of the conversions among them on the alcohol question could be traced to articles in THE UNION SIGNAL by leading medical men, marked in blue pencil and sent to these local practitioners. The Press woman told of sending clippings from the SIGNAL to the local papers and the educational work the women had been enabled to do in that way. It really seemed as if that "clearing house of information" to which they kept referring had in it a recipe for success in every line.

ENTHUSIASTIC MEMBER: Madam President, will MRS. BROWN tell us if they succeeded in gaining and keeping the interest of the young people.

MRS. BROWN: Yes, indeed. You know there is one number a month of THE SIGNAL, called the Y. P. B. edition, and the union has put that into the rest rooms for girls in the department stores; in the reading rooms in the high schools and the colleges and everywhere the young people congregate. It has a large Branch, and makes a special business of gaining the co-operation of the members. When the presiding officer discovered I was from a neighboring union, she insisted on my coming to the front to be introduced. After I had extended greetings from our union, I turned to the president and said, "I think you have the most wonderful organization. You are doing successfully all the things we are trying to do and have almost lost hope of accomplishing. Can you tell me in a word the secret of your success?" The president smiled graciously and turning to the women, said, "I think I will let the members answer that question. There was a time when we, too, nearly despaired. We'll turn this into a testimony meeting." Well, comrades, I wish you could have seen those women. Some of them just waved that paper they had held in their hands. Others spoke up and said, "It's because we take and read THE UNION SIGNAL," and everybody expressed herself in some way. Then the president asked all who took THE UNION SIGNAL to stand, and all but three sprang to their feet—and didn't that trio look ashamed! Well, I could talk all the afternoon but I must give the rest of the time to Mrs. Williams.

MRS. DAWES: Mrs. Brown has certainly given us something to think about. Now we will hear from Mrs. Williams.

MRS. WILLIAMS (Steps smilingly to the front, also holding in her hand a UNION SIGNAL): Mrs. Brown and I agreed that one should visit a union in a dry city, the other, one in a wet city, so I went across the state line to Brandyville, where they are in the midst of a prohibition campaign. When I reached the place, I had to wait fifteen or twenty minutes for the trolley line. Looking for something to occupy the time, I saw a bunch of papers in the station wall pocket. That's where I first met this paper on my journey. (Holds aloft copy of SIGNAL). And it's where scores of others every week have a chance to read it. When I left the car in Brandyville, I found I had nearly an hour before time for the meeting, so I stepped into the attractive public library. Here again my eye fell upon that blessed paper. I wanted to get hold of it to finish a story I had begun in the station, but a young man—he looked like a college student—was intently studying the prohibition map on its cover page. I had to walk two blocks to the church where the union meets, and on the way was attracted by a perfectly fine window display, showing the amount of groceries that can be purchased with the money spent for three beers a day in a year—an exhibit installed by the W. C. T. U. While I was admiring the genius that had brought out such a striking object lesson, which some way looked a bit familiar, I remembered that I had seen a picture of that very thing in one of THE SIGNALS I was reading in the waiting station. Yes, I know, Madam President, you are thinking it is taking me a long time to get to that meeting, but I am not getting away from my text, for this is it (Waves SIGNAL in the air). Well, when I did get there, I found it was a lively affair. In a room next to the meeting room the young folks were getting ready for a prohibition parade, making banners, pennants and material for floats, and over in one corner, standing on a barrel, a young woman was reading from a copy of THE SIGNAL, specific directions in regard to the making of these various decorations. Almost before I was seated the president spied me and apologetically explained that because they were in a campaign the meeting was going to be a bit different from the ordinary one—it was to be a "preparedness" affair. Well, you never heard anything more interesting. It made me ashamed of our "cut and dried" affairs. First, those women had a quiz on current prohibition legislation, using the official paper as their text book. Then they had a "free-for-all" discussion on campaign methods and arguments. One white ribboner told how she had learned to make a campaign speech, which she couldn't for the life of her have done a month ago. She studied her Campaign Editions and fitted together bits of argument and incident and illustration from its pages until she had a rousing speech, and with a little practice, she found she could join the army of "soap box" orators and help make votes. Then different ones related their experience in answering liquor arguments. One woman told of a farmer tackling her on that old fallacy that prohibition would destroy the farmers' market, since the distilleries and breweries bought all his produce. She gave him a copy of the Fair number of THE SIGNAL that disposes of that argument and gives a lot of others for the rural people, showing that the National Grange has come out for national prohibition, and that anyway only two per cent of the grain, corn, etc., goes to the distilleries and breweries. One woman claimed that she had won over eleven voters the past week by showing them the prohibition prosperity articles in THE SIGNAL by officials and prominent residents of the new dry cities of Seattle, Portland, Oregon, Denver, Birmingham, and half a dozen others. Well, you must be weary of hearing me talk, but I need not utter another sentence—a word to the wise is sufficient, and that word is "Subscribe." (Holding up a copy of SIGNAL).

MRS. DAWES: We certainly have had an illuminating afternoon and are under a debt of gratitude to our investigators. What shall we do with their report?

ENTHUSIASTIC MEMBER: Madam President, I move that we accept the report and put into immediate effect the suggestion made by the last speaker, "Subscribe'.'

ENTHUSIASTIC MEMBER No. 2: I heartily second the motion.

(Question put to vote and receives a chorus of "Ayes.")

As the last "Aye" dies on the air, the Enthusiastic Member leads in singing, all joining, "Subscribe, Subscribe," to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne."

Supplies for Frances E. Willard Commemorative Meeting

FOR REFERENCE:

The Life of Frances E. Willard, Anna Adams Gordon. Price $1.50.

What Frances E. Willard Said, Anna Adams Gordon. Price 75 cents.

The Story of Frances E. Willard, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price 15 cts.

FOR PROGRAM MATERIAL:

Annual Address, Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, delivered at Indianapolis. Price 5 cents.

Review of Organization Work, given in report of Mrs. Frances P. Parks, National corresponding secretary, found in National Minutes. Price 25 cents.

Union Signal (special Willard Memorial number of January 25). Price 5 cents each; $1.75 per 100.

Frances E. Willard Program for Public Schools, Anna A. Gordon. Price 10 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens.

Flower of Temperance Chivalry, S. M. D. Fry. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, 75 cents.

FOR GENERAL DISTRIBUTION:

Frances Willard's Widening Way, Elizabeth P. Gordon. Price per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Frances Willard Memorial Fund, Frances P. Parks. Price per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Frances E. Willard, Lillian M. N. Stevens. Price, 3 cents each; per 100, $1.00.

Temperance Jack

Law of Habit

The Shoemaker and Little White Shoes

The Common Joy

Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE Y. P. B.:

Frances E. Willard's Influence Upon the Young People of the Age. Price, per 100, 35 cents.

FOR DISTRIBUTION IN THE L. T. L.:

How a Little Girl Became Famous. Price, per 100, 25 cents.

Five Little Word Pictures of Frances E. Willard. Price, per 100, 30 cents.

FOR MUSIC:

Temperance Songster, Convention Edition. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book, Anna A. Gordon.

Home's Love-Light—solo. Price, 30 cents.

A Paean of Victory—solo. Price, 10 cents.

Victory—soprano solo. Price, 15 cents.

Wear Your White Ribbon Wherever You Go—solo or chorus. Price, 5 cents.

A Knot of White Ribbon—solo. Price 25 cents.

The White Ribbon—solo. Price, 10 cents.

FOR INVITATIONS:

Rest Cottage Post Card

Frances E. Willard Post Card

Frances E. Willard Statue Post Card

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per 100, $1.00.

FOR ROLL CALL:

Frances E. Willard Flower Mission Cards—quotations from Miss Willard's writings, with autograph signature. Price, 12 cents per 100.

FOR SOUVENIRS:

Rest Cottage Booklet. Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

Willard Birthday Pledge Card, with autograph pledge and signature. Price, per 100, $1.00.

Prices include prepaid postage.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

Y. P. B. NEWS

Vivers Y. P. B. of Bayonne, N. J., is a live wire branch. It is working to advance the temperance cause not only in Bayonne but in the county. Among other ways of attracting the attention of the public the young people are placing advertisements in various places.

The Boston North End (Italian) Y. P. B. did valiant work before the Boston election. The members delivered to every Italian voter, in a sealed and personally addressed envelope, literature bearing on no-license. In the heart of the Italian district there is placed a permanent Y. P. B. poster board, from which the passersby read the appeal of the young people for a clean city and for happy homes.

Already Florida is beginning to plan its summer Y. P. B. conference, which is to be held June 1-15 at Coronado. There are to be classes, under the direction of the state officers and superintendents, lectures, entertainments, Bible study and recreation. We wish other states would plan for a Y. P. B. summer encampment to train the young people for leadership in our great work.

The annual group meeting of the Young People's Branches of Madison, Cayuga, Oswego, Oneida and Onondaga counties, N. Y., was held in Syracuse, January 27, with representation from each county. The sessions were presided over by Miss Helen G. H. Estelle, associate general secretary of the state organization. The presence of Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, state Y. P. B. secretary, added much to the interest of the meeting. The program was helpful and replete with good things. One of the interesting events of the day was the introduction of Leon B. Carnell, president of the New York state I. C. P. A., who brought greetings from that organization. The addresses and papers of the young people were the result of much study and thought and showed marvelous growth and progress in the work.

That real live wire, indefatigable worker, Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National W. C. T. U. organizer, has been in Baltimore, Md., doing excellent work for the city W. C. T. U. and the No. 2 unions. New organizations, W's, Y. P. B.'s and L. T. L.'s followed naturally in her wake. At East Baltimore Station M. E. church on Sunday evening, January 14, having already spoken twice that morning to large congregations of colored people, Mrs. Parsels talked her hearers wide-awake, and secured seventy-one pledge signers, greatly encouraging the local union under whose auspices the meeting was held. New members were gained at every meeting, considerably over one hundred names being enrolled in the nine days she was in the city. Collections were good and there are fine prospects for new Y. P. B.'s in the state normal school and Morgan college.

Whitestone (N. Y.) Y. P. B., which was awarded a prize lecture by the state president for membership gain, arranged that this address be given in the public school assembly room on January 17. This was the first time an outside organization had ever had the use of the assembly room. There was a good attendance, many being present who had never before attended a meeting of the Y. P. B. "The Onward March of a Great Reform" was the subject of Mrs. Boole's address, and both the subject matter and the manner of its presentation delighted her hearers. The room was decorated with the prizes won by the Branch from the county and state, the flag that was presented to the young people by the Army Y. M. C. A. at Fort Totten, pennants of the dry states, posters and prohibition maps. The music was good and several hundred pages of literature and pledge cards were distributed. It was a red letter night. The Whitestone Branch will entertain the county organization on the occasion of the Willard Memorial day meeting February 16. Mrs. Maude B. Perkins, state Y. P. B. secretary, will be the speaker. Mrs. Perkins will be in Queens-Nassau for a week's work at that time. The children of the Whitestone Branch, all of whom are under fourteen years of age, held a fair one afternoon this winter, at which they cleared about $60. At Christmas this legion sent oranges to an Italian Mission in New York city, handkerchiefs to Ellis Island, a donation to a hospital, and helped some of the poor children in the vicinity of Whitestone.

JUST OFF THE PRESS

LEAFLETS

The Last Stage of a Great Conflict

Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. convention

The Church and the W. C. T. U. (revised)

Women Prisoners

Woman and the Church

Gates Passed Through

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer

Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

America's Greatest Foe

The Paramount Issue

Prohibition States (revised)

What Two Beers a Day Will Buy (cartoon)

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

What Prohibition Will and Will Not Do Economically

The Children Who Followed My Example

Price, per hundred, 15 cents.

Yesterday and Today (a suffrage playlet)

Price, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

LANTERN LECTURES

EDUCATE THROUGH THE EYE

John Barleycorn
30 slides. Price, $15.00

The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two"
51 slides. Price, $20.00

Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story
53 slides. Price, $20.00

The World on the Water Wagon
53 slides. Price, $20.00

These lectures are intensely interesting as well as instructive and make an attractive evening's program.

PLAN TO USE THEM IN YOUR SPRING INSTITUTE

The printed lecture accompanies each set.

Rental schedule furnished upon application.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Demand for

Good Temperance Music

is met by the use of the following:

PROHIBITION'S IN THE AIR.
Price, 10 cents per copy.

THE WORLD WIDE JUBILEE.
Price, 15 cents per copy.

PAEAN OF VICTORY.
Price, 10 cents.

The above may be used for solos or quartets.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

For Mass Meetings Use the

Campaign Song Book

compiled by Anna Adams Gordon.
Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $4.00.
SING PROHIBITION EVERYWHERE

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

A very few of the

Gospel Art Calendars for 1917

are left in stock and as it will be impossible to secure more, kindly order yours at once. A calendar of twelve pages, each page containing a reproduction of one of the masterpieces and a scripture text for daily reading.

Price, 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

EMIL SEVIER'S EMANCIPATION

(Continued from Page Twelve)

bounteous park was aglint with feathered life.

Emil Sevier stirred, stretched. His limbs were sore from the inhospitable stone, his clothes dew-dampened; his throbbing head was crying out a thousand tortures; but his brain was no longer befogged, though for the instant he knew not where he was. He had driven past the monument a hundred times, he had even walked by it, but he had never been in its impressive sanctuary.

"It must be the Lincoln monument," he said after a moment, "and I've slept here all night, it seems." He clasped his torturing head in unsteady hands and his soul descended, as often before, into an abysmal pit of self-loathing.

"I've slept in the park like a common bum! I'm lucky that I wasn't run in—and," looking at the gaunt figure of the great president, "with Lincoln, the man I venerate, looking on. It's a desecration! I'm a worthless, sodden wreck." He paused, head supine, arms and hands falling slackly between shaking knees. "It's drink, drink, drink," he cried at last. "My inheritance drives me! 'The sins of the fathers'—ah! I know—I know!

"I can't break off. The poison is in me—of me. It is part of me. I am bound—bound—in thralldom to the past."

The youth rose and crossed the stone pediment, head drooped with shame, shoulders bowed with the weight of generations, blood poisoned, soul harrassed, and stopped before the carven figure.

Ah, has ever man looked into those cavernous eye-sockets, gouged deep, deep, that the very soul might look forth and read all life aright, and not felt within him the welling of his nobler nature? Did ever suppliant come to this man of sorrows seeking comfort, inspiration, to be sent empty away?

The hopeless youth gazed long at this face of pity, of strength, of sorrow, of tenderness. It seemed to look upon him with the wisdom of wisdoms, the comprehension of comprehensions, the love of loves. Every human attribute seemed heightened to god-likeness. Overpowered by the strength of his emotion and his need, the youth lifted up imploring hands to the pitying presence.

"Thou art the emancipator. I am in chains to habit, bound to heredity. They say there is no hope for such. But, thou art the emancipator! Strike off my chains. Let me be free—free—a man, not a bound slave!"

A ray of the rising sun glinted across the face of the statue. On the instant it seemed to become instinct with life. The whole attitude softened, encouraged; and the youth was sure that the sad eyes smiled the smile of perfect understanding.

"The chains that bind you are not unbreakable, for they are made of linked errors. No man need be aught because his parents were. Each human being stands or falls for himself. Strike off your own chains and see that you do not re-forge them."

Was it the fitful gilding of the sunrise that vivified the stern bronze? Was it a chance flicker of light and shade that simulated a smile, and the boom of the awakening city that rang in the youth's ears?

But the miracle was wrought, for Emil Sevier, who had been all sodden despondency, all aimless, sordid lines, drew himself erect. His chest inflated, his eyes shone, his fists clenched as he struck out at a brain-imaged foe.

"I will!" Solemnly he made the promise to the pitying presence as one strong man may promise another. "I will. I WILL!" Slowly and earnestly he reiterated the words. At length he turned with a feeling of holy uplift, and started bravely down the drive for home, eyes determined, shoulders squared, to say again solemnly to his waiting mother:

"I will. I WILL. God helping me, I will."

Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 pounds, and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just wha you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for booklet 23 I'd like to tell you of my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Boulevard. Chicago

"Every Ladies' Aid Society, and every Woman's Club doing Church, School, Temperance, Library or Missionary work will be particularly interested in the Fund Raising Plan referred to in the announcement of McCALL'S MAGAZINE below:"

For Correct Styles—
For Patterns That Fit—
For Easier House-Keeping—
For a Guide in Buying—
For Dainty Needlework—
For Wholesome Stories—

More Than One Million Three Hundred Thousand (1,300,000) Discriminating Women Every Month Turn to McCALL'S MAGAZINE

We suggest that you send your subscription now to start with April (printed in March) our Easter Annual Spring Fashion Number.

March and April numbers may sell out before your order reaches us—buy them at 10c each at any News-stand or McCall Pattern Agency.

McCALL'S MAGAZINE

Announces a Change in Price

The pages of McCALL'S for 1916, end on end, would reach from New York to San Francisco forty-five (45) times, and weigh over ten million (10,000,000) pounds.

In 1917, raw paper, of the high grade we use, (one of the biggest items of expense in publishing a magazine of large circulation) will cost nearly twice as much as we paid last year. Besides ink, type metal, engravings, labor—in fact, everything that goes into making McCALL'S—has nearly doubled in cost.

To lower McCALL standards, or cheapen McCALL quality was unthinkable. The one and only thing to do was to increase our subscription price and keep on improving our magazine.

McCALL'S is now ten cents (10c) a copy, seventy-five cents (75c) a year ($1.00 Canada; $1.50 foreign). March number on sale now; April number, with advance Easter Fashions, on sale in March. However, for a short time only, opportunity is here given to subscribe at the old low rates.

A FASHION AUTHORITY RECOGNIZED FOR NEARLY 50 YEARS

How often you hear, "She hasn't a bit of style." You know women possessing extravagant wardrobes, yet who are never stylishly dressed. You also know women who spend a very modest sum on their clothes and you wonder how they manage to dress so charmingly. Our Fashion Editor says, "STYLE is a matter of TASTE rather than money."

Taste, you will agree, however excellent, must have a reliable guide. THE McCALL COMPANY of New York, founded 1870, makers of McCALL patterns (so favorably known for their style, fit, simplicity, and economy) and publishers of McCALL'S MAGAZINE (monthly), The McCALL BOOK OF FASHIONS (Quarterly), McCALL'S EMBROIDERY AND NEEDLEWORK, etc., enjoy a prestige of nearly fifty years' success as Fashion Publishers and offer just such a guide in the monthly style news (recognized as authority), richly illustrated in black and white and in colors, by the choicest new, approved designs, and patterns that faithfully reproduce those designs.

1917 EDITORIAL PROGRAM

You and all your family will surely enjoy some of these added March and April features:

"The Nameless Man," big new serial story of love, mystery and surprising climaxes, Natalie Sumner Lincoln; "Latch-Strings Ajar," story of a friendly house by the road, and a lonely girl and how her Romance came, Katherine Kingsley Crosby; "The Church that Waked Up," Montanye Perry; "Sixteen," a girl misunderstood, Mary Lerner; "The Thorny Path," about a woman who dared; "Seven Times Seven," married problem, Royal Brown; "Personality" of Jennette Rankin, first congress-women; Color Masterpiece, "Gossip," Carl Mar, etc. Stories and articles follow later from these popular writers: Helen Christine Bennett, Anne Gunter Boykin, Mariel Brady, Helen Topping Miller, William Hamby, Lilian Ducey and many others.

CORNELL'S DOMESTIC SCIENCE

Classes use McCALL'S. To them it is a text book. Many home-loving women look upon McCALL'S as a "household necessity" because of these practical departments:

Correct Social Usage—What Priscilla Learned at Boarding-School, Mary Marshall Duffee; Words—How to Use Them, Emma M. Bolenius, text-book Author; Home Millinery, Evelyn Toby, Millinery Director Columbia University; Common-sense Beauty Talks, Annette Beacon; Paris Fashion Letter, Paris Correspondent; Home Dressmaking, Margaret Whitney; Embroidery, Genevieve Sterling and Helen Thomas; Children's Page, Frederick White; Baby Welfare, Mary L. Read, Director School of Mothercraft; Foods and Food Values, Isobel Brand; Gardens, F. F. Rockwell; Household Decoration, Mary H. Northend; Parties and Entertainments, Martha Grossman; Housekeeping Exchange, Helen Hopkins.

CUT OUT THIS COUPON AND MAIL IT BEFORE MARCH 31, 1917! U.S.g.3-17

Mark a cross (X) before items wanted. Pin to sheet of paper, write name and address and mail with Money Order or Check—send 50c or less in U. S. Stamps—(for Canada and Foreign no stamps accepted) to THE McCALL COMPANY, McCall Building, 236 to 246 West 37th Street, New York, N. Y.

Please send:.....McCall's Magazine one year, 50c enclosed (75c Canada; $1.00 Foreign).....McCall's Magazine two years, $1.00 enclosed ($1.50 Canada; $2.00 Foreign).....McCall's Spring and Summer pattern Catalogue, 2c enclosed.....McCall Book of Fashions (Spring Quarterly), 35c enclosed.....McCall's Embroidery and Needlework (500 Designs) 25c enclosed.....Fund Raising Plan for Churches, Schools and Societies.....Bicycle Offer to Boys and Girls.....$5.00 Pin Money for Spare time.....Cash Offers to Agents.....Book of 300 Gifts and how to get them without money.....Name and address of nearest McCall Pattern Agency.

McCALL STYLE PATTERNS

Canadian Branch at 70 Bond St., Toronto

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.

J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago,

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

Supplies for Union Signal Day Meetings

Portrait of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens
See page 4
Size 20x24
Price, unframed, $4.00
Handsomely framed, with name plate attached, price, $10.00
Size 10x12
Price, $1.50
Cabinet photograph, same style
Price, 25 cents

FOR PROGRAM

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said, compiled by Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 50 cents.

My Mother, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price, 5 cents.

Life Sketch Mrs. Stevens, Eva Kilbreth Foster. Price, 3 cents each; per hundred, $1.00.

Special Number Union Signal, February 8. Price, per hundred, $1.75.

Temperance Songster. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book. Price, 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Paean of Victory (solo). Price, 10 cents.

Prohibition's In the Air (quartet). Price, 10 cents.

Home's Love-light (solo). Price, 30 cts.

Victory (soprano solo). Price, 15 cents.

Quiz on National Constitutional Prohibition. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

States Rights as Applied to National Constitutional Prohibition, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson.

Co-operation of Nation with States Necessary to the Abolition of the Liquor Traffic, Hon. Morris Sheppard.

Prohibition States.

Price, per hundred, 20 cents.

Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund.

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.

The above three leaflets furnished free.

FOR DISTRIBUTION

Leaflets written by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens
The Trade and Some of Its Claims.
Is Prohibition In Maine a Success?
Railroads and Total Abstinence.
The Prohibition Proclamation.
Maine's Great Achievement.

Package containing 200 assorted leaflets .....35 cents
Package containing 300 assorted leaflets .....50 cents
Package containing 400 assorted leaflets .....60 cents
Package containing 500 assorted leaflets .....70 cents

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.
The Tale of Two Papers.
She Read It; She Took It.
Reasons, Pro and Con.
Before and After Taking.
The Official Organ as a Sentiment Maker.
A Resurrected Union.
Subscription Song.

The above leaflets furnished for postage at the rate of 15 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said

Compiled by ANNA ADAMS GORDON

A Souvenir Book

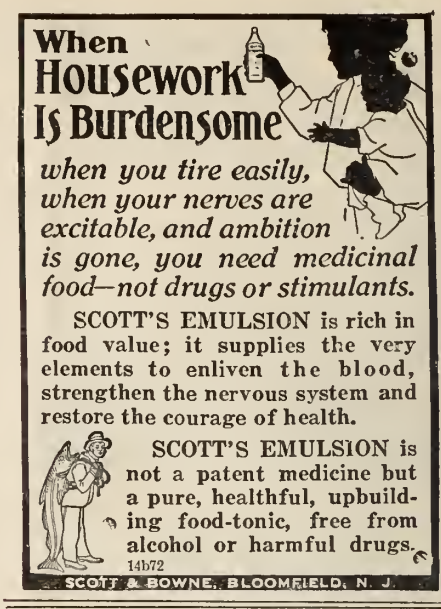
of selections from addresses delivered before the National W. C. T. U. annual conventions, 1899-1913, together with portrait, brief biographical sketch, Mrs. Stevens' historic proclamation, the closing paragraph from her last public address and her last message to her country. A book of ninety-six pages, daintily bound in olive green cloth.

PRICE FIFTY CENTS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

BOOZE, ONCE BANQUET KING IN PHILADELPHIA, NO LONGER HOLDS SWAY

"Banqueters in this city are 'tapering off' on the drinking," says the North American of Philadelphia. "Each year finds booze just a little less popular in the entertainments which are held by business and social organizations and employers." "You can make it as emphatic as possible that the old days when the term 'banquet' was synonymous with 'carouse' have gone, never to return," said H. C. Crowhurst, assistant manager of the Hotel Walton. Other hotel managers also pointed out that the tendency is to cut down on elaborate drinking at banquets. Among the banquets recently where no booze was served were the dinner of the Philadelphia Real Estate Board and the dinner of the Victor Talking Machine Company at the Bellevue-Stratford. It is said that even the Philadelphia Retail Liquor Dealers' Association is falling into line with the new order of things. In planning for a banquet to be held next month at the Hotel Walton in honor of the retiring president, the officers have ordered a drastic cut in the number of high balls to be served.



FLASHLIGHTS OF FUN

The Indianapolis Star propounds the conundrum, "What is a legislature?" This is the answer: "A legislature is a body of law-makers entirely surrounded by woman suffrage and prohibition advocates."

"I don't see why you call your place a bungalow," said Smith to his neighbor.

"Well, if it isn't a bungalow, what is it?" said the neighbor. "The job was a bungle and I still owe for it."—Ladies' Home Journal.

"Briggs seems to be a temperance crank of the extremest kind." "I should say he is! Why, he won't have anything to do with stocks because they frequently take a drop."—Boston Transcript.

The teacher had been reading to the class about the great forests of America.

"And now, boys," she announced, "which one of you can tell me the pine that has the longest and sharpest needles?"

Up went a hand in the front row.

"Well, Tommy?"

"The porcupine!"—Tit-Bits.

A Compendium of Temperance Truth

by

Edith Smith Davis,

World's and National Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction

A reference book which should be in every school library for use in essay work.

A book for temperance workers.

Price, 50 cents net.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII EVANSTON, ILL., FEBRUARY 15, 1917 No. 7

LATEST LEGISLATIVE VICTORIES

NEW MEXICO

Both houses of the New Mexico legislature, on February 5, passed a submission measure providing for a vote of the people at the next November election on a constitutional prohibition amendment.

OREGON

Both houses of the Oregon legislature have passed a measure providing for the annual observance in the public schools of a Frances E. Willard Day. It has been signed by Governor Withycombe.

MINNESOTA

The lower house of the Minnesota legislature has passed a constitutional prohibition submission measure, which now goes to the senate.

ARKANSAS

Without a dissenting vote the senate of the Arkansas legislature passed a bill prohibiting liquor advertising in all periodicals circulating in the state.

ILLINOIS

By a vote of 31 to 18 the state-wide prohibition referendum measure passed the upper house of the Illinois legislature on February 13.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

HEARINGS ON DISTRICT PROHIBITION BILL EXTENDED TO FEBRUARY 21—EVIDENCE INTRODUCED IN FAVOR OF BANKHEAD ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING BILL

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Saturday, February 2, at two o'clock in the afternoon, President Wilson appeared before a joint session of Congress to explain the breaking of diplomatic relations between Germany and the United States and the facts leading to the acute international crisis.

Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, was deeply moved when the information of the break came to him. Attaches of the embassy were called immediately and told what had happened and the embassy itself became almost silent. Count von Bernstorff at once arranged with the Swiss Minister, Dr. Paul Ritter, to take charge of German affairs in the United States. Ambassador Gerard, our representative in Germany, has had instructions from Washington to close his embassy as well as all the consulates in Germany. Spain will take over the affairs of the United States in Berlin. Extra guards have been stationed at strategical points. The Senate judiciary committee reported favorably a bill making more drastic existing legislation for the protection of the President of the United States. One hundred additional plain clothes guards have been assigned to the Capitol and the Capitol grounds. As we were entering the Senate gallery one day this week, the doorkeeper examined my muff, to see if anything wrong was concealed there. The White House, the great Army and Navy building and the United States Treasury have been closed to visitors and, in numerous ways, we are made to realize how close we may be to actual hostilities.

This week has been one of comparative quiet as far as war news and war interest are concerned. It is not that the interest has died out, or even abated, but people are taking a less feverish attitude in the premises.

Monday, February 5, Senator Stone of Missouri, chairman of the Senate Committe on Foreign Relations, introduced a resolution in the Senate, approving the action taken by the President in his address delivered before the joint session of Congress February 3. Tuesday and Wednesday were practically taken up in the Senate in discussing the question in its many and varied lights. Speeches were made both in favor and in opposition to the President's attitude, but every Senator, before closing his remarks, in the most emphatic manner declared he would stand by the President should war come.

Telegrams have poured into the White House and been sent to Senators and Representatives from parties for and against the action of the President. Wednesday, the Senate took a vote on the Stone resolution which stood 78 in favor and 5 against the action of the President in severing relations with Germany.

An administration bill, authorizing the commandeering of vessels and other shipping facilities in time of war or other emergency, was introduced in the Senate and House and approved by the Shipping Board and President.

The Naval Committee in the House favorably reported three amendments to the naval appropriation bill, viz.: providing $150,000,000 for immediate completion of warships; providing $1,000,000 for buying the basic aeroplane patents of the country and giving the President power to take over shipyards and munition plants for the navy in time of threatened or actual war.

Henry Ford, the great peace advocate, while he deprecates war, immediately offered to turn over his immense plant and 35,000 employes to the government for the manufacture of munitions of war and without profit to himself.

TWO SEPARATE HEARINGS ON TEMPERANCE MEASURES IN HOUSE

Two separate hearings on temperance measures are being held before House committees this week, which is a most unusual occurrence. One, the Sheppard-Barkley bill, for a prohibitory law for the District of Columbia, is before the District committee and has been for several days. It will be remembered that the bill has passed the Senate and we firmly believe would pass the House without difficulty could it get to that body, but the committee seems determined to keep the measure within its grasp. Two mornings this week have been lost by the committee's holding executive sessions beyond the time limit and yesterday it decided to keep on with the hearings until February 21, thus showing a desire of a majority of the committee to hold the bill back.

The other hearing is on the Bankhead Postoffice bill, before the House Committee on Postoffices and Postroads. This bill, too, has passed the Senate. A vast amount of evidence was presented yesterday, February 8, by Dr. Clarence True Wilson and Deets Pickett of the M. E. Church, showing the length to which brewers and liquor dealers are using the United States mails in advertising their wares, especially to women and youth. Miss Gordon and I represented the W. C. T. U. and Mr. Daniel Poling spoke in behalf of the Christian Endeavorers. While we all favor the Randall bill, which covers the entire country, we consider the Bankhead bill, which includes any locality in license states, if the laws of those states permit any county or municipality to enact ordinances for itself on the liquor question, is a movement in the right direction.

Monday, February 5, by a vote of 62 to 19, the Senate passed the immigration bill over the President's veto. The House, by a vote of 287 to 106, passed this bill over the veto last week; so the Senate's action ends the contest of twenty years' standing in which three Presidents have repudiated similar bills by Congress.

Representative Gardner of Massachusetts, immediately after the Senate voted to override the President's veto of the immigration bill, introduced a bill to limit the number of aliens coming into this country to 200,000 in excess of the number of outgoing aliens.

February 8, Senator Gronna introduced a memorial (and asked to have it printed in the Congressional Record) adopted by the International Reform Bureau, concerning conditions in Porto Rico relative to the revenue from the sale of liquor on that island. The memorial from the bureau shows conclusively that the cost to the people is forty-two times as much as the government revenue. The Porto Rican bill is now before the Senate.

A bill in the interest of the life saving service passed the Senate this week, a measure long looked for and worked for, viz.: to grant a pension to surfmen injured, or disabled, or suffering from disease contracted while in line of duty.

KANSAS LEGISLATURE MEMORIALIZES CONGRESS ON SUSAN B. ANTHONY AMENDMENT

The following concurrent resolution of the legislature of Kansas was this week presented by Senator Curtis of that state:

RESOLVED: That the Senators and Representatives in Congress from the state of Kansas are hereby requested to vote in favor of the Susan B. Anthony amendment, which seeks to terminate the discrimination against women and to urge upon Congress a submission of that amendment to the states for ratification.

RESOLVED: That a copy of this resolution be sent to each Senator and Representative in Congress from the state of Kansas, to be presented by them to the Congress of the United States.

I hereby certify that the above concurrent resolution originated in the senate and passed that body January 24, 1917.

W. Y. MORGAN,
President of the Senate.
E. D. GEORGE,
Secretary of the Senate.
A. M. KEENE,
Speaker of the House.
CLARENCE W. MILLER,
Chief Clerk of the House.
ARTHUR CAPPER,
Governor.

Passed the House Jan. 26, 1917.

The same morning Senator Jones of Washington presented a joint memorial of the legislature of his state, urging the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution granting suffrage to women. This was signed by the Secretary of State, President of the Senate and Speaker of the House.

Down in the humble but neat little chapel room in the Gospel Mission, where the lowliest of unfortunate men and women never are denied a welcome, there appeared Sunday night in the roll of evangelist an American statesman, who, casting aside his official duties for the hour, talked religion straight. He was Speaker of the House, Champ Clark.

Speaker Clark impressed his hearers with the value of reading the Bible. He said he knew more successful men who had "arrived" from reading the gospel than from help at any other literary fountain. The unemployed were urged by him to get away from over-crowded cities and go back to the land, where there is plenty to do. He referred to the governmental agencies now working to help men to find work.

Discussing liquor, Mr. Clark said that Congress was the soberest meeting of men, barring preachers and school teachers, in the world. Since liquor selling has been forbidden in the Capitol, he had only seen one man visibly intoxicated on the floor of the House. And he added jocularly, "He was sober enough to vote right, for he voted my way."

Mr. and Mrs. William Leavitt (Gertrude Stevens Leavitt) are at The Driscoll, enroute from Portland, Maine, to Florida. This morning they attended a hearing for a prohibitory law for the District of Columbia, before the District committee.

N. W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., February 9, 1917.

UTAH AND INDIANA JOIN PROHIBITION STATES

LIQUOR TRAFFIC OUTLAWED IN TWENTY-FIVE STATES

When the Indiana delegation at the recent National W. C. T. U. convention emphatically affirmed in song and shout, "Indiana's going dry," no one who heard the energetic assertion doubted that the Hoosiers were on the road to speedy victory. That happy end has now been attained.

The Wright bill passed the house by a vote of 70 to 28, and the senate by a vote of 38 to 11. On the afternoon of February 9, Governor James P. Goodrich, with Mrs. Goodrich standing behind his chair, signed the bill, setting the date of the execution of John Barleycorn in Indiana at April 2, 1918.

The Indianapolis Star in describing the demonstration on the occasion of the passage of the measure by the senate, says:

"The senate chamber probably never held such a crowd as was present while the prohibition debate, preceding the vote, was in progress. Every available space on the senate floor itself and in the gallery was occupied and the crowd overflowed into the corridors. While they waited in the corridors for the doors to swing open, hundreds of voices were raised in song, both religious and patriotic airs being sung. Hundreds of the visitors were from out of the city and wore dry badges and placards. Mrs. Goodrich, wife of the governor, was among the spectators during the debate and for a time she occupied a seat on the rostrum with the presiding officer. Mrs. Goodrich announced some time ago that she was more interested in prohibition than any other question pending in the legislature and that her second interest was in suffrage.

"In delivering the invocation, the Rev. H. S. Spears of Shelbyville offered the Lord's Prayer and then prayed that 'these representatives of the people have wisdom to transact their business with the thought that the supreme end to all legislation is the making of manhood and womanhood.'

"Senator Simmons made a strong appeal for the passage of the bill by as big a majority as possible. He drew a strong indictment of the liquor business, declared that the liquor business had pleaded guilty to its many crimes and that the only question to be decided was what the penalty should be. King Alcohol, who has ruled supreme in Indiana for more than one hundred years, will be uncrowned today and King Law and Order will at last assume the reins of government. He discussed the argument of the liquor forces concerning the alleged confiscation of property and declared the business to be an outlaw.

"'My fellow senators,' he urged, 'who answer no to this question cannot vote thus except on the theory that this damnable business ought to be retained in Indiana for the good of government and society—for the good of your family and home and my family and home.

"'Do you want your boys to supply the raw material for the saloons, you who vote no would still tolerate?' he questioned.

"'What if by a single vote this bill should fail and that single vote should be mine?' exclaimed Senator White. 'Then what if it should happen that because of my vote my son or my neighbor's son should fall and finally sleep in a drunkard's grave, and what shall I say on that day when He says to me, "As ye have done it unto one of the least of these, ye have done it unto me?" I know that I shall stand on a safe and secure foundation in voting aye.'"

GOVERNOR BAMBERGER SIGNS UTAH PROHIBITION BILL

"This is the hand that will sign the bill that shall emancipate the state of Utah from the liquor traffic," Governor Simon Bamberger told an acquaintance months ago. On February 8 the governor fulfilled his prophecy. The Young prohibition bill, in its amended form, believed by the Utah law makers to be one of the most drastic and most efficient prohibition measures yet enacted in the United States, finally passed both houses of the legislature and received the signature of the governor. The measure goes into effect August 1, 1917. The provision for a prohibition commissioner to which the governor objected was eliminated and the powers of the commissioner were practically conferred upon the governor. The bill provides for the prohibition of importation, manufacture, sale and possession of liquor, except pure alcohol and sacramental wine to be sold as the chief executive may prescribe.

Constitutional Amendment Before Legislature

On February 1 the house adopted a resolution proposing a prohibition constitutional amendment, which if passed by the senate will be voted upon by the people in November of 1918.

SURVEY OF THE STATES

Oregon

Both houses of the Oregon legislature have passed the bill providing for the annual observance, on the fourth Friday of October, of Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools. By a vote of 35 to 24 the lower house passed an anti-cigaret bill.

Minnesota

A constitutional prohibition amendment submission measure has passed the house by a vote of 80 to 49 and, according to the Minnesota press, there seems probability that it will pass the senate, in which case it will be voted upon by the people at the next general election.

Texas

A bill providing for the prohibition of the publication of liquor advertisements in any newspaper in the state or the posting of such advertisements in any public place, signed by a majority of the senate, has been introduced in the senate of the Texas legislature.

A prohibition amendment submission measure was defeated in the lower house of the Texas legislature by a vote of eighty-nine to forty-seven. Ninety-five votes were required to pass the bill.

Wyoming

A measure providing for statutory prohibition has been introduced in the Wyoming legislature and it is expected that it will be pushed through and signed by Gov. Kendrick in a short time. The legislature has already passed a constitutional amendment submission measure providing for a vote on the question in 1918.

Illinois

The senate of the Illinois legislature on February 8 by a vote of 34 to 2 passed a bill providing for the creation of a five mile dry zone around the naval training station at Waukegan.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska
Indiana	Utah

STATES TO VOTE ON CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS

Wyoming Iowa
New Mexico

Nevada

The measure sought in the initiative petition which has been circulated in Nevada is similar to the West Virginia law with a few changes to make it applicable to Nevada. The approximately 8,000 names which have been secured, while not large in comparison with other states, is large in per cent, being more than twenty-six per cent of the votes cast at the last general election, and twenty-one and two-thirds per cent of the total registration. The Socialist party, by a referendum vote, has elected to embody a prohibition plank in its platform, only thirteen members voting against the proposal. As the Socialists have a voting strength of 8,000 in the state they hold the balance of power on public questions. The entire voting strength is about 29,000.

Pennsylvania

A measure has been introduced in the lower house of the Pennsylvania legislature prohibiting the sale of liquor in any form in the state after the beginning of next year.

West Virginia

An amendment to the Yost prohibition law of West Virginia, limiting the amount of liquor which may be brought into the state by one person in a month to one quart, has passed both houses of the West Virginia legislature.

Kansas

A law which makes it a misdemeanor to have intoxicating liquor in one's possession has passed the lower house of the Kansas legislature.

Delaware

A state-wide prohibition bill, an anti-shipping bill and a measure to abolish the sale of liquor in bottles, to be drunk off the premises, have been introduced in the Delaware legislature.

WHERE WOMEN VOTE

DEBORAH KNOX LIVINGSTON, National W. C. T. U. Franchise Superintendent

During the year 1916 the five great political parties went on record in their party platforms in favor of woman suffrage. These parties were the Prohibition, Socialist, Progressive, Republican and Democratic. The first two have been in favor of suffrage for women for many years, the Progressives wrote it into their platform in 1912, the Republicans and Democrats in 1916. This shows most significantly the growth of public sentiment in favor of "votes for women." The movement for political equality for women has made greater gains in the last half century than any other reform except, possibly, the prohibition movement. This gain has not been confined to our own country but is noted also in Europe, Great Britain and Australia.

Equal suffrage is now a world issue, and within the past decade it has been considered by not less than seventeen of the parliaments of the world.

The question constantly being asked, "Where do women vote?" we desire to answer briefly in this article. It will not be possible for us to give the history that is behind these statements of bare facts, fascinating and necessary as that is to the student of this great movement for political equality for women.

Norway was the first independent nation to give full suffrage to women, in 1913. Previous to this time women of Norway had municipal franchise, which had been given them in 1901, but only "women who either in their own persons, or with their husbands, paid taxes on an income amounting to about $100.00 a year or on approximately $100.00 worth of property" were eligible.

The history of woman suffrage in Finland dates back to 1863, when the municipal franchise was extended to taxpaying women living in the country. Nine years later this same privilege was granted to women living in the cities. Full suffrage was granted all women in 1906. This is most remarkable when we remember Finland is under the rule of Russia.

Iceland granted taxpaying widows and spinsters municipal suffrage in 1882, and this was granted to all women in 1909. Five years later full suffrage was extended to all women.

We find that to Sweden must be given the credit of being the first country to extend suffrage in any measure whatever to women. As early as 1862 taxpaying widows and spinsters were granted municipal franchise. In 1909 this privilege was granted all women on the same terms as men.

In 1908 Denmark granted to taxpaying women and the wives of men who pay taxes municipal franchise.

The first country to grant full suffrage to all its women was New Zealand. This was done in 1893 but in 1886 municipal suffrage had been granted all women.

In 1902 full suffrage was granted the women throughout Federated Australia.

In Great Britain we find that municipal suffrage is enjoyed by certain classes of women. In England and Wales it was granted in 1869 to the unmarried women and widows who were householders. In Scotland, in 1881, municipal suffrage was granted women on equal terms with men. This franchise was granted to the women of Ireland in 1898, while in the Isle of Man full parliamentary suffrage was extended to taxpaying women in 1892. The Parliament of the Union of South Africa granted municipal suffrage to women in 1914. In a few cities of British India, and in Rangoon in Burma, women have some municipal voting rights possessed by men.

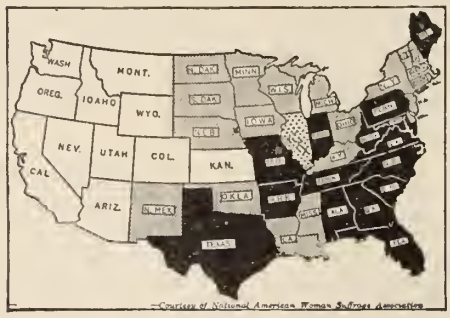
The women of Canada in every province enjoy some form of suffrage. In 1916 the provinces of Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan and British Columbia granted full suffrage to women, and it is worthy of note that these provinces border on the great suffrage territory of our own country.

We turn now to the United States and find that eleven states and the territory of Alaska have full suffrage on equal terms with men; and Illinois and North Dakota have granted Presidential suffrage and the privilege of voting on all offices not created by the state constitution. Wyoming granted equal suffrage to women in 1869; Colorado, in 1893; Idaho and Utah, in 1896; Washington in 1910; California in 1911; Arizona, Kansas and Oregon in 1912; Alaska and Illinois in 1913; Montana and Nevada in 1914; North Dakota in 1917.

To the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union it is interesting to note that the following states which have equal suffrage also have prohibition, namely, Colorado, Idaho, Washington, Kansas, Oregon, Arizona, Montana, North Dakota, and Alaska. All of these, except North Dakota and Kansas, became dry after women bad been enfranchised —one of the strongest arguments which can be used by white ribboners in their effort to secure the ballot.

Woman suffrage is a world movement, based on the eternal principles of democracy. It is as inevitable as that day follows night. There are in our own and other countries some who seek to stem the tide, but that is impossible. They may build a few embankments to hinder its progress but the current of public opinion in favor of woman suffrage is so strong that it is sweeping away these embankments of opposition and carrying the builders with it.

Women vote in many countries and in a large area of our own land. Let us hasten the day of universal suffrage for the women of the world.



Courtesy of National American Woman Suffrage Association

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:

ILLINOIS NORTH DAKOTA

States Which Will Vote in 1918

SOUTH DAKOTA

SUFFRAGE SITUATION

Nebraska

A measure providing for partial suffrage, similar to the Illinois law, passed the lower house of the Nebraska legislature by a vote of 73 to 24. It is predicted that the measure will also pass the senate.

Indiana

A measure providing for partial suffrage, similar to the Illinois law, has passed a third reading in both houses of the Indiana legislature. The bill, if passed, will become effective October, 1917.

Maine

The judiciary committee of the Maine legislature has reported out a suffrage measure with a recommendation that it pass.

North Carolina

By a vote of seven to four the presidential and municipal suffrage bill in North Carolina was reported favorably.

Texas

A bill to permit women to vote in all Texas primaries, which in effect would be virtually complete woman suffrage, as the primaries are equivalent to election, has been introduced in the state senate.

Illinois

By a vote of four to three the joint resolution for the submission of a woman suffrage constitutional amendment has been reported out with a favorable recommendation.

ONE PEOPLE

We are one people.

Awhile a hive of busy self-seekers,
We have been torn this way and that
By politics and peace and prosperity and poverty
And countless other forces;
Distracted by dollars, daisies of an idle holiday,
Distraught by false creeds and philosophies—
Each of us striving, with individualism rampant,
To crowd beyond one's fellow in life's race.

But now we are one people.

In this great crisis falls the mask of self.
It proves us children of our patriot fathers,
Who carved this country from rough wilderness.
It welds to us and we to them as brothers
Those adopted children from over seas.
It calls our men to fight, our women to give them gladly.

Now we are one people.

We put aside our pleasures and ambitions,
We smother out our alien loyalties,
Dear family joys renounce.
Before the fire of danger, like base metals,
Melt our self-interest and self-love.
It welds us pure as whole.
Our hearts beat to the nation's standard
As one heart in a mighty mother breast—
No discord to imperil the great procedure.
Under our star-sown, glory-hued banner,
Loyally, self gone, we do as our chief bids.
We do not question—we stand by.
For now we are one people.

—Adapted from Audrie Alspaugh Chase in Chicago Tribune.

EDUCATE! EDUCATE! EDUCATE!

ESTABLISH THE PRINCIPLES OF PROHIBITION IN THE MINDS AND HEARTS OF THE PEOPLE

MARGARET B. PLATT

A reform to he permanent must be founded upon the bed rock of truth and justicc, and huttressed on every sido hy public sentiuent. Education and conviction of the publie mind and conscience must prccede and iater sustain iegislative enactments which inaugurate moral revolutions.

Over one-haif of the United States has decided that it will no longer tolerate the liquor traffic in its midst. Present appearances indicate that within a few years enough states will follow this example to insure the adoption of a constitutional amendment making the manufacture and traffic in alcohoiic liquors iiiegai anywhere within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The working force of the Woman's Christian Temperauce Union has from the beginning of its organized warfare against this giant foe heen possessed of a lively conviction that a vast deal of educationai work must of necessity be accompiished hefore actual prohibition can he secured or maintained. It is weii said that the star of hope of the temperance reform stands over the school house. Toward the cultivation of educationai fields the organization hent its energies. Today the law of every state and of the United States provides for instruction in publie schools concerning the scientific reasons for total ahstinence. A generation of voters has grown up under such teaching. Not always or everywhere has the purpose of the law been perfectly complied with, we grant, hut sufficiently so to cause a writer in a liquor journai to exciaim that it is this teaching in the schools that has sent muititudes of young voters to the baliot box to vote out the iiquor business.

Following the rapid accession of states to the dry coiumn and apropos of efforts heing made in various state iegisiatures to re-enforce their present prohihitory laws hy hone dry amendments, it becomes a matter of discussion as to whether or not public sentiment in any of these states is sufficientiy strong to justify the enactment of hone dry laws and sustain their enforcement when piaced upon the statute books.

One of the arguments aiways urged against prohibition has heen that it is impossihie of enforcement. It is not strange that a law which conflicts with age-old customs, habits and inclinations of a eonsiderahie proportion of the people should meet with active opposition and require constant and strenuous effort to make it effective. But it cannot be disputed that where given half a chance the good effects of prohihitory liquor iaws have amply justified the expectations of their best friends. The wonder is that committed so often to unfriendiy hands for its enforcement, and suhjected to the comhined assaults of those who, urged hy greed and appetite, were hent upon its destruction, prohihition, in the limited areas where applied, has heen in any notahle measure a success.

However, law enforcement in any case does not rest alone with the police force, sheriffs, attorneys and judges, hut a good iaw, plus publie sentiment, wiii very soon so entrench itself in public favor as to become an inherent part of the government whose repeal none hut an outcast would desire to seek, and whose enforcement wiii bccome iess and less difficuit. It is of supreme importance, then, that back of the prohibitory iaw everywhere should stand inteiiigent publie opinion, fully cognizant of the reasons why aicohoiic liquors should be eiiminated from our civiiization and with a proper conception of the vast benefits to be derived by aii the people when such action is consummated. Every resource must now be utiiized and the greatest energy displayed in continuing a campaign of education against the use of aicohoi in any degree because of its evii effects upon the physicai heing, the community and the world of business. For the friends of prohihition to now assume that the victory is so nearly won that littie or no work remains to be done wiii speii disaster. Years must eiapse before the principle of prohihition wiii become indeiihly fixed in government and the aicohol nerve eiiminated from the hody social and poiitic. Constant educational work is the only safeguard.

In the meantime prohihition wherever enforced wiii make friends for itseif hy its own efficiency in promoting good health, lessening crime and simiiar evils and adding to the sum total of human happiness, while its economic benefits wiii be so great as to cause many of those who formerly opposed it for supposed business reasons to wonder how they could ever have heen so stupid. Let the educational campaign proceed among aii the people, with unabated wisdom, tact and energy. There can he no rest untii the use of alcohol in any form as a beverage is ohliterated.

BOSTON LICENSE SYSTEM A FAILURE

In his remarks at the Dry Chicago hanquet at the Auditorium hotel, Fehruary 2, ex-Governor Foss of Massachusetts, during an address of great interest, said: "License in Boston has heen a faiiure. In the last fifteen years the arrests for drunkenness have inereased from 18,000 to 57,000, three hundred per cent. Over sixty per cent of all arrests in Boston are for drunkenness. In the last fifteen years there have been over 5,000 arrests for selling liquor iiiegally and in twenty-five per cent of these eases seizures were made. It is very evident that our license system in Boston has served to increase drunkenness instead of checking it.

Legislative Measure Seeks 25 Per Cent Reduction in Number of Boston Saloons

"The people of the city are not satisfied with license. Every year hiils go into the legislature asking for still further restrictions of the liquor traffic. At the present time Boston with its 750,000 population has 1,000 licensed saloons. A hill has heen introduced in the legislature asking that the numher be reduced to 750. It is very evident from these facts that license 'is anything hut a success in Boston.' Four years ago the legislature created a commission ôn drunkenness. The commission investigated the question of drunkenness throughout the state and submitted a report to the legislature. That report stated that there were 105,000 persons arrested for drunkenness in the state of Massachusetts in a single year, and that sixty-seven per cent of ail the arrests in the state were for drunkenness, that four-fifths of those arrested were young men whose ages ranged from seventeen to fifty, that these men lost 300,000 days of lahor while they were incarcerated, and probahly 300,000 days more while seeking a joh after they got out.

"This report showed that drunkenness had increased in Massachusetts in the last ten years eighty-eight per cent while the population had only increased twenty per cent. The report also showed that thirty-five per cent of those in the insane asylum were there directly on account of liquor; forty-eight per cent of those in charitahle institutions were there directly on account of liquor and eighty-five per cent of those in prisons were there directly on account of liquor and that ninety-six per cent of those in the prisons, reformatories and jails of the state were addicted to liquor.

"What is the Burden, Uncle Sam, that weighs you down so heavily?"

"It is the Burden of the Bottle."

A BURDEN OF WASTE

The liquor traffic in 1910 cost a sum equal to $55 for every man, woman and child in the country.

A BURDEN OF CRIME

The Bottle causes annually 53,000 murders, 92 per cent of all crime and one-half of the convicts in our state prisons.

A BURDEN OF DEATH

The Bottle is killing the people at the rate of nearly 2,000 men a day, every day in the year, according to statistics of life insurance companies.

A BURDEN OF GUILT

The blood-money, $225,000,000 of annual revenue from the liquor traffic, can not atone for the black record of the Bottle.

This is one of a series of Envelope Leaflets written and published by Mrs. Stella B. Irvine.

$8,000,000 Annually to Support Wards of the State

"The report also showed that there were nearly 25,000 people locked up in the institutions of the state, wards of the state, and that it was costing the state about $8,000,000 a year to support them.

"These are some of the striking and significant facts which this report on drunkenness brought forth. If Governor Lowden should appoint a similar commission in Illinois, I am sure the people of this state would he astounded at the revelation that would he made.

"As indicating the general trend of the prohibition movement in Massachusetts it is significant that at the late elections six license cities turned their backs on license. These were the industrial center of Fall River, with its cosmopolitan population, Taunton, North Adams, Fitchburg, Leominster and Haverhill. It indicates very clearly that Massachusetts is now safely in the national prohibition column."

WORLD'S W. C. T. U. NOTES

New Zealand recently has enacted an "anti-shouting regulation" which is reducing the volume of business being done by the majority of hotels and bars. The law forbids treating at public bars and requires that each purchaser must pay for his own drink, and take from the bartender his own change. Mrs. Rachel Don, the gifted and energetic president of the New Zealand W. C. T. U., has invited Mrs. Mary Harris Armor, the "Georgia cyclone," to visit New Zealand and give a series of her inimitable platform addresses.

In Piracicaba, Brazil, long the home of Miss Watts, our pioneer white ribbon worker of the World's W. C. T. U. for Brazil, a temperance league for boys recently has been organized by Dona Aurea Campo, a consecrated young teacher. More than fifty lads were present at the first meeting and a spirited program was provided.

Senorita Isabel Gonzales Vasquez of Montevideo is aiding through many educational avenues the many-sided work of the W. C. T. U. in Uruguay. She has been given charge of a department in a bi-weekly magazine, The Catedra Escolar, edited by Prof. Juan B. Deffeminis. Among the readers of the influential magazine are many school teachers and Miss Vasquez will endeavor to secure their interest in the principles and purposes of the W. C. T. U., and especially in the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction.

In Buenos Aires, the Argentine, we have the assistance of Miss Sarah M. Chandler who became interested in the W. C. T. U. at the time of Miss Gowen's residence in South America. Miss Chandler was president of the society at La Plata. Her knowledge of our work and of the Spanish language and her experience in many forms of social service make her a great acquisition to the working force of the W. C. T. U. of the Argentine.

The Liga Uruguaya Contra el Alcoholismo, an organization similar to the state W. C. T. U. in our country and affiliated with the World's W. C. T. U., pending a national federation of South American states, has recently elected officers. The president is Senora Bernardina Munoz de DeMaria. Senorita Vasquez is an organizer and Mrs. Carrie van Domselaar, president of the Montevideo W. C. T. U., is a general officer.

The World's W. C. T. U. has been urged to send a first-class speaker and organizer to the Bermudas to aid the W. C. T. U. of those islands in creating public sentiment against the liquor evil. "The temperance wave," writes one of the faithful W. C. T. U. members, "has not yet reached here."

The W. C. T. U. of Japan has a fine corps of efficient general officers, led, as during all the years since its organization, by beloved Madam Kaji Yajima. Seventeen departments of work are successfully carried on and W. C. T. U. and L. T. L. papers published. The president of the foreign auxiliary W. C. T. U. of Japan is Miss A. G. Lewis. This "running mate" to the national W. C. T. U. of Japan has nearly two hundred members.

From a recent issue of its Bulletin we learn that "the new national headquarters building of the Japanese union in Tokyo, has been finished. Its commodious rooms will make the work of the national officers much easier and more effective." Madam Yajima makes her home at this center and she and others will always welcome visitors. The ground for the building was purchased by funds raised in Japan, and the building itself is the gift of American friends who were interested through the efforts of Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, her daughter, Ruth Frances Davis, (now Mrs. David Stevens), and Mrs. Caroline McDowell. The office furniture and fittings are the gift of the foreign auxiliary W. C. T. U., purchased with funds raised for the purpose.

The educational campaign for purity launched at the national W. C. T. U. convention in Yokohama, the Bulletin states, is proving successful beyond the hopes of those back of it. "Tiny envelopes to be used in soliciting five sen contributions for purity work give an occasion for speaking of the movement to all with whom one comes in contact, whether in a business or social way. Necessary explanations at least plant the seeds of thought on this subject. Although the primary purpose is to spread the knowledge of the movement and the need for it, the contributions for several successive months have totalled 100 yen monthly."

Miss Uta Hayashi of Osaka, Japan, greatly values THE UNION SIGNAL and tells us that many members of the Osaka union read and enjoy the paper in which they "study the temperance work of the world." A young woman's union has been organized in Osaka and the president, Miss Sugita, is the proud possessor of a "prize speech" silver badge given her by Madam Yajima at a national convention held eight years ago in Osaka. Rejoicing over our dry states Miss Hayashi writes, "We are praying with you for the victory in righteousness."

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

Certain periodicals, never overly enthusiastic over prohibition, seem to be taking too seriously the possibility of home distilleries in the event of prohibition. The Medical Times for instance says: "Prohibition could never be enforced for it would be impossible for any government to police all homes. The making of spirits is a simple matter requiring no more intelligence than bread making." The New York Sun comments facetiously on this suggestion:

THE PROBLEM OF THE HOME STILL PRESENTS DIFFICULTIES

"There is temptation here to suggest that if only a moderate quality of mind is necessary for the making of good bread, then thousands of our bread cooks are intellectually subnormal; but it is more to the point to consider the prospect of every rebellious home being equipped with a distillery. To begin with, unless there should be a slump in the copper market the expense for worms and retorts would be huge. Again, there is little enough room in New York apartments as it is. If the still should come in the phonograph would have to go out. Most important of all, would man or wife be the moonshiner? The operation would require some knowledge of mechanics and chemistry. Your average New York man looks upon a screw driver as complicated, and compared with his wife he knows nothing of chemistry at all. Flat dwelling wives are so busy now that they do not go in for the bread making which the medical writer holds so slightly. Would they be willing to give up the weekly matinee to compound a sour mash for their husbands' tipple?"

BLOW AT "LIQUID BREAD" THEORY

The thirty per cent reduction in the amount of beer to be manufactured annually by order of the British Food Controller forever disposes of the "liquid bread" argument. If beer contains food elements similar in quantity and quality to bread, as the brewers insist it does, why does the controller call attention to the fact that "The barley, sugar and other ingredients used in brewing are required for food. It is really a question of bread versus beer." This is what the Christian Advocate has to say of the explanation:

"What an ignorant Baron! Food controllers should read the newspapers. Anheuser-Busch could send him reams of their advertisements which have been solemnly telling us all—lords and commons alike—that beer is bread, 'liquid bread,' quite as nourishing and rather more easy to take than the baker's product. Of course, the truth is that the advertisement was a lie. Beer is waste and bread is wealth, and thus the stern realities of the time are shaking the shoddy out of the brewers' arguments."

The manager of the wine and liquor department of the Acker, Merrall & Condit Co., in New York City, which has been doing a large mail order business, is quoted as saying that the Supreme Court's decision will be 100 per cent effective in the states now prohibiting the importation of liquor for personal use, that the other prohibition states will soon follow their lead, and that "there's no use closing your eyes to it—prohibition throughout the whole country—is coming."

BEER FROM THE VIEWPOINT OF THE DISTILLER

If you are in need of anti-beer literature, you will find it in the journals of the whisky interests. Since the introduction of anti-whisky legislative measures the love of the distiller for his brother, the brewer, has grown cold. The following is a sample of what the whisky men are saying:

"Until recent years, at least, it was the custom of Milwaukee parents to take their children into the various beer gardens of the Cream City and fill their little stomachs with 'suds.' The high degree of intelligence portrayed in these beer faces would not have brought forth envy on the part of Plato or Homer. We recall the time when the employes of one of the large Milwaukee breweries threatened to strike because their daily allowance of beer was to be cut from four gallons to two gallons. It would thus be seen that there must be something about beer that perpetuates the thirst. But, at the same time, it is admitted by the brewers that beer is a genuine 'temperance' drink."

PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE MEASURES BEFORE THE ILLINOIS LEGISLATURE

Special Correspondence

Important prohibition and suffrage bills are before the Illinois legislature now in session, and W. C. T. U. members and friends of the measures are being urged to send letters and telegrams to senators and representatives. These measures are: A state-wide referendum prohibition bill prohibiting the sale and manufacture of all intoxicating liquors in the state, which if approved by a majority of both the men and women voters at the November election of 1918, will become effective November 1, 1919; a bill prohibiting the sale of liquor within five miles of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station at Lake Bluff, which, if passed, will make forever dry Waukegan and North Chicago; a joint resolution for an amendment to the constitution giving full suffrage to women, and a resolution that the question of calling a constitutional convention be submitted to the voters.

Miss Helen L. Hood, president of the Illinois state W. C. T. U., is in Springfield in the interests of this legislation.

JEWISH ATTITUDE TOWARD PROHIBITION

Dr. Stephen S. Wise, in a sermon on "The Drink Question from the Jewish Point of View," at the Free Synagogue in New York City, in which he declared that alcohol must go, said in part:

"I want my friends, the non-Jews, to understand what our views are. I feel that there is a serious danger among the mass of the American people to misunderstand the attitude of the Jew. The Jew has been temperate, if not cold, to prohibition heretofore because the moral hypocrisy which shouts, 'We believe in prohibition, but we do not want its enforcement,' is abominable to him. His attitude is an honest, frank, and sincere one.

"Rum is a blessing only for the idle rich, for the extinction of their kind, and as a means to make their perpetuation impossible, but to Jews and non-Jews alike it is a menace. To young Jewish men generally I say, 'Free yourselves of the harrowing restraints of the cocktail and the cigaret.' The prohibition question is no Jewish question. It is an American problem. Do not let us think about ourselves, but let us think of the welfare of the whole country. Let the verdict be 'Alcohol must go.'"

"THE LAW MUST AND SHALL BE ENFORCED"

The above slogan is the heading of a lengthy editorial in the Seattle Daily Times concerning local conditions, which declares flatfootedly for a bone dry law and its strict enforcement. We quote as follows:

"In 1914 the people of the state of Washington voted to make this commonwealth dry, although on that occasion, the city of Seattle went wet by a substantial majority.

"In November, 1916, the people of this state reaffirmed their belief in and support of prohibition, and the citizens of Seattle, given another opportunity to express their views on the subject, changed their policy and strongly endorsed the dry law.

"The Times—which had been a leader of the wets—before January 1, 1916, declared that inasmuch as the voters of Washington had endorsed prohibition, the law should and must be enforced—that the commonwealth must be ruled in accordance with the will of the majority.

"After the dry law became effective, it did not take The Times long to find that changed conditions amply sustained it in this attitude and that, in opposing prohibition, it had been WRONG!

"In fact, we were and still are surprised that any one could live more than four weeks under a prohibition law such as obtains in this state and think otherwise. Any reasonable man or woman, who has seen such a statute in operation, as we have seen it in operation in Seattle, must be convinced that it serves all the best interests of the community and serves them well."

Following a resumé of conditions which led up to the calling of the Federal grand jury and its findings, The Times continues:

"This commonwealth has learned that it is better off without alcohol than with it, whether the subject be viewed from the moral or from the business standpoint.

"WE DO NOT NEED ANY MORE ALCOHOL!!

"The bone dry bill is the logical solution of our present problem and of all similar problems that may confront the people.

"There is no conceivable valid objection to such a law. The present conditions in King county furnish the most powerful of all arguments in its favor. The permit system has been given a fair trial and has failed to measure up to the needs and desires of the people.

"It is time to take the next step forward by passing a bone dry prohibition bill.

"The Times is unreservedly and flatfootedly for such a measure. The people believe in it, want it—and have so expressed themselves. There is absolutely no reason or excuse for attaching a referendum clause to the bill. The legislature cannot have the slightest doubt as to the way public sentiment inclines in this matter."

ADMIRAL DEWEY AND ADMIRAL FLETCHER IN SYMPATHY WITH DRY NAVY ORDER OF SECRETARY DANIELS

Admiral Dewey and Admiral Fletcher were one with Secretary Daniels in believing in the desirability of a dry navy, according to a biographical sketch of Admiral Dewey published in the New York Times. Secretary Daniels himself has said that he made up his mind when he became head of the navy to go to Admiral Dewey as his chief adviser. The comment was made a few days ago by Mr. Daniels' private secretary, according to an Iowa paper, that his chief had adhered to his original determination and had always acted in harmony with the views of Admiral Dewey.

PROHIBITION FOR MEXICO? MAYBE SO

The constitutional assembly of Mexico, it is reported, has adopted a measure placing the control of the manufacture and sale of alcohol in the hands of the federal department of health. The passage of this measure is declared by many to be a victory pointing toward the restriction or the prohibition of the sale of liquor in Mexico.

REDONDO BEACH GOES DRY

Redondo Beach, California, has gone dry! This is what the Los Angeles Times says about the victory:

"On with the drought, let misery be unconfined! Redondo Beach is now on the dry list. Thank goodness, that's about as far as they can go. They can't vote the Pacific dry, although there is no doubt there are some prohibitionists who would be mean enough to play the Moses trick on the non-prohibs if the Lord would grant them the power ascribed to that old patriarch."

BATTLESHIP MISSISSIPPI CHRISTENED WITH WATER

The battleship "Mississippi," the newest and largest of the United States sea fighters, was christened on January 25, at the Norfolk Navy Yard by a party of Mississippians who broke across her bow a bottle containing water from the Mississippi river.

$4,000,000 CUT IN SPOKANE LIQUOR BILL DURING DRY YEAR

Prohibition has been of untold benefit to Spokane, Washington. During the time that it has been in force robberies, vagrancy, business failures, insanity and drunkenness have decreased. Although under the permit system liquor was brought into the state to some extent, Spokane's liquor bill was cut by an even $4,000,000, says the Spokane Chronicle.

Arrests decreased from 4,962 in 1915 to 1,712 in 1916, the first year without saloons. The police records show 837 arrests for drunkenness in 1916, against 2,082 in 1915. Larceny cases decreased from 324 to 98 and vagrancy was cut from 1,579 cases to 423.

Retail business houses generally reported an increase of 25 per cent in trade. Bank deposits jumped more than $10,000,000, and bank clearings totalled $255,420,401 in 1916, against $192,732,109 in 1915. Bank transactions reached $643,716,596, against $503,369,590 during the last year of the saloons.

The Spokane Merchants' association took over assignments of stock valued at $475,000 in 1915 and $380,000 in 1916. Dun's and Bradstreet's both showed a considerable decrease in business failures.

NEW YORK RAILWAY CONDUCTORS FAVOR DRY STATE

At the fifth biennial meeting of the New York state legislative committee of the Order of Railway Conductors, held in Albany January 15, resolutions declaring in favor of the immediate abolition of the liquor traffic and calling upon its legislative representatives to work for the enactment of prohibition measures were adopted. The order comprises about thirty divisions and includes in its membership all the railway conductors in the state. The resolution declares that "this committee is unalterably opposed to the manufacture or sale of alcoholic liquors as a beverage, and does hereby instruct its legislative representatives to work for the enactment of prohibition measures."

MR. BRYAN IN PROHIBITION ADDRESS BEFORE MISSOURI LEGISLATURE

Hon. William Jennings Bryan delivered a prohibition address to a joint session of the Missouri legislature on a recent afternoon. Mr. Bryan told the legislators no Christian could oppose prohibition.

"I want the Democratic party to give us prohibition," said Mr. Bryan, "and I hope the Republican party will try to beat us to it. I offer this great issue to the Democratic party as an opportunity—to the Republican party as a necessity."

MUST SURRENDER HIS PASS!

The Chesapeake and Ohio Railway company recently issued an order to the effect that no employe of that company will be permitted to carry intoxicating liquors on a train while riding on a pass. If caught on a train with liquor in his possession his pass will be taken and he will be dismissed from the company's service.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, February 15, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND MEETINGS

In nearly every city of the United States there will be held, during the month of February, Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund meetings. The occasion will be opportune for united prayer for help and guidance in the critical situation our nation today faces. Let us call upon our Divine Leader to mightily rule in the hearts of those upon whom rest momentous decisions in this hour of stupendous world crisis.

STAR SPANGLED BANNER ANNOUNCES INDIANA AND UTAH VICTORIES

The flying of the flag from stately trees in front of the National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Evanston, Illinois, is notice to the community that the prohibition cause has achieved new triumphs. The recent victories in Indiana and Utah were celebrated by this display of the national colors, and on the tree from which the flag was suspended was a brief explanation. Students of the Northwestern University passing stopped to read and some tarried to express their delight by a cheer or boyish demonstration.

COLLEGE Y. P. B. ANNOUNCEMENT

Through unavoidable delay, the communication from Miss Christine I. Tinling, National College Y. P. B. secretary, did not reach us in time for publication in last week's paper, the Y. P. B. Edition. It appears on page 11 of this issue, and we hope it may be brought to the attention of all members of College Branches.

UNION SIGNAL DAY SOUVENIRS

A beautiful book-mark souvenir will be sent on request for distribution by all local unions that agree to hold Union Signal Day meetings for the purpose of securing subscriptions to the official paper.

LEST WE FORGET!

Even in these days of anxiety and heart-ache concerning the world situation and the possibility of our own nation being involved in the war, we rejoice over the victories in our state legislatures; the accession of Utah and Indiana to our prohibition ranks; the passage of submission amendment measures by Wyoming, New Mexico and Iowa, and the prospect of prohibition and suffrage legislation in many other states. Let our gratitude for these triumphs express itself in more zealous activity for the extension of total abstinence and prohibition. At this season of the year, we can help definitely to promote the educational and organization features of our work by holding enthusiastic meetings in observance of February 17 and March 1. Let us endeavor to enlarge the opportunities of the National W. C. T. U. by generous contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund, and the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund, and by increasing subscriptions to The Union Signal. We desire to call special attention to the fine list of supplies for March 1 meetings given on page 14 of this issue.

WE DO NOT NEED ALCOHOL!

In an utterance elsewhere quoted in the columns of The Union Signal, the Seattle Daily Times emphasizes a truth well worth the thoughtful consideration of every state legislature and the Congress of the United States. Says the Times in bold-faced type, "We do not need any more alcohol! This commonwealth has learned that it is better off without alcohol than with it, whether the subject be viewed from the moral or from the business standpoint."

Only a few months', in fact, but a few weeks' experience of conditions under prohibition were sufficient to convince the Times that alcohol is no longer needed and that in its former opposition to prohibition that paper had been entirely wrong, and further, that any man or woman who has seen prohibition in operation must be convinced that it serves all the best interests of the community and serves them well.

Similar testimony has come from every state where prohibition has become effective, even when hindered and hampered as the law has always been by unfriendly officials and lack of enforcement provisions. Why need there be longer delay on the part of the Congress in putting the question before the states by passing the Sheppard-Gallinger-Webb-Smith bill for national prohibition?

We are aware that matters of great import crowd upon the attention of Congress but there can be few that in war or peace, in prosperity or adversity, would be of more value to our people than the measure which in its final action means the conservation of the life, health, morals and financial resources of all our people. A nation can have no greater defense than a sober, industrious, contented and patriotic people, and the removal of alcohol will tend immediately and widely to the creation of such a citizenship everywhere within our borders. Why need there be further delay? Why should not national and state legislatures proceed at once to write the final chapter of the warfare against John Barleycorn?

"LET HIM LIE"

Nothing is quite so distasteful to the saloonkeeper as to have in his establishment a display of the finished product of his business. A Muncie (Ind.) judge the other day made the novel ruling that a man not only has a right to lie down in the saloon where he becomes intoxicated but that it is his duty to do so instead of going to some other place. The victim in the case had explained to the judge that after drinking at the bar he felt the drunken stupor coming on and so hurried to the jail, only a block away, and gave himself up, because he did not suppose the saloonkeeper would permit him to sleep off his intoxication on his premises. "So you thought you'd go to the jail and let the taxpayers take care of you?" queried the court. "The next time you get drunk I want you to lie down right there in the saloon and not become a public expense."

The ruling of the judge will not appeal favorably to the liquor interests. To the taxpayer it will seem most fair and just. Why not make every victim of the saloon a public example rather than a public expense. The sight of half a dozen or more men in various stages of intoxication lying upon the floors of a dram shop might deter boys and young men from indulging in a habit which leads to such a disgusting condition. At least the spectacle would not have a tendency to popularize the liquor business. Let other judges take notice and emulate the sage and sensible Indiana judge.

THE PEOPLE DO NOT FORGET

The time is past when "the folks at home" fail to take cognizance of the acts of those whom they elect to official position. Not so many years ago a member of a certain state legislature when cautioned by another concerning his attitude toward a pending measure, on the ground that his action would meet with the disapproval of "the people," replied, "Oh, never mind the people, they'll forget all about it before the next election." But the people did not forget. That some of the members of the United States Senate who voted against a dry District of Columbia will hear from some of their constituents, nay, are already hearing from them, cannot be doubted. Not only do they hear from isolated voters here and there, but influential journals are becoming more and more outspoken on the question of prohibition, state and national.

The Kansas City (Mo.) Star, referring to the action of Senator Reed of Missouri, concerning the bill for a dry District of Columbia, says:

"No wonder the brewers think us Missourians easy marks. They get us to send their man to Washington. But they aren't content with merely his vote. He must fight their battle in the open. He must humiliate the state by appearing on the floor of the Senate as the eager champion of the booze interests. In full view of the nation he must rush to the help of whisky with the most gross and flagrant misstatements about conditions in Kansas. It is lucky for Mr. Reed that he has his election in his pocket."

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

MEDICAL SIDE OF THE ALCOHOL QUESTION

"Alcohol will be classed in the next issue of the United States Pharmacopeia as a poison, and then you'll be convinced it really is a poison," Dr. John Bell declared in the midst of a hot debate that resulted in the Wayne County (Michigan) Medical Society going on record by a vote of 134 to 31 as favoring state-wide prohibition.

That one of the principal causes of cancer of the stomach is the drinking of whisky, is the opinion of Dr. William Lerche of St. Paul. "It burns the tissues along the 'highway for fluids,' the gastric gullet," says this physician.

"Pneumonia is a very common disease in drunkards, as are also other forms of internal congestion," is the warning sent out by the state board of health of Georgia, in a recent bulletin. "A drink of liquor taken before or during exposure to the cold will cause the blood to rush to the surface and become chilled, and, upon its return to the interior, the body temperature will be lower and internal congestion will develop."

The following paragraph from the Berlin Letter in the Journal of the American Medical Association is enlightening on the effect of beer drinking:

"At a recent meeting of the Temperance Society of German Physicians, Kraepelin discussed the results of a shooting tournament held in the fall of 1908 under the direction of the Bavarian Ministry of War for the purpose of determining the influence of alcohol on marksmanship. Twenty carefully selected marksmen fired 27,000 shots in sixteen days. Previous results were confirmed, namely, that a single small dose of alcohol—in this case, 40 gm. or about the equivalent of 1 liter of beer—taken in the morning, had a detrimental effect on accuracy of aim five minutes later; the most pronounced effect being noted from twenty-five to thirty minutes after the liquor had been imbibed. The average loss in accuracy was about 3.1 per cent. In a few instances, marksmanship improved for a short time after the ingestion of alcohol; then it became very inaccurate, the loss in marksmanship being as high as 9, 10 and 12 per cent in the case of eleven men. Self-deception, so commonly associated with alcohol ingestion, was evident in these cases. It should be remembered that the subjects of these experiments were in prime physical condition. Similar experiments made on soldiers in time of war would show still greater loss of accuracy since loss of sleep, over-exertion, insufficient nutrition and psychic disturbances would exert an unfavorable influence."

National prohibition as an alternative for birth control was advocated by Doctor Lyda Stewart Cogill of Philadelphia.

"Cut off alcohol," she said, "and you will eliminate, according to proved statistics, ninety per cent of crime, and thus do away with a great deal of poverty. Prohibition would mean such a general economic improvement that it would be possible for poor men to raise large families, many of which are now in want because of liquor."

DOOMED!

The Anheuser-Busch Brewing company has added an immense building to its St. Louis plant, at a reputed cost of two and a half million dollars, for the express purpose of manufacturing soft drinks. If prohibition is the failure its enemies would have us believe why are the brewers turning to the manufacture of other products than beer? Is it not true that in the recent Supreme court decision, in the recent action by Congress on certain liquor bills, in the vote of various legislatures this winter, and in the elections last November, they recognize the handwriting on the wall and hear the shouts of the victorious army before whose march their iniquitous business must be swept away? Weighed in the balance and found wanting—doomed! Let the people say "Amen."

WHAT WILL BECOME OF THE TAXPAYER?

The jail of Skagit county, Washington, is empty! The sheriff when asked recently "What's going on in the jail?" replied, "Nothing going on but the rent." A big populous county and nobody in jail! How strange! But it is a dry county and a dry state—that explains it! The oldest inhabitant can hardly remember the time when the jail was empty but one has placed it at twenty-seven years ago.

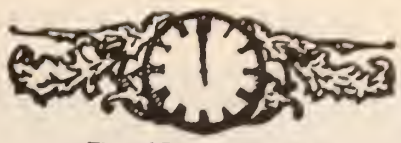
What will become of the taxpayer if he is no longer to be taxed for building great jails, asylums, reformatories, etc.? Maybe under the dry regime one jail will do for a whole state! Whatever will the taxpayer do with his money? And what will all the poor jailers do for a living when the jails are closed?

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Clara Parrish Wright, always gratefully remembered for her years of W. C. T. U. service in Japan, is living at Glendale, California. With her husband and two young sons she is deeply interested in the progress of the temperance cause which from girlhood has commanded her activities. Mrs. Wright is much improved in health. It is hoped that she and Mrs. Kara Smart Root will participate in the meeting of the "Transcontinental Campaigners," to be held in Los Angeles.

This spring Miss Flora E. Strout will return from Burma to the United States, her health making a change from an oppressive climate and intensely hard work, a necessity. Miss Strout has won many laurels for the W. C. T. U. in Burma. Great courtesy and kindness have been shown her by English government officials. Mrs. Phinney, for many years president of the W. C. T. U. of Burma, having resigned her office, is succeeded by Mrs. F. K. Singiser of Rangoon.

Rev. Harry Adams Hersey, a valued contributor to THE UNION SIGNAL and well known as the superintendent of the department of Temperance for the Universalist Sunday School Association, after March 1 is to devote his whole time to temperance activities. His former work as Sunday school temperance superintendent was done while he was the busy pastor of a church in Caribou, Maine. This pastorate he is now giving up to take up the direction of the temperance work of the Universalist church. Mr. Hersey's new work has been made possible through a generous endowment by friends of the cause. Mr. Hersey's headquarters will be in Foxboro, Mass.



Time of Prayer—Noontide

"It is always noontide somewhere,
And across the awakening continents
From shore to shore, somewhere
Our prayers are rising evermore."

THE GREAT ADVENTURE

Two college boys were discussing a remarkable moving picture that they had seen.

"It was exciting," said one, "but such things don't happen. They are made to order by the film company. Nothing unusual happens nowadays. What chance is there for real adventure in our lives?"

"There's the war. We could become aviators 'somewhere in France.' There would be thrills enough for you."

"Yes, but it isn't our war. What I want is real adventure in my own country."

"There's Mexico. You might try that."

"There's no 'adventure' in being shot at from behind a cactus or dying of sunstroke on a treeless plain."

"What do you call adventure?"

"Rescuing people in peril. Doing great things in the face of insurmountable odds. Being a 'hero,' if you like. There's nothing left for a man here except money-grubbing and politics and grinding in college. I wish I'd been born in the age of chivalry!"

The student was half laughing, half serious as he spoke. Just then he looked up and saw coming down the street a group of noisy underclassmen, some of them new to city ways.

They stopped near a questionable resort, and two of the number went in. The others stayed outside arguing with one who had hesitated to enter. In the light of the street lamp the student who was eager for adventure could see in the face of the fellow student a look of fear and shame, as if he were halting at the parting of the ways.

He who had bewailed the lack of "chances" for heroism hesitated, too, but only for a moment. Then he hurried forward, stepped into the group surrounding the hesitating boy, put his hand on his shoulder and said, "Don't go!"

The youth stared at him, recognized him as a senior he had admired at a distance, glanced round at the faces of his tempters, and then, with a cry, shook off a hand that had been on his arm and walked away. No one spoke; the senior joined his friend and they went on toward the campus. They did not refer to what had happened, but when the student reached his room he found himself trembling as if he had passed through some tremendous experience.

He had. The great adventure had come to him. The saving of a soul had fallen to his lot. As he prayed his mother's prayer that night he asked for a vision that sees the knighthood that always exists in every age, the chivalry of the pure in heart, the great adventure of saving souls that stand trembling at the parting of the ways that separate Death and Life.

—Youth's Companion.

The world is full of good impulses, but they need harnessing; enthusiasm goes to waste because there is no engine through whose wheels and levers its force can be applied.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

February 17—Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund Day
March 1—Union Signal Subscription Day—Birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens
March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow

SUPERINTENDENTS

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORK

DEAR SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS:

The following is the list of the quarterly temperance lessons of the International Uniform Sunday School Lesson Series for the year 1917. I have also given the temperance topic suggested by the lesson and program points which will aid the superintendent in planning a program for each temperance Sunday:

Lesson 1.—March 18.
Title: Jesus Saves from Sin.
Lesson Text: John 8:12, 28-37, 56-59.
Golden Text: If Therefore the Son Shall Make You Free, Ye Shall Be Free Indeed. John 8:36.

Temperance Topic: The Slavery of Intemperance. Freedom by the Truth.

Program Points: Address, "Character Sketch of Neal Dow, the 'Father of Prohibition.'" Roll call of prohibition states, with large Prohibition Map before the school. Study of prohibition geography in classes. Points on National Constitutional Prohibition.

ANTI-CIGARET DAY

Lesson 2.—May 20.
Title: The Importance of Self-control.
Lesson Text: Isaiah 28:1-13.
Golden Text: Every Man That Striveth In the Games Exercises Self-control in All Things. 1 Cor. 9:25.

Temperance Topic: Self-control in All the Habits of Life. Warnings from the Facts of History; from Experiences of Drinking Men and Tobacco Users.

Program Points: Practical talk on the Moral and Physical effects of Alcohol and Tobacco. Anti-Cigaret Exercises, or Medal Contest. Pledge-signing against Cigarets and Tobacco. Distribution of well selected literature.

Lesson 3.—September 9.
Title: The Benefits of Total Abstinence.
Lesson Text: Daniel 1.
Golden Text: Daniel Purposed in His Heart That He Would Not Defile Himself With the King's Dainties, Nor With the Wine Which He Drank. Daniel 1:8.

Temperance Topic: The Value of Total Abstinence to a Life.

Program Points: Bible Total Abstainers listed. Recitation of S. S. Temperance Pledge. Pledge signing. Brief talk, "The Power of Example."

WORLD'S TEMPERANCE SUNDAY

Lesson 4.—November 4.
Title: Defeat Through Drunkenness.
Lesson Text: 1 Kings, 20:1-21.
Golden Text: Let Not Him That Girdeth on His Armor Boast Himself as He That Putteth It Off. 1 Kings, 20:11.

Temperance Topic: King Alcohol the Invader of Our Country. His Work of Devastation.

Program Points: Junior Department-S. S. Medal Contest. Intermediate Department-Prize Essay Contest. Senior Department Discussion: "The Allies of King Alcohol and How to Overcome Them." Pledge signing exercise. Pledge signing should be a feature of the exercises on every Temperance Sunday.

The above is in leaflet form (25 cents per 100 postpaid) and should be widely circulated among Sunday school superintendents and pastors as well as among our own workers.

It will be noted that March 18 is the date of the first quarterly temperance lesson. It is so near to the date of the birthday of Hon. Neal Dow, the "Father of Prohibition," that we suggest a "Prohibition Day" for March 18. Another reason why it may well be observed in that way is because this is the first temperance Sunday following the prohibition victories in five more states and Alaska, and March 18 will be a good day to rejoice over the victories.

To aid in making this an effective prohibition day in the Sunday schools we have endeavored to make the Quarterly Budget, a Prohibition Budget. It contains well selected material for all departments of the Sunday school, a character sketch of Neal Dow, a prohibition exercise, which may be used in part or in whole during the Sunday school hour, the prohibition map revised to date for use in class study of the "Onward March of Prohibition," the song, "Prohibition Victory," and other helps for teachers and officers. Price of Budget, 15 cents, or 50 cents per year. We cannot send out the budget unless money accompanies the order as it is far more valuable than the price suggests. It is the one equipment that each W. C. T. U. worker in the Sunday school should have and we urge all to subscribe for it.

Sunday School Departmental Meeting

We desire to enter this year upon a campaign of education in Sunday school temperance work. A new program for a departmental meeting is prepared (contained in the Budget). Local superintendents are urged to make use of this program or a similar one previous to the coming temperance Sunday. It could well be a program given at a social gathering of Sunday school workers. Hold a reception for the Sunday school teachers and officers and enthuse them to do good work on March 18. Efficiency conferences of Sunday school temperance workers should be held, co-operating with the Temperance Department workers of the schools. In every way let us this year "study to show" ourselves "approved unto God" in this most important department. The department issues Method Circulars and these with the manual of the department, "Hints and Helps," are found in the Workers' Package, price 35 cents. Study the plans and then work them.

Advanced Sunday School Temperance Work

New Method Leaflets are being prepared which will explain how to promote temperance teaching in schools using only the graded series of Sunday school lessons; suggestions for expressional work to be done in junior and intermediate departments; how to prepare an effective temperance exhibit for use in the Sunday school; how to maintain a temperance bulletin in the Sunday school; suggestions for a Sunday school temperance picnic with program; Sunday school campaign activities.

Sunday School Petition

Since there is some delay in the discussion of the National Constitutional Amendment in Congress I am making one last call for more signatures to our Sunday school petition, which is a plea from the youth of the schools asking for protection from the liquor traffic. This plea is now signed by almost one hundred thousand young people and these signatures will go to Washington mounted in nice shape and be a part of the great appeal which will be made by the temperance forces for favorable action on the National Amendment.

Will not every Sunday school worker who reads this please send to me at once for Sunday school petition blanks and see that every child and young person signs our petition? Price of blanks, 12 cents per 100 postpaid.

We greatly desire also that all adult Bible classes and senior classes of the Sunday schools may be given an opportunity to sign the national petition sent out by the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Secure these blanks and get signatures at once. We should add thousands of names to this National petition from the Sunday schools.

Once more let me urge enthusiastic effort to make March 18 a great prohibition day in the Sunday schools. Send for literature promptly and be ready!

Praying for you always, I am
Yours in service,
(MRS.) STELLA B. IRVINE,
National Superintendent.
115 Walnut Street, Riverside, California.

Senator Kenyon will not lack support in his position that, as a result of the Supreme court decision sustaining prohibition states in excluding liquor from their territory, the strict exclusion of liquor from interstate commerce in the near future is not improbable. A newspaper friendly to the liquor interests, commenting on the decision referred to, asked whether this decision would satisfy the prohibitionists, or whether they would be unreasonable and ask more. They will be logical and demand more.—Boston Monitor.

A QUESTION OF PUBLIC COURAGE

HORACE SECRIST, Department of Economics, Northwestern University

I might say that the loss of city revenue from liquor licenses would be so inconsiderable, as compared with the enormous gains—direct and indirect—to be realized by a sober, law-abiding people, that to my mind it presents scarcely a problem. I have no sympathy with the view which maintains that the disadvantages associated with the economic adjustment as a result of installing prohibition are so serious that we must tolerate present conditions because of them. From the standpoint of business organization—the principles of which are clearly applicable to public affairs—a city's trading upon the weaknesses and depravity of its people is so inconsistent with the development of approved standards in modern enterprise that there is absolutely no case for its toleration. It seems to me inconsistent for a modern state or city to acknowledge a vested right in a thing which even the most short-sighted can see is inexcusably bad for the group as a whole.

Parasitism is never to be condoned even though its uprooting would temporarily occasion a rather serious readjustment. If the end is legitimate the means to that end are likewise legitimate, if carried out with due consideration for all the interests involved.

So far as other revenues to displace those arising now from the liquor business are concerned, there are any number of sources which could be tapped, and with propriety, to more than compensate for the losses involved. The problem in all its aspects reduces itself to one of public courage. Whether the liquor traffic will go, and with it the revenues now accruing to the city, will depend upon the expressed wish of the electorate. The disturbing thing to one who desires this wish to be forcibly expressed is that the electorate are so unresponsive to the demands of the time and are so poorly organized that their best wishes are easily frustrated and their minds confused by an appeal to such a flimsy thing as the loss of some city revenue, the fear of unemployment, etc. Experience has proved, however, that the people are coming to see the problem in all its aspects and to dismiss the minor and inconsequential considerations for those which are of real value.—From Report of Chicago Commission on the Liquor Problem.

COLLEGE YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

Dear Members of the College Y. P. B.:

Greeting to you and hearty wishes for a very successful year. There are many things a local branch can do, but they arrange themselves naturally around two main objects. We want first to know and then to tell; first to get and then to give. Impression and expression are equally important. If you will carefully consider the following suggestions you will see that these two things are pretty evenly balanced in the plan of work for a local branch.

There are too many people in the world who are going about like Ajax, suggesting the thought, "There were wit in this head and 'twould out." They have plenty of mental power if only it could be expressed, but it "lies as coldly in them as fire in a flint, which will not show without knocking." Thus it often happens that real ability is wasted in large measure. The Y. P. B. will help to make it otherwise with you. It will help you to find yourself. The spark of brilliancy, or perchance even genius in you, will be brought out by rubbing against other minds.

Have an active live branch then, for the sake of your own development as well as for the good you can do in the world. Bacon says, "Reading maketh a full man, writing maketh an exact man and speaking maketh a ready man." Therefore read, write, speak that you may be full, exact and ready. Then larger and larger opportunities of usefulness will be yours as the days go by and life will be more wonderful than the grandest dream you have ever dreamed.

Affectionately yours,

CHRISTINE I. TINLING,

National College Y. P. B. Secretary.

Plans for a College or State Normal Young People's Branch

1. Study the Year Book of the Young People's Branch, to be obtained for two cents from the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Evanston, Ill. Follow the plan as far as practicable and try to get on the Honor Roll. It will not be possible for a College Y. P. B. to carry out all the recommendations, but what it must lose on some points it can make up on others.

2. If there is no systematic instruction on the alcohol question given in your college at present, try and organize a class for the study of this subject, under the guidance of one of the professors. If possible secure curriculum credit for it.

3. Hold an oratorical contest, all the orations being original. Ask some friend of the cause to offer a prize. If there be a state prize, enter the winning essay in the contest; otherwise send it to Mrs. Edith S. Davis, 561 Thirty-third street, Milwaukee, Wis., who offers a National prize of $100 for the best college essay. (Only college students eligible for this.)

4. Present the subject of Prohibition to as many different audiences as possible by means of short talks at meetings of the Y. M. C. A., Y. W. C. A., literary and other societies. It may sometimes be practicable to speak at meetings in the town, as well as in the college, in Sunday schools, Christian Endeavor societies, Epworth Leagues, Woman's Clubs, Adult Bible Classes and prayer meetings. This is good practice for Y. P. B. members and may be an immense help to the cause. Do not be afraid to try. Prepare a ten-minute or a fifteen-minute talk and give it as often as the opportunity presents itself. Rather, let the Branch make the opportunity and send its members to represent it.

5. Subscribe for THE UNION SIGNAL (weekly $1.00) and the Temperance Educational Quarterly (50c). The latter should be ordered from Mrs. Edith S. Davis. 561 Thirty-third street, Milwaukee, Wis.

6. Place temperance books in the college library. Order from Evanston either the five dollar or the ten dollar set offered by the National W. C. T. U. In the Standard of Excellence (see Year Book of Y. P. B., page 10), placing a five dollar set will count instead of No. 5; placing a ten dollar set will count instead of 5 and 6, that is, 18 points.

7. Have a press correspondent who will send news items and short articles to the college and local papers.

8. Before Commencement send to the State Y. P. B. Secretary, or to the State College Secretary if there is one, a list of young men and women who are willing to work for prohibition in the summer. This is especially important when campaigns are in progress. See that their work is reported at the first meeting of the Branch in the fall, by letter if not in person.

9. At the same time send to the State Y. P. B. secretary, or the College Secretary, a list of members who are leaving college and are willing to join the Y. P. B. or the W. C. T. U. in their home towns. Give full names and addresses.

At the close of the year you will receive the following questions from the State Secretary, so please try and work towards a good report:

1. Have you placed the five dollar set of temperance books in the college library? Or the ten dollar set?

2. Have you placed THE UNION SIGNAL in the library?

3. Have you placed the Temperance Educational Quarterly in the library?

4. How many essays have been written on the alcohol question?

5. How many talks have been made on prohibition during the year by members of the branch?

6. How many articles and news items have appeared in the papers? (Do not count mere notices.)

Prizes

The following prizes will be given at the National Convention:

Fifteen dollars for the local college branch reporting the largest number of talks given by its members on prohibition, and also second, third and fourth prizes of ten dollars each.

Fifteen dollars to the local branch reporting the largest total number of books, essays and newspaper items in reply to the above questions.

Mrs. Davis, superintendent of the S. T. I. department, offers a prize of fifty dollars for an essay on "The Best Method of Teaching Temperance." It is confined to students in normal and training schools and to teachers in public schools.

There will also be a prize of twenty-five dollars for the state making the greatest increase in the number of young women members in the College Y. P. B., and a similar sum to the state making the greatest per cent increase.

In addition to the prizes for local and state unions there is one open to individuals. Every student who organizes a Y. P. B. in his or her college or normal school may apply for and receive from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters "The Life of Frances E. Willard," by Anna Adams Gordon. The following conditions must, however, be fulfilled: The Branch must have at least ten members and it must have held at least five meetings before the close of the year. The student who organizes it must report to the state Y. P. B. secretary or the state college Y. P. B. sceretary, if there is one, and mention that he or she intends to apply for the offered book. Then at the close of the year, if the Branch has fulfilled the above conditions, the book will be sent. So many college students are members of the Y. P. B. in their home towns that we ought to have a good number of new Branches organized in this way. Honorable mention will be given in the annual report to all who win these prizes.

PAYING THE PRICE

IVA SABIN BURGER

["This story," writes the author of "Paying the Price," "is based on facts. The young man who figures as the leading character was a childhood friend. With the exception of the names, which are fictitious, the story is alas! too true." —EDITOR.]

"Good morning, Mr. Elliot. I am calling on several of our influential business men. this morning, in the interests of the temperance cause. As you have a son of your own, who should be protected from this evil of intemperance, I suppose we may rely on your support?"

The Rev. Mr. Adams was speaking to Robert Elliot, who was the owner of a large department store in Fairborough, a growing manufacturing town.

"Do you mean to insinuate, sir," replied Mr. Elliot, "that my son, who has been given the best of moral training since infancy, would sink so low in the scale of manhood as to become a drunkard?"

"I am sorry to say that many boys, who have come from homes quite as respectable as yours, my friend, have disgraced themselves and their parents by lives of shame, through the influence of strong drink," returned the minister.

"Well, perhaps there have been such cases. But there has never been an Elliot who has strayed from the paths of rectitude. Now, Mr. Adams, you know very well that my business would be ruined if we should vote no-license in our town. All the trade from the surrounding farming district would go to the neighboring towns, where they sell 'booze.' The weak-minded men will get the stuff anyway; why not let them spend their money at home, rather than take their patronage to rival towns?"

"Very well, Mr. Elliot, I will not take any more of your valuable time. But if we should rid our town of this curse, you will find that your business will thrive as it never has before. Men will come to your store to buy comforts for their families, instead of wasting their earnings in the saloon. I hope that some day your views will change on this subject; I also pray that your own home, which you refuse to protect, may not be blighted by the evil which thrives among us."

Marvin Elliot was a man who was a "law unto himself" and needed no warning or advice from any one, but he was destined in years to come to recall the clergyman's parting words.

The fight for no-license in the village of Fairborough was carried forward by energetic workers, who spared neither time nor money in their efforts to win a victory for the right. But the good cause was defeated by less than twenty votes. Once more the evil triumphed, all because a few of our "honorable citizens" refused to do their part.

Three years passed, and Vincent, Marvin Elliot's only son, was now of age. He was a bright, promising young man, whom everyone admired and esteemed, and it is needless to add that his parents were justly proud of him. After completing his education, he became a valuable assistant in his father's store, displaying a naturally keen insight into business matters, which promised well for his success.

"Marvin, do you know where Vincent went tonight?" was the anxious question which Mrs. Elliot asked her husband, one stormy night in February.

"No, I'm sure I don't; he doesn't tell me any more where he is going, when he starts out in the evening."

The father looked troubled. Both parents suspected that Vincent had been drinking of late; for the young man's attempts to hide the fact had not been successful. He was losing interest in the business at the store and, worst of all, was associating with a class of fellows whose company was not elevating, to say the least.

It was a bitterly cold night. The wind was howling through the trees and the storm was becoming so intense that the street was almost deserted. The midnight hour came and went, and still the father and mother sat at a window, peering out into the night, their fear increasing each moment. At last, when the hands pointed to half-past one, Mr. Elliot suggested kindly to his wife that she go to bed, as she had not been well. She did as her husband wished, but her aching heart would not allow her to sleep. The minutes seemed hours and every strange sound startled her.

At last came the jingle of the doorbell! Mrs. Elliot sprang out of bed, threw open her door, and listened breathlessly for the sounds of her son's voice. But Vincent Elliot was in no condition to give reasons for his late home-coming. Two of his companions were carrying him into the house. He had been found in the storm, overcome by a drunken stupor, his prostrate form nearly covered with a blanket of snow. The two men laid him down upon a lounge in the living room, and before the grief stricken father could find his voice to ask for further explanations, they had left the house.

The mother threw a kimona about her shoulders and ran downstairs, her instinct whispering that something was radically wrong.

At a glance she saw that her son had fallen to the level of the lowest drunkard; her noble, true-hearted boy, whose youth had been so carefully guarded from all evil influences, had become the dupe of foul temptation. The shock was too much for the frail, little woman—she fell to the floor in a faint.

Was the father the same man who, a few years before, had boasted that "no Elliot has ever strayed from the paths of rectitude"? Total darkness seemed to be shutting in upon him, as he gazed at the helpless form of his son and saw his wife fall at his side, overcome by grief.

It was several minutes before he could control himself sufficiently to call a servant. But, realizing that his wife must have help immediately, he summoned Dinah, the old colored cook, who was always valuable in an emergency.

"Has you-all sent fo' de doctah? 'Pears like it's a right-smart bad night fo' any man to be out, but de missus sho' got to hab de doctah."

The voice of Dinah was heard but indistinctly by Mr. Elliot, who was already hastening down the stairs. The family physician was summoned, but it was some time before he could make his way through the storm to the Elliot home. He shook his head dubiously when he saw the predicament of the youngest member of the Elliot household, then went quickly to Mrs. Elliot's bedside. The restoratives which he administered soon made the poor mother all too conscious of the sorrow which that dreadful night had brought to her heart and home. But she was not ill, aside from the weakness brought on by severe mental strain.

Faithful Dinah had brought warm coverings and placed them over the motionless form of Vincent Elliot, and after removing his wet shoes, had wrapped his feet in heated flannels. Then she had chafed his icy hands until the blood began to circulate more freely. The physician examined him carefully, to make sure that he had sustained no injuries when he had fallen, and after giving directions for his care during the remainder of the night, he made ready to leave. Mr. Elliot followed him to the door and whispered huskily, "Not one word of this, Doctor!" "Never!" was the reply, and he kept his word.

The secret of that night was carefully guarded by the family, and but few ever knew of the sad event. The young victim had still enough manhood left to cause him great sorrow for the disgrace reflected upon his parents.

In justice to Vincent Elliot, it should be said that he fought bravely to overcome the appetite which had victimized him, but the unconquerable foe repeatedly gained the mastery over him, and more than once he went home late at night, under the influence of liquor.

He succeeded, however, in hiding the truth from Janet Landon, the young woman to whom he was engaged. She was a beautiful girl of twenty-one, who all her life, had been shielded from every care. Being the only daughter of a wealthy banker and highly cultured, she was capable of filling any position in life.

Genial, handsome Vincent Elliot was just the man to appeal to her fancy, and she loved him with all the strength and purity of her young heart. There had been whisperings of late, to the effect that young Elliot wasn't exactly keeping up the family reputation, but if these rumors came to her ears, she dismissed them as absurd.

There was an elaborate ceremony at a large church, the handsome couple vowing their life-long allegiance to each other, amid the lavish beauty and fragrance of roses and ferns. But there was an unseen cloud resting above their heads, which threatened to shut out the sunlight from their wedded life!

For some time after her wedding, Janet found little time for serious thought, being engulfed in a gay whirlpool of social events incident to her marriage. The furnishing of her new home was also most fascinating.

But she soon began to wonder where her husband could be spending his evenings. And the day came when she was forced to admit to herself that Vincent was drinking heavily; she little realized, even then, what her husband's dissipation would mean to her.

Two years after their marriage, there was great excitement over the arrival of Vincent, Jr., a fine little boy, who had come to make his home with the Elliots.

"Isn't he just splendid, Vincent?" questioned the young wife.

"Yes, little woman, and I mean to be worthy of the honor. Surely, it means a great deal to be the husband of such a wife and the father of an innocent little mortal." He bestowed reverent caresses upon his wife's brow and looked lovingly down upon the little form which was cuddled so cozily at her side, inwardly resolving that hereafter he would "turn over a new leaf."

The child grew to be a splendid, sturdy specimen of babyhood. As soon as he was able to walk alone, he would toddle out to meet his father, who always tossed him in the air, and carried him into the house. What a splendid picture the two presented—the fond father, with his raven hair and dark brown eyes and the little man with violet eyes and golden ringlets, his chubby arms clinging confidingly about his father's neck.

One night Vincent did not come home from the store at the usual time. Janet sat by the window watching for him; when at last she saw him coming, she discovered that he was reeling from the effects of intoxication. She had never seen him totally under the influence of liquor, and her face turned deathly pale. Little Vincent, who had also been watching for his father, ran out as usual to meet him. Janet sprang after him, but the little one had already grasped his father about the limbs, by way of greet-

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

BEFORE AND AFTER PROHIBITION

One year's trial of prohibition in Yakima county, Washington, has worked out from a financial standpoint very much to the satisfaction of the people, as the following statement from North Yakima indicates:

"In 1915 the expenses charged to superior and justice courts, sheriff and county jail and constables, prosecuting attorney, indigent relief, county physician and poor farm amounted to $94,517.04. In 1916, the first year of prohibition, the amount expended for these purposes was but $76,170.30. As the county is on a strictly cash basis all costs incurred are covered in the annual report of the auditor. In every one of the items named the expense was less in 1916 than the year before."

In Richmond, Virginia, during November and December, 1916, the first two months under prohibition, the average number of arrests decreased by more than fifty per cent. The following excerpt from a Richmond paper under date of December 31, is interesting:

"A rather remarkable situation is shown by a comparison of December 30, 1916, with November, and with December, 1915. The total arrests on December 30, 1916, were eight, with only one person arrested on a charge of being drunk and disorderly. The same date last month, the first dry period, 23 arrests were registered, four drunk and one drunk and disorderly. For December 30 last year, under the wet regime, the total arrests were forty-six, with seven drunk and four drunk and disorderly."

During each month of the year 1916 except November and December, the arrests ran over 1,000, in July reaching the maximum, 1,568. In November under the dry law, they totaled only 623, and in December, 671.

The Virginian of Petersburg, under date of January 2, is authority for the following statement:

"An error which crept into the report of the Petersburg police chief for December, as published in this morning's Virginian, showed 89 arrests, whereas the number should have read 99, classified as follows: Assault and battery, 5; assault, 0; drunks, 27; felony, 13; fugitives from justice, 3; larceny, 10; lunacy, 1; misdemeanor, 22; peace warrants, 0; vagrancy, 1; trespass, 4; violation of city ordinances, 11; suspicion of desertion, 2.

"Compared with the report of Chief Ragland for December, 1915, which was as follows: Assault and battery, 10; assault, 23; drunks, 548; felony, 67; fugitives from justice, 11; larceny, 80; lunacy, 0; misdemeanor, 79; peace warrants, 1; vagrancy, 26; trespass, 21; violations of city ordinances, 142; total, 1,008, the report for the past month is probably the most remarkable in the country's history and is an example of what prohibition and an efficient police department can accomplish."

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE

Monthly Budget of New Publications

and keep in touch with latest and newest literature issued at National Headquarters.

ONE DOLLAR

per year is the subscription price and this small investment brings to your desk large returns.

At the close of each month you will receive a sample of all leaflets, booklets, posters, etc., published during the current month.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois.

PAYING THE PRICE

(Continued from Page Twelve)

ing, and the man lost his balance, falling headlong on the cement walk.

The blow which he received from the fall roused his anger and as soon as he could regain his footing, he grasped the child and was about to inflict a brutal blow, when Janet snatched the boy away from him and ran frantically into the house. She rushed to her own bedroom and locked the door.

Vincent also stumbled into the house, muttering curses at his own child, and frightened the servants to such an extent that they ran to their own rooms, terrified.

On the following morning, when Vincent awoke and roused himself from the effects of his drunken stupor, he went immediately to his wife's room, where he was surprised to find the door locked. He knocked twice, then spoke his wife's name. There was no answer from Janet, but the little one, awakened by the sound, called out in his sweet baby voice, "Is dat 'oo, daddy?"

"Yes, son. Where is mother?"

"I des her's asleep. Why don't 'oo tum in?"

"The door is locked. Can't you push a chair up to the door and unlock it for daddy?"

"'Course I can do dat," was the reply from within, and the father could hear the little fellow moving a chair and then tugging away at the key. After repeated attempts, the door yielded and a little white-robed figure opened the door triumphantly.

"Big boy, daddy!" exclaimed Vincent, Jr., as his father lifted him tenderly and carried him back to the bed. Janet opened her eyes and looked at her husband, but the light of reason had gone out of them and was replaced by a vacant stare. She gave a shrill cry, as though terribly frightened, and then shrieked in disconnected sentences:

"Don't kill my baby! You shall not kill him! You have no right to touch him—You are not my husband! You are a drunken brute!"

When the servants came rushing in to learn the meaning of Janet's screams, Vincent told them that she was delirious and himself went off to call a physician. The child's nurse took him out of the room, and the household waited anxiously for the arrival of the doctor, who came a few minutes afterward. But long years of experience told the old physician that Janet was more than delirious. When he looked into the eyes once resplendent with womanly beauty, but now devoid of all expression, he knew that Janet was insane.

Dr. Straight was one who believed in telling the friends of his patients the exact truth in regard to the condition of persons placed under his care. When Vincent questioned him about the seriousness of his wife's symptoms, he told the young husband that his wife was afflicted with that form of dementia which comes from sudden and overwhelming fright.

"What has happened to cause this?" he demanded of Vincent.

Vincent buried his head in his hands and his whole frame shook with sobs, but he refused to answer.

Dr. Straight bent over the patient and took her hand; as her fingers relaxed, an empty vial fell to the floor.

"Poison!" he exclaimed, and the young man raised his head quickly.

"Has she—is it empty?'

"I fear she has," was the answer.

"Be quick! An antidote! It may be in time!" said Vincent frantically. He raised her head and the doctor tried to force Janet to drink the liquid which he had prepared, but her lips were tightly compressed, and they soon saw that their efforts were useless.

After a few moments Janet lay motionless. The death angel had added one more name to the list of suicides, caused by the sword of King Alcohol.

Vincent Elliot was prostrated with grief and shame. He would allow no one to sympathize or condole with him and told his friends that he was only reaping the harvest of his own folly and wrong doing.

A hush settled down upon the town of Fairborough such as it had never known and cries of protest went up from hundreds of hearts. But perhaps no one felt the pangs of remorse more keenly than did Marvin Elliot. He was thinking of his proud boasts that his son would never be lured into the saloon; it mattered not how many others might fall into temptation,—he could not afford to consider the welfare of weak-minded men, because he must provide the income which would support his own family in the luxury to which they had been accustomed. From the depths of a grief-stricken heart he was heard to say: "God have pity on me! I am paying the price!"

Often he finds his little grandson kneeling before his mother's photograph, and with tears in his eyes, the little fellow pleads—"I want to see my muvver so awful bad! Where is my dear, sweet muvver? Why don't she come back home?"

JUST OFF THE PRESS

LEAFLETS

The Last Stage of a Great Conflict
Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. convention
The Church and the W. C. T. U. (revised)
Women Prisoners
Woman and the Church
Gates Passed Through

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer

Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

America's Greatest Foe
The Paramount Issue
Prohibition States (revised)
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy (cartoon)

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

What Prohibition Will and Will Not Do Economically
The Children Who Followed My Example

Price, per hundred, 15 cents.

Yesterday and Today (a suffrage playlet)

Price, 15 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Following a banquet at Louisville in honor of William Jennings Bryan, given by the Democratic Forward League, organized several months ago with a view to eliminating the liquor influence from the Democratic party in the state, the largest and most influential audience ever assembled in the state at a prohibition meeting, declared that the liquor traffic shall be driven from the state and from the nation.

Supplies for Union Signal Day Meetings

Portrait of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens
Size 20x24
Price, unframed, $4.00
Handsomely framed, with name plate attached, price, $10.00
Size 10x12
Price, $1.50
Cabinet photograph, same style
Price, 25 cents

FOR PROGRAM

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said, compiled by Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 50 cents.

My Mother, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price, 5 cents.

Life Sketch Mrs. Stevens, Eva Kilbreth Foster. Price, 3 cents each; per hundred, $1.00.

Special Number Union Signal, February 8. Price, per hundred, $1.75.

Temperance Songster. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book. Price, 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Paean of Victory (solo). Price, 10 cents.

Prohibition's In the Air (quartet). Price, 10 cents.

Home's Love-light (solo). Price, 30 cts.

Victory (soprano solo). Price, 15 cents.

Quiz on National Constitutional Prohibition. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

States Rights as Applied to National Constitutional Prohibition, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson.

Co-operation of Nation with States Necessary to the Abolition of the Liquor Traffic, Hon. Morris Sheppard.

Prohibition States.

Price, per hundred, 20 cents.

Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund.

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.

The above three leaflets furnished free.

FOR DISTRIBUTION

Leaflets written by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens

The Trade and Some of Its Claims.

Is Prohibition In Maine a Success?

Railroads and Total Abstinence.

The Prohibition Proclamation.

Maine's Great Achievement.

Package containing 200 assorted leaflets .....35 cents

Package containing 300 assorted leaflets .....50 cents

Package containing 400 assorted leaflets .....60 cents

Package containing 500 assorted leaflets .....70 cents

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.

The Tale of Two Papers.

She Read It; She Took It.

Reasons, Pro and Con.

Before and After Taking.

The Official Organ as a Sentiment Maker.

A Resurrected Union.

Subscription Song.

The Union Signal Makes Converts to Prohibition—Try It!

The Union Signal to the Rescue!

Why Take The Union Signal?

The above leaflets furnished for postage at the rate of 15 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

One of the finest schools of Berkeley, California, bears the name of Frances E. Willard, and to this school the Berkeley union is to present a picture of Miss Willard. Careful preparation is being made by the union for the presentation exercises which will occur on February 16.

The advisory council of the temperance forces of Missouri, consisting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Presbyterian Board of Temperance, Ministerial Alliance, Anti-Saloon League, Prohibition party and Dry Federation, procured the services of Mr. William J. Bryan for their state convention in Jefferson City, January 24. At this time Mr. Bryan also addressed the Missouri legislature.

A call for a state convention to secure prohibition for Pennsylvania has been issued by the various temperance organizations of the state which are in favor of state-wide prohibition. The aim is to unite all the temperance workers in this endeavor, and all churches, ministerial associations, brotherhoods, Bible classes, W. C. T. U.'s, Christian Endeavors, Epworth Leagues, Young People's Church Unions and societies, Y. M. C. A.'s and all organizations and corporations favorable to such a movement are being urged to send representative delegations to the convention, which is to be held in Carnegie Hall, Pittsburgh, on February 15.

Philadelphia is to be placarded with posters showing the harmfulness of alcohol as a result of the action by the Philadelphia W. C. T. U. which met recently for its semi-annual conference in the Woodland Avenue Methodist Episcopal church. Addresses were made by Mrs. A. C. Peacock, Mrs. C. P. H. Stilwell, Mrs. Louise Bresette and Madame Layyah Barakat. Mrs. H. H. Hubbert was elected president for the coming year. An oratorical contest was held in the evening.

So generous have been the contributions of reading matter by the white ribboners to the lumber camps of New England, that an over-supply has been received by some of the camps. We are asked to say that no more material of this kind is needed by Rev. H. L. Seymour, Pittsburg, N. H.

STATE PRESIDENTS URGE OBSERVANCE OF UNION SIGNAL DAY

Plans should be under way to celebrate the birthday of our great stateswoman who raised the prohibition battle to a national plane by her proclamation for National Constitutional Prohibition, 1920. The fulfillment of her prophecy will be hastened by the faith and courage engendered by THE UNION SIGNAL. On this day multiply subscriptions.

MRS. ADRIANNA HUNGERFORD, PRESIDENT
COLORADO W. C. T. U.

THE UNION SIGNAL goal fixed by the National W. C. T. U. for each union is one-fourth of the membership (at least) subscribers to the paper. While we work for new members let us work for new subscribers for THE UNION SIGNAL, The Young Crusader, and our own state paper. These "tools" are invaluable and altogether essential for every white ribbon worker.

MRS. STELLA B. IRVINE, PRESIDENT
SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA W. C. T. U.

What Frances E. Willard Said

Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

a collection of quotations from Miss Willard's writings and addresses, many of which had never been published until this book was issued.

Price, 75 cents

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said

Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

a book of selections from addresses delivered before the National W. C. T. U. annual conventions, 1899-1913, together with portrait, brief biographical sketch, Mrs. Stevens' historic Proclamation, the closing paragraph from her last public address and her last message to her country.

Price, 50 cents

These books are really companion volumes and should be on every white-ribboner's desk for reference and inspiration.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois.

New L. T. L. Pin

in red, white and blue
Price 3 cents each; 25, 50 cents; per 100, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Have You Placed Your Order for the

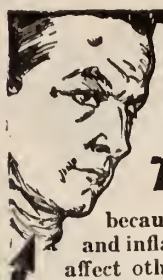
Topical Program

for use during the coming year? This program contains outline for two programs each month during the year, with space to write in the name of the hostess and leader of each meeting. Price, 5 cents each; per hundred, $1.00.

Package of Helps, with which to work out these programs, furnished for 50 cents.

This program has been carefully made up and local unions will find it most helpful, giving them a printed program at nominal expense.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois



Don't Neglect THROAT Troubles

because the swollen glands and inflamed membranes often affect other tissues and impair their healthy action.

SCOTT'S EMULSION affords great relief because its cod liver oil is speedily converted into germ-resisting tissue—the glycerine is curative and healing, while the combined emulsion strengthens the lungs to avert lung trouble.

REFUSE SUBSTITUTES and INSIST ON SCOTT'S

14-65

"IT OUGHT TO BE"

This news item is from the Buffalo (N. Y.) Express:

"A nineteen-year-old boy is in the Niagara Falls hospital because he drank thirty-five glasses of whisky on a bet. He was unconscious for a day but will recover. Is it impossible to punish anyone for selling him the whisky?"

If it is not possible to punish anyone for selling the whisky which did the injury to this boy, it ought to be. Moreover what ought to be can be. If the people who think this way will take earnest action they can readily have it established as a statute and as a rule of law that there would be both civil and criminal liability in cases of this kind. As a matter of fact civil liability is already being established in many states.—Collier's of February 10.

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should.

I know I can because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight, in your room, without drugs, by scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves.

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

New S. T. I. Medal

to be used as the award in
PRIZE ESSAY CONTESTS
An attractive medal at a popular price.
Gold plated, price, 50 cents
Gold filled, price, 75 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

The phenomenal advance of civic total abstinence sentiment is indicated by the admirable temperance instruction now given by Health Commissioners in many license cities and states, who have learned the startling truth that alcohol does the greatest harm to the brain, injuring first of all the highest moral and spiritual powers.

Through posters, exhibits and official circulars the people are taught that alcohol injures health; that it destroys or lowers the resisting power of the white blood corpuscles which defend the body from disease, and is a direct cause of pneumonia, tuberculosis and many dangerous maladies.

In the early days when total abstainers were few and it was our big task to decry even moderate drinking, we received little help from leaders of social functions, but now dry banquets among business and professional men have become popular.

"I believe that national prohibition will be a keen issue in 1920," Philander C. Knox, former attorney general of the United States, is reported to have said to a Georgia newspaper reporter on a recent visit to Savannah. "Even a blind man can see that from the present trend of sentiment. Whisky must be recognized as a detriment to the person or the community. It causes inefficiency and irresponsibility in the person who uses it even moderately. Consequently, it has been made a moral issue. Even in my home state, where I believe prohibition would not get even a good vote, much less a majority, a candidate suffers when the liquor interests are tacked on to him. I believe that the manufacturers in Pennsylvania would welcome prohibition."

A COMPENDIUM OF TEMPERANCE TRUTH

By EDITH SMITH DAVIS

Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, World's and National W. C. T. U.

Every Phase of the Alcohol Problem Covered

INVALUABLE TO ALL LIBRARIES
A Reference Book which no temperance lecturer or writer can afford to be without

An Alcohol Encyclopedia in a Nutshell

Two hundred and forty pages
Tuffibre Leather Paper Binding

PRICE FIFTY CENTS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

The Senate has recently been discussing the work of the Children's Bureau, under the able leadership of Miss Julia Lathrop. Some startling facts were brought out concerning infant mortality. 300,000 babies under one year of age died last year in this country. One out of every eight babies born fails to reach one year of age. Of babies with fathers earning less than $450 about one in four died before twelve months old. Where the fathers earned $850, but less than $1,050, one in eight failed to survive. Where the father earned $1,050 or more one baby in sixteen died last year, showing that there was an intimate relation between the poverty of the parents and the death rate of the babies. The Bureau is distributing bulletins in different languages, instructing the people in sanitation and hygiene, and is sending our helpers to visit different localities.

The Douglas county (Neb.) Retail Druggists' Association unanimously adopted a resolution favoring a legislative enactment for the elimination of liquor from drug stores after May 1, 1917, when the prohibition law goes into effect. Ninety-five of the 125 druggists of greater Omaha are members of the association. Explaining the situation, the secretary of the association said: "We have sufficient evidence to lead us to believe that it will be for our best interests to eliminate the sale of liquors entirely from drug stores. Professor O'Brien of the Creighton college of pharmacy told us at the special meeting that he has been asked by thirty saloon men for registered pharmacists to be employed in drug stores they expect to open as soon as they close their saloons."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

BREWERS START BIG AD CAMPAIGN

Want To Educate People

"The following is the first of a series of brewers' ads appearing in the Wisconsin papers:

"'This, and a series of bulletins to follow, will be published in the newspapers throughout the state of Wisconsin for the purpose of setting forth the plain facts and figures about compensation—and to acquaint the public with a peculiar state of injustice that exists in America.

"'It is generally conceded that, in this land of freedom and equality, all men are supposed to have equal rights within the law, yet in the matter of compensatory damages, anyone engaged in the brewing industry whose business may be seriously damaged by adverse legislation has not even the legal right to demand reparation.

"'Is it right?

"'Is it fair?

"'Is it just?

"'If you have the right to demand compensation—at least the right to sue for compensation—when your property is damaged, is it not fair and just that others whose business may be injured, or even destroyed, by municipal or state legislation should have the same right that you enjoy?

"'Think it over!

—"Written for the Brewers of Wisconsin."

The foregoing clipping from a Wisconsin paper is self-explanatory. It is inserted here as a reminder that the liquor men are not the only ones who must advertise. The end is in sight, but until we have won the victory we cannot give way one inch. If the brewers want to "educate the people," so do we; if they want to set "forth plain facts," so do we; and if they are going to "acquaint the public with a peculiar state of injustice," why, so shall we! And is there anything which has helped and can help in the work as much as a judicious, careful and prayerful use of THE UNION SIGNAL? "Think it over" and act promptly. We need some of the spirit of the little Filipino boy who, having forgotten part of his recitation, but not wanting to be prompted, after a moment's thought, finished triumphantly and emphatically, "when duty whispers low, 'thou must,' the youth replies, 'can do'"! So can we and we will.

1916 CRUSADER SUPPLY EXHAUSTED

So great has been the demand for copies of The Young Crusader that the reserve supply is nearly exhausted and it will be impossible to fill orders for back numbers of last year's issue. Please keep this in mind when writing for samples or sending subscriptions.

GOOD WINTER READING

Mrs. Florence D. Richard, president of the Ohio W. C. T. U., in a very interesting article in the current number of the Western Christian Advocate telling of the work that is being done in preparation for the campaign for state-wide prohibition, says the state W. C. T. U. is making a list of farmers to whom to send the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, the state paper and other temperance periodicals so that these people may be reading and thinking about the question during the winter months. The idea appeals to us as being a very sagacious one. Why not try it in other campaign states? Ohio expects to vote again on the state-wide prohibition question at the regular fall election.

NO "GOOD SALOONS"—ONLY "BAD, WORSE AND WORST"

Dr. Julius Bellin, of the Fox River Valley Efficiency League of Wisconsin, disputes the accuracy of the classification of saloons as "good" and "bad" made by Fred A. Rahr, retiring president of the Wisconsin Brewers' Association.

"Mr. Rahr seems to convey the idea that the management of the saloon is at fault. This is a mistake. There can be no such thing as a good saloon. There are bad saloons, worse saloons and the worst saloons. I congratulate Mr. Rahr on being a strong believer in the goodness of mankind, but in this I fear he is worshipping the wrong god. The life of the liquor evil does not depend on the goodness of mankind—it depends on the folly of mankind. Mr. Rahr admits saloons need regulating. For centuries brewers have advised people to make the saloon good by regulation. During all this time the accumulated experience of people is that regulation of the saloon does not regulate. Extermination does regulate it, and people have at last fully determined to regulate the saloon by the only known means of regulation—extermination. Mr. Rahr and I, of course, do not feel the disadvantages of rearing a family in the immediate environment of saloons. We are able to withdraw from our business in our automobiles to our residences in select portions of the city, and while we are skating about on the upper crust of society and basking in the undisputed sunshine of prosperity we seldom think of the poor devil below who is staggering beneath his load of alcohol and misery."

LANTERN LECTURES

EDUCATE THROUGH THE EYE

John Barleycorn
30 slides. Price, $15.00

The Fight of Science Against Alcohol and Illustrated Story of "Two"
51 slides. Price, $20.00

Woman's Christian Temperance Union in Song and Story
53 slides. Price, $20.00

The World on the Water Wagon
53 slides. Price, $20.00

These lectures are intensely interesting as well as instructive and make an attractive evening's program.

PLAN TO USE THEM IN YOUR SPRING INSTITUTE

The printed lecture accompanies each set.

Rental schedule furnished upon application.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Susanna Cocroft's Physical Culture for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

UNION SIGNAL FASHION NOTES

The following paragraphs appeared in the Florida state paper:

"The great mid-winter style sheet you will find in THE UNION SIGNAL for Dec. 21, 1916. Did you read it?

"It gives a plan of how to dress the great meeting of the Day of Prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition on January 18, 1917. It is one of the finest ever.

"Every number up to date is great. You who do not read the paper are missing very much, indeed.

"Who will be the first new subscriber this month to the best temperance paper in the world? There are ever so many coming in as members. It is great to be in a good crowd. I would like to have twenty new subscribers every mail and I have four mails a day. And the renewals—answer the day you get my notice and you will not lose even one copy of the SIGNAL.

"If you are prompt you will find that I will give you very prompt service. Who will be the first?

"Marion A. Freeman."

THE WORLD IS GROWING BETTER

The editor of the Memphis Commercial-Appeal, a recent convert to prohibition, sees in its progress an indication that the world is steadily growing better. "The hardest foe in the world to fight is self-indulgence, and this special form of it (the liquor habit) was perhaps more widespread than any other. No matter what pessimists may say about the evils of the age, this general sobering up is an unanswerable evidence that the world at heart is growing better."

Mr. Harry B. Miller, city prosecutor for Chicago, suggested to the young people of that city that they celebrate the New Year by becoming total abstainers. For adult Chicagoans he proposed a resolution to live up to and assist in the enforcement of the law. "The greatest percentage of law violations by young people in the city of Chicago is traceable directly to the use of intoxicating liquors," stated the prosecutor in an open letter.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., FEBRUARY 22, 1917 | No. 8

CAMPAIGN EDITION

—Shore

John Barleycorn's Lament

Woe is me! National Constitutional Prohibition is coming fast! Alas! 25 states have legislated me out of business, 11 within twenty-six months. When 11 more states, or 36 in all, are dry, my banishment from the United States will be a sure thing. It looks to me as if I'd get my walking papers inside of three years.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

PROHIBITION LIVE TOPIC IN CONGRESS—HOUSE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE ACTS FAVORABLY ON NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION AMENDMENT—PLEA FOR PROHIBITION FOR PORTO RICO

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Tuesday, February 13, the House of Representatives passed the largest naval appropriation bill in the history of the government. The measure carries approximately $268,553,388. Only twenty-three members recorded their votes against the bill, while 354 voted in its favor. The bill was then sent to the Senate, where a sub-committee of two Democrats and two Republicans was appointed to hasten its consideration. Just before the vote was taken, Republican leader, Mann, offered as an amendment the following affirmation of America's international policy, which was adopted: "It is hereby reaffirmed to be the policy of the United States to adjust and settle its disputes through mediation or arbitration to the end that war may be honorably avoided."

When we recall the fact that Congress passed the Army bill, carrying over $625,000,000, and now appropriates this vast amount for the Navy, making about $1,000,000,000 appropriated for preparedness, we wonder when the blessed day will come when the policy to "adjust and settle its disputes through mediation or arbitration" will prevail.

W. C. T. U. Always Warm Advocate of Peace

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a unit in its desire for peace. One of our strongest departments, presided over for years by that apostle of the principle, Hannah J. Bailey, is that of Peace and Arbitration. For long years the doctrine of peace has been taught far and wide through the instrumentality of this department and we have all said "Amen." Then came this terrible war in Europe and, as the carnage has continued month after month, our hearts have grown sick with the hopelessness of it all, and now, when the war cloud looms over our own beloved land, our united cry is, "Lord keep us from war." We believe in peace; we pray for peace; we pray, too, that wisdom may rest upon our President and his advisers that they may be guided aright in this time of stress. Our National president, Miss Anna A. Gordon, has recently conveyed to President Wilson our profound and prayerful hope that his endeavor to save our country from war may be crowned with success. President Wilson has successfully guided the "Ship of State" through the breakers that have confronted us and we believe he will continue to do so.

Naturally there is a tense state of mind here at the nation's capital, but the tone of speeches in both Senate and House has not been of the fiery order. These speeches have been delivered in a spirit of tolerance quite to be commended, all realizing the gravity of the situation. The tensity of feeling existing in the minds of the people here was exemplified by a little incident which occurred last evening: An evening session was being held in the House of Representatives and regular business had the right of way, when a filibuster was started by Republican leader Mann against a bill to give a Democrat instead of a Republican a non-salaried membership on the board of governors of the National Soldiers' Home. No quorum was present and, in order to bring about a condition that would permit the house to go ahead with its business or accept the alternative of adjournment, it became necessary to summon all members who could be located. In consequence of this the sergeant-at-arms and his aids went scurrying through the city and from the stages in the theaters announcements were made that the immediate presence of members of the House was desired at the Capitol. This sent a thrill through the audiences, many thinking that a war emergency had arisen demanding action at once. It was well towards midnight before telephones in newspaper offices had ceased to ring with the inquiry, "What is the trouble?" A quorum was secured, the roll was called, all was quiet and the House soon adjourned.

House Judiciary Committee Acts Favorably on National Constitutional Prohibition Amendment

Thursday, February 15, was a great day for temperance in both branches of Congress. First, the amendment for National Constitutional Prohibition was favorably reported by the House Judiciary Committee. There were majority and minority reports. Four Democrats and three Republicans signed the minority report, while nine Democrats and five Republicans signed the majority report. The majority report gives the status of the temperance question in our land today and declares: "As more than sixty per cent of the population of the United States live in dry territory, and approximately ten million of our people, residing in all sections of the Union, have petitioned directly for the passage of this resolution, your committee is of the opinion and feels that it is incumbent upon Congress to submit the issue to the states in the manner requested, as prescribed by the terms of the Constitution itself. If it is not desired, thirteen states of the Union can prevent its adoption, but if, on the other hand, thirty-six states desire such change, they should have the right to make it."

In the Senate, drastic amendments to the postal appropriation bill were agreed to which would make criminal the importation of liquor into states which prohibit its manufacture and sale for beverage purposes, and which would exclude liquor advertisements from the mails in states which legislate against such advertising. This drastic measure was added by Senator Reed of Missouri, and after brief debate was adopted by a vote of 45 to 11, the Senate sitting as committee of the whole.

Two hearings, one on the bill prohibiting liquor advertisements in United States mails and the other on the District of Columbia prohibition bill have been going on before the House committees. Two very important opponents were heard by the Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads, the first being James M. Metcalf, editor of Life, published in New York. Two editions of this paper are issued weekly, one for general distribution and the other for states where liquor advertising is prohibited. In the latter edition, several spaces, occupying a quarter of a page, are left blank and below are the words. "If you want to know what this vacant space means, subscribe for the paper and you will receive it through the United States mails. We are still on good terms with Uncle Sam." Mr. Metcalf was questioned very closely by members of the committee and it was brought out that, despite the fact that a prohibitory law exists in certain states, this paper is sent through the mails to subscribers living therein.

Another important opponent was T. M. Gilmore, president of the Model License League and principal owner of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular. Mr. Gilmore failed to remember what the circulation of his magazine is and the chairman of the committee exclaimed, "No matter what the circulation may or may not be, the government loses seven cents on every copy of that paper sent through the mails, as it weighs over one pound."

National W. C. T. U. Representatives Attend All Hearings on District of Columbia Bill

Before the District of Columbia committee hearings are still in progress. Those favoring a referendum on the liquor question are now being heard and the committee will, if possible, keep the hearings going to prevent a vote in the House. Miss Gordon, Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost, who is spending the winter here, and your superintendent have been in attendance at most of these hearings, dividing our forces, as both are held at the same hour.

During a discussion in the Senate on the Porto Rican bill Monday, February 12, Senator Gronna of North Dakota introduced an amendment to this bill as follows: "That one year after the approval of this Act, it shall be unlawful to import, manufacture, sell or give away, or to expose for sale any intoxicating drink or drug," with the proviso that the legislature may authorize and regulate such sales, etc., with penalties for the violation of the law.

In speaking for his amendment, Senator Gronna said he had been in receipt of hundreds of letters from patriotic women, many of whom had been in Porto Rico, who were united in urging that Congress embody in its Enabling Act a provision for prohibition. Senator Gronna sent to the desk, to be read by the clerk, the statement of Dr. Crafts relating to conditions in Porto Rico.

Porto Rico, with a population of a million and a quarter people, most of whom belong to the rural class and many of whom have been debauched by American liquor, should be protected by a clause in the Enabling Act prohibiting the sale of American liquors in this beautiful island.

President Wilson was formally and officially declared re-elected on Wednesday, February 14, when Congress, in joint session, as provided by the Constitution, counted the electoral vote of the states. As presented and certified, the official returns give Wilson and Marshall 277 electoral votes and Hughes and Fairbanks 254. The counting of the votes, as usual, was conducted with much ceremony. The Senate, preceded by two pages bearing the official returns, marched over to the House of Representatives, where Vice-President Marshall presided, sitting beside Speaker Clark. He opened and placed in the hands of the tellers the election certificates arranged in alphabetical order as to states and ordered them to examine, count and announce the vote.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., Feb. 16, 1917

LATE LEGISLATIVE VICTORIES

MINNESOTA

The senate of the Minnesota legislature passed the house bill submitting to the people a proposed prohibition constitutional amendment, the measure to be voted upon at the 1918 election, and if adopted, to become effective July 1, 1920.

OHIO

The Ohio senate, on February 14, passed by a vote of 20 to 16 the Reynolds bill, giving the women limited suffrage privileges. The bill has already passed the house and Governor Cox has intimated that he will sign it.

OKLAHOMA

The Ferguson so-called "bone dry" bill passed the senate, and having already passed the house, now goes to the governor.

MONTANA

A joint memorial to Congress for National Constitutional Prohibition passed both houses of the Montana legislature and has been signed by Governor Stewart. This measure was introduced by Representative Maggie Smith Hathaway, a white ribboner and daughter of Montana's Crusader, Mrs. I. N. Smith.

WASHINGTON

A so-called "bone dry" bill passed both houses of the Washington legislature and has been signed by the governor.

IOWA

By a vote of 38 to 9 the senate of the Iowa legislature passed an anti-liquor advertising law. The bill now goes to the house. Governor Harding has signed the prohibition amendment measure, providing for submission to the people. The temperance forces have asked for a special election on October 15, 1917.

Many States on the Firing Line

State-wide Prohibition Campaigns the Order of the Day

With twenty-five states safely in the prohibition fold, and at least eleven more clamoring to be allowed to enter, the necessary thirty-six, or three-fourths of the forty-eight, required to ratify action by Congress on National Constitutional Prohibition, seems assured.

By action of their state legislatures New Mexico, Wyoming, and Minnesota are definitely entering upon state-wide campaigns preparatory to a vote on the question. Iowa, which has statutory prohibition, is also to vote on a constitutional amendment. Florida's legislature is pledged to enact at its next session in April either a statutory or a referendum measure. Nevada, failing to secure from its legislature approval of the initiative petition recently submitted, enters upon a campaign to submit the question to the people at the next election. Ohio will inaugurate a state-wide campaign through the circulation of petitions under the initiative. Missouri is expecting to secure a referendum measure through its state legislature within the next few weeks. A state-wide referendum measure has passed the Illinois senate by a vote of 31 to 18 and it is hoped will pass the house, when the fight will be on in Illinois. Although the Texas legislature has turned down one prohibition measure, there is an effort being made to get another referendum proposition through that body. Wisconsin wants it understood that it is hoping, nay more, expecting to secure from its legislature a referendum to the people on the liquor question, when the Badger state will vote out once and for all the breweries that have made Milwaukee infamous. Kentucky's legislature does not meet until next year, but meantime a tremendous campaign of education is in progress that will swing the "blue grass" state into the prohibition line. California has never paused for a moment in its state-wide battle, and confidently expects in the next campaign to carry the state for prohibition in spite of San Francisco.

Meanwhile, by precept upon precept, the remaining states of the Union are creating public sentiment against the liquor traffic and in favor of prohibition, preparatory to securing legislation that will end the existence of John Barleycorn.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska
Indiana	Utah

STATES TO VOTE ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Wyoming	New Mexico
Iowa	Minnesota

Prohibition Bill Passes Minnesota Legislature

BESSIE LATHE SCOVELL

Both houses of the Minnesota legislature have passed a bill to submit an amendment to the state constitution to prohibit the manufacture, sale and transportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, within the state.

The lower house passed the measure January 31 by a vote of 86 yeas to 44 nays, to go into effect January 1, 1920. The senate voted February 15, 49 to 16 in favor of the measure, to go into effect July 1, 1920. This measure will be submitted to a vote of the people at the next general election, November, 1918. If the measure then carries, the prohibition of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes will become a part of the constitution of the state, and will be effective July 1, 1920. Minnesota's legislature has been extremely generous in time, allowing the brewers and saloonkeepers of the state to make as much money as possible in the next two and one-half years before they have to close up their business and seek other occupations.

Miss Rozette Hendrix, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Eva Waterman, state superintendent of Legislation, have worked faithfully for this measure and have spoken at the temperance committee hearings in both house and senate. Just before the vote was taken, white carnations (the mother's flower) were distributed in the senate. The galleries were filled with white ribboners. All that could be said against the measure had been said in the committee hearings and in the lower house, so that when the special order was reached in the senate at two o'clock February 15, the vote was taken, without debate, and stood 49 to 16 in favor of the bill. The prohibition party will now push a bill for statutory prohibition, to go into effect in 1918.

WYOMING'S STATUTORY MEASURE VOTED DOWN

A measure providing for statutory prohibition was defeated in the lower house of Wyoming legislature by a vote of 31 to 25. Wyoming legislature has already passed a state-wide measure to be voted upon by the people at the 1918 election.

WHAT INDIANA LIQUOR INTERESTS THOUGHT A "HUGE JOKE" PROVED TO BE THEIR DOOM

MRS. CULLA J. VAYHINGER, President of the Indiana W. C. T. U.

February 9, 1917, will go down in the history of the Hoosier state as a red letter day—the most important since her admission into the great sisterhood of states. It is very fitting that Indiana should close the centennial celebration of this admission by enacting into law a state-wide prohibition measure which will make her second century better than her first. Two years ago the dry forces of the state had a state-wide prohibition bill presented, but it never came out of the committee. At the hearing upon the question the liquor forces packed the senate chamber and when, representing the women of the state, I spoke for the bill, they hissed so for a time that it was impossible for me to continue, and yet the chairman of the committee did not attempt to call them to order. The same disrespect was shown other dry speakers. Of course this made friends for our cause and this year the chairman of that committee does not sit in the legislature.

During the past year we had talked of a federation of all dry forces to make a final drive for prohibition in 1919, but events crowded upon each other and in a most marvelous way plans were laid by which every man, woman and child interested in the question was enlisted, and as the delegates to the National W. C. T. U. Convention marched out of Indianapolis the dry forces of the state marched in and took possession, saying, "We have come to camp with you until we get our prohibition bill through." Headquarters were opened by the Indiana Dry Federation within a square of the state house. The Legislative Council of Indiana Women had its headquarters in the state house; the Citizens' League, in the Law building, and the Anti-Saloon League in the State Life building. These forces were working for three bills: One granting a constitutional convention for the revision of our constitution; another for state-wide prohibition of both the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes, and still another for partial suffrage for Indiana women. These bills were presented early in the session and at once men and women at home got down to business. The retiring governor, who is a Democrat, and the incoming governor, who is a Republican, both declared themselves in their messages as favoring a constitutional convention, so there was little effort necessary to pass that bill. Neither had declared for the other two measures, so we knew their passage would not be easy.

The liquor forces organized a "big lobby" to fight all three measures, especially the last two. They left nothing undone, but the people of the state were thoroughly aroused; thousands of telegrams and telephone calls went out over the state and to these every man and woman responded. Wet legislators received as high as three hundred telegrams in a single day, besides hundreds of thousands of petitions and letters. They were literally swamped. By the score dry men came down to the capital and put up at the hotels where their representatives were stopping, and stayed with them to the end. All the other business of the legislature was practically set aside as these three bills were the ones which occupied the time and attention of the lawmakers. One of the wets remarked when discussing the prohibition bill, "These three bills have consumed five weeks and we must get them out of the way and get down to constructive legislation!" They considered this triumvirate as "revolutionary legislation." The prohibition bill passed the house first, with twelve more votes than the most optimistic had dared hope it would receive. These twelve were wets, who jumped on the water wagon at the last moment.

The real fight came in the senate. A call was sent out and the night before the bill was to come up for passage the dry forces began gathering in the city. Every hotel was full and by seven-thirty the next morning hundreds were standing at the senate doors asking admission. Such a scene as was enacted that day was never before witnessed in Indiana. It was found that the plan of the wets was to drag the measure along, kill time and not allow it to come to a vote on that day; so our friends moved that its second reading be made a special order for that morning at ten o'clock, and its third reading the next morning at ten. This was done; the state house was packed all day, not a third of the people being able to gain admission to the senate chamber. Many amendments were proposed, but all of the really dangerous ones were defeated. The battle on the floor of the senate was intense, but our men were prepared for every move of the enemy, and so, after four hours of fighting, the bill, without damage, passed to engrossment.

At two o'clock the Purdue University band, composed of thirty students, and the Kokomo band, marched into the state house, and a great meeting was held in the rotunda of the capitol, at which Governor Goodrich, Mr. Emerson Ballard, Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, and Senator Mercer of Miami county spoke. Our people stayed over night, some of them sitting up most of the night with their wet senators. The next day the scene was repeated and by eight o'clock the corridor was full and the great crowds at the doors of the senate chamber were singing, "We're Out for Prohibition," "Onward, Christian Soldiers," and other temperance songs.

The battle for the passage of the measure lasted two hours and when the vote was announced by Lieutenant-Governor Bush, men threw their hats into the air, women shouted gleefully, and cheer after cheer rolled from all parts of the chamber. Of course many of the senators "explained" their votes, but those voting against the hill will have a hard time to explain satisfactorily to their constituency at home. Even citizens from our wet centers, such as Ft. Wayne, Gary, Evansville and Terre Haute, declared that their *mis*representatives should not go unpunished.

The house concurred in the amendments made by the senate, and Friday, February 9, at twenty-seven minutes past two a few of us stood by the side of the governor as he affixed his signature to the death warrant of John Barleycorn in Indiana. One of the pens which he used will rest among the archives of the Indiana W. C. T. U.

The coming of the National W. C. T. U. Convention to Indianapolis gave a great impetus to the work of the W. C. T. U. and put the dry Democrats into the fight in earnest. The liquor men admit it is the greatest surprise that has ever struck their camp. They thought in the beginning it was a huge joke, but when they found that all parties and all organizations of the churches and of the women and all the colleges of the state were allied against them, they decided it was no laughing matter. It has been demonstrated again that an aroused constituency can compel the legislature to do its hidding. Our prohibition law goes into effect April 2, 1918.

The liquor lobby is making its last stand in its opposition to our suffrage bill. If it passes women will be permitted to vote for delegates to the constitutional convention and they know that this will mean prohibition and full suffrage in that constitution. We will also have a chance to vote on its ratification. It has passed the senate and we are expecting it to pass the house. If it does pass the house, this legislature will go down in history as the one that has done more than any other for the state of Indiana. In passing the prohibition measure alone, however, it has already achieved that distinction.

A call has gone out from the dry forces asking that all the schools give one hour on February 22, Washington's birthday, at which time the significance of the prohibition victory may be called to the attention of the pupils. On February 25, the churches will devote their morning service to thanksgiving, closing at twelve o'clock with the ringing of the bells.

ONE MORE IN THE FOLD

—Kansas City Star

Governor Ernest Lister of Washington

Governor Arthur Capper
of Kansas

Governor James Withycombe of Oregon

FROM THE GOVERNORS' VIEWPOINT

CHIEF EXECUTIVES OF MANY STATES ENTHUSIASTICALLY DECLARE FOR PROHIBITION

Not many years ago the governor of a commonwealth who outspokenly advocated prohibition in a conference of the governors of the United States would have found his views were decidedly unpopular among his fellow chief executives. Today the majority of the men who sit in the gubernatorial chairs are in favor of prohibition of some kind, many of them enthusiastic for both statewide and national prohibition.

GOVERNOR CARL E. MILLIKEN OF MAINE

Maine, the oldest prohibition state, is especially fortunate in its new chief, Carl Milliken, who was elected on a law enforcement platform and promises to use the militia, if necessary, to enforce the prohibitory law. In his inaugural address Governor Milliken said:

"Personal abstinence and governmental prohibition have been forced upon European nations as war measures in the face of national peril. These safeguards of our citizenship are equally urgent patriotic necessities in our own country. I confidently count upon your support for all reasonable measures against that unholy alliance which more than any other internal or external foe menaces the very existence of our nation—a defiant liquor traffic joined with nullification of law."

GOVERNOR ARTHUR CAPPER OF KANSAS

Prohibition has no more energetic and ardent exponent than Governor Capper of Kansas, who believes that as his state has been so richly blessed by the benefits resulting from the elimination of the liquor traffic, it should lead in the movement for national prohibition. From the many eloquent words spoken by this courageous champion of our cause, we quote the following recently contained in a letter sent by the governor to our National W. C. T. U. president:

"National Constitutional Prohibition will be of inestimable benefit to all states now having state-wide prohibition. The greatest hindrance to the enforcement of the prohibitory law in Kansas comes from the existence of saloons in adjoining wet territory. Representatives of the liquor interests from that section constantly prey upon the people of this state and their activities add greatly to the difficulties encountered in enforcing our law. National prohibition will remove this last obstacle and nine-tenths of the people of Kansas will welcome with the greatest enthusiasm the advent of that day.

"Kansas people are immensely pleased over the great strides made by the prohibition movement at the last election. They see in that great victory the doom of the saloon and their arch enemy. They confidently expect national prohibition to come not later than 1920, and knowing as they do the blessings of a saloonless state, they can be depended upon to take the lead in the fight which shall rid the nation of the curse of the liquor traffic."

GOVERNOR LYNN J. FRAZIER OF NORTH DAKOTA

The farmers of North Dakota this year elected as the head of their state government a modern, up-to-date man from their own class. In responding to the request of our state W. C. T. U. president for an expression of his sentiments on prohibition, Governor Frazier undoubtedly voices the opinion of the large and wealthy agricultural element of the state. He says:

"Prohibition has given us cleaner towns and a cleaner citizenship. It has given our young people the privilege of growing up free from the demoralizing influence of the saloon, and made our state a better and safer place in which to live."

GOVERNOR T. W. BICKETT OF NORTH CAROLINA

The state of North Carolina has been favored in having chief executives who are in perfect sympathy with the provisions of the prohibitory law. The new incumbent of the office, Governor Bickett, like his predecessors, considers it one of the state's most valuable assets. In a gracious response to the request of the state W. C. T. U. president, he sent the following statement:

"Prohibition in the Old North State has wrought more for temperance and sobriety than its most ardent advocates claimed that it would in the great fight before the people in 1908. In that campaign some of the leading newspapers and many strong and good men conscientiously opposed the measure. The law has so justified its enactment that I am persuaded that today not one reputable paper in the state and not one man of recognized character and ability would defend its repeal.

"Heretofore the opponents of prohibition have contended that prohibition laws would not be effective because wet states would flood dry states with liquor. But under the recent decision of the Supreme Court in the United States, construing the Webb-Kenyon Act, any state in the Union can be made as dry as a bone, and not one drop of liquor can come from any other state contrary to the will of the people of the dry state. Under this interpretation of the law several states of the Union will become dry just as rapidly as public sentiment in such states is sufficiently strong to make prohibition effective."

GOVERNOR THEODORE G. BILBO OF MISSISSIPPI

So keenly does Governor Bilbo of Mississippi feel the importance of the anti-liquor policy of the state, as embodied in its law, that he apologizes for sending the following brief statement as to his attitude toward it, feeling that the subject deserves a more exhaustive treatment. He says:

"When asked by the president of the Mississippi W. C. T. U. for a statement of my views on prohibition I felt, and feel now, that so much has been said, and well said on this great and absorbing topic that there is little left for me to add. However, my interest in this subject is so great and the benefits to be derived from prohibition by our people as a whole, and individually are of such lasting importance that I will briefly state my views:

"There is not a single argument that can appeal to a thinking person, why spirituous or malt liquors should be sold or drank. The medical world has abandoned the theory that whisky is a medicine and now agree that it is harmful to the human system, no matter in what quantity taken. The millions of dollars spent annually in America would maintain our school system, establish hospitals and orphan asylums and relieve distress everywhere. Statistics show that a very large percentage of crime is committed by those under the influence of drink, or who have sunk low in the moral scale by reason of improper rearing due to drinking parents. Our penitentiaries, insane hospitals, reformatories, orphan asylums and jails are filled with those who have been the victims of rum. It has pauperized more families than any other agency since we have had a semblance of civilization. Prohibition puts money formerly spent for intoxicants into the legitimate channels of trade, purchases the necessities and some of the luxuries of life, conduces to clean and right living, improves health and guarantees to posterity soundness of mind and body."

Governor C. E. Milliken of Maine | Governor C. H. Brough of Arkansas | Governor S. J. Catts of Florida | Governor Simon Bamberger of Utah | Governor T. E. Campbell of Arizona

GOVERNOR THOMAS C. RYE OF TENNESSEE

The numerous law enforcement measures tending to strengthen and reinforce the prohibitory law of Tennessee, passed by the legislature, during Governor Rye's administration, demonstrate how eager he is to bring the law to full perfection. "The Democratic party, as well as all other political parties, stands pledged to the enforcement of the temperance laws and to the enactment of such laws as may be necessary to bring about this result," said Governor Rye recently, in reaffirming his belief and confidence in the prohibitory law.

GOVERNOR RICHARD I. MANNING OF SOUTH CAROLINA

Governor Manning of South Carolina has proved his approval of the anti-liquor law of his state by his wholehearted efforts to enforce it. Previous to the vote on the question, he pledged himself to enforcement and has fully justified the confidence of the people in him.

GOVERNOR CHARLES HILLMAN BROUGH OF ARKANSAS

Arkansas will find in its new executive, Governor Brough, an enthusiastic, intelligent defender of the prohibition policy. In his recent inaugural address he gave expression to his convictions in the following words:

"No people can ever rise higher than their ideals. Arkansas has been partially 'redeemed, regenerated, and disenthralled' from the degrading influences of the liquor traffic by the passage of a state-wide prohibition law and by the defeat in the recent election in no unmistakable terms of Act Number 2, which would have meant not the restoration of local option, about which good people differ, but the introduction of a saturnalia of license and immorality such as the state has never witnessed. But still interstate shipments of liquor continue, and I believe this evil should be regulated by the passage of a law, similar to Alabama's, prohibiting the publication of liquor advertisements in our newspapers. The Webb-Kenyon bill makes the police power of a state full and plenary, and I believe Arkansas should take advantage of this fact to save the boys of the rising generation from a certain degradation."

GOVERNOR HUGH M. DORSEY OF GEORGIA

Hon. Hugh M. Dorsey, the governor-elect of Georgia, declared for the enforcement of the prohibition law in his gubernatorial platform and again in his convention speech of acceptance as the nominee of his party. He stated that "the campaign just terminated developed three questions of more than usual concern to our people. By their votes they expressed clearly their decision regarding each of these, and all should accept that result and observe it in the utmost good faith." One of the important questions he named as receiving the endorsement of the people was "that which would enforce strictly our present laws prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicants."

GOVERNOR JULIUS GUNTER OF COLORADO

Judging from the following statement sent by the newly elected governor to the state W. C. T. U. president, the man who sits in the chief executive's chair in Colorado estimates at its real worth the prohibition policy of the state. Governor Gunter says:

"A prohibition constitutional amendment was adopted in the state of Colorado at the November election of 1914, by a majority of more than 11,000 votes, to become effective January 1, 1916.

"After one year of prohibition a large majority of those most radically opposed to the amendment at the time of its submission, are its most ardent supporters. Should the question of prohibition be again submitted to the people of this state, the majority of 1914 would be manifolded. As an evidence of this, the beer amendment submitted to the voters at the November election of 1916, was defeated by a majority of 85,789.

"The practical benefits which are most conspicuous are the relief of suffering among women and children, the decrease in demand on charitable organizations, the great decrease in crime and consequent committals to state prison, and the increase in the number of new savings accounts opened by the various banks throughout the state, totaling 119,000. The legislature, which is now in session, will doubtless amend the present statute tending to a more effective and rigid enforcement, as suggested in my inaugural address: 'We have our constitutional amendment and statutes passed in aid thereof. This is a question of great interest to our people. The enactment of these laws has worked untold benefit. We urge such legislation as will make the purpose of our prohibition law effective.'"

GOVERNOR ERNEST LISTER OF WASHINGTON

The name of Governor Lister is inseparably connected with the prohibition movement in the state of Washington. He has been its valiant supporter from the first. He has said:

"The American saloon is steadily becoming a thing of the past, and if those engaged in the business accept the inevitable they may be able to avoid the shock attendant upon sudden financial adjustment. Our state prohibition law may not compel men who have used intoxicants to undergo a process of reform, but it will at least eliminate from our streets the saloon with all its demoralizing influences on the younger generation. It is that younger generation that must be carefully watched now."

In his inaugural address Governor Lister declared: "The tendency is clearly toward nation-wide prohibition; the state of Washington has indicated its views by the advanced steps already taken."

GOVERNOR THOMAS E. CAMPBELL OF ARIZONA

Arizona's new cowboy governor is not afraid to declare what he thinks of the anti-brewery, anti-distillery, anti-saloon law of the state he governs, and this is what he has to say about it, in reply to a request of the state W. C. T. U. president for his opinion:

"Prohibition is a good thing, morally and economically, for any people.

"In Arizona, it has already done a great deal for the improvement of the moral status and the economic welfare of our citizenship.

"As governor of the state, I shall use every authority imposed in my position to see that the prohibition amendment in the constitution and such laws with regard thereto as may be enacted by the legislature, are carried out strictly."

GOVERNOR S. V. STEWART OF MONTANA

In a public communication, September 2, 1916, Governor Stewart, who had just been nominated for re-election, declared:

"I regard prohibition as a purely moral question and one which ought not to be involved in politics, but rather should be determined by each voter irrespective of political affiliation and solely according to the dictates of conscience. Nevertheless, the question is a public one, and many voters feel that they have a right to know the attitude of public men on all public questions. In view of this general feeling and of the further fact that the next administration may be called upon to make prohibition effective, I say to you that I personally believe in state-wide prohibition and expect to vote for the pending measure at the forthcoming election. In the event of the adoption of prohibition by the people, I promise that if I am elected governor of Montana I will do all in my power to enforce the law and make it effective."

In his message to the fifteenth legislative assembly, on January 2, 1917, Governor Stewart called attention to the necessity of providing revenue to take the place of that which would be lost to the state when prohibition became effective. "In this connection I do not want to be understood as deploring the situation," he said. "Rather would I commend the people for this advanced step along the lines of civic betterment and moral refinement."

GOVERNOR JAMES WITHYCOMBE OF OREGON

Another loyal friend of the cause on the Pacific Coast is Governor Withycombe. When asked his opinion a few weeks ago concerning the effect of prohibition in his own state, he replied, "The passing of the barroom has certainly exerted a happy influence upon home life, and especially as regards the bringing up of children. Soon there will be in Oregon many boys and girls who have never seen the swinging doors of the old-time saloon. I feel that prohibition is proving a phenomenal success from an economic and moral standpoint. It seems to me inevitable that national prohibition will come, and it appears extremely probable that before many years have elapsed the civilized nations of the world will have adopted it."

GOVERNOR MOSES ALEXANDER OF IDAHO

Governor Alexander of Idaho was a veritable "Moses" to lead his state out of the wilderness of the liquor traffic into the promised land of prohibition. Characterizing the prohibitory law passed by the legislature as "the greatest stride forward in the history of Idaho," he goes on to extol prohibition, saying, "Idaho will prosper without saloons more than it ever prospered before." That he is right is shown by the fact that after a few months' experience with prohibition under a statutory law, the people, by a vote of two to one, cast their ballots for a constitutional measure.

GOVERNOR ALBERT E. SLEEPER OF MICHIGAN

Governor Sleeper, the newly elected governor of Michigan, previous to his election promised if he were elected to strictly enforce the law. The measure has an ardent friend in the lieutenant governor, Hon. Luren D. Dickinson.

GOVERNOR H. C. STUART OF VIRGINIA

The newly elected governor of Virginia, while unwilling to make any general statement as to the effect of prohibition on the population of his state after so brief a period of trial, calls attention to the fact that all reports coming to him show that crime of all kinds, and especially drunkenness, has greatly decreased.

EX-GOVERNOR HATFIELD OF WEST VIRGINIA

In lieu of any word from the present governor of West Virginia, we recall the strong testimony given by Governor Hatfield in his last message to the legislature before relinquishing the reins of government into the hands of his successor the first of this year. He said, "I believe that the prohibition law has brought happiness into hundreds and thousands of homes where before only misery was known. The great mass of the people have been benefited and the heads of our largest industries are loud in their praise of the results of prohibition."

GOVERNOR PETER R. NORBECK OF SOUTH DAKOTA

The new governor of South Dakota, in a somewhat lengthy and emphatic section in his first message to the legislature, shows his approval of and his intention to enforce the law to the best of his ability. He calls attention to the fact that South Dakota once had prohibition and lost it because of lax enforcement. He urges that the governor be given power to remove any state's attorney or sheriff who fails to enforce the law.

GOVERNOR KEITH NEVILLE OF NEBRASKA

Governor Neville of Nebraska characterizes the action of the people at the election last November, in giving a majority of over 30,000 for prohibition, as "the result of an intelligent retrospection of the past twenty years." He recommends, in order to make prohibition a fact in the state, the passage of the following measures, among others: A public welfare department to gather information of law violations, help in prosecutions, etc.; the sale of intoxicating liquors in drug stores to be strictly regulated; the elimination of the locker system in clubs, etc.; the penalty for sale of intoxicating liquors to fall upon the landlord as well as upon tenant, etc.

Governor S. V. Stewart of Montana

Governor Lynn J. Frazier of North Dakota

GOVERNOR SIMON BAMBERGER OF UTAH

Speaking in prophetic words, months before the action of the legislature, Governor Bamberger is reported to have said; "This right hand of mine will sign a prohibitory law before the year is over." The governor was elected on a prohibition platform, as were also the legislators, and in his inaugural address he discoursed as follows concerning the proposed measure which has since passed the legislature:

"It should not be a difficult matter to interpret the will of the people so emphatically expressed at the polls a few weeks ago. I should say that, first of all, the people of the state went on record for state-wide prohibition. They know that the governor and the legislators for whom they voted stood upon a platform which pledged them to enact an effective prohibition law which would be in full force and effect not later than August 1, 1917. It is a tribute to the integrity of the officers chosen that no one now wonders whether or not the legislature and the governor will pass and put into effect the prohibition bill on the date promised. Everyone regards it as a settled fact that the state will be dry—'dry as a powder mill'—on August 1, 1917.

GOVERNOR JOHN KENDRICK OF WYOMING

It was due in part to the influence of Governor Kendrick of Wyoming, recently elected to the United States Senate, that the prohibition submission measure passed both houses of the legislature. In his message to the legislature this year he declared:

"Within the last decade, there has been a tremendous reversal of opinion throughout our country upon the economic aspects of the liquor traffic. There has never been any question as to the moral issues involved, nor as to the desirability of prohibition from that standpoint. But the new angle from which the traffic has been attacked has developed a veritable wave of negative sentiment, until today Wyoming stands in a vast dry area as the one state which permits the sale of intoxicants with little or no restriction. In view of the many petitions presented to the legislature two years ago and the great interest manifested by the people on the question during the last election, I am confident that there is a growing conviction in the minds of the people of Wyoming, that the time has come for the state to move into line with her neighbors."

GOVERNOR SIDNEY J. CATTS OF FLORIDA

It is confidently expected that when the legislature of Florida meets in April it will pass either a statutory prohibitory measure or one submitting the question to the people. Governor Catts, in his pre-election pledges, promised to stand back of such legislation. The following statement was given by him to the president of the Florida state W. C. T. U. for publication:

"The American people of our day are more widely awake upon the question of temperance and prohibition and the sale of vinous, spirituous and malt liquors than ever before in the history of the world. Remarkable as it may seem, the higher class of people of the whole world are turning to the good effects of abstinence from strong drink. The decree of the Czar of Russia put vodka out of the Russian army and country in a single day. Those in authority in the British army have also cut out strong drink for the soldiers. Shall we, the United States, be behind these countries? I say, 'No.' I believe the time will come within the next four years when the United States will step out as a nation-wide prohibition country. The recent decision of the Supreme Court as to the shipping of whisky and other intoxicating drinks into dry territory has caused a reformation in sentiment in regard to this matter for we see that our courts are backing the people in their endeavor to lead clean and honest lives. The movement to banish the saloon from the city of Washington has encouraged the people very much, while state after state is joining the dry columns constantly. May the time speedily come when Florida shall join the ranks."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, February 22, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

PROHIBITION RALLY DAY—MARCH 20

The articles in this issue are especially designed for use in Prohibition Rally Day meetings, which all local unions will plan to hold on or near March 20. In arranging the program for that occasion do not fail to read carefully and prayerfully the words of our National W. C. T. U. treasurer on page 10.

SUGGESTED PROGRAM FOR PROHIBITION RALLY DAY

Music: "Prohibition Victory," Page 1, "Popular Campaign Songs"
Scripture Reading
Roll Call: "Testimony from Prohibition States" (See page 11)
Reading by members: "From the Governor's Viewpoint" (See pages 5, 6 and 7)
Solo: "Home's Love Light"
Discussion: Participated in by members, based on "The Liquor Interests Say," each one speaking briefly on one of the liquor arguments refuted by a prohibition state (See page 9)
Reading: "The Wizard, or 'Change Him Back Again.'" (See page 13.)
Appeal for Contributions for Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund
Music: "Oh, Sound the Jubilee," page 16, "Popular Campaign Songs"

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

LET US BE READY!

While we are rejoicing over the victories for our blessed cause our hearts are heavy as we realize the possibility of our nation being plunged into war. God grant that the efforts being put forth to avert this dreaded calamity may meet with success. For many years the National W. C. T. U. has advocated, as one of its fundamental principles, peace and international arbitration, and through the department devoted to this movement has endeavored to do its part in educating the people against militarism and in favor of peace among the nations. We have been grateful for President Wilson's efforts to steer the American nation through these perilous times without involving it in the war which is destroying the European countries. But if the blow should fall the white ribbon sisterhood would desire to be ready with a program of service for our soldiers and our sailors, and whatever may be their individual views on the wisdom of the action already taken by the government in severing its relations with Germany, every patriotic white ribboner—and the term patriot and white ribboner are synonymous—would be ready to respond to a call for service to her country. In the words of our National W. C. T. U. president, "We deeply deplore war and all its hideous consequences but if the supreme test comes to us, let us meet it with sublime courage, with the optimism of the Christian, and with the self-sacrificing devotion of the patriot."

SIGNIFICANCE OF RECENT LEGISLATION

An analysis of the laws enacted and now under consideration by the law-making bodies of the prohibition states shows the growing popularity of the anti-alcohol policy. It indicates a keen realization of the need of continuing to educate the people, a desire to strengthen and perfect the laws now in force, and a determination that prohibition shall be extended to include the whole nation.

To education, through the agency of our scientific temperance instruction laws, is due the present advanced state of the prohibition movement. A continuance of its triumphal progress to the ultimate goal — national constitutional prohibition—can be insured only by enlightening the people. This year the Oregon legislature led the way in educational legislation by passing a measure providing for the annual observance of a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools. Four other states—Alabama, New Mexico, Tennessee and Kansas—have a similar temperance day in the public schools, the last three designating it as Frances E. Willard Day. Like measures have passed one house each of the Missouri and the South Dakota legislature and are pending in other states.

An epidemic of ultra-dry legislation followed the announcement of the decision of the United States Supreme Court on the Webb-Kenyon law. Measures known as "bone-dry," for the strengthening of the prohibitory laws, have been passed in Oregon, Tennessee, Arkansas, Washington and Oklahoma, and have been favorably acted upon by one house of the legislature of South Carolina. An anti-liquor advertising bill has received approval in one house of both the Arkansas and the Iowa legislatures. Bills of the same import are under consideration in a number of other states. Twelve states now have anti-liquor advertising laws.

Especially significant is the official approval by the dry states of national prohibition. During the past few weeks the legislatures of Colorado, Washington, Oregon, Montana and Utah have adopted memorials to Congress urging immediate action on the Sheppard-Gallinger-Webb-Smith bill. Similar action was taken last year by other dry states. Congress cannot fail to be stimulated to action by the progressive legislation of the states, which evidences plainly the increasing enthusiasm of the people for prohibition.

HE PRAYED BEFORE HE VOTED

To the general public reading the news of legislative victories there comes little realization of the pressure that is often brought to bear upon the law makers to ignore their conscientious scruples and cast their votes from motives of expediency rather than principle. Many a man who had supposed himself to be impregnable against attack of any kind has been subjected to severe testing when it came to a vote on a moral issue. An incident of this character is reported by the Indiana papers to have occurred in the recent legislative battle for statewide prohibition. At a Y. M. C. A. meeting immediately following the vote in one house, a certain legislator offered the following testimony to the value of prayer. He came to the legislature with no desire to vote against the worthy measure but as the time of crisis drew near the agents of the liquor interests did everything in their power to intimidate him, even definitely threatening to ruin his business if he voted against the saloon. Concern not only for his own financial future but for that of his family made him waver, but he wisely consulted his wife and together they prayed through the problem, with the result, of course, that strength was given to resist the temptation, regardless of consequences.

It may not always be possible to secure from a candidate for legislative honors a pledge on every measure that may come up for his vote while he holds office, but if the citizens of this country exercise care to endorse and elect as their representatives in legislatures and Congress men who habitually seek divine guidance, there need be no concern as to how they will vote on any really vital question.

Would that all chief executives might urge, as did Governor Milliken of Maine in his inaugural address, that "the daily devotional exercises with which each session of the legislature is opened may express the conscious dependence of the members of the legislature upon the guidance of Him who hideth the nations in the hollow of His hand."

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president of the Alaska W. C. T. U., and for many years managing editor of The Union Signal, was a recent visitor at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. She spent the last month in Washington, D. C., looking after the interests of the territorial prohibition bill and has had the satisfaction of seeing Congress give to the territory of Alaska a drastic prohibition law. Mrs. Hatcher leaves for the West in a few days, and after a short stay in Seattle, sails for Juneau, the capital of Alaska, to be present in the legislature when final action is taken on the prohibition law. She is hopeful also of securing at this session the passage of an anti-liquor advertising measure.

THE LIQUOR INTERESTS SAY—

EXPERIENCE OF PROHIBITION STATES FURNISHES THE MOST CONVINCING REFUTATION OF LIQUOR ARGUMENTS

The liquor interests say that no summer resort community that banishes liquor can succeed. For years the state of Maine has been the emphatic, spectacular refutation of this statement, for all through these years it has had an enviable reputation as one of the most popular summer recreation grounds of the nation. Colorado's history for the past year is another proof of the fallacy of this summer resort bugaboo, for the state has prospered during the past twelve months as never before.

"Prohibition does not prohibit, you know, for as much alcoholic liquor is consumed in prohibition territory as elsewhere." Have you heard that foolish fol-de-rol? Don't bother to argue over it. Let Kansas answer it by statistics furnished by state officials, showing that while the amount of money expended for liquor in the United States is $21 per capita, in the state of Kansas it is only $3.04.

The destruction of the markets of the farmer by the coming of prohibition is still one of the hackneyed sophistries of the liquorites. Believe it, do you? Strange, isn't it, that if prohibition is so inimical to the agricultural interests of a state the farmers of North Dakota in electing a governor this year should have put in power so enthusiastic an adherent of the policy as Governor Frazier evidently is.

How the liquor interests do love the dear little school children, and how they ring the changes on the need by the public school system of the license money from the legalized traffic. Yet ex-Governor Locke Craig says in North Carolina there has been an increase in school enrollment of 20.47 per cent and an actual increased daily attendance of 32 per cent since prohibition went into effect. In other words since its adoption nearly 21 more children out of every 100 of school age have enrolled in the schools and 32 more children out of every 100 of school age have actually been at school each day.

The liquor interests say that when the licensed saloon departs there follows a lawless condition of affairs that breeds crime. But the closing of the saloons in Georgia has resulted in the decrease of crime to an extent that has caused the depopulation of the state prison, and obliged the state to hire men to build its roads because of lack of prisoners to do the work.

The liquor interests say that what the people want is simply the form of prohibition without the actual enforcement of the law. The course pursued by the Tennessee legislature would seem to emphatically negative this assertion, for during recent years there have been passed drastic measures to strengthen the prohibition law, and this year a ne plus ultra measure—"bone dry" so called—passed both houses and was signed by the governor.

The liquor interests say when prohibition goes into effect in a state that there will be thousands of families in distress because their "heads" are put out of employment. In the three months that the law has been working in Virginia it has been discovered that thousands of families who knew only discomfort, who had not sufficient to eat or wear, or to keep warm, now that there are no saloons for the husbands and fathers to patronize, are living in ease and comfort.

The liquor interests say that financial disaster is certain to overtake the community or state that abolishes the liquor "industry." Oklahoma went into the Union as a prohibition state, and the first year saved $1,000,000. The anti-liquor policy is known to be one of the greatest wealth conserving agencies in a state. Oklahoma has successfully resisted all attempts of the liquorites to weaken or repeal its law, and the 1917 legislature has enacted a so-called "bone dry" measure.

The liquor interests say that the wave of prohibition sentiment is certain to recede and that the states that now have such laws are eager to rid themselves of them. Mississippi passed a prohibitory law in 1909 and instead of evincing any desire to do away with it, last year it enacted measures to make it stronger, one of them being an anti-liquor advertising law.

The liquor interests say that the foreign element in this country resent the curtailment of their personal liberty by prohibitive laws. Yet West Virginia with its large population of foreigners employed in the mines voted dry by 92,000 majority, and the leader of the federated prohibition forces said that the foreign vote alone would have carried the day.

The liquor interests say that any city that foolishly abandons the revenue from saloons will be compelled to deprive itself of all municipal advantages, but the president of the city commission of Birmingham, Alabama, insists that it has proven otherwise in that city, wherein crime has so decreased that it costs the county $20,000 a year less to take care of its prisoners than it did before prohibition went into effect.

The liquor interests say the dispensary system is one of the ideal methods of dealing with the liquor traffic, but the state of South Carolina after a trial of many years found it to be a breeder of crime and substituted therefor real prohibition, which is in every way successful and satisfactory. The best possible proof that it is liked is the passage by the legislature of an anti-liquor advertising law.

The liquor interests say the poor downtrodden people who really desire their glass of beer and jug of whisky should not have foisted upon them by fanatical legislatures prohibitory laws. Arkansas was a case in point. For a year she endured with the greatest of cheerfulness the ordeal of living without the saloons and breweries and distilleries, and then went to the polls and voted down by two to one the measure initiated by the liquor interests to repeal the prohibitory law and substitute therefor a local option measure.

The liquor interests said that the idea of giving prohibition to the cowboys of Arizona was a huge joke for they wouldn't stand such a blow to their personal liberty. The liquorites have long since ceased to laugh, however, over the fact that the state has voted for and kept one of the most drastic laws of any state in the Union.

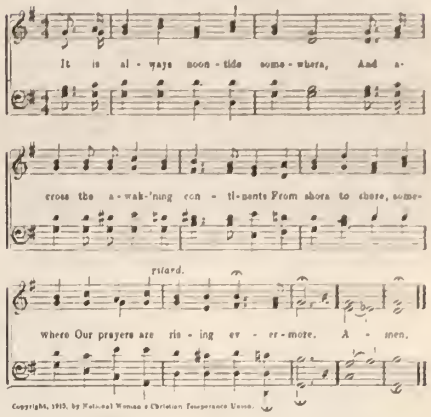
The liquor interests made the boast that they were so well entrenched in the big western cities of the country, that prohibition had no chance there. Yet the state of Washington, containing the metropolis of the west, voted out the saloons by a good majority, and Seattle which at the election of 1914 gave a majority against prohibition, at the vote on the beer amendment last fall reversed its attitude and gave a majority for prohibition. Exit John Barleycorn from the big city problem.

The liquor interests prophesied long rows of empty buildings in Oregon when John Barleycorn, by order of the state, moved out. But the mayor and the city officials and prominent residents say that not even the strongest microscope can discover any large number of buildings vacated by the saloons that are not now occupied by legitimate business enterprises.

The liquor interests said that a labor panic would follow the advent of prohibition, but reports from Colorado indicate that business in the mines and railroads and in every line of industry is better in that state than when the saloons were present to lower the efficiency of the

(Continued on Page Ten)

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



THE HOME GUARD

Who will stand for the homes of the nation,
The homes that were built by the brave?
Who will save them from rum's desolation,
And dig for the tyrant a grave?
Who will sweep from the folds of Old Glory
The clouds which are dark'ning its stars?
Who will blot from our world-honored story
The word which its pages now mars?

We are coming, the scions of heroes,
To prove that they died not in vain;
And we challenge the sin-hardened Neros,
Who play o'er the graves of the slain.
Away with the laws of protection,
Which shelter their infamous trade!
We are coming to show by our action
The strength of the vows we have made.

We're the home guard that never surrenders,
The legions of honor and truth;
We're Columbia's loyal defenders,
Who have pledged her our unspotted youth,
For God, who is marching before us,
For home, whose protectors we are,
For the glorious country that bore us,
We've enlisted for life in this war.

—Kate Lunden Sunderlin, in "Popular Campaign Songs."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

March 1—Union Signal Subscription Day—Birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens
March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow

LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

MARGARET C. MUNNS, Treasurer National W. C. T. U.

For nineteen years the unions throughout the country have honored the great organizer, Frances E. Willard, by contributing to a fund used to establish and extend the organization to which she gave the best years of her life.

It is fully as mete that that other stateswoman, Lillian M. N. Stevens, should be honored by the unions with gifts to the Campaign Fund, whose purpose is to secure state and national prohibition, for was not this great-souled woman the first to rally the forces for "National Constitutional Prohibition within a decade." Actively she led the hosts until she was called to service in a higher sphere.

The Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund is used to assist in state as well as National campaigns. Last year this fund made possible the printing of 150,000 extra copies of the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, which were distributed in campaign states.

The campaign conferences of last year, which were such a help to the states which needed the experiences and enthusiasm of those who had gone through similar campaigns, were financed by this fund, as were the trips by the National president to these and other campaign states.

The headquarters of the National W. C. T. U. at Hotel Driscoll in Washington, D. C., are maintained by this fund. This year the increasing interest in National Constitutional Prohibition has demanded the presence of the National president in Washington most of the winter. The National vice-president-at-large has also been frequently called into conference and Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost of West Virginia has been a valuable addition to the white ribbon delegation at the national capital. Splendid work has been done as the news chronicled in THE UNION SIGNAL and the daily press testifies. The Campaign Fund makes it possible to have this assistance just when it is needed.

At the last National W. C. T. U. Convention pledges were made by states and individuals amounting to $9,855. Of this, $1,538.90 has been paid and the remainder will doubtless be sent during March, the birthday month of Mrs. Stevens, when special effort is made to raise the Campaign Fund.

The finance committee of the National W. C. T. U. recommended that each union send at least one dollar to this fund, through its state treasurer, and the recommendation was unanimously adopted at the Indianapolis National Convention. Any union, however weak and small, can give this amount. If a public meeting cannot be held in the interest of National Constitutional Prohibition, an offering of one dollar could easily be taken at a regular meeting, or some member might give the dollar herself, even if she did thereby receive all the blessing. "Many mickles make a muckle" is the old Scotch proverb and if each of our twenty thousand unions responded with this small sum, it would give the cause a great impetus as activity must often be measured by financial resources.

Individual gifts are also acceptable. One of our New England white ribboners has made a generous contribution to the fund. May her tribe increase! It is a joy to know we can all do something for National Constitutional Prohibition, even if it is in the way of a little self-sacrifice. Money is not all we can give, though that is a necessary part. To many Washington, D. C., seems a long way off and Congress a body hard to reach, but by our gifts we can make things come to pass and rejoice that we have a part in bringing the glad day for which we long have prayed.

W. C. T. U. GIVEN CREDIT FOR INDIANA VICTORY

"It is generally conceded that for the Indiana victory a great share of the credit goes to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union," says the Patriot Phalanx. "It was at their National Convention, held in Indianapolis last November, that reports were heard from delegates as to how other states had won their battles for prohibition. The rejoicings over those victories fired the white ribbon hosts of Indiana with renewed zeal. They asked themselves, did not Indiana have as strong and high minded citizens as other states?"

THE LIQUOR INTERESTS SAY—

(Continued from Page Nine)

laboring men! Men who under license lived from hand to mouth now have a savings account.

The liquor interests say that while many a state is caught napping and lets the legislature "pull one over them" on the prohibition qucstion, just let the common people speak! That was the case in Idaho. She let the legislature put her under the restraint of a prohibitory law and then didn't know any better, after a year's trial of that sort of slavery, than to go and vote, by a fine majority, to remain in the same kind of blessed servitude, by voting in constitutional prohibition.

The liquor interests say when once a state has tried prohibition and gone back to freedom, she will never return. How about Iowa, which was one of the leading pioneer prohibition states and has been longing to get back to real prohibition ever since, and now has not only again secured a statutory law but is on the way to constitutional prohibition.

The liquor interests said, "Trust our liquor politicians to keep the metropolises of our country wet." Yet at the last election Detroit, the fifth city in size in the United States, was swung into the prohibition line along with the state of Michigan.

The liquor interests say the free and easy west doesn't want to be tied to the W. C. T. U. apron strings, that prohibition will never be popular among the ranchmen and miners of Montana. Yet last fall every political party in the state joined with the churches, the woman's clubs, the temperance societies and the common people to outlaw the saloon.

The liquor interests say, anyway you can't enforce prohibition when you get it. There's South Dakota that had it for a little while and got sick of it and abandoned it forever. Forever is a long word. South Dakota never abandoned the idea of recovering the good thing she had lost, as every legislature for the last nine or ten years will testify, and now that she again possesses prohibition she will keep it forever and forever, or until we have national prohibition.

The liquor interests said the politicians controlled the situation in Nebraska and they would never let anything like prohibition through, but the politicians counted not on the everyday voter who did his own thinking, consulting only his conscience as to how he should vote, and so Republican and Democrat, Progressive and Socialist, went side by side to the polls and defeated the liquorites.

The liquor interests said the question was too closely tied up with the Mormon church to permit Utah to outlaw the saloon, but the people of the state elected a non-Mormon, a prohibitionist, and a like-minded legislature and John Barleycorn was banished from the state.

The liquor interests said they needn't worry over Indiana, that "only the other day" they killed a county option bill and the state had never revived it. But a mighty wave of education and a cyclone of agitation swept over the Hoosier state, and the liquor interests found they were weighed in the balance of public opinion and found woefully wanting.

Testimony From Prohibition States

Washington

"During the past year," says the Business Chronicle of the Pacific Northwest, "the city of Seattle has gained in population; building occupancy is greater than ever; bank deposits have increased; new industries have sprung up; more tourists have visited Seattle; the amount of taxes to be raised on this year's valuation is less than a year ago; delinquent taxes have been reduced; bank clearings and transactions are greater than last year; postoffice receipts are larger; payrolls have been increased; savings institutions have opened more new accounts and received a greater aggregate of small sums from workingmen than in any other year; merchants have sold more and better goods, and collections have been vastly improved; bond dealers find a new class of investors, and have had the best year ever experienced. Mortgage money is more plentiful in supply than in demand. Seattle today is sounder and more prosperous than ever."

Colorado

"Never before in the history of Denver has there been an achievement equal to the new and remarkable record in the number and volume of savings accounts," reports the Rocky Mountain News. "In twenty-four banks the deposits aggregate $31,924,939 for 1916, as against $25,561,562 in 1915, an increase of $6,363,377, or approximately 22 per cent. The adding of 25,233 new accounts during the year, many of which were deposits of women and children, gives the figures a significant aspect. It is a striking parallel in Denver's financial year that, while her savings were unprecedentedly big, her disbursements indicate a corresponding increase. There is not a branch of civic and commercial life that has not felt the influence of prosperity. Denver has bought more automobiles, built more houses and worn better clothes than ever before."

Oregon

"One year of prohibition in Portland has demonstrated it to be of great moral and material benefit to the community," writes Mayor Albee in the Oregonian. "Among those who were either opposed to the prohibition law or who worked and voted against it are some of the most substantial business men of Portland, and today, after seeing with their own eyes what has been accomplished, they frankly admit that this city has been vastly benefited and they would not think of such a thing as a return to former conditions. The moral conditions are so remarkably changed for the better that it is difficult to realize what has come to pass. Large numbers of men and women of the underworld have left Portland, since prohibition became effective and are continuing to leave."

Alabama

"Every passing month demonstrates more clearly that the monetary loss from prohibition is being offset in so many other ways, both direct and indirect, both financially and morally, that the result is startling. This also to the wonderment of half the population," is the statement of George B. Ward, president of the city commission of Birmingham, Alabama.

Kansas

"The state tax rate in prohibition Kansas is $1.20 per $1,000—the lowest in the United States with two exceptions. Kansas is one of the few states which has no bonded indebtedness. It will readily be seen that the need of revenue from the saloon has not been felt. On the basis of property assessed for taxation, Kansas has the greatest per capita wealth in the nation—$1,629.61. Per capita consumption of liquor in the United States is $21; in Kansas it is $3.04. This represents a saving to Kansas of $30,000,000 a year, and the money goes into gainful investment. The crime bill is our greatest burden in the United States. Our greatest public debt-maker is the licensed saloon. In 1910 the rate of commitment to prison in the United States was 520. In Kansas it was only 200. This shows that the reduction of crime in Kansas makes the need of liquor revenue little felt."

These statements are vouched for by no less a personage than Governor Capper of Kansas.

Idaho

"Prohibition has had most beneficial results in our state," said E. H. Dewey, a prominent banker and rancher of Idaho. "Everyone has more money and bills are being met promptly. Rents and other values inflated by conditions that existed before prohibition have been adjusted and business is on a normal basis."

Arizona

"Prohibition has proven a great benefit to the legitimate business of Arizona. It has reduced crime, decreased court expenses, made men more efficient, increased bank deposits, turned money into legitimate business channels, made happier homes, better clothed and better fed children and, in fact, has been of untold advantage to every one except the saloon keeper and the bootlegger, who are now outlaws in Arizona," writes L. W. Coggins, manager Phoeniz Title and Trust company.

North Carolina

"North Carolina has never known in all her history a period of greater prosperity than that through which she has passed since prohibition was adopted," says ex-Governor Locke Craig. "Real estate in all the cities and larger towns has greatly enhanced in value and every line of business has prospered. I do not think that the people of this state could be induced to seriously consider returning to the license system."

Georgia

A loyal Georgian sends the following statement showing the increase in school attendance in the state: "The schools of the state all the way from the kindergartens to the universities, during the present term, are reporting the largest per cent of attendance in their history. The dormitory capacity of nearly every Georgia college is taxed to its utmost limit, and many new school buildings are in course of erection."

Arkansas

The mayor of Little Rock, Arkansas, gives the following evidence of the pronounced success of prohibition: "Merchants in ten lines of business in my city were consulted and testified that their collections are far better this year than last. The sales sheets of many retail dealers show a steady increase in the amount of business done, while the records of the chamber of commerce show a steady increase in the number of carload shipments of all kinds. The postoffice reports an increase in business of $360,543.63—which is considered phenomenal for a postoffice in a town the size of Little Rock. Bank deposits show an increase of $3,500,000; bank clearings, of over $11,000,000. Savings accounts far exceed in number those of any previous year. The referee in bankruptcy says there is no business in his line."

ABOUT READY TO ABDICATE

—Los Angeles Express

YOUR OCCUPATION?

WHY PHIL KURTZ GAVE UP THE SALOON BUSINESS

ROY KILMAN

"What is your occupation?"

The witness is a Ruthenian, unkempt, dirty. He has lived less than three years in the United States, is barely able to speak English, and still wears the clothing he had on his back when he left his native mountain town. He hesitates. The question is impatiently repeated.

"Liquor business," he finally gets out.

"Saloonkeeper!" wearily affirms the district attorney.

The alien nods grudgingly. He admits it. His hesitancy is not due to linguistic difficulty, but rather to the fact that, short a time as he has resided with us, he knows the opprobrium that attaches to the word "saloonkeeper."

But not so was it with my friend, Phil Kurtz. Phil is a saloonkeeper and says so. True, his place is styled a "buffet," but even Phil, who has the instincts of sincerity, laughs—or perhaps I should say laughed—at this niceness in terminology. Whether Phil Kurtz now laughs, in view of what recently has transpired, I am unable to say.

Kurtz and I went to school together. We "grew up" in the same small town, and when young men came to the same great city. Two other men there are to mention and then my cards will all be on the table. The first is "Con" Conover, who tended bar in the Kurtz buffet for years. "Con," in his way, is a wonder. He is handsome, keeps himself immaculately groomed, and never touches a drop of liquor. He is as decent a chap as one will find after a day's search among the delegates to a national brewery convention. My other character is C. P. Pratt. Charlie was a boy together with Phil Kurtz and me. And it is very proper that I speak of Charlie as the other "card," for that is what he has been called many years.

Between Pratt, Kurtz and myself, coming as we did from the same vicinage, though diverse as are our present occupations, there always has been a certain amount of friendship. Which is natural and as it should be. I confess to having entered, on occasion, Kurtz's well-lighted, scintillating buffet, there to discuss old times and new.

It was during one such incidental visit I made; while, in fact, I waited for a train at a nearby depot, that I first heard Phil Kurtz express himself in regard to the liquor business.

"No," he said, "I make no apologies for runnin' this dump. The liquor business is not, in itself, a bad business. Liquor will be consumed. You can't get away from it. An' so, I say, that being the case, then let us have well-conducted, orderly places where the stuff may be properly handled. What is needed is governmental supervision of the retail end of the game."

Kurtz, from a stocky, well set-up youth, had developed into a bluff, hearty, German type of individual. I listened with the respect I felt was due to the honesty of his opinion.

"My place," he went on, "closes at ten p. m. sharp. I never sell liquor to a man who is drunk. I do nothing but a cash business. The swing-doors of this place are fastened back after hours—you can look right through the bar. And I'm on the level with the police and the excise department."

All of which I did not question.

"But," I did manage to object, "you can not claim that booze ever did good to anybody, Phil."

"Sick people—" he began.

"I know," I interrupted. "We've heard all about that. I mean, that it can do no good to the men to stand and drink over your bar."

Kurtz considered this.

"And besides," I pressed, "what about 'Con'? Would you pay him $25 a week if he drank?"

I caught a grin from the bartender.

"Oh, well now," rejoined Kurtz, smilingly, "that's different. A bartender is too close to the stuff—it's too easy for him to get it."

I did not continue the argument—it seemed to lead nowhere. But a week later I suspected, for the first time, that what I had said may have bothered my friend Phil. By telephone he asked me to step into his place that night. I did so.

"You remember our talk," he began. "Well, I have some dope for you. Charlie Pratt was in last night and told me he is making five thousand dollars a year."

Kurtz's eyes rested keenly on mine.

"Well, what of it?"

"Just this," went on Kurtz with evident satisfaction. "You know Charlie was selling coal for the Monongahela Coal and Coke Company and gettin' $150 a month. That was a year ago. Then he saw an opportunity to get into the jobbing end of the business on his own hook. But it was a chance. He told me he spent two months thinkin' over the proposition and workin' up his nerve to the point where he dared give up a straight salary. He told me he wrote his resignation and carried it in his pocket that long trying to stick the thing into a mail box—and he couldn't do it. And, what's more, he didn't do it until one night he dropped in here, had a few drinks—and went straight out of my place and shot that resignation into one of Uncle Sam's mail-boxes. Result? Charlie's drawin' down four hundred dollars a month—that's the result. And he got the little old drink that furnished the 'pep' right here," concluded the saloonkeeper, with a triumphant bang of his fist. "I gave it to him myself."

"How many drinks has he had in here since?" I slipped in.

There was a laugh. It came from "Con," who, pink-featured and fresh, was polishing some of the glassware that reposed back of the bar.

"Oh, I don't know," said Kurtz, shortly. "He ain't hurtin' himself any."

"You know what the boys call him?" queried "Con."

"No," I said, watching Kurtz as he strode away in a huff.

"Charlie-Stick-to-the-Booze," said "Con."

Then it was that I began to notice Charlie Pratt more carefully. It was true that he seemed prosperous. Latterly I saw Charlie did not have so much time to stop and chat on those occasions when one meets, as one will, acquaintances on a busy city street. His tendency was to brush by. I saw him frequently about the entrance of the most expensive hotel in town. He drove an impudent-looking, low-seated automobile. These were the ear-marks of prosperity; Charlie probably was making five thousand dollars a year. And it was entirely possible, I reflected, that he bolstered up his nerve to "take the chance" by a stiff drink or two.

Just how long a time elapsed after my conversation with Kurtz I do not know; possibly two years went by. There was no doubt in my mind that both Kurtz and Pratt were making more money than I—a mere salaried man. They both rode in machines, and this, together with the fact that life was broadening out for me, as it also must have been for them, was undoubtedly the reason I saw less and less of my boyhood friends. How much they saw of each other I did not know, but I suspected that Charlie went often to the buffet. His face spoke of it, if his lips did not.

One morning after boarding my street car I opened the early paper. Something struck me in the face like a dash of cold water. It was the name, on the first page, in type an inch high, CHARLES P. PRATT. I read and grew sick. Charlie had been arrested for embezzling the funds of a lodge of which he was an officer. He was in jail, confined at the moment in the hospital ward because of a bad wound. He had tried to shoot himself.

Need I say that the dictates of friendship sent me straight to that jail? Sick as he was, Charlie recognized me, and the light that came into his eyes went to my heart.

"You're the only one who's come," he moaned. "The others—"

"Never mind, Charlie," I said. "Now tell me all about it."

It was a rambling story, entirely characteristic of the boy who had been called a "card" in the old days. At its conclusion he eyed me hopelessly.

"I was drunk," he explained, and turned his face on the pillow.

The matter of bail then took me to my erstwhile friend Phil Kurtz. It was rather early in the morning and I found "Con" alone in the buffet. Kurtz, who kept bankers' hours, had not yet come down.

"Well, 'Con,'" I began, "what do you think of it?"

"About Charlie?" he demanded.

I nodded.

"Tough," said "Con."

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE WIZARD, OR "CHANGE HIM BACK AGAIN"

AN ALLEGORY BY "KENTUCKY HOME"

On a memorable Friday evening the quiet village of Weston was in a state of unusual interest, if not positive excitement. Flaming posters announcing the appearance of the great Chinese juggler, "Ah Sin," at the town hall were the explanation. For some time these marvels of printing and color had been the admiration of the people, and the program of wonderful performances was read again and again, until many were able to repeat it from memory. If faulty in recalling other items, none forgot that, as a closing feature, the juggler proposed to change a human being into a beast.

The manner with which a rural community receives anything that comes from the great active world without makes a pleasing study. At first, cautious, full of suspicion, they regard themselves incapable of deception; but soon disarmed by artful address, they reproach themselves for lack of confidence in what seemed worthy of trust, and thus fall victims by the wholesale to the trickster's art. The discussion in the shops and stores showed this self-reliant spirit, and many declared that they would like to see the magician try his skill on them; but while all were skeptical, none were indifferent, and every one proposed to witness Ah Sin's failure to carry out his program. "I tell you this is all nonsense," said John Blake, a leading spirit among the young men of the place. "This talk of changing a man to a beast, it cannot be done." His companions were of the same mind, and a young lad asserted that he had too much will-power for Ah Sin to be able to mesmerize him.

In due time the juggler appeared upon the streets of Weston, wearing a most singular garb, but while dressed in Chinese costume, he was evidently not a native of that country. That night the hall was packed to suffocation. The conjurer explained that he was not a native of China, but that he represented Chinese and Indian art, and that with him resided a mysterious power which was not possessed by his masters in the East. He further assured them that the last feature of the program was not a trick of legerdemain, but a veritable, actual change. To their increasing wonder he then passed through the program, tossing the balls and knives, swallowing the swords, eating fire, after which he announced that he was ready to change a human being into a beast. Advancing to the edge of the stage, he said: "I come now to the last and greatest act upon the program, an act which I have given in all the great cities of Europe and America, before kings and princes and the great of the earth, and which I as willingly give before you here tonight. Now who will volunteer to become my subject?"

There was dead silence. No one felt anxious to volunteer, though none believed it could result in any harm. The silence grew oppressive. Ah Sin explained that he could not be expected to furnish a subject, for he and the person might be accused of collusion, and thus urged the people began to look about for one to go upon the stage. John Blake's name was called, but he demurred. His sister, seated near him, said, "John, you go, it won't hurt you." Still he did not move. Then a young lady sitting beside him, a black-eyed girl who was not John's sister, said, "Yes, John, you go," and singularly enough, without more ado he went forward and took his place upon the rostrum. When the cheering this act occasioned had subsided, the magician was seen waving a small wand over John's head and was heard muttering a mysterious jargon of strange words. As this proceeded, the audience noticed, with much dismay, a gradual change in the young man's face. The bright, intelligent expression seemed dying out. The fires of the intellect were fading from the eyes, and the features began to show coarseness and stupor. A deathlike hush had fallen on the audience as they looked upon this dreadful transformation. Still the wand was waving and the muttered words were heard, and each moment intelligence and manhood had given place to the dull, heavy stare of brute life. A moment more, and with horror, the people saw that John's muscles had stiffened and that his clenched hands had taken the form of hoofs. He leaned from his chair—a pause in which was heard the movement of the wand and a wierd chant of the unknown words, when suddenly he fell heavily upon the stage, changed indeed into a beast. Regardless of his victim for a moment, Ah Sin turned to the audience and said: "Ladies and gentlemen, this closes the program of the evening. On tomorrow night I give a similar entertainment at Elkton, two miles from here. Hoping I may meet there some of my Weston friends, and thanking you for your presence and patronage, I bid you good—" Before he could finish, by a common impulse, the people sprang to their feet and shouted, "Change him back again! Change him back again!" Making a sign for silence, Ah Sin replied, with a satanic, though well-bred, smile playing around his lips, "You will notice, kind friends, that is not upon the program. I have the power to change a man into a beast, but have not the power to change him back again. Good night," and he disappeared behind the scenes of the stage.

The excitement that followed beggars description. An immediate arrest brought the juggler before the authorities of the town. Ah Sin inquired if they proposed to follow the clear course of the law. Their assurance was most emphatic. He then asked the people if they would be satisfied with the course the law should take. "We are law-abiding citizens, or we would hang you at once," was their angry reply. Upon this, Ah Sin produced two papers which he handed to the court. One was the general license of the commonwealth, which, for the consideration of $500, allowed Ah Sin to give entertainments according to the published program in any part of the state. He reminded the court that "changing a man to a beast" was known to everyone to be a part of that program. The other paper was a receipt for twenty dollars paid to the town of Weston for the privilege of giving his entertainment in that place. There was but one course, but one verdict, and to that all were already committed. And while in the Blake home of that pleasant village there has remained for many years the monstrosity of a son—half beast and half man—Ah Sin, doubly protected by state license and local tax, is still abroad and plying his accursed art.

* * *

This sketch needs no interpretation. The truth is not only stranger, but even more terrible, than this fiction. The transformations of the saloon are in progress in every city, town, and hamlet. The wizard of rum has changed the intelligent glare of the eye to the dull, drunken stare, and the young man of promise has become the disgrace of the home. Shall this Ah Sin of society continue his accursed art? Shall he be allowed his liberty? Shall we hedge about his interests with license and legality? In vain hope of restriction and regulation shall we make him secure by official protection?

No! Let a Hannibal-like vow be recorded that the saloon's transforming curse shall cease. With uplifted hand, let the vow be sworn by every God-fearing man that the infamous, brutalizing, damning work of the wizard of hell shall cease.—Western Christian Advocate.

YOUR OCCUPATION?

(Continued from Page Twelve)

"Have you heard from Phil this morning?"

"Yes."

"Did he say anything about Charlie?"

"Why, I only talked with the boss over the telephone," said the bartender, evasively. "He didn't say much except he wouldn't be down today."

"Con's" eyes came to mine. We understood each other.

"Then you don't think Kurtz will go bail?" I asked, grimly.

"Con" shook his head.

"No," he said. "He wouldn't. Charlie got a message to him last night from the jail."

"And — Phil — Kurtz — turned — him down?" I asked, in astonishment.

"Say!" exclaimed the man in white, suddenly earnest. "Did you ever hear of a guy who has put a friend in bad helpin' that friend out of the hole?"

"I dont know. What do you mean?"

The bartender resumed his everlasting polishing of the glassware.

"Kurtz was here two nights ago after hours," he said, casually. "And Kurtz sold Charlie the bottle of whisky that put Charlie where he is—in jail."

The swing-doors quickly opened and a man came in hurriedly. It was Phil Kurtz. He looked drawn and haggard.

"I couldn't stand it," he groaned. "Poor Charlie!" He turned to the bartender. "Telephone Judge Hartzell and tell him I'll go bail."

As the efficient "Con" talked into the receiver, my friend Phil Kurtz extended to me a limp hand.

"And tomorrow," he added, "this business goes back to the Phoenix Brewery. I'm through."

New S. T. I. Medal

to be used as the award in
PRIZE ESSAY CONTESTS

An attractive medal at a popular price.

Gold plated, price, 50 cents
Gold filled, price, 75 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

RHEUMATISM IS SLOW POISONING

because the entire system becomes permeated with injurious acids.

To relieve rheumatism Scott's Emulsion is a double help; it is rich in blood-food; it imparts strength to the functions and supplies the very oil-food that rheumatic conditions always need.

Scott's Emulsion has helped countless thousands when other remedies failed.

No Alcohol. Refuse Substitutes.

14-48

BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Drastic Prohibition Measure Gaining Favor Among South Dakota Legislators

ANNA R. SIMMONS, President South Dakota W. C. T. U.

The legislative battle in South Dakota is now in progress. A woman suffrage amendment was passed January 26 with a large majority: 66 to 27 in the house; 36 to 12 in the senate. The amendment passed the legislature without discussion. The social event of the session thus far was a suffrage party in honor of the legislature. It was held in the ball room of the St. Charles hotel and five hundred people listened to the musical program by Kathleen Hart Bibb of Minneapolis.

The most exciting work before the legislature is the framing of the prohibition law. In view of the decision of the Supreme court on the Webb-Kenyon law, a "bone dry" law can be enforced.

The liquor men are at the capital to prevent drastic legislation if possible. The brewers of the state had their hearing before the joint committee of the house and senate January 30. Mr. Schlichting of Deadwood acted as their spokesman and urged that they be allowed to use their plants for the manufacture of beverages averaging less than two per cent of alcohol. Their attorney, Mr. Voorhees of Sioux Falls, tried to persuade the committee that it was strictly constitutional and proper for the legislature to determine and fix the exact amount of alcohol that might be sold legally. When these men were through with their pleas Mr. Holsaple stated he had some evidence he wanted to submit and he took from his grip some beverages that were made at the Schlichting brewery at Central City, near Deadwood, which looked practically alike except for one or two words on the label and the color of the caps. One was the beverage usually sold over the counter in prohibition territory and on test contained forty one-hundredths of one per cent of alcohol; the other was the beverage sold to "trusted" customers. It contained three and seven one-hundredths per cent alcohol and was to all intents and purposes an intoxicating beverage. The point raised by Mr. Holsaple was that inasmuch as these two bottles were taken in a blind pig raid at Rapid City, dry territory, it showed the brewers had so evaded the present law that it would be a useless task to try to regulate them under the new one. No action was taken by the committee but if the dry forces prevail, and we believe they will, near beer will not be allowed.

Dr. Mary Noyes Farr of Pierre and Miss Rose Bower of Rapid City are our legislative committee and they have from the beginning of the session been doing splendid work, both for the framing of the prohibition bill and for the submission of the full suffrage bill.

A bill has passed the senate for a Frances Willard Day in the public schools to be observed September 28, Miss Willard's birthday. The bill provides that the state superintendent of public instruction shall prepare the program, thus making it uniform throughout the state. This meets with the hearty approval of Superintendent Lugg, who exclaimed when he saw the bill, "Well, this is a new one on me and I shall give it my earnest support." The bill has also been highly commended by the women's societies, and we hope it may be passed and enacted into law. Judging from the warm expressions among the men on every hand we feel assured the bill will pass. Through the capable management of Dr. Mary Noyes Farr, I found on my arrival in Pierre, that a Sabbath evening's meeting had been arranged for February 4, in the Congregational church, to be addressed by Lieutenant-Governor McMaster in the interest of this bill. The bill was introduced by Senator Gunderson of Vermilion, whose wife is state president of the Federation of Woman's Clubs of South Dakota.

Another measure our committee is interested in and to which it is giving its attention is the bill to increase mothers' pensions. A more stringent anti-cigaret bill is also receiving the co-operation of white ribboners. Indeed nothing along the line of moral legislation is allowed to escape the vigilance of the W. C. T. U. committee.

What Frances E. Willard Said

Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

a collection of quotations from Miss Willard's writings and addresses, many of which had never been published until this book was issued.

Price, 75 cents

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said

Compiled by Anna Adams Gordon

a book of selections from addresses delivered before the National W. C. T. U. annual conventions, 1899-1913, together with portrait, brief biographical sketch, Mrs. Stevens' historic Proclamation, the closing paragraph from her last public address and her last message to her country.

Price, 50 cents

These books are really companion volumes and should be on every white-ribboner's desk for reference and inspiration.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois.

Billy Sunday's Telling Exhibit

Actual groceries and an actual bottle of whisky were exhibited by Billy Sunday with telling effect in one of his temperance addresses in the Boston campaign. In contrast with the deadly whisky, which cost $1.25 for the bottle and would have brought the retail dealer $3.60 if he had sold it at fifteen cents a drink, Mr. Sunday took from a suit case and a hamper and displayed to his audience one at a time:

One package of shredded wheat.
One package of Toasties.
A quart bottle of milk.

"It'll keep a baby alive 24 hours," Billy shouted as he held it up. Then, uplifting the whisky bottle, he exclaimed: "Whereas this cursed stuff contains poison enough to kill ten babies."

One package of Uneeda biscuit.
One pound of butter—"it cost 44 cents, and it's paid for."
Two loaves of bread.
A parcel from which he took and held up to view two samples, saying: "Here is something I've quit eating; they're too rich for my blood; they're eggs, and the dealer tries to make folks believe that they're worth eight cents apiece—not for me at that price."
Two pounds of beefsteak, 72 cents.
A package of Bermuda onions.
A peck of apples—"for the children."
Twenty-five cents' worth of soap.
A package of rutabaga turnips.
One pound of coffee.
A paper parcel of "sinkers."
One pound of lima beans; and one pound of prunes.

When the cheering audience had grasped the significance of the exhibit, Mr. Sunday seized a hammer and smashed the bottle of whisky on the pulpit carpet, saying:

"If I didn't do that, the liquor gang would start the story and send it up and down the land that I'd been buying booze for my own use."

Just Off The Press—Leaflets

Two Types of Families. (Mothers' Meetings Department.)
The L. T. L.—A Training School for Future Citizenship
Busy Women and the W. C. T. U. (revised.)
The Last Stage of a Great Conflict
Excerpts from Hon. Wm. J. Bryan's Address delivered before the National W. C. T. U. convention
The Church and the W. C. T. U. (revised)
Women Prisoners
Woman and the Church
Gates Passed Through

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Life Sketch of Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer

Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

America's Greatest Foe
The Paramount Issue
Prohibition States (revised)
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy (cartoon)

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

What Prohibition Will and Will Not Do Economically
The Children Who Followed My Example

Price, per hundred, 15 cents.

Yesterday and Today (a suffrage playlet)

Price, 15 cents.

Why Take The Union Signal
The Union Signal to the Rescue (a playlet)

Furnished for postage, 15 cents per 100.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Supplies for Union Signal Day Meetings

Portrait of Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens
Size 20x24
Price, unframed, $4.00
Handsomely framed, with name plate attached, price, $10.00
Size 10x12
Price, $1.50
Cabinet photograph, same style
Price, 25 cents

FOR PROGRAM

What Lillian M. N. Stevens Said, compiled by Anna Adams Gordon. Price, 50 cents.

My Mother, Gertrude Stevens Leavitt. Price, 5 cents.

Life Sketch Mrs. Stevens, Eva Kilbreth Foster. Price, 3 cents each; per hundred, $1.00.

Special Number Union Signal, February 8. Price, per hundred, $1.75.

Temperance Songster. Price, 15 cents.

Campaign Song Book. Price, 5 cents each; per dozen, 50 cents.

Paean of Victory (solo). Price, 10 cents.

Prohibition's In the Air (quartet). Price, 10 cents.

Home's Love-light (solo). Price, 30 cts.

Victory (soprano solo). Price, 15 cents.

Quiz on National Constitutional Prohibition. Price, per hundred, 35 cents.

States Rights as Applied to National Constitutional Prohibition, Hon. Richmond P. Hobson.

Co-operation of Nation with States Necessary to the Abolition of the Liquor Traffic, Hon. Morris Sheppard.

Prohibition States.
Price, per hundred, 20 cents.

Plans for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Lillian M. N. Stevens Campaign Fund.

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.

The above three leaflets furnished free.

FOR DISTRIBUTION

Leaflets written by Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens

The Trade and Some of Its Claims.
Is Prohibition In Maine a Success?
Railroads and Total Abstinence.
The Prohibition Proclamation.
Maine's Great Achievement.

Package containing 200 assorted leaflets .....35 cents
Package containing 300 assorted leaflets .....50 cents
Package containing 400 assorted leaflets .....60 cents
Package containing 500 assorted leaflets .....70 cents

The Blessed Tie Card—containing quotations from Mrs. Stevens. Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Circulation Arguments from the Liquor Journals—Union Signal Report.

The Tale of Two Papers.
She Read It; She Took It.
Reasons, Pro and Con.
Before and After Taking.
The Official Organ as a Sentiment Maker.
A Resurrected Union.
Subscription Song.
The Union Signal Makes Converts to Prohibition—Try It!
The Union Signal to the Rescue!
Why Take The Union Signal?
The above leaflets furnished for postage at the rate of 15 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

The Liquor Question a Troublesome One to Manufacturers, Says Ex-Governor Foss

Concerning the heavy liquor vote in Boston at the recent election, by which the city decided to remain in the wet column, ex-Governor Foss of Massachusetts remarked at the Dry Chicago banquet, "The friends and adherents of no-license are by no means discouraged. The effort on the part of the liquor interests was greater than ever before. They enlisted help from all over the country, for had Boston gone dry the effect upon legislation pending at the National Capital at this time would have been crushing to them. I predict that Boston never again will give such a vote for license. The high mark has been reached. The tide has begun to ebb. The liquor interests are thoroughly frightened and I know it to be a fact that holders of licenses are trying to dispose of them. Many of those interested in the business see the handwriting on the wall and have signified their intention of getting out. Six of our license cities recently turned their backs on license. There is already pending in the legislature a bill to reduce the number of saloons in Boston from 1,000 to 750."

—The New York World

"The Webb-Kenyon decision will have a profound effect upon all prohibition legislation throughout the country. The execution of the law will not only be immediate and direct, but new and more drastic legislation is bound to follow. The liquor interests have for years secretly and openly defied the laws of the several states relating to the liquor traffic and they are now to reap the whirlwind. I have been most agreeably surprised at the response which has come to a memorial to Congress in behalf of national prohibition which is being signed by leaders of opinion and of big business throughout the country. The memorial is cast in very radical terms, but it has won the support of persons of great importance in the most conservative circles and in all walks of life. Professors of Harvard, Yale, Columbia, Princeton, heads of great railroad corporations, presidents of banks and leaders in the industrial and commercial world, as well as scientists and alienists, have signed this document. We think that both Congress and the country will be astonished at the character of the signatures when they are published.

"There is no question which is so troublesome to manufacturers today as the liquor question. The progressive manufacturer has no more use for the saloon than has the church, and he proposes to wipe it out, and the employe is now taking his stand along with the employer. You need not be afraid to submit this question to the laboring people. When they have the facts they will vote right."

You Can Be So Well

Don't you know, ill health or chronic ailments, in nine out of every ten cases, are due to improper food, poor circulation, insufficient exercise, incorrect breathing, incorrect poise and restless slumber!

I give exercises that strengthen the impaired organs.

Remove those unnatural conditions and your ailments vanish.

This may surprise you, but I am doing it daily; I have done it for eighty thousand women.

No Drugs or Medicines

You follow my directions in your room.

Are you too thin or too fat?

You can weigh exactly what you should.

Medical magazines advertise my work; leading doctors approve it; their wives are my pupils.

Regain Health, Poise and Cheerful Spirits. You can. Tell me your faults in health or figure. I will help you. And I want to, so much. I will respect your confidence. Write for my Free Booklet No. 21.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Avenue, Ill.

South Dakota's Lieutenant Governor Pays Tribute to Frances E. Willard

A unique and impressive Frances E. Willard memorial service was held in South Dakota's capital city, Pierre, on February 11. The senate was present in a body. On the Friday previous the senate had unanimously passed a bill the public schools of the state, of a Frances E. Willard Day, on September 28, her birthday. The address of the afternoon was delivered by Lieutenant Governor McMaster, an eloquent young man, by virtue of his office also president of the senate. In the course of his magnificent address he said that though from childhood he had reverenced the name of Frances E. Willard, he had never realized the nobility of her character and the magnitude of her work until he had studied her biography. He considered her one of the greatest characters of all time. He gave a brief sketch of her childhood and told of her preparation for her wonderful life work. At the close of his fine address Mr. McMaster called attention to the bill providing for the observance of Miss Willard's birthday. Mr. Holsaple of the Anti-Saloon League also paid a brief tribute to this great woman. Mrs. Anna R. Simmons, president of the state W. C. T. U., emphasized the fact that the W. C. T. U. had been pushing the work of scientific temperance instruction for the past thirty years, and said that many of the recent dry victories may be attributed to this teaching.

MORE DRUNKENNESS UNDER PROHIBITION?

The Southwest Times (Va.) is authority for the plain statement that prohibition decreases drunkenness and increases legitimate business, all statements of the saloonatics to the contrary notwithstanding. The following excerpt from the Times is very pertinent:

"While it is too early yet to render an opinion on the practical working of the Mapp prohibition law in Virginia, the past three months have presented some very interesting phases of the prohibition question. For one thing, it has demonstrated that a strong state-wide prohibition law is sufficient to reduce the business of police courts to a remarkable degree. Plain drunks and drunk and disorderly cases have shown an amazing diminution in number. For another thing the old wet assertions regarding the effect of prohibition on business have been thoroughly disproved. Various enterprises have rapidly occupied the shops vacated by saloons and seem to be filling the gaps in business capably enough."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL DAY SOUVENIRS!

Is your union making preparations for the observance of UNION SIGNAL DAY? Are you planning to celebrate Mrs. Stevens' birthday by carrying out her wish for increased subscription lists for the paper she so much loved? Remember the souvenir book-mark, which will at request be forwarded free in sufficient quantities for distribution in every local union observing UNION SIGNAL Day. Order at once.

LECTURER FINDS PAPER USEFUL

"I am more than convinced from my work as a temperance lecturer during the last ten years that your paper exerts a larger influence in promoting the cause of temperance than any other publication in the country. God bless you in your great work and help us to more earnestly and prayerfully help Him in the overthrow of the world's greatest curse.

"W. G. Brandenburg,
"Y. M. C. A., Buffalo, New York."

EDUCATE THE PEOPLE!

"My age being seventy-two, health poor and weather strenuous, I cannot get out except on mild days which have been very rare this winter, but I am sending two more yearly subscriptions for THE UNION SIGNAL, making five in all, and I am hoping to complete my club. I also hope to get more campaign subscriptions. When I cannot get a yearly I try for that. I think I can get at least one more small club for the Young Crusader, possibly a club of ten. I am convinced that the one great need at present is to get the right kind of temperance literature into the hands of the reading public, especially the class that depend on secular papers for general information. There is a vast amount of ignorance on the temperance question among such. For example, some young men came here not long since and delivered an order from a hardware store. Speaking of beer one said, 'I drink beer. I know they don't put alcohol in it for I have seen them make it.' We are so familiar with the temperance truths ourselves, it seems as if all are, but we must remember that there is in circulation a constant supply of misleading or lying literature intended to deceive.

"Mrs. M. L. W. Ennis,
"Ashaway, Rhode Island."

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago,

Feeling the Pulse of the Liquor Interests

Beer as the beneficent and healthful temperance drink of the future is industriously lobbying in legislative halls, extolling its own merits at the expense of its first cousin "whisky." Bills prohibiting all alcoholic beverages that contain more than ten per cent alcohol are being introduced in a number of legislatures and the brewers are magnanimously refusing to oppose (?) them. Everybody knows that beer is an intoxicating drink, for not only has the question been finally settled in the chemical laboratory but such was the verdict of the people at the polls in the three western prohibition states which defeated the beer measures last November. It is interesting to read the emphatic statement concerning beer from the pen of Nathan A. Cole of Michigan, a year or two ago a leading representative and speaker for the liquor interests in state-wide campaigns. He says:

"Any person who has ever been a frequent visitor of saloons knows that the moderate beer drinker will drink two glasses at a sitting, giving him sixteen ounces of liquid. The average alcohol content in beer is five per cent. This gives the moderate beer drinker four-fifths of an ounce of pure alcohol poison. The moderate whisky drinker takes one glass of whisky at a sitting, and usually the amount does not exceed an ounce, but place it at an ounce and a half and he gets three-fourths of an ounce of alcohol poison. Modern science has proclaimed that alcohol in any quantity taken into the human system is poison and here is the evidence that the moderate beer drinker is taking into his system a greater per cent of that poison than is the moderate whisky drinker. The people of this nation, and, in fact, the people of the whole world, have come to the positive conclusion that all alcoholic drinks are injurious to the human system and that the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages should no longer be tolerated."

In a recent review of the comments of the liquor press, one notes that "organization" is the panacea urged by most of them. Progress remarks that it is time for every retail dealer to join the association of saloon men and for every brewer and every wholesaler to join his respective association. The North American Wine and Spirit Journal says that lack of organization is sure to result in defeat. The Brewers' Journal inquires "Is it not time for the trade in all its branches to form a board of strategy and frame a policy of united action?" and others advise in similar strain. A student of the situation after reading these suggestions, in the light of the history of the reform, remarks that the only one of the liquor organs that has the sense to see the situation as it really is is the Wholesalers' and Retailers' Review of San Francisco which warns, "If all the liquor industries of this country were consolidated under one central control for campaign purposes, we'd be voted out of business instantly." One of the elements that has led to the present disastrous condition for the liquor traffic is its effort, as an organized force, to control political affairs. The decent people have resented this domination and incidentally have become enlightened on the corruptness of the business and voted it out of existence.

"The brewers of the United States are in earnest in their desire for reform in the retail liquor trade," asserted the secretary of the Wisconsin Brewers' Association recently in a newspaper interview. "The whole question centers primarily around law enforcement. If the laws are strictly carried out then the objectionable saloons will have to go or cease to be objectionable. The brewery business is on the same basis as any other business. It is no more their duty to start prosecutions against their trade than it is for the individuals of any other business, say the wholesale grocers, to start prosecutions against the men who buy from them."

The comparison of the brewery official is an enlightening one. If a wholesale grocery house sold to the retail trade commodities that had a tendency to demoralize its customers and the whole community, necessitating extra police protection and large expenditure of money for the relief of the victims of the business conducted by the retail stores, the brewer might be justified in saying that his business is on the same basis as the grocery business. As a matter of fact, as everyone concedes, the liquor business is in a class by itself and all legitimate business resents being referred to as in that class. Its continued toleration in a civilized community has back of it no real reason, only the excuse that the revenue derived from it is needed, which any boy or girl who has learned the rudiments of arithmetic knows is foolishness.

That "the sins of the liquor traffic are the incubators of prohibition" is the way that a writer in a California paper describes the failure of the San Francisco liquor interests to take to heart the ominous significance of the big vote for prohibition at the last election. "They evidently do not realize that if immigration continues to Southern California at the rate it has been coming lately by the time another vote is taken the state can vote dry regardless of the wet vote of San Francisco." Their foolish efforts to make the public think they are reforming are worse than useless. A man who has been engaged in the liquor business in the city for years and has really tried to keep it as decent and law-abiding as possible told the newspaper man, "I am disgusted. These fellows down here have no intention of cleaning up. They are trying to fool the people again with the same old bluff."

When you hear of the reform of the saloon in other parts of the country, remember the comment of "one of the gang" who sees the thing from the inside, and knows it is only another attempt to "fool the people."

PASS THE HAT

A Unique Coin Collector Representing a Hat—A Novel Way for the Local W. C. T. U. to Raise Money

Each hat holds ten coins, nickels or dimes, which are slipped in the hat card in the little compartments toward the outer edge of the hat. The object for which the money is raised may be written or printed on the hat bands.

These little hat collectors are finished with blue or red bands and orders will be filled in equal parts of each color, making it possible to easily conduct a contest by giving the blues to one side and the reds to the other.

Price, per dozen, 25 cents; fifty, 75 cents; one hundred, $1.25; five hundred, $5.00, postpaid.

An extra charge for printing the name of the local union or the object for which the money is raised will be made and estimates upon same gladly furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MARCH 1, 1917 | No. 9

Congress Passes Anti-Liquor Advertising and Anti-Liquor Shipping Measure as Rider to Post-Office Appropriation Bill

By the passage in the Senate and the House of Representatives of an amendment to the Post Office Appropriation Bill, the use of the mails for liquor advertising purposes in violation of the laws of the states may be prohibited. The measure also prohibits, excepting for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes, the shipment of liquors, through the channels of interstate commerce, to individuals in states that now prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

Porto Rico May Have Prohibition

The Porto Rican Citizenship bill, containing a prohibition provision, has passed both houses of Congress, and now goes to President Wilson for his signature.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

CONGRESS PASSES DRASTIC MEASURE ESTABLISHING ABSOLUTE PROHIBITION IN DRY STATES AND PROHIBITING USE OF MAILS FOR ADVERTISING LIQUORS IN VIOLATION OF STATE LAWS—PORTO RICAN BILL CONTAINING A PROHIBITION PROVISION, PASSES THE SENATE—DISTRICT PROHIBITION BILL EXPECTED TO BE VOTED UPON IN HOUSE BEFORE CONGRESS ADJOURNS.

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

This has been a week of surprises. First, as mentioned last week, came the introduction in the Senate of a drastic amendment presented by Senator Reed of Missouri, who is not recognized as a temperance man. This amendment was offered as an amendment to the Jones amendment, the latter being placed as a "rider" on the Post Office Appropriation bill by Senator Jones of Seattle. The Reed amendment, after a few minor changes, was adopted by a vote of 45 to 11.

The bill then went to the House and after some delay was acted upon Wednesday, February 21. Seldom have the members of the House rallied in such numbers as they did for action on this measure. Interest ran high. After several sections of the Post Office bill had been acted upon, Senate amendment 34 was reached and read by the clerk. Every man present was in his seat. Mr. Moon of Tennessee, chairman of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, rose and, addressing the Speaker, said, "To get the amendment before the House, I move to non-concur in this amendment." Instantly Mr. Randall of California was on his feet and said, "I move to concur in Senate amendment 34." This was greeted with handclapping and other manifestations of approval. A few speeches pro and con were delivered, the time limit being fixed at ten minutes at the longest. Mr. Shirley of Kentucky introduced an amendment to defer Federal action for one year. In his remarks he stated that there are now in general and distillery bonded warehouses in America 228,687,000 gallons of spirits, in the state of Kentucky in bond 137,983,000 gallons, and Mr. Shirley asked what was to be done with this vast amount of liquor if such drastic legislation as was then proposed became a law. His amendment was overwhelmingly rejected and cries of "bone dry," "bone dry," resounded through the chamber. Several other amendments were offered, but all were almost immediately voted down. The cries of "vote," "vote" were most insistent and, after four and a half hours' deliberation, the vote was taken by roll call, resulting in 321 for the measure and 72 against. Do you wonder the House cheered the result most emphatically and that we, sitting in the gallery, said "Thank God"?

This bill establishes absolute prohibition in the states which now prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors, allowing shipment only for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes. It nullifies all state measures which permit the importation of a limited quantity of intoxicants into prohibition territory for personal use.

That portion of the bill dealing with liquor advertisements in the United States mails is virtually the Bankhead bill which passed the Senate a week or more ago and which prevents the use of the mails in violation of the laws passed by the different states.

District of Columbia Bill Still in Hands of Committee

The District of Columbia prohibition bill is still in the hands of the committee, frequent hearings being held. Those in favor of the bill have been heard and the opponents are dragging it slowly along. If once it reaches the floor of the House it will go through with a rush, but those unfavorable to the measure are evidently determined it shall not reach the floor. The intent to hinder legislation on the part of the District committee has become so noticeable that friends of the measure appealed to the Committee on Rules to discharge the District committee from further consideration of the prohibition bill. This is drastic action on the part of the Rules committee, but a decision has been reached. We now believe the District of Columbia will be included in dry territory before Congress adjourns.

The Porto Rican bill has passed the Senate. One important amendment put into the bill provides for prohibition in the island, dependent, however, if so desired, upon a referendum vote of the people. The bill, having been changed somewhat since its passage in the House, now goes to conference.

Without a roll call the House has passed a bill to continue temporarily the present government in the Danish West Indies and appropriate $25,000,000 to pay Denmark for the islands. A bill to authorize the President to set up a temporary government in the islands and providing for investigation of the needs of the people there has been favorably reported in the senate and the leaders expect to pass it within a few days.

National Home for Lepers

A national home for lepers is created under an act just signed by President Wilson. Under the new law, also, the public health service is drafting regulations to cover the treatment of lepers. It is stated that 150 cases of leprosy have already been found in the United States. The location of the home has not yet been determined upon. The act appropriates $250,000 for its establishment and, under regulations already approved by Secretary McAdoo, the health service will undertake the transportation to the leprosarium of all lepers desiring treatment, or committed to the establishment by health authorities of any state.

During the discussion in the Senate one day recently on the high cost of living, Senator Norris of Nebraska called attention to the food riots of women in New York City and Philadelphia and compared two articles, printed almost side by side, in the morning paper. One told of a famous ball given in Washington the night before, describing the gorgeous dresses and the wealth of jewels; the other pictured the hundreds of pinched-faced mothers, many with little ones in their arms, appealing to the mayor of the great city of New York for bread to keep their children from starvation. The statement made by teachers that children fainted in school for lack of food was dwelt upon. "Is it any wonder," asked the senator, "that these hungry people are crazed with the injustice of it all when they know that the remnants of the garbage buckets from the dinners of the overrich, a long list of which are printed in the morning paper, would feed the hungry, starving millions who are crying for food?" The French Revolution was recalled, the Senator exclaiming, "Hunger knows no reason." "Think of it," he ejaculated, "we are paying more in this land of plenty for potatoes than they are paying in Berlin. For my part," he continued, "I think far more of helping the suffering poor in our own country than I do of building battleships or creating an army."

Investigation of High Cost of Living Planned

The Federal Trade Commission will begin its investigation of the high cost of living as soon as Congress shall appropriate funds to conduct it. "What we want is not a mere collection of statistics," said another Senator, "but such an investigation as will fix the responsibility for the disgraceful conditions that have led to food riots and point out the remedy."

I believe the W. C. T. U. would say, "Take the $400,000 asked for to supply funds for an investigation and feed these hungry families." There are too many investigations now and too little real, practical help. Uncle Samuel certainly needs the help and counsel of Aunt Columbia in solving the complex problems confronting him.

The senate convened twice on Wednesday and the chaplain delivered two invocations, once at ten-thirty and again at eleven o'clock. This unusual circumstance came about through a parliamentary entanglement when the Senate adjourned the evening before until ten-thirty o'clock Wednesday. Because of a standing order that the regular meeting hour each day, should be eleven o'clock, unless otherwise provided for. Republican Senators called attention to the circumstance after the Vice President called the Senate to order and the morning prayer had been delivered. Senators were quick to realize the violation of the rule and the whole proceedings, even the prayer, were ruled out of order. Senators left the chamber, returning at eleven o'clock for the second start, the chaplain again opening the session with prayer.

W. C. T. U. Awards Prizes For Prohibition Postcard Essays

Children of the city who had written the best arguments as to why the liquor traffic should be abandoned in the District of Columbia were one night this week, presented with prizes in money awarded by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The exercises were held in the McKendree M. E. church. The contest was conducted in January and was open to all children of the city, the only requirement being that the essays should be contained on a postcard. Miss Anna A. Gordon presided at the meeting and presented the prizes to the girls. She said that every one in the District owed a great debt of gratitude to Mrs. Nellie H. Bradley for her efforts for prohibition in the District and particularly for the organization of the postcard contest. The prizes were presented to the boys by Mr. Washington Topham, one of the judges, who said he found the task of reading the answers a very pleasant one. A large silk American flag was awarded to the school in the District which sent in the most creditable answers and this proved to be the Arthur School.

Miss Anna A. Gordon, after a stay of nearly six weeks at National W. C. T. U. headquarters at Washington, left this evening for Evanston. Every waking moment of her time has been filled with hard work. Her presence has been an inspiration and her wise counsel of daily benefit.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, February 23, 1917

PROHIBITION CONTINUES ITS TRIUMPHANT ADVANCE

NORTH DAKOTA, SOUTH DAKOTA, KANSAS, SOUTH CAROLINA, UTAH AND DELAWARE PASS ANTI-LIQUOR MEASURES

The majority of the state legislatures now in session are distinguishing themselves by passing measures to extinguish as far as is possible the traffic in intoxicating liquors within their boundaries.

NORTH DAKOTA PASSES TEMPERANCE DAY MEASURE

A telegram received from the president of the North Dakota W. C. T. U., Mrs. Elizabeth P. Anderson, informs us: "Measure providing for Temperance Day in the public schools of North Dakota has been passed by both houses of the legislature and signed by Governor Frazier." This is the sixth state to provide officially for a Temperance Day in the schools.

SOUTH DAKOTA ENACTS "BONE DRY" LAW

A bill putting into effect the prohibitory amendment adopted at the last election has passed both houses of the South Dakota legislature, and becomes effective July 1 of this year. As Governor Norbeck signed this so-called "bone-dry" bill, a company of prohibitionists sang "How Dry I Am."

KANSAS DRASTIC LAW TO TAKE EFFECT IMMEDIATELY

Kansas' "bone-dry" law passed the upper house of the legislature by a vote of 37 to 1, and having already passed the lower house, was signed without delay by Governor Capper and will become a law upon its publication in the official state paper. The bill makes it unlawful for any person, except ordained ministers and priests, to have in his possession for any reason, personal or otherwise, any intoxicating liquor, under penalty of fine or imprisonment. It also makes it unlawful for any common carrier or person to bring or hire brought into the state, even for personal use, intoxicating liquor of any description.

UTAH TO VOTE ON CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

Not content with the drastic statutory law given by the legislature, a measure has been passed providing for a popular vote at the next general election upon a constitutional amendment prohibiting the sale and manufacturre of alcoholic beverages. This measure has passed both houses and the governor's signature to it is assured.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Oregon
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Alabama	Michigan
Arizona	Montana
Washington	Alaska
Indiana	Utah

STATES TO VOTE ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Wyoming		New Mexico
Iowa	Utah	Minnesota

INDIANA LEGISLATURE KILLS HOPE OF LIQUOR DEALERS

The last hope of "the trade" for the manufacture of alcoholic beverages in the Hoosier state after the prohibitory law goes into effect April 2, 1918, was killed on February 22, when the senate voted down the Hemphill bill which would have given to the brewers and distillers the right to manufacture beer and whisky for shipment into wet territory.

SOUTH CAROLINA PASSES NEW ANTI-LIQUOR BILL

The so-called "'quart a month" bill was passed by both houses of the South Carolina legislature on February 20, and after being signed by Governor Manning becomes effective sixty days therefrom. It permits the importation of one quart a month of whisky for medical purposes, or one gallon of wine per month for sacramental purposes.

DELAWARE BARS LIQUOR FROM DRY COUNTIES

An anti-liquor shipping bill which prohibits the shipment of intoxicating liquors from wet to dry territory in the state passed both houses of the legislature and now goes to the governor, who undoubtedly will sign it.

IOWA'S LEGISLATURE WOULD MAKE CARRIERS LIABLE

By a vote of 31 to 18 the Iowa senate passed the Whitmore "bone dry" bill, making the place of delivery of intoxicating liquor the place of sale. The bill, if passed by the house, would permit prosecution of railroads or other common carriers bringing liquor into the state.

"VOTES FOR WOMEN" SCORES VICTORIES

INDIANA, OHIO, MAINE, NEW YORK, MINNESOTA AND ARKANSAS LEGISLATURES ENACT WOMAN SUFFRAGE MEASURES

INDIANA GIVES WOMEN FRANCHISE

Both houses of the Indiana legislature have passed a bill giving the women of the state the right to vote for Presidential electors and practically all state officials, except governor and secretary of state. Mrs. Culla J. Vayhinger, president of the Indiana W. C. T. U., in a telegram to the National W. C. T. U. president, says: "Suffrage bill is ready for governor's signature. The Indiana legislature this year goes down in history as giving us prohibition, a constitutional convention, and the ballot for women. The National W. C. T. U. helped us to win these victories."

SUBMISSION OF WOMAN SUFFRAGE QUESTION IN MAINE

After a fight of over thirty years, the advocates of woman suffrage in the state of Maine secured the passage by the legislature of a measure providing for the submission of a suffrage amendment to popular vote. The senate, acting in concurrence with the house, passed unanimously a resolution providing for a special election September 10, 1917, to act on the adoption of a constitutional amendment. Governor Milliken has announced that he will sign the bill. Mrs. Althea G. Quimby, president of the Maine W. C. T. U., telegraphed to THE UNION SIGNAL: "Result of the years of wise and gentle leadership of Lillian M. N. Stevens borne forward by steadfast women finds expression in action of the legislature of Maine by two-thirds vote referring woman suffrage amendment to people. Final passage and signature of governor assured. We believe Maine will lead the East."

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:

ILLINOIS NORTH DAKOTA

States Which Will Vote

MAINE SOUTH DAKOTA

NEW YORK LEGISLATURE PASSES SUFFRAGE BILL

Without debate the New York state legislature passed by a vote of 124 to 10 the woman suffrage bill, providing for a resubmission of the amendment to the voters next fall.

MINNESOTA SOLONS FAVOR POPULAR VOTE ON SUFFRAGE

The lower house of the Minnesota legislature has passed the Peterson bill, granting submission of a woman suffrage amendment to the people at the November, 1918, election.

OHIO GOVERNOR SIGNS "VOTES FOR WOMEN" BILL

The pen with which Governor Cox of Ohio signed the suffrage bill giving Presidential suffrage to the women of the state was given to Mr. Reynolds, the author of the measure, who will present it to his fourteen-year-old daughter.

ARKANSAS WOMEN MAY HAVE MUNICIPAL SUFFRAGE

A bill to permit women to vote in primary elections has been passed by the lower house of the Arkansas legislature. It now goes to the senate.

LO, THE POOR FARMER!

CHARLES STELZLE, Field Secretary of the Federal Council of Churches

The liquor men are paying a great deal of attention to the farmer. They are asking, "What will become of the farmer when the brewers and distillers no longer buy his grain, and grapes, his apples and his cherries?" One would think that nobody likes grapes, apples and cherries unless they come in the form of booze. The fact is that the liquor interests purchase annually only about an average of ten dollars' worth of produce from each farmer in the United States. If each person in the United States were to increase his purchasing power by so much as a two-cent postage stamp per week, the people of this country would buy everything that the farmers now sell to the liquor men. Furthermore, with the increasing difficulty of the farmers to raise enough grain to feed the people of this country there ought not to be much danger of the farmer having his produce held up because nobody wants to buy it.

THE SECRET OF LAW ENFORCEMENT

Extracts from Address by Rev. G. W. Gasque, D. D.

We have heard it argued everywhere, and by men who should have been taught better, that law enforcement depends primarily upon public sentiment. I wish to correct this fallacy. Many times I have made the statement, which has never been proven in error, and which only a few times has been attacked always unsuccessfully: Any law whether good or bad may be enforced almost, if not entirely, to the letter, provided the officers of the law are men who are both honest and efficient, and if the law remains unenforced it is a confession on the part of the officials that they are either dishonest or incapable, or both.

By honest officials I mean men who will not be influenced by sentiment or money one way or the other, men who know their duty and who will make an honest effort to do what they are elected to do, and what they swore they would do when they were inducted into office. By efficient officials I mean men who are intelligent and sufficient in numbers to make effective the law. But please bear in mind that intelligence has far more to do with efficiency than numbers.

It is a grave mistake for any community to elect to office the town loafers as is so often done. If they are not law breakers themselves they can be easily bought or influenced by the criminal element. Often it is hard to get dependable men to take an office—especially is this true in the small towns—because men argue that by so doing they will make enemies and lose business or hurt their profession, but the facts have proven to the contrary. To lose the patronage of a law breaker is not usually a very great loss as his influence seldom reaches outside his own circle.

To make my proposition more intelligible and convincing I will relate a few observations and experiences:

I was born and reared in the mountain section of northern Alabama. During my early childhood moonshining was the rule rather than the exception. When I was about ten or twelve years of age I remember that all our neighbors locked their corn cribs and smoke houses and chicken houses against these men. For fear of personal injury or loss of property by fire they did not dare report the stillers or interfere in any way with their business. One man, however, came to the conclusion that six men should not be allowed to control an entire community. He hunted stills but not under the pretext of searching out his cow or sheep. At night he spied out the offenders, gathered convicting evidence, making for himself a few enemies and many friends —was present whenever an arrest was made and was the principal witness at the court trials. In less than a year, two of the ring leaders were in the penitentiary and the other four left the state. Since that time moonshining has been unknown in those parts. One man did it. He was not an officer of the law. He did not wait for public sentiment. All the help he asked for was one revenue officer and two or three deputies who would go with him.

In a Louisiana town of fifteen thousand population, where I was pastor some years ago, gambling was carried on almost openly in defiance of the local and state laws. There was plenty of public sentiment against gambling. Everybody said that something should be done. And finally something was done. The mayor became interested. After about six months, one afternoon the paper came out with the statement that the mayor had won, that the gamblers had been forced to leave town, and that the law thereafter would be enforced. A certain young man who had recently joined the church was in my study when the paper was delivered. I read the news. His reply was that there was as much gambling going on then as ever before though not quite as boldly as formerly. He knew because he had frequented the gambling places before his conversion. That night we visited six gambling places where games were in progress. The young man told me there were other places but this was enough to prove the truthfulness of his statement. On Monday morning I related to the editor just what I had seen, and together we called on the mayor to inform him of what was going on. A raid was arranged for the following Saturday night. When it was made everything was found to be in darkness, and the furniture in the rooms was topsy-turvy and covered with dust. It looked as though the place had not been in use for months. Subsequent raids were made with the same result. But gambling continued as before. A little while later we learned, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that the mayor himself kept the gamblers wise as to proposed raids, etc., and while the evidence was not sufficient to convict him, we were able to use it in defeating his re-election. In this case dishonesty on the part of the mayor hindered law enforcement.

In a New England city of a hundred thousand population, shortly after prohibition went into effect the law was openly violated. Conditions went from bad to worse. The city officials said that it was impossible to enforce the law. A leading pastor in the city said that it could be done. He was offered the job without any thought whatever that he would accept it, but he did. He selected his own aids, a high priced detective was employed, and at the end of one month eighty-five persons were arrested in one evening, of whom eighty-three were convicted. The lid went on tight. The law was rigidly enforced for the five following months, at the end of which time the reins of government were returned to the regular officials but with the understanding that prohibition must be made to prohibit.

In a small middle-west town the Sunday closing law was being ignored. The grocers and drygoods merchants kept their stores open until after twelve o'clock every Sunday to accommodate country trade. Some of the merchants even reached the point of advertising special sales for Sunday. One Sunday evening I preached on Sunday observance and made mention of the fact that the law should be enforced. At the close of the discourse the mayor, who was present, came to me and assured me that he was glad that I had said what I had, that such sermons would help in creating a public sentiment which would enable him to do something. The next Sunday evening I preached on law enforcement and publicly asked the mayor and his council to close the stores and otherwise enforce the laws, or to resign and let somebody else be elected who would see that it was done. That week the merchants were simply asked not to open their stores again on Sunday, and they were never opened thereafter on that day.

With honesty and ordinary intelligence on the part of officers the law can be enforced almost, if not entirely, to the letter.

Toronto Tests Prohibition and Finds It Works Well

"Business conditions have improved enormously. Drunkenness has almost disappeared. What is very surprising the police records show that prohibition works almost as well in Toronto as it does in small villages." These are a few of the statements made by John W. Bengough of Toronto, to a representative of the Christian Science Monitor in Boston.

"The Toronto man used to say," Mr. Bengough explained, "that prohibition would not work in a city of that size. The Toronto man made the same mistake that is made today by the Boston man in opposing no-license. But he has found that prohibition works exceedingly well.

"It is the intention of the temperance people in Canada to make a desperate effort before parliament meets again to bring enough pressure to bear so that the federal government will be willing to stop the manufacture of liquor in Canada as a war measure. Under the provincial prohibition which we now have manufacture of liquor is not forbidden, consequently the province of Quebec has become the rendezvous of the liquor interests. We have not much hope that parliament will accede, but public opinion for the stopping of the manufacture is so strong that there is no doubt the measure would be carried by a big majority if brought before the people."

New York Introduces State-Wide Bill

There has been introduced in the legislature of New York a state-wide prohibition measure proposed by the Allied Prohibition Forces, composed of the W. C. T. U., Anti-Saloon League, Prohibition party and twenty other organizations. It forbids "the sale, manufacture, transportation, and exportation of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes"; provides that the legislature shall be empowered and directed to enact the proper legislation to enforce it; and provides for its submission to the voters for adoption. Such an amendment must pass two successive legislatures, then be acted upon by the voters at large, and adopted by majority vote, before becoming effective.

INSULTING THE INTELLIGENCE OF THE READING PUBLIC

W. ESTERN

In its issue of December 30, Business Chronicle of Seattle undertook to put that city right in the eyes of the rest of the country by telling the exact truth about the condition of local business affairs. "Seattle has been injured beyond measure," said Business Chronicle, "by false reports of business conditions resulting from the dry law. . . .People have been led to believe that business here is utterly prostrated, real estate unsalable, houses, stores and office buildings empty, and that ruin has overtaken all who had interests here. This damage has been accomplished by means of page advertisements of the liquor interests in dailies of the large cities, and fake interviews originally appearing in some newspaper of prominence, and afterward reproduced in newspapers in the cities and small towns of every state in the union."

In order to refute the mass of falsehoods thus sent broadcast, Business Chronicle had only to publish in detail the status of business in Seattle after ten months of prohibition enforced. "Eight thousand copies of the issue containing this refutation were sent back East by Seattle business men to people with whom they transact business or whom they know personally."

As a result Business Chronicle is hearing from many of these people and now states that "the good that is being accomplished in changed opinion, is set forth in the letters being received by local business houses and the constructive policy now appearing in newspapers in all parts of the United States."

To the enemies of prohibition, ever active for the perpetuation of their unholy traffic, it may seem legitimate and commendable to unjustly pillory a great city for the ridicule and scorn of the world. However, a refuge of lies is never a safe hiding place and falsehood is a tangled web that oft causes its author's undoing.

It was the slanderous attacks of the enemies of prohibition that impelled Business Chronicle to publish the truth in detail and in the spirit of fair play many journals that otherwise would have given the matter little notice are now aiding in exploiting far and wide the story of Seattle's splendid progress under prohibition.

Under the caption, "Slandering a City," Commerce and Finance, the leading economic journal of the country, says:

"If one spreads calumnies about an individual the injured person has recourse to the law courts. But if he slanders the fair name of a city what remedy is there? The city merely must stand on its dignity and allow the culprit to go his way unpunished. Nothing can be done about it.

"Seattle is the latest victim in this connection and unwittingly this paper helped circulate the libel. Some little time ago there was reprinted in Commerce and Finance, a supposed interview with a George L. Symonds of Seattle. It originally appeared in the Butte (Mont.) Miner, and purported to show the effects of the dry law upon business conditions in that progressive city on the Pacific Coast. He alleged there was an alarming percentage of vacancies in the business districts among the finest office buildings and that all save two of these were half empty.

—Owosso (Mich.) Argus

"Seattle people, when they saw the interview, rose in their wrath. Business Chronicle challenges the authenticity of the interview and proves its assertions untrue. The name 'George L. Symonds' does not appear in the Seattle city directory and the newspapers do not know him. Naturally the Seattleites feel aggrieved.

"Publicity of this sort, spread broadcast by the liquor interests, will not add flavor to their cause. It is apt to react as something of a boomerang when the real facts are known. Aside from falling of its purpose to stem the tide of prohibition it is unfair and an insult to the intelligence of the reading public."

In January, 1918, Detroit will take the place of Seattle as the largest dry American city. The Detroit Journal, in a display head news story told of Seattle's case and thus again called attention to the truth. We quote a paragraph from the Journal:

"Indicating, in a measure, what Detroit may expect to encounter when the state becomes dry in 1918, Business Chronicle, published in the interest of commerce and finance in Seattle, Wash., states that prohibition in that city, in effect throughout 1916, produced many benefits in spite of the attempt to hold the city up as a 'horrible example.'"

Other papers are correcting misstatements formerly unwittingly made and thus the liquorites are shown up in the unenviable role of deliberate falsifiers and their attempt to injure the cause of prohibition becomes a weapon in the hands of its friends to further its progress.

STORY OF THE PROHIBITION VICTORY IN UTAH

MRS. C. A. WALKER, President Utah W. C. T. U.

The Utah prohibition bill, prepared by the legislative committee, contained a provision for a special commissioner whose duty it should be to enforce the law. Objection to this commissioner feature was made by Governor Bamberger, as reflecting on the elective officers, and from the standpoint of economy. The bill as originally presented passed the house with but one dissenting vote. We feel it is worthy of note that at the gathering of Progressive party leaders in this city at the annual Lincoln day meeting the man who voted against the bill received a stinging rebuke which was included in the declaration of principles, with a notice that the prohibition bill is only the beginning of the pledges to be redeemed. During the framing of this bill the representative from Summit county tried hard to have the bill amended to read, "to allow two per cent alcohol in beverages manufactured by the brewers," but this was not agreed to. In the senate, however, the bill was amended slightly by eliminating the clause providing for the special commissioner.

This amendment was finally agreed to by the author of the bill and by the Betterment League. It was passed by the house as amended by the senate and went to the governor for his signature. After careful consideration of the bill the governor returned it to the house requesting a slight change in the phraseology regarding the manufacture of beverages having less than one per cent of alcohol, thinking that under the Webb-Kenyon law manufacturers outside the state could ship in beverages containing less than one per cent, but that the bill as it read would not allow beverages of that description to be manufactured in the state, which he considered would be a discrimination against Utah manufacturers.

This change the house did not agree to and the bill was returned to the governor, who immediately signed it in the presence of his secretary only. Arrangements had been made by the W. C. T. U., the Betterment League, the Anti-Saloon League and the newspapers for a photograph to be taken of the signing of the bill, but the governor felt that there had already been too much delay as it had been his wish that the prohibition bill be the first bill passed by the legislature.

Much credit is due a large number of individuals, who gave of their time and money to help educate the people and have this bill passed. Among them are Mr. George Startup of Provo, Rev. George E. Davies, Senator Frank Evans, Heber Grant and Earl Glade. While the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Utah is not strong in numbers we feel that in the faithful work done for thirty years we have had a part in creating public sentiment and instilling principles which helped in passing this bill. We shall not quarrel with any one over credit for making the state dry and rejoice that we have one of the best prohibition bills passed by any legislature.

Governor Bamberger has already written personally to the sheriff of each county in the state asking his co-operation in securing strict enforcement of the prohibition law, which becomes effective August 1. In each instance the governor discussed phases of the liquor question peculiar to the county in which the sheriff addressed was located. In the letters to sheriffs of counties along the state borders he called particular attention to the fact that the duties in such localities would be arduous, but that no excuse could be offered to the people for failure to carry out the provisions of the law.

THE WORLD MOUNTING THE WATER WAGON

Liquor Responsible For Crime, Says Wife of Premier Lloyd George

"If we are to prosper after the war, liquor must go," declares Mrs. Lloyd George, wife of the premier of Great Britain, in a recent issue of London Answers. "The question of how to deal with the drink trouble of the nation has, since the war began, become more and more important and insistent."

"For many years I have taken the deepest interest in temperance matters and have worked with many noted societies for the suppression of excessive drinking and of illicit trade in drink," writes Mrs. Lloyd George, who has long been an enthusiastic white ribboner. "When I lived in Wales some of us young women formed a society, gave concerts and promoted all sorts of schemes to raise sums of money to build a village library and clubroom, where men and women might find new interests and new friends, rather than have to look for these in the public houses. With kind assistance, we managed to get this building, and extremely excellent results were the outcome of that effort. Now most other villages throughout the kingdom are like that one was in Wales. At night there is nowhere to go but to the public house, if a man or woman wants a change, friendly converse, comfort and a little pleasant diversion outside the home.

"I remember a striking little anecdote told me by a friend of mine who hails from Yorkshire. He related how on one occasion he was speaking to a collier's wife, who went from home each Saturday to the pit where her 'man' worked to try to persuade him to bring home his wages intact and to save him from getting too much drink en route. Yet the poor woman allowed that she seldom altogether succeeded. Asked how it was, she replied, with a weary smile:

"'Aw, yer see, lad, Ah might get Bill all reight past t' White Hoss, but, don't yer see, lad, theer's t' King's Heead, an' t' Brahn Coo, an' t' Blue Pig—seven other White Hosses, so to speyke—afore Bill gets dahn that hawf mile to ahr haase?'

"I agree with that dear old Yorkshire wife that it is an almost insuperable task for a man who has a desire for drink to resist the tremendous temptation all about him. It makes me sad when I reflect on the ravages drink causes in the homes of our land, when I remember how many babies are slain every year from one cause—liquor drinking. How often do we read of inquests on deaths from overlaying, neglect, starvation, entirely due to the fact that father or mother, or even both, have been drinkers.

Liquor Responsible for Crime

"Look at what our magistrates and judges say time after time. Crime, they affirm, would be lessened fifty per cent were the drink trouble eliminated. Isn't it worth while our doing everything possible, making every effort in our power to cope with this gigantic evil and to reform the poor creatures who are its slaves?

"Are we making progress? I think we are, though, perhaps, not as fast as some of us could desire. The recent acts of Parliament have done great things, despite what some people say.

"Parliament can do a great deal toward helping forward the solution of this problem. It has done much since the war began, but could do very much more. It will, later on, when the war is over, if not before, have to tackle the thing thoroughly.

Problem Must Be Met

"If we are to prosper as we ought to do the thing must be done. And I trust all women will be ready and resolved to do their part.

"I cannot conceive of anything which would more insure the glory and triumph of our nation in commerce, in art, in literature, in a high standard of life than the conquest of England's greatest and most terrible enemy—drink. We shall have a unique opportunity—the chance of a lifetime—when this war is over and our land has to begin a new life."

The Prohibition War in France

JANE A. STEWART

Smoke in dense volumes rises over the battlefields where soldiers are fighting for native land in the war zone of France. But no smoke and flames have meant more for the saving of France than that from the hundreds of tons of burning wormwood leaves destroyed at Pontarlier, the home of absinthe, by order of the French government, since the inauguration of the legislation suppressing the manufacture of absinthe.

And no battle waged on French soil today is more fraught with consequences for the nation than that which is on between the opponents of the drink evil and the liquor interests of France. The former are determined to make permanent the valuable provisional laws already enacted. Further anti-alcohol legislation is their eager call to which response has come in the federal decree of December 22, 1916, prohibiting the importation into France and Algeria of alcohol, brandies and other alcoholic liquors and liqueurs of foreign origin or shipment, except wine and beer. The decree also excepts alcohol purchased for the account of the French government, that for use by manufacturers of varnish, perfumery and other chemical and pharmaceutical products, and that which is to be used for other purposes and later re-exported.

The intention of the French government to prohibit the consumption of alcohol in France is based upon the demands of military efficiency which denies that alcohol is an aid to the fighting man but declares that the drinker lacks endurance and is less able to bear up under the severe strain of army life.

The temperance campaigners in France have seized the opportunity provided by the war emergency. Through education and object lessons they are ably holding up the government's hands. One of their practical endeavors is the splendid new movement for the establishment of soldiers' clubs, Foyer du Soldat, on the main street of every town, to take the place of the saloon. In these pleasant meeting places, coffee, tea, sandwiches and "safe" drinks are served at a nominal price. Some of the foyers have libraries, reading rooms and games.

This movement and the recent decree have stirred great opposition in the liquor dealers' camp. Large wine and spirit dealers are using their commercial and political influence, just as is done in the United States, to fight the progress of prohibition. Syndicates of wholesale liquor merchants, like that of Bordeaux, send deputations to Paris to remonstrate with Premier Briand, and the protest signed by a Paris syndicate declares that the proposed measure will have a serious effect upon agriculture and business, and demands substantial indemnities.

There is a familiar sound to the complaints of the French liquor traffic. The foyers are denounced as "iniquitous competition designed to ruin our lawful business," and the saloon is held up as the working man's club. Anti-saloon legislation is "unrepublican" in their view. Saloons pay a large portion of the revenue of the state and the communes; it is the saloons which "raise the value of properties by the high rents paid," which "facilitate the sale of agricultural products," and which "give animation and life to our little cities!"

To these fallacious shots, the temperance forces reply in the words of ex-Premier Bourgeois, "This scourge of drink hides itself behind tuberculosis, in madness, in crime, and is at the bottom of all our evils, all our degeneracies."

In the last half century the consumption of alcohol has cost France much more in men and money than the present war, they declare. They are forming in scientific, educational, industrial, women's and children's battalions, a great host, determined that the saloon shall be wiped out of France. It is a great patriotic movement that is firing the French people to fight the drink evil, determined that their nation shall no longer be decimated by the insidious inroads of King Alcohol. It is a battle they are bound to win. And it is equally certain that a national prohibition measure, adopted for a temporary period, will finally find its permanent foundation in the stable convictions of an intelligent and aroused people.

Absence of Alcoholic Insanity in Russia

A Russian medical journal, Russkiy Vrach published at Petrograd, in a recent article on the diseased mental conditions resulting from the war, claims that in the present campaign, the amount of psychoses (mental disturbances) is comparatively small, about one per thousand, while in previous wars the rate was two or three per thousand. "The main cause of the decreased rate is the total absence of alcoholism," says the Russian paper. "In the present campaign there has not occurred a single case of alcoholic insanity."

"Sunday closing of saloons in New Orleans means approximately $40,000 in the pockets of various citizens who have been in the habit of resting their feet against the rail in the past, according to careful and conservative estimators," says the New Orleans Item. "A big proportion of this amount is diverted to other businesses. Observing people tell us this money is going for something substantial now. They figure if saloons are kept closed every Sunday for a year it will mean about $2,500,000 turned into other channels."

PUSHING PROHIBITION PRINCIPLES IN SOUTH AMERICA

HELEN M. STEWART, Correspondent

After the almost phenomenal success of temperance work in our sister republic of Uruguay, under the direction of Miss Hardynia K. Norville, World's W. C. T. U. representative in South America, it is only fitting that the larger republic of Argentina should follow in like manner.

There are some who would like to say that the natives of Argentina are not in need of a temperance crusade, but a crusade for all that the World's W. C. T. U. stands for is badly needed in a country where the position of women legally and in practice is on a low moral and legal level, and no organization has such a far reaching and uplifting standard in ideal and practical methods as has the World's W. C. T. U.

Tragedy stalks in the highest as well as the lowest walks of life in this seemingly care-free community and who shall deny that alcohol is frequently the spur to desperate deeds, and the source of oblivion afterwards.

Our devoted Miss Norville possesses that harmless wisdom that wins its way in spite of obstacles. A prominent citizen told me that it would be better to wait three months for a new incoming ministry of the government and that all could then be organized on a firm initiative, but Miss Norville waited for no such propitious moment. Taking advantage of the openings at hand, she began her work in the English Methodist School at Lomas, one of the suburbs of Buenos Aires, for the children of English speaking people, born in the country. The sixty-nine pupils and all the teaching staff of this school were soon organized into a Loyal Temperance Legion of working members.

At the same time, La Plata, the new capital city of the provinces of Argentina, was captured by storm. Señor de Calvo, professor of the University, undertook the important post of president of the Young People's Society, promising to organize the department among his six hundred students. In addition to this, other departments were organized among the combined Protestant churches, the Methodist, Baptist, Adventist and Salvation Army meeting under a common banner for the cause of temperance. A good program was given by the children of the different churches, and much interest was aroused. At the same time the Museo Escolar de Sarmiento of Buenos Aires was opened to Miss Norville by the gifted director, Señor Berutti, who offered her every facility in his power—and they were many—to further her work among the teachers and pupils of the public schools of the capital.

Buenos Aires with its million and a half inhabitants in itself enjoys all the privileges of a province, and to organize the four hundred schools of this great city on a given subject, such as temperance, is no small task. Conferences, lectures and committees followed hard on one another, the only difficulty being to fill all the engagements open at once.

The minister of public education, Señor Salinas, gave Miss Norville an open letter authorizing her work in every school throughout the republic, and armed with this she stayed for nobody, but went ahead. But she thinks the real object of the organization was first realized in the national schools of Villa Ballester, the first group of schools to be organized and give a program in their own district.

Miss Norville gave two lectures in this city with illustrative slides on the scientific demonstration of the evils of alcohol and by following up the interest aroused it was soon possible to appoint a committee of the four head teachers, with the leading doctor's wife, Señora Semiramis de Marengo, as honorary president. This dear lady lent every possible aid to the organizing secretary, and by a series of weekly visits, extending over three months, it was possible to bring the interest in the schools to a high pitch of anticipation.

The dark-eyed children of this southern land are born actors, and the various items taken from the Temperance Educator, published in Mexico, were learned with enthusiasm. After the usual difficulties of obtaining a hall in a small suburb, the "Biografo" or moving picture theater, was rented under the kindly auspices of the good Doctor Marengo, invitations and programs sent out, and the first silver medal contest took place in the national schools of the republic of Argentina. The four impartial judges, two professors of distinction from Buenos Aires and two lady principals from the schools of Vicente Lopez, found it hard to award the prize, so well did all the contestants recite.

The little gaucho (cow-boy) in his native dress was a favorite, also "Guerra al Alcohol" given by a boy dressed in the blue uniform of a soldier of his country, who gave his piece the rendering of a true patriot. But our special applause was given to a little scene evolved out of our simple song, "No, Sir." A group consisting of father, mother and seven children developed this little song into a charming play. The larger girl, dressed as the father, offered the tempting cup to first, the elder boy, and then the girl of his family, while the anxious little mother handled her sewing nervously and shook a trembling finger behind the father's back. Her appeal was followed by her disappearance with all the children and then the father's soliloquy, and his determination to cast the tempting cup aside forever, brought them all dancing back again to join once more in the chorus, after which they all dropped on their knees and gave thanks to heaven for this crowning mercy.

The gentlemen present were impressed by this scene and the chief of police of the district exclaimed to his friend, "Truly this alcohol is a terrible thing!" The winner of the silver medal, number four, was a fairy of eight years of age, named Delfina Iglesias Meissonave, but with winning tact Miss Norville presented each of the other children with a white ribbon brooch and flowers, but the glory and honor rested with the smallest school. The teacher, Señorita Maria Silva, had thrown herself heart and mind into this work, not only teaching her children word and voice perfection, but instilling into their young hearts a conviction of the evils of intemperance, which we trust will never leave them. A group of English speaking boys, from nine to eleven years of age, have bound themselves solemnly never to touch the dreaded foe, though so far we have offered them no written pledges, believing that this work of education must be fully brought before them first by scientific instruction by their own teacher.

Dear women of the W. C. T. U., our source of strength in the opening campaign has been the thought of the noontide hour of prayer, observed wherever the ribbon white is twined. In reply to expressions of surprise at the success attending Miss Norville's efforts for what many regard as an uninteresting cause, I have answered, "You do not know the power of prayer behind this movement. As the chapel bell tinkles its warning of the noontide hour for siesta in this sultry southern clime, my heart echoes the prayer of our northern sisters, 'For God and Home and Native Land.' 'Bound with gold chains about the feet of God,' this cause must grow and prosper. Every generation needs the patient repetition of the warnings of the Wise Man, the plea of mothers, the example of fathers, the sympathy of sisters and the courage of brothers, till every foe be conquered, and Christ is Lord indeed."

SHOT AND SHELL THAT HELPED WIN INDIANA'S BATTLE

Excerpts from an Address by MARY HARRIS ARMOR

"I always liked to sing 'Onward, Christian Soldiers,' but when I came to the words, 'like a mighty army,' I always hesitated because it has only been recently that the church has moved like a mighty army—before that it moved more like an ambulance corps."

"If your legislators were arguing about opening opium dens in the state—because it 'brought the revenue' and because 'nobody needed to use opium if they didn't want to,' and because the opium traffic would be 'legalized' and 'regulated' and all the rest—if they were trying to do this you would be holding indignation meetings all over the state; and your senator, if he voted for opium, would never be allowed to show his face in town. Yet if you understood alcohol as you do opium, you would feel the same way about it. I would rather have my boy pass opium dens than saloons—the latter are more dangerous."

"Regulation is merely an attempt to make the devil respectable; and the more respectable the devil is the more dangerous he is."

"Viewed from every angle the liquor traffic is the most stupendous robber on earth. No county, state or nation that ever went dry is sorry for it."

"So-called 'revenue' doesn't figure when it threatens decency and honor. Besides, who pays the revenue? The liquor traffic? Ah, no. Every distiller knows that whisky costs only about twenty-five cents a gallon to manufacture. It's the government's 'regulation' that increases the price manyfold to the unfortunate consumers, who really pay every cent of 'revenue' going to the government."

"The most unbusiness-like business man I know of is the one who talks about 'revenue' and 'high license.' As if you could spend a dollar for liquor and for clothes and other necessities at the same time. The gain of the liquor traffic is the business man's loss."

"If buttermilk affected people like liquor does you'd kill every cow."

"They talk of 'personal liberty.' There is no such thing. You can't reconstruct your house, or do hosts of other important things, without getting permission. And you can't get permission to do any thing inimical to the public welfare—except to drink liquor. There were only two persons on earth who ever had absolute personal liberty—Adam, before Eve came along; and Robinson Crusoe before he met Friday."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.

The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, March 1, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

NATIONAL PRESIDENT RETURNS FROM WASHINGTON

After an absence of nearly six weeks in the nation's capital, Miss Anna A. Gordon returned to Evanston, Illinois, Saturday, February 24. Great was the joy of her associates at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters at her return. It has meant much to the temperance cause and to the National W. C. T. U. to have Miss Gordon in Washington during the past months when Congress gave to the prohibition question a prominence unprecedented in the history of that venerable body.

"BALLOTS FOR BOTH" VICTORIOUS IN STATE LEGISLATURES

Eastward "votes for women" takes its course. Illinois, the pioneer suffrage state east of the Mississippi, yields place to Ohio and Indiana. The first named state has received at the hands of its lawmakers the privilege of voting for the President; the latter now enjoys by legislative enactment even greater suffrage rights than Illinois. Of equal interest in suffrage circles is the action of the Maine legislature in adopting by a large majority in both houses a resolution providing for a vote by the people on a woman suffrage amendment. Over thirty years ago Lillian M. N. Stevens began to appeal to the state legislature for this privilege, and until the day of her going to the other world she was tireless in her efforts to secure the ballot for her sisters. As the present president of the Maine W. C. T. U. says, "The action of the legislature is the result of Mrs. Stevens' wise and gentle leadership borne forward by the steadfast white ribbonors of the state." South Dakota and Maine are now definitely in campaigns for woman suffrage, the question to be settled at the polls at the next general election in the former state, and on September 10, 1917, in Maine.

Significant also is the keen interest in the subject in other states. A suffrage measure has passed one branch of the legislatures of New York, Minnesota, Nebraska and Arkansas, and so live a question in other states is "votes for women" that before this paper reaches our readers the above statement may need revision. A legislature has this year been defined as "a small body of individuals entirely surrounded by prohibition and suffrage advocates," and it will not be surprising if, before the law-making season closes, many other legislatures yield to the eloquent persuasions of the advocates of "Ballots for Both" and grant the women of their respective states equal rights at the polls with their brothers and husbands.

UNCLE SAM A "BONE DRY" ADVOCATE

The unexpected has happened. While state legislatures were arguing, disputing and wrangling over the advantages and disadvantages of "bone dry" amendments or "ultra prohibitory" statutes, Uncle Sam stepped into the arena and disposed of the whole question by bringing every state that has enacted a prohibitory law, whether with or without loopholes, to a condition of so-called "bone-dryness." The provisions of the measure are given in detail in the Washington Letter. The amendment to the postal appropriation bill, introduced by Senator Jones of Washington and amended by Senator Reed of Missouri, is more drastic than any measure yet introduced in the legislatures of prohibition states. It will abolish the mail order liquor business and close many liquor manufactories. It will give prohibition an opportunity to demonstrate how truly beneficent a policy it is when properly enforced, as it has been in some states. The amendment is in perfect harmony with the legislation now being passed in many states and in the words of the Chicago Journal will bring those states that have not yet been able to come to a decision on the merits of "bone-dryness" "from a condition of moderate drought irrigated by the original package to a state of absolute aridity." Of the twenty-five prohibition states, West Virginia, Idaho, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Oklahoma, Arkansas, Utah, Tennessee, Kansas, Indiana, South Carolina and South Dakota have already enacted so-called "bone dry" measures.

While the general press in reporting the final vote on the question makes the assertion that "many of the wet advocates in Congress, particularly those with brewers among their constituents, declared themselves pleased with the outcome," there seems little enthusiasm on the part of the newspapers of Missouri, the state from which comes the author of the measure, Senator Reed, always and ever a violent anti-prohibitionist. The St. Louis Globe-Democrat characterizes the measure as less defensible than that providing national prohibition "a fantastic proposal, and tying it to a great supply bill makes it still more reprehensible." The St. Louis Post-Dispatch calls it in unvarnished Billy Sunday English, "from the standpoint of democracy and sane, just legislation, simply 'rot.'" The president of the Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association of Chicago, a prominent pro-liquor organization, declares that "Congress has simply overstepped itself in violating the rights of the states in the passage of the bill." The leader of the United Societies of Chicago, the liquor organization of that metropolis, explains the inconsistency of the pro-liquor Representatives' vote by saying, "Probably many of the wets saw the measure was going to be carried and simply got into the band wagon."

If the liquor interests are enthusiastically joyful over this turn of affairs, which was certainly not contemplated by Senator Reed when he introduced the amendment, they are succeeding admirably in concealing their satisfaction.

The passage of the measure is regarded by many metropolitan journals of high standing as marking a new epoch in the history of prohibition, and in the words of The Chicago Herald will make "importing liquor into a dry state as difficult as smuggling dresses through the customs house." The Chicago Journal sees in it "the most tremendous stride toward national prohibition that has been made in twenty years. It will familiarize the country with the idea of prohibition by national enactment. Well may the camel caper in ungainly glee. He has won a triumph which makes all ordinary success seem tame."

The consensus of opinion among those who have studied the situation seems to be that the liquor interests unwittingly and unintentionally have brought about a piece of legislation that will speed John Barleycorn's departure from the United States of America.

GIVE IT A TRIAL!

Many women living in dry states and being pleased with prohibition would be glad to aid in securing the same blessing for other states if some feasible plan were mentioned. To such it is suggested that they clip from their local papers all items testifying to the good effects of prohibition and send them to their friends in other states urging that they interview their local editors and secure publication of these items in their own local press. In all cases the name of the paper from which the clipping is made and the date should be written on the margin. There is no better testimony than that of men who have had personal experience or observation as to the beneficial influence of prohibition. Merchants and other business men whose sales have increased and whose collections are better under prohibition than formerly are usually willing to testify to that fact through their local papers. The truth concerning reduced number of arrests, empty or near-empty jails, etc., can easily be secured. All such evidence exploited as news items in the press of wet states is of great value and the importance of this method of educating the public should not be overlooked.

Nearly all women have friends or acquaintances in other states. Doubtless most of them would gladly act as mediums of communication and if this plan is followed thousands of items will appear in the press of wet states that will be eye-openers to those who are accustomed to think of prohibition as a business depressant and a crime-producer.

Women who cannot do what they may consider active temperance work and cannot contribute money can follow the plan herein suggested. Give it a trial!

TWIN TRANSCONTINENTAL TEAMS FOR PROHIBITION

Two National W. C. T. U. traveling teams are to journey this spring from National Headquarters to the Pacific coast, one going by the northern route, the other by the southern route. They are to stop at strategic points for state and interstate prohibition and law enforcement campaign conferences, each tour to terminate at San Francisco, where June 3-4 a big rally with representatives from the western states will be held. The greatest possible interest is being manifested in these transcontinental tours. The responses received from the states through which the campaigners are to pass and from the cities at which meetings are to be held are most enthusiastic. Arrangements are being made for the participation of governors, mayors, and other prominent citizens, and civic parades and demonstrations of various kinds are under consideration. The southern team will pass through Omaha, Nebraska, at about the time the prohibitory law goes into effect. Further details concerning these tours will be given later

REORGANIZING THE BREWERIES, DISTILLERIES AND SALOONS

To what use are the saloons, distillerles and brewerles of the new prohibition states to be put when the law goes lnto effect? Is belng asked by some people. The questlon is a legltimate one and the hlstory of the states that are now firmly establlshed ln the prohlbition policy furnishes a satlsfactory answer. Mayor R. W. Speer, the chlef executlve of the city of Denver, only the other day in speaking of the lncreased prosperlty in his city sald: "The liquor business of the state, which prior to January 1, 1916, represented investments of $3,500,000, has been turned into legitimate enterprises with excellent results. The dealers were given ample tlme to get rid of their stock and go into other pursuits."

It is reported by the press that every brewery in Virginia has arranged to engage in the production of some other commodity than alcoholic beverages, many of them planning to produce food products for animals.

The saloonkeepers of Salt Lake City, when interviewed as to their future plans, replied either that they would change their places into first class cafes or engage in some other line of business. One man did express a wish to transfer hls stock and fixtures to some other state whlch was not dry or llable soon to become so. Alas, poor man, where will he find it?

The Detroit Citizens' League reports that steps have been taken to convert several Detroit breweries into artificial ice plants. The same report says: "Since 1908 many breweries have been put out of business in the dry countles of the state. In only one instance has brewery property decreased in value in prohibition territory, according to Pliny W. Marsh, attorney for the league, who has investigated the matter. In many instances, Mr. Marsh says, brewery property has greatly increased in value by converting it to the uses of productive industry. The Flint brewery is the only one that was not made over into a factory of some kind. The Flint brewery was converted into a church."

It is reported that some of the Indiana brewerles will be used for the manufacture of fertilizer, while others will be employed in making condensed and evaporated milk. Many distilleries will be used for manufacturing industrial alcohol. All tbe distilleries may be offered to the government for use in case of war.

PROFIT AND LOSS

Friends of the booze business reasoning from the numbers of permits issued to import liquor for personal use and the price paid therefor during the year 1916 in the state of Washington conclude that the state has expended about one and one-half million dollars for drink and is therefore so much the poorer by having that amount sent outside for drink.

However, it is estimated on the other hand that under the license system the cost to the state for intoxicants was not less than $30,000,000 a year, not considering at all the loss by reason of drunkenness, crime, etc., caused by the use of this thirty million dollars' worth of poison.

Therefore the state is $28,500,000 better off by having that sum remain in it to be distributed through the legitimate and upbuilding channels of industry, and in addition immeasurably richer and happier because of the sobriety of its people, their increased value as employers and employes, the decrease in crime, insanity, broken homes, delinquent children and the long train of liquor evils.

For the sum which it is estimated Washington formerly spent annually for liquor she can now build each year 5,000 homes at a cost of $3,000 each and have $15,000,000 left for furnishings, stock, food, clothing, etc. Which is better, booze or homes?

From still another viewpoint Washington is, and any state must necessarily be, immeasurably better off by having those establishments formerly devoted to the manufacture of alcoholic liquors diverted to better uses. One such which formerly made beer is now devoted to the preparation of sea foods for which there is a wide demand. Another prepares fruit juices in a wholesome and attractive manner. A third has become a cold storage and milk depot, and manufactures ice cream and provides pure milk for the babies instead of booze for their fathers. All these enterprises employ more people than formerly and minister to the actual needs and happiness of the whole community instead of being the prime factor in the degradation and shame of a large proportion of the people. Who that cares for the welfare of the human race would go back to the old regime?

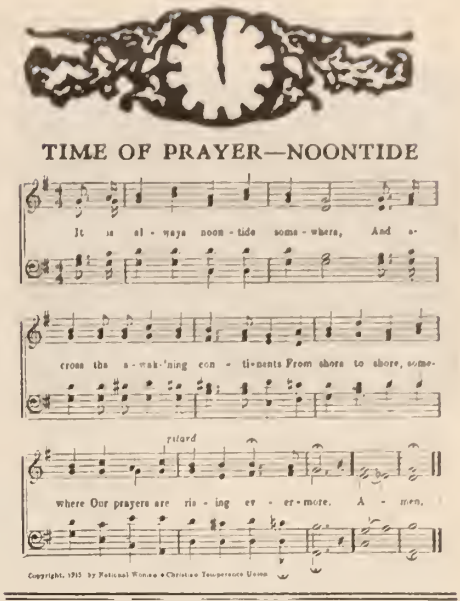
BANKERS OF PROHIBITION CITY REPORT INCREASED DEPOSITS

The city of Bristol which is situated partly in Virginia and partly in Tennessee is giving a most satisfactory report of itself since prohibition went into effect in the Virginia section on November 1 last. Not only are the beneficial results noticeable in the part of the city where the saloons were located but the Tennessee section which had been without saloons for a number of years has made a new record in the matter of crime, for the city has had fewer arrests since the closing of the saloons in the sister city than at any time in the last twenty-five years although the number of prisoners has not run high for some years.

"I have been a member of the Tennessee police force for fifteen years," said Chief O'Dell in discussing the situation with a reporter for the Bristol Herald-Courier. "In all that time I have never known a period when there was less disturbance than there has been since last Christmas. A review of the police docket for the past several weeks would indicate that a wave of reformation is passing over the city."

The merchants and bankers of Bristol are almost universally pleased with the results of prohibition. Grocers, druggists, furniture dealers are all telling the same story of increased business.

"I don't say that prohibition had anything to do with it, but our deposits and business have grown wonderfully," said a representative of the Dominion bank to a white ribboner. "Our deposits have increased over $150,000," is the report of the Bank of Bristol. "Our deposits have increased more than 25 per cent," said the First National bank. The only source of dissatisfaction is the fact that there is no one to occupy the fine new jail which cost the taxpayers many a dollar.



GIVE MORE

I Thess. 3: 11-13

To Thee who dost all need supply,
Thy servants, Lord, in prayer draw nigh,
While from each heart ascends the cry
More life;
While here we pray, give us this day
More life.

That those who now in darkness grope
May enter on a life of hope,
We breathe this prayer of largest scope—
More light;
Be gracious thus and give to us
More light.

Help us to rightly think and feel;
Help us to guard, and guide, and heal;
For this great work in us reveal
More power;
Thy presence show and now bestow
More power.

And, while we work with mind and hand,
To banish liquor from this land,
We need, that we may bravely stand,
More love;
This day impart to every heart
More love.

More life we need to earnest be;
More light we seek to walk with Thee;
For power and love this is our plea—
Give more;
Of life and light and love and might
Give more.

—T. Watson in The Pioneer.

NASHVILLE DRUGGISTS PASS RESOLUTION AGAINST SALE OF LIQUOR

The Nashville (Tenn.) branch of the American Pharmaceutical Association in joint sesslon with the Nashville Drug Club recently adopted a resolution favoring the full suppression of "the illegal sale of alcoholic or lntoxicating liquors in a drug store, even to the extent of endorsing a law that will absolutely prohibit the sale of alcoholic or intoxlcating liquors in a drug store, regardless of a physician's prescription."

"Every saloon is a life-destroying station," recently declared Congressman Addison T. Smith of Idaho. "And every one destroys more lives than all the United States live-saving stations save in a year."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

March 1—Union Signal Subscription Day—Birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens
March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow

OHIO TRAINING WORKERS FOR THE CAMPAIGN

Special Correspondence

The Ohio campaign for state-wide prohibition was officially opened at the time of the W. C. T. U. mid-year executive meeting at Lancaster, January 30-31. Plans for raising funds and prosecuting the work were carefully made. Mrs. E. L. Calkins, president of the Michigan W. C. T. U., Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, and Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president of the Alaska W. C. T. U., were the guests of the occasion, and by counsel, instruction, entertainment and illustration added to the enjoyment of all who were present. The Ohio state president, Mrs. Florence D. Richard, is chairman of the women's forces in the dry federation. With the support of the state officers and the entire working force of the Ohio W. C. T. U. all are entering the conflict as enthusiastically as though victory was assured. We recognize in our enlistment the call of God and our Captain is the Great Jehovah whose cause must finally prevail.

As a means of training workers for the campaign the state W. C. T. U., just prior to the mid-year executive, held a school of methods for house-to-house workers and organizers. The effort received the unanimous endorsement of all who had a part in it and all who planned and provided for it. The proposition originated with the state corresponding secretary, Mrs. Viola D. Romans, who presented the plan at the Lakeside conference last summer. At the Akron convention it was proposed to try out the plan on a somewhat limited scale, confining it to an especial training for house-to-house workers who are expected to visit Ohio homes this year. Thirty or more registered and are on the endorsed list, and some others applied. The school was held at state headquarters in Columbus, January 22-29. Mrs. Carrie L. Flatter and Miss Rose A. Davison, both National organizers, and Mrs. Mary S. Powers were chosen to serve as instructors. The wisdom of this choice was manifest as the school progressed for each in her way seemed to possess an inexhaustible fund of information which was kept continually "on tap." Miss Davison dealt with the "Preparedness" phase of the work; Mrs. Flatter with "Theory and Practice," and Mrs. Powers with "Scientific Temperance Training." Each devoted an hour to her theme in the forenoons, and the afternoons were given over to actual practice, the workers having been assigned by the county president, Mrs. Van Kirk, definite territory in which to operate in the city and vicinity. Thus the lessons of the morning were put to the test in the afternoon. Thereafter one half hour of each morning was devoted to an experience meeting which was not only interesting and amusing but profitable as well. A large number of new members were secured; subscriptions to the state and National papers were taken, and much literature left in the homes. In return for the services thus rendered free lodging and breakfast were furnished the workers by the local unions.

Special services were arranged at church prayer meetings and Sunday schools and visits to the day schools for the instructors in the afternoons and evenings. The state met the expenses of the teachers and paid them a nominal fee. No tuition or matriculation fees were charged the pupils. State officers also contributed freely of their time, assisting and encouraging by their presence as opportunity afforded.

The social side was not entirely neglected for "This ought ye to do and not to leave the other undone" is a part of the "Do Everything" policy of our organization. Mrs. Helen Burns, one of the original Crusaders and a member of the board of trustees, assisted by her local union, gave a reception to the entire school in her commodious home. The state and county officers were also guests on this occasion. The closing evening a house warming was given Mrs. Viola D. Romans, which was a well carried out surprise, the daughter and husband both being parties to the plot. Gifts, flowers, speeches, music and refreshments were generously dispensed throughout the evening.

Ohio suffragists scored a victory in the passage of the bill to give women the vote in presidential elections. The measure passed the senate by a very close margin.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Miss Roena Shaner, National organizer and lecturer, and vice-president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., in recent work in Pike county, Missouri, added fifty to the membership of the county, gave thirty-one addresses and secured eleven subscriptions to THE UNION SIGNAL and eleven to The Young Crusader. She not only inspired the workers to greater activity but in addition to paying all expenses of her trip left the county treasury in better condition than it was when she came. A new union was organized at Indian Creek with ten active and two honorary members, Mrs. Lydie Reid, president.

The Allegany county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. institute held at Scio, February 13-14, was well attended in spite of severe cold weather. Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, gave an evening address which was heartily applauded.

Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, National superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, was the guest of honor at a school of methods in Syracuse, N. Y., February 9, under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. of the five counties of Onondaga, Madison, Oswego, Cortland and Cayuga. Mrs. Anna W. Oberlander, state superintendent, was the leader. Mrs. Davis gave a new impetus to the work of teaching scientific temperance in the schools. She also addressed an institute of grade teachers which was in session in the city at the time.

Washington's birthday, February 22, was also the fifth anniversary of the purchase of state headquarters for the Massachusetts Woman's Christian Temperance Union at 541 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston. At a meeting and reception in celebration of this event, there occurred the burning of the mortgage against the property and other impressive exercises.

The Willard memorial meeting of the Willard union of Elizabeth, N. J., held on Sunday, February 18, was also the occasion of the celebration of the twenty-eighth anniversary of the organization of the union. A report of the year's work given at this time showed the union to be in a prosperous condition.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. LILA HURD, Gansevoort, N. Y., a sister of the president of the local union.

MRS. ZELIA K. GREEN, Bradford, Pa., for several years corresponding secretary of McKean county W. C. T. U.

MRS. ALBERT B. WILSON, Buffalo, N. Y., the organizer and president for twenty-seven years of Central union, one of the strongest unions in the county. Mrs. Wilson was chairman of one of the convention committees when the National W. C. T. U. convention met in Buffalo in 1897.

MRS. ELIZA SHOCKLEY, a long time member of the local union of Carlisle, Kentucky.

MRS. CYNTHIA A. BUTLER, Pittsfield, Ill., a Crusader and a devoted white ribboner through all the years of the organization. She was many times a delegate to county, state and National conventions.

MISS HATTIE WHITMAN, East Village, Ashtabula county, Ohio, a charter member of the local union and for five years recording secretary. Her promotion came shortly after that of her mother, Mrs. Horace Whitman, and in only a few days her father joined his loved ones. Mr. and Mrs. Whitman were also members of the East Village union. Death has claimed six from the membership of this union within a year.

MRS. JANETTE OSMUN, mother of Mrs. Mary B. Wood, recording secretary of the New York state W. C. T. U. Mrs. Osmun was a woman of warm sympathy for everything that made for the betterment of society.

MRS. LUCY F. MOREHOUSE, Big Rapids, Mich., a Crusader to whom the W. C. T. U. was always of foremost interest. For several years she served as district president, also as state superintendent of Institutes. The Big Rapids union has set apart her birthday, December 3, as a red letter day. Dr. Anna Howard Shaw said of her, "Whatever of good I may have done in my work, whatever strength of purpose I may have developed, I owe to her."

MRS. MARY S. CALDWELL, for many years a loyal member of the W. C. T. U. of Lycoming county, Pennsylvania, having served for seventeen years as county president.

Feeling the Pulse of the Liquor Interests

"We are going through an evolution that is accompanied by an unreasoning hysteria, and it is important that the trade shall have confidence in the ultimate outcome, and that it shall act in all matters with the highest wisdom, and along the lines dictated by advanced thought," cautions Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular in its report for the first month of the year. "Such states as Indiana, Michigan, Washington, Oregon, Colorado, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, and Virginia, are PRACTICALLY CERTAIN to return to the license system within the next year or so, and more especially if the people in such states are fully advised as to how liquors may be sold without in any way giving offense to established prejudices."

Quite evidently many of the editorial utterances to be found in the liquor journals are for home consumption only and are intended merely to keep up the spirits of the members of "the trade" and make them believe that there is a good time coming. When one considers that Colorado, Washington and Oregon, after trying prohibition for a year, voted by increased majorities to retain it, anti-beer provisions and all, and that the two last states have adopted an ultra-dry policy, there seems no basis for the predicted reversion to the license system. Similarly Tennessee and Georgia after years of experience have made more drastic rather than weakened their prohibitory law. Alas, the "prejudices" of the people against the liquor traffic are becoming so well "established" that it taxes one's imagination to conceive the possibility of these states going back to liquor rule.

The liquor men of New Jersey are reported to have prepared a measure for introduction into the legislature to compel communities closing saloons to recompense saloon owners for the loss of business profits, loss on fixtures, leaseholds, etc.

That the liquor interests have given up hope is shown by their constant appeals for compensation. "Our trade has not been inclined to advocate compensation as an offset to prohibition," explains Bonfort's, "but if the states continue to vote prohibition it might be wise to consider the advisability of making it an issue." This plea for compensation is the "swan song" of the liquor interests, but like all their prayers will fall upon deaf ears and meet with no response from the public.

One advertisement of liquors represents a father as saying to his son, "Walk into a beer saloon whenever you feel the need of a mild stimulant." The average father would as soon think of advising his son to walk into an active volcano. The mails are burdened with this sort of advertising.

"The mere fact that Kansas City, Mo., voted in favor of the drys will have a very bad effect upon the business conditions of that city," remarks the Champion of Fair Play, a liquor organ.

The merchants of St. Louis who helped to swell the majority against prohibition last November, may find that their adventure in personal liberty is to prove somewhat expensive. Apparently, the people of the state who gave a majority for the amendment, resent having their efforts nullified by the wet vote of a single city. They have a deep-rooted conviction that the state of Missouri ought to be larger and more powerful than the city of which August Busch is a resident. They are calling attention to the fact that St. Louis is not the only big mercantile center of the state, and are giving valuable advertising to Kansas City, which rolled up a fine majority for prohibition on November 7, and are extolling it as a place in which to purchase goods, to the distinct disadvantage of St. Louis. In short, they are determined to test the truth of the old adage, "Money Talks," and hope to have it speak with eloquence and sonorousness to the effect that the people of the state prefer to give their support to a city whose voters are building on a foundation of sobriety rather than to one which depends for its growth upon the wealth of a millionaire brewer.

DELAWARE HAS DRY LEGISLATURE AND GOVERNOR

Special Correspondence

Praise God for the present general assembly of Delaware! The temperance people of the state have reason to be greatly encouraged. Interested citizens from all over the state were present at the state house February 13, the day set apart for the discussion and vote in the house on the Loose anti-shipping bill, a strong temperance measure for the protection of the two dry counties. Stirring speeches were made by both men and women in favor of the bill and the fight put up by the liquor people showed their dread of its passage. The final reading of the bill was interrupted several times by amendments offered by the wets, all of which were lost. The discussion lasted until nearly dark and when the vote was taken there were 27 yeas and 5 nays. This is considered a great victory. It is believed that the bill will pass the senate also. A bill has been presented asking for resubmission for Wilmington and New Castle counties, the wet sections of the state. All the temperance forces are working harmoniously. The Anti-Saloon League is doing good work. The Grangers are uniting with the temperance organizations. During the past year the temperance department of the state Sunday School Association offered nearly one hundred dollars in prizes for the best temperance essays written by boys and girls under twenty-one years of age. That these essays might help make temperance sentiment, they were required to be read before a public assembly and, as far as possible, were published in the local papers. Some excellent compositions were submitted. With a temperance governor and a dry legislature we can well say, Delaware is marching on to victory.

WHAT SHALL SALEM, VIRGINIA, DO WITH ITS JAIL?

Special Correspondence

All Virginia rejoices that Mrs. Sara Hoge, state president, has improved sufficiently to be taken to Atlantic City where she is making steady progress toward health. The state W. C. T. U. workers feel most grateful to Mr. Hoge for his regular bulletins concerning the condition of the state president and join with him in hoping that he and his faithful comrade may be able to return at an early day to Evergreen Home in Loudoun county.

County conventions and Willard Memorial meetings are keeping the unions busy. Mrs. Effie B. Clement, state treasurer, was the guest of the Dinwiddie convention held at Petersburg, February 14. The mid-year executive meeting will be held at Onley on the beautiful eastern shore. In this section are the homes of Senator Walter Mapp, the able patron of the prohibition measure bearing his name, and of Mrs. Sadie Savage, the bi-county president. Vice-President Shepherd is busily arranging the program for this meeting which will be held on March 7-8 and will be followed by an institute.

Mrs. Emma H. Howland, National organizer, and Mrs. S. H. Ropp, National lecturer, will begin work in Virginia at an early date, Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer and a Virginia state worker, having already started in Albemarle and other counties.

In addition to Virginia's keen loss because of the illness of the state president, other troubles have come. Mrs. Mary E. Webb, for a long time prominent in purity work, a loyal, clear-minded white ribboner, passed to her reward in Norfolk, February 10, in her eighty-seventh year. Mrs. William J. Maybee, the gifted superintendent of Mothers' Meetings, recently underwent a severe operation at a Richmond hospital but is now recovering. Mrs. Sue C. James of Accomac county is bereaved in the loss of her husband. Mrs. James is the present superintendent of Red Letter Days and for a long time was state secretary of the L. T. L.

But whether the days bring weal or woe to the workers, the prohibition law is proving phenomenally successful. Some of the papers which most bitterly opposed prohibition during the campaign now boldly and frankly admit the success of the new law. One says: "All classes of citizens seem to be friendly disposed. There has been a transformation in the habits of the people. The police records over the state show very few arrests for drinking. Apparently all classes are pleased with the change. So far the execution of the law without any severe methods seems as perfect as it well can be."

Charlottesville, the university town and the place of the next state W. C. T. U. convention, according to a local journal, has doubled in population and visible wealth during its ten years of prohibition, it having been dry for this length of time before the state-wide victory.

Salem is wondering what to do with its new jail, no one having had his personal liberty taken from him to the extent of becoming an inmate since December.

LIGHTENING THE H. C. L. BURDEN

"Do you approve of prohibition?"

"Yes," replied Uncle Bill Bottletop. "With the present high cost of food I dunno as it's sensible to try to take care of a hunger an' a thirst both at once."—Washington Star.

"Ma, tigers can't bite people when they don't see 'em, can they?"

"What on earth do you mean, child?"

"I heard pa tell Mr. Smith he was going to find a 'blind tiger.'"—Baltimore American.

"Don't you find it hard these times to meet expenses?"

"Hard? Man alive! I meet expenses at every turn."—Boston Transcript.

"Did you get acclimated when you went to Cuba?"

"Yes, and by the best doctor I could find, but it didn't take."—Baltimore American.

Consultant—Don't you enjoy good health, madam?

Consulter—I certainly do, doctor. I only wish I had some of it!—Judge.

The Birmingham Chamber of Commerce is receiving so many calls for information on the effects of prohibition in Birmingham that Acting General Manager Everett is having 1,500 reproductions made of the recent figures published by the Age-Herald on the subject. The figures were very carefully compiled and show comparative conditions in city and county under the open regulated saloon regime and under the present prohibition laws.

ONE PLUS

FLORA SWETNAM

The Story of How the Minister and the School Teacher Cleaned Up the Town of Penbury

It was almost dark on an August evening when a passenger alighted at the small, dingy station of Penbury. He turned and took a look about him. The prospect did not seem to be a cheering one. The small town was dirty and it did not require much light to convince the stranger that this was a hard place. A crowd of loafers surrounded the station, and listening to their talk only confirmed him in his opinion.

Presently, an elderly man approached the newcomer with extended hand. "This is our new minister, I presume?"

"Yes, sir," replied the young man. "I have been called as pastor of a church in this place."

"Well, I am W. J. Manning," continued the first speaker. "You and I have been corresponding, you remember. You are to come home with me for the night, Brother Strong, perhaps for several days, then you can make such arrangements as you see fit."

As they walked along side by side, Mr. Manning was looking his guest over. "You are a much younger looking man than I expected to see when I read your letters," he ventured at length. "How old are you?"

"I am twenty-six," replied the young man quietly.

"You write like sixty-six, and that is the kind of man we need, but it's all right. You are here and I am going to stand by you. It does beat all, though," he continued, laughing, "how this town gets young men. I reckon it is just our luck to have to break them in. One minister came who wasn't young, but he didn't stay long enough to count. Our school teacher, Professor Romar, is just twenty-eight. He's a tack-driver, too."

"I should like to meet him," said the minister.

"You shall. I want you two to get acquainted. Then there is our editor. He is middle aged, but he is a bachelor and rates himself with the young men."

"I hope to make his acquaintance, also."

"You wouldn't hope so if you knew him as well as I do. He stands in the way of our church influence more than any other person in town. I am sorry he ever got hold of the paper. The old editor didn't get the sheet out regularly, and he made a lot of mistakes, but he didn't do any special harm. This man has just about spoiled every good work in town."

"Am I the only minister here? What about the other churches?"

"There is another one, but it is not very well supported and they can not keep a regular minister. They have only an occasional service."

"How about the Sunday schools?"

"There's almost half a one at our church, that is all. Well, here we are. Come in, Brother Strong. I will take you right up to your room. The bell will ring when supper is ready, but just take your time."

"So I have struck a hard place," the young man reflected aloud when he was alone. "Well, I'll fight it out. It takes a lot of struggle to test a man properly." With this thought he dismissed the subject.

He found Mr. Manning waiting for him on the stairs and was conducted at once to the dining room, where he met Mrs. Manning. She was a pleasant looking, elderly woman. Giving him a hearty handshake, she said laughingly, "My, how boyish you do look! But you needn't be scared, I haven't a daughter to set her cap for you, nor a son for you to convert. My children are all married and all members of the church."

"That's good," he declared, appreciating her spirit of fun; "when times get strenuous I will take refuge here."

"Yes, indeed you must. The latchstring will always be out. How do you think you are going to like Penbury?"

"It's too early to say, but I am convinced of one thing. I shall find plenty to do."

"You surely will find a great big burden to shoulder," she agreed. "Perhaps you will leave in disgust as our other minister did."

"I shall not quit," he said with an air of determination which pleased Mr. Manning. "If I should try to work alone, I might have to, but with God to help 'One shall chase a thousand and two shall put ten thousand to flight.'"

After their guest had retired for the night, Mr. and Mrs. Manning sat in their pleasant living room talking matters over.

"I declare, I feel like crying," said Mrs. Manning.

"Why?" asked Mr. Manning in some surprise.

"The idea of that innocent-looking fellow being sent here to undertake to do anything with the dens of iniquity in this town. He'll be like the last one; he'll never stay."

"He's no quitter," said Mr. Manning emphatically. "Don't you remember the scripture he quoted? He believes it, too."

Upstairs in his room the minister was facing his problem and seeking help and wisdom from the surest source.

The next morning Mr. Manning took the new minister to call on Professor Romar, who was renting rooms in a vacant dwelling and doing his own housekeeping.

"It seems to me," declared Mr. Manning, "that you two men would make a good combination. I have suggested to Brother Strong that he should live here if you have no objection."

"I should like to have him," was the professor's answer, so an arrangement was quickly made for sharing the work and expense and before night the minister was duly installed and prepared to lay out his plan of campaign.

"What is wrong with our editor?" Mr. Strong asked when he had opportunity. "Brother Manning says he is a menace to the young people."

"First," replied the teacher, "he openly sneers at creeds of all kinds and uses his paper to ridicule the church and everything religious."

The minister nodded. "I see," he said. "Is there anything more?"

"He publishes whisky advertisements and his political influence is for the ring that favors all these things. He calls it liberty and the right of every free man to speak and vote his sentiments—and so on. But even this is not the worst. He allows boys and young men to congregate in his office at night and have suppers and card parties at which strong drink is served. Now do you understand?"

"I think I do. Will you lend me a hand to break up this business?"

"I surely will. I have fought it ever since I have been here. You see, I came last year, and when they decided to keep me, I continued to do all I could, even through vacation, but I did not make much progress as his influence is so much greater than mine. Your predecessor and I worked together during the short time he stayed. I do not blame him for leaving. He had a son eighteen years old, and they seemed to think it would be a big thing to 'get' the young chap. They succeeded in persuading him to go to one of their suppers and they sent him home at midnight about half drunk. That decided Brother Reynolds. He is a good man, but he couldn't see his own son go to the dogs."

Mr. Strong's gray eyes flashed, but he only said quietly, "I am greatly indebted to you for this very helpful bit of information. It shows me what I have to fight and what to expect. I want to tell you, too, how glad I am to have so able an ally."

They sat far into the night planning and talking and retired at last filled with the hope and courage of youth.

It became evident to the congregation at Penbury from the first that the new minister was not going to quote poetry and preach a lot of pretty platitudes for fear of treading on somebody's toes. His sermons were sharp, incisive blows at evil, delivered with absolute fearlessness. At the opening of the new school term he was present and in a short but very appropriate talk he urged the parents to stand by the teachers in all their efforts for the good of the pupils.

As soon as the school work began to run smoothly, a literary society was organized for the purpose of training the young people in debating and other forms of public speaking. This was to meet at the schoolhouse each Friday night. Many of the girls attended from the beginning, but only a few boys ventured to put in an appearance. After the news became circulated that the minister knew more funny stories and recitations than anybody, curiosity prompted several youths to go. The result was that there was a falling off for a time in the crowd which usually gathered at the printing office.

The editor "came back" with an article which he intended as funny, in which he ridiculed the literary society as a kind of religious dope dealt out by fanatics.

Then followed a sermon which awoke many of the church members as well as the editor to a fuller sense of the situation. The minister urged those who stood for morality and decency not to support with their subscriptions a paper which was so manifestly opposed to both. "You would better have no paper to represent your town," he said, "than to have one which is so great an injury to the young and to the good name of the locality in which it is published."

After hearing this sermon, Mr. Manning, Deacon Walsh and Mr. Morris, the most influential merchant in the town, withdrew their subscriptions. Their action convinced the editor that he must be up and doing.

On the next Monday afternoon, while Professor Romar was away at school, the minister received a call from Mr. Scott Jason, editor of the Penbury Gazette. The minister had tried several times before to make the acquaintance of this man, but it was apparent that he systematically dodged him. Now he determined to make the most of the opportunity. He greeted Mr. Jason cordially and his advances were smilingly received.

"How do you like Penbury?" asked the editor after a half-hour's conversation on various topics, during which the minister found his visitor a well-informed and most interesting talker.

"I always try to like any place where there is work to be done, and I have found plenty of it here."

The editor nodded. "I have observed your diligence," he replied, carefully choosing his words. "A wonderful im-

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

From west to east, from south to north
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

GRAN'PAP GRINGER'S EXAMINATION

DORA E. W. SPRATT

[The white ribbon women of Kentucky are doing a noble work in their settlement school at Hindman, where the children of the mountaineers are taught to read and write and think. This institution is doing wonders in driving out illicit distilling and in reducing drunkenness. The story shows how one old grandfather ascertained which of his children should be sent to the Hindman school.—EDITOR.]

On the low porch of a rambling log cabin among the mountains of Kentucky, a wiry old man was sitting in a high-backed, rush-bottomed chair. His sturdy, erect figure, his thick, iron-gray hair, his snapping black eyes, in whose depths there lurked the traces of an indomitable spirit, all seemed to indicate unusual vigor for a mountaineer who, if like the average one of his fellows, is apt, because of the monotony and hardness which mark his days, to wear out before he has lived the proverbial three-score years and ten. Outside of the porch, more than a dozen boys and girls from fifteen years old downward, were watching Gran'pap Gringer as he carefully stood a handful of green sticks in a row against the cabin wall.

"If yer wants ter know what them twigs is fur, I kin tell ye." Gran'pap turned his shrewd old face toward the group of young spectators. "I hearn tell o' zamernations an' I 'low as you-uns is boun' ter hev one. Now, Eliazer this hyar twig is fur you; an' this, Samanthy Ann, is fur you; an' another one fur Benjy Jim. A twig fur ary one o' ye, 'cepting the littlest. Samanthy Ann, what d'ye bring Peter fur? Hit don't stan' ter reason that babes kin come ter a 'zamernation."

"Mammy said as how I couldn't come 'less I brung 'im," replied the girl, half crying. To add to his sister's embarrassment Peter began to howl. "Kase Benjy Jim was hectorin' 'im," declared Samanthy Ann.

The noise brought a little toothless woman to the cabin door, whereat her husband looked relieved. "Pears like ter me ye jus' come in the nick o' time, kase how kin we-uns go 'long with this hyar 'zamernation, an' tote so many yearlings?"

When Granny had disappeared behind the closed door carrying rebellious Peter and leading little Suzanny, Gran'pap ran his sun-browned, toil-hardened fingers through his long thick locks and gazed earnestly into the young faces before him. "When I was little, like you-uns, I jus' was hungered to git a powerful sight o' booklarnin', but I never had no time nor teacher. Now I hear as there's a school down ter Hindman way. I calculate I kin pay fur one o' ye; so I wants ter find which o' ye kin work yer brain the bestest, so I 'lowed I was goin' ter hev a 'zamernation, like I hearn tell they has ter school."

The children, bare-headed, bare-footed, with just enough clothing to be decent, but not any left over for style, ranged themselves in a row on the hard-trodden earth just in front of the porch, and, like soldiers, awaited the command of their captain. He was gazing with far-seeing eyes across the hill-tops to the distant blue mountain rim that had been to him a wall, which hid forever the great world outside. He was dreaming dreams, not for himself, that day had passed, but for some of these, his own flesh and blood, whom he wanted to have the chance he had missed. He was thinking of his own grandsire, who had been a soldier in the Revolution and had received this "bounty land" from a grateful nation. When he and his wife and first-born had moved to this wilderness, they found themselves "on the roof of Kaintuck," where it took all their time and attention to keep from sliding off, so their children and grandchildren never had a chance to learn to read!

"Gran'pap, we-uns is stan'in like a row o' fence posts," cried Benjy Jim impatiently. The hale old man came back from dreamland and surveyed with glowing eyes his youngsters standing in a line, which extended the length of the porch. "Nary one of ye all kin read," shaking his shaggy head solemnly. The children looked distressed, because Gran'pap did. "But no more kin I." Whereat his audience showed relief. "It wan't nothin' so terribul to be like gran'pap," they thought. "Now," he continued, "I had you-uns come here apurpose 'kase I wants the keenest of ye ter git larnin'. Fur I thought as how you-uns warn't all plumb ignorant 'f ye can't read. Now, 'tention! Work yer brains 'less ye hev los' yer minds! Hyar, Joey's at top o' the row. I axes 'im fust off; but all you-uns what knows stamp yer footes. Ef yer don't know shake yer heads." The old man cleared his throat, looked sternly along the line, then fixed his gaze on Joey.

"Why am I yer gran'pap?" The bare feet came pattering down with force upon the hard earth. Every child knew the answer to the question, but Joey had the first chance to voice it. "Kase my mammy's yer gal." But Liza Lu continued to pound the ground with her bare feet, until her grandfather inquired, "Look-a-hyar, kin ye say any better'n that? 'f ye kin, say hit!"

"Ye air my gran'pap kase God set ye ter be."

With his sharp knife he cut a notch in each stick as the children presented them, but the watchful young eyes noticed that the notch on Liza Lu's stick was cut deeper than the others.

"Now, Samanthy Ann, do a jay-bird sing or talk?" Gran'pap's eyes twinkled as he saw the whole line evidently working hard. Some answered one way, some the other; but Benjy Jim's answer brought the deepest notch, also a chuckle from Gran'pap. "Ole jay-bird can't do neither. He jus' cusses!" The old man paused a moment to closely inspect this boy with his shrewd bright eyes, his shock of sun-bleached hair, his round freckled face; who just then somehow reminded Gran'pap of himself when he was a restless, quick-witted lad.

The next three questions were about snow which all had seen covering the hills in winter. "What is snow made of?" brought a notch for every stick. "How do you know?" was easily answered by those children, who had seen that the melting of snow on the hillsides turns the small mountain brooks into torrents of water. But when the old man, out of pure mischief, asked a question which he did not expect them to answer, because he himself did not know the reason why, he was more than pleased when Liza Lu said thoughtfully, "I 'low snow air white kase it comes through the blue sky, like my mammy puts little Janey's Sunday clothes through blue water ter make 'em white." This won another deep notch for Liza Lu's stick, making her brown eyes shine with pleasure.

"Has a houn' dog got a soul?" was suggested to the mind of the examiner by the presence of Boomer, Gran'pap's hound, who always wanted to be in the middle of things; therefore, he was lying at his master's feet, even while half a dozen other dogs were rollicking around the yard. The children disagreed in their answers to this psychological question, while the old man looked puzzled as he tried to decide whether any stick deserved a nick. Ten-year-old Malinda's yellow curly head had been close to Boomer's soft ears as she looked carefully into his honest brown eyes. Then she raised her pretty face, and her blue eyes looked straight at Gran'pap as she drawled, "Boomer says as how he have a soul; but hit am littler than folkses'." So that notch belonged to the child, who was, according to the constrained compliments of the mountaineer, "The likeliest lookin' o' ary o' the Gringers."

Gran'pap's questions were getting him into deep water; so he decided to give a few that he thought the children could answer. "How d'ye make batter bread?" put a notch on every girl's stick. Then he made it right with the boys by asking, "What kind o' nest do foxes hev?"

The old man leaned back in his chair, and his gaze wandered over the familiar scene searching for another question. The lush grass in the spring lot gave him a suggestion, so he said, "Now hyar air one, tough as hickory. Why is grass green?" Slowly and regretfully the tousled heads began to shake. The self-appointed examiner looked along the line. Every head was wagging except Liza Lu's. Both her sun-browned hands covered her eyes. She was evidently "working her brain." Gran'pap waited until her brown eyes shone out, as her foot began slowly to beat the ground. The old man and children eagerly listened for her answer, which she gave with some hesitation, "Mightn't hit be kase the leaves from the trees air all crumbled up at snow-time, an' drop their green fur th' grass ter wear in the spring."

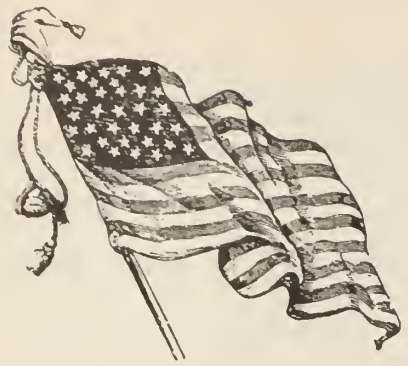
Gran'pap Gringer was delighted. He might have felt like saying, if he had known the verse,

"And still the wonder grows
How one small head can carry all she knows."

After a few more questions about common things the examination was declared

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

Your Flag and My Flag



"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.
Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

FLAGS FOR DECORATION

Printed Muslin, mounted.
2½ in. by 4 in., 50 cents per gross.
3½ in. by 6 in., 80 cents per gross.
11 in. by 18 in., 50 cents per dozen.
12 in. by 22 in., 70 cents per dozen.
20 in. by 36 in., $1.50 per dozen.
Orders not filled for less than gross or dozen lots.

SILK FLAGS

(Unmounted)
8 in. by 12 in., 15 cents each.
36 in. by 60 in., $6.00 each.

WOOL BUNTING

(Unmounted)
3 ft. by 6 ft., $4.00.
5 ft. by 10 ft., $7.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Spring Institutes Are at Hand

Order your literature EARLY and GENEROUSLY.

To every institute order amounting to $2 will be added for use as souvenirs, one dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $3, will be added for use as souvenirs, two dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $5, will be added for use as souvenirs, three dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

New S. T. I. Medal

to be used as the award in
PRIZE ESSAY CONTESTS

An attractive medal at a popular price.
Gold plated, price, 50 cents
Gold filled, price, 75 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

AS A KENTUCKIAN SEES IT

"It is manifest to everybody that the cause of prohibition is gaining rapidly not only in this country but all over the world," said United States Senator J. C. W. Beckham, for seven years governor of Kentucky, in a recent address. "The people have learned that the liquor traffic is not only morally and socially an evil but that it is a great economic waste. I have been interested in a number of issues in this state and in this country since I first came to manhood and took an interest and part in the political affairs of the state and country, but I say to you there has never been any question in which I am more interested and in which I can see more of far-reaching, incalculable benefit to the people of this state than I do in prohibition, and the elimination of the liquor traffic, not only from Kentucky but from this entire nation. I rejoice in it more than I have ever rejoiced in any personal success of my own to see the growth of this sentiment throughout the country. You see it here in Kentucky. You can go to the national capital and see it there, and you will be as surprised as I have been to see the strength of that sentiment in Washington."

ONE PLUS

(Continued from Page Twelve)

provement you have made in the Sunday school—wonderful. But this is a hard place, Mr. Strong."

"So I have been told," was the noncommittal answer.

"Yes," resumed the editor in a most sympathetic voice, "it is a hard place, indeed. The Reverend Mr. Reynolds found it so trying he could not stay. A fine man, too, was Mr. Reynolds, but he could see it was not best to remain. I have no doubt you will feel the same way, Mr. Strong. It does not pay a man of your talents and ability to spend his life in a place like this. You will go, also, and I shall not blame you at all—not at all."

Mr. Strong smiled. "No," he said, "you would not blame me, but you would despise me for a quitter. Besides, where could a man better spend the best years of his life than where there is good to be done?"

"Where, indeed?" agreed the editor, smiling now more blandly than ever. He arose to go, holding out his hand. "For all that, I think you will think Mr. Reynolds was right in going."

PASS THE HAT

A Unique Coin Collector Representing a Hat—A Novel Way for the Local W. C. T. U. to Raise Money

Each hat holds ten coins, nickels or dimes, which are slipped in the hat card in the little compartments toward the outer edge of the hat. The object for which the money is raised may be written or printed on the hat bands.

These little hat collectors are finished with blue or red bands and orders will be filled in equal parts of each color, making it possible to easily conduct a contest by giving the blues to one side and the reds to the other.

Price, per dozen, 25 cents; fifty, 75 cents; one hundred, $1.25; five hundred, $5.00, postpaid.

An extra charge for printing the name of the local union or the object for which the money is raised will be made and estimates upon same gladly furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

Anti-Beer Publications

LEAFLETS

Beer From an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
Beer, Fact and Fiction
Beer a Dangerous Drink
What a Beerless Army Did
Beer Drinking and Its Effects Upon Human Progeny
Beer and Wine
Beer an Insidious Poison
Boy or Beer Barrel (cartoon)
The Brewer's Slaves (cartoon)
Is Beer a Liquid Food?
Beer or Flour
Revelation of Science Concerning Beer
The Food Value in Beer
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

Beer Not a Hygienic Drink
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred 15 cents.

Beer Drinking Injures Health
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Beer the So-Called Temperance Drink
Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

POSTERS

Beer
Beware (English or German)
Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $3.50.
Beer or Flour
Price, 10 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $4.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

"I think so now, and I also think I am right in staying."

When Professor Romar came home, he was informed of the visit. "It flattered me in a way," admitted the minister, "by showing me that he considered me no mean opponent. He would not have resorted to such a method of trying to get rid of me if he had not felt that way."

"His visit was a warning," said Professor Romar decidedly. "I know him better than you do. He puts on that smooth, smiling front when he is plotting bad business. He is warning you to preach a little less vigorously. Mr. Manning and several others have stopped their subscriptions on account of your last sermon. Others will stop theirs, too, after they get their minds made up. They can't quite at once reach the point of going back on their town paper. It requires time and education. Just keep hammering away."

"I intend to do that very thing, and it would take a more persuasive man than Mr. Jason to convince me that I shall have to follow Mr. Reynolds. While we are on this subject, there is one thing I want to find out. Where do these young men get their liquor?"

"It is shipped in from other states. One man is thought to be back of it. In reality it is Jason, but he uses this other fellow for a 'cat's paw.' We have never succeeded in getting evidence against them. Jason seems to know all the ways of dodging the law. He got so angry with me last year that he vowed I should go, but you see I am still here. The directors are on my side and I am not afraid of him. But he can do more to you than he can to me. My staying depends on the will of a few men, but your staying depends on whether or not he can make things too hot for you."

The minister smiled. "I think I can stand a pretty warm climate," he said quietly. "Just the same, we will find out about this liquor business. We shall not make much headway till we do."

(To be continued)

Northern California W. C. T. U. Pushing Law Enforcement

DORCAS J. SPENCER

The last state convention made a record for devising liberal things. A year of strenuous campaigning was finished, but there was no resting by the wayside, only an unbroken, steady, onward movement. The new year is rich in its plans and richer in the faithful workers who will carry them out.

Mrs. Sara J. Dorr, the state president, has been at the legislature since it convened faithfully waiting for every opportunity to promote our work. The vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Addie G. Estes, has been with her some of the time and Mrs. Anna Pettit, the first vice-president, the entire period.

The legislature of California has a way of its own of putting a recess of a month right into the middle of the session. During the first weeks bills are introduced in great numbers, but few but emergency measures are passed. Then the solons return to their homes and are expected to employ the month of February in mutual discussion with their constituents regarding the bills to be acted upon at the remainder of the session.

Needless to say, both wets and drys are very anxiously watching each other as every move is made for legislation that most concerns them. In the last days of January many bills relating to the liquor traffic were introduced and out of the mass some measure will be fought out. Only the thrilling interest of the war news detracts attention from the study of the bills to be considered.

Mrs. Estes is now in the field. Miss Anna E. Chase, National lecturer for the department of Scientific Temperance Instruction, is also afield and engaged far ahead for her very successful school lectures, for which she has had made new slides and charts.

Mrs. Louisa J. Taft, state superintendent of Moral Education and Race Betterment, has been ordained to the ministry. She does not desire to take a pastorate but is widening her avenues of usefulness, she believes, by this step. Our state Press superintendent, Miss Mary Helen McLean, has become editor of the White Ribbon Ensign. It goes without saying that a woman who does things is an enthusiast and eager to enter every open door. When Dr. Sara E. Wise, a practising physician of San Francisco, who has long specialized on work with mothers and children and whose medical knowledge and moral sense have made her an authority, heard the call of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, sounded in the interests of humanity, she responded at once by locking her office door and beginning a lecture tour which is proving a brilliant success, from "baby clinics," an important feature, to local lecture courses, and every variation that suggests itself as an aid to the domestic education of mothers.

Mrs. Frances C. Gilmore, president of San Francisco county, has been for some months addressing woman's clubs and other societies emphasizing the enforcement of the Red Light law, sponsored by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. A vast amount of work was done creating the sentiment that secured its passage. It was next adopted by popular vote as a constitutional amendment, and since then the tug of war has been its enforcement in San Francisco. The criminal indifference of city officials has thrown the prosecution of this work upon unofficial and voluntary organizations and individual efforts. The W. C. T. U. has contributed generously to the moral and financial support and public interest is again directed to "cleaning up the city."

Comments of the Indiana Press on the Prohibition Victory

"The legislature has removed from state politics a question that for many years has been a disturbing element and frequently has impeded wholesome legislation," says the Richmond (Ind.) Item.

"The commercial life of the state has no fear of the effect of the legislation upon financial affairs," remarks the Logansport (Ind.) Tribune. "Once the stalwart antagonists of the anti-liquor forces, business interests have had a mathematical change of heart. Once anti-liquor legislation was opposed on the ground that to eliminate the liquor industry would work a hardship on business; a different view is held now and it is confidently predicted that the merchant class of the state will find ledger approval of the law which eliminates the saloon."

"We do not recall an action in state legislation where supporters of the defeated interests have come so near to conceding that, after all, the victory is for the welfare of the state and the rising generation. Those who favored prohibition are, of course, happy and the most of those who opposed it seem to be at least resigned," is the comment of the Indianapolis News.

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture
for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful — relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

A COMPENDIUM OF TEMPERANCE TRUTH

By EDITH SMITH DAVIS

Superintendent of Scientific Temperance Instruction, World's and National W. C. T. U.

Every Phase of the Alcohol Problem Covered

INVALUABLE TO ALL LIBRARIES
A Reference Book which no temperance lecturer or writer can afford to be without

An Alcohol Encyclopedia in a Nutshell

Two hundred and forty pages
Tuffibre Leather Paper Binding
PRICE FIFTY CENTS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

GRAN'PAP GRINGER'S EXAMINATION

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

over and to each child was presented his own notched stick for purposes of comparison. It was found that Liza Lu had the most, and the deepest nicks; while Benjy Jim and pretty Malindy tied for second place.

After this important matter was settled the old man rose to his tall height and said, "You-uns tell yer pappys and mammys that Liza Lu air going ter Hindman 'ith me next week ter see 'f she kin be kept thyar ter school. An' when they larn her ter read I calculate ter take Benjy Jim an' afterward little Malindy, 'f my money holds out. Liza Lu kin teach the rest o' you-uns next year, when I calculate she oughter be eddicated."

For a moment all the children stared with open mouths, then Benjy Jim started off with a shout and ran down to the spring-lot to let off steam. Gran'pap's eyes followed him smilingly; but he said, "I hope he arn't teched in the head." Little Malinda looked half frightened at the thought of leaving her mammy and her mountain home. But when her sister, Samanthy Ann, whispered, "Honey, ye won't be 'bliged ter go while yer so little," the blue eyes cleared and the yellow curls bobbed with glee over present and future prospects.

But Liza Lu just threw herself into her grandfather's arms and cried. Surprised, the old man said, as he smoothed her long brown locks, "'f yer don't want larnin', yer needn't ter hev hit."

"Gran'pappy, I never wanted nothin' like I want ter learn ter read. Hit's jus' goin' ter pleasure me nigh 'bout ter death."

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

The birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens may be observed all through the month of March by increasing the circulation of the official paper. If you were not able to hold a Union Signal Day meeting on March 1, plan to do so later on.

What Our Friends Say

"I am enclosing one dollar for renewal of my subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, for which I get the full value of my investment. I do not understand how so many white ribboners get along without this paper and spend their money and time on cheap magazines. Their excuse is, 'I have no time to read it.' I take the time and then pass it along to others who enjoy it."

"I am greatly pleased with the 'Resurrection of Blanktown Union' in THE UNION SIGNAL of February 8 and am writing our superintendent of Literature to send out letters to each local president asking that it be used at a UNION SIGNAL Day meeting in March, the members taking the several characters as suggested. I believe if this is done we can about double our subscription list."

"Dear UNION SIGNAL: Literally true for THE UNION SIGNAL fills a peculiar place and for years and years I have taken it and feel I cannot do without it. Enclosed find $1.00 for a year's subscription for another to whom I think it will do good."

SUBSCRIBE FOR THE

Monthly Budget of New Publications

and keep in touch with latest and newest literature issued at National Headquarters.

ONE DOLLAR

per year is the subscription price and this small investment brings to your desk large returns.

At the close of each month you will receive a sample of all leaflets, booklets, posters, etc., published during the current month.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago,

An Appeal To Physicians

"Knowing what you must know of the tragedy of alcohol, how can you for a single day lend the influence of your example to its use as a beverage in your community?" is the question Henry Stauffer, superintendent of the Fox River Valley Efficiency League, in an open letter, recently asked of the physicians of his state.

"It is with some hesitation that I, a layman, address you on the burning issue of today—the beverage and medicinal use of alcohol. My reason for so doing is the fact that my conversation with hundreds of physicians in Wisconsin and Michigan, has led me to believe that but few members of your noble profession fully appreciate the great value to the community of the physicians' testimony on the injurious effects of alcohol.

"During the last few months, one hundred and eleven physicians in Michigan, willingly signed for publication, a statement containing the following:

"'Alcohol is poison . . . we positively condemn the beverage use of all alcoholic liquors, including beer and wine, because, by their effect on the germ plasm they curse the unborn child; because even their moderate use has been proven to reduce the efficiency of the user; and, because in multitudes of cases, the continued use of alcohol in moderation proves to be impossible. The moderate drinker is a social menace.'

"It pains me to be obliged to say, that on their own testimony, or that of fellow physicians, but a small per cent of these men are abstainers. The majority are occasional or moderate drinkers. Some bear the unenviable tag, 'boozefighter,' and a few of them are sad examples of the tragic truth of the resolutions which they signed.

"The unbiased, unbought testimony of a physician on this particular subject is the most valuable that can be given. Now, in view of the fact that your opinion and example are certain to have great weight in shaping the conduct and public policy of the community, in all seriousness I urge on you the necessity of setting an example of total abstinence, and also of wholly discontinuing the use of alcohol in your practice. You must be well aware of the fact that the example of the drinking doctor goes far toward neutralizing the positive testimony of scientists and efficiency experts regarding the effects of alcohol.

"The average man is not able to free himself wholly from the influence of such conduct. To him such example simply means: If booze were bad the doctor would not drink it.

"Knowing what you must know of the tragedy of alcohol, how can you for a single day lend the influence of your example to its use as a beverage in your community? Whether you will to have it so or not, the boys and young men look up to you as a learned and successful man. 'The higher one's position in society the greater is his obligation to set a good example.'

"Those who are informed on the subject know that the use of alcohol as medicine is wholly unnecessary and dangerous. Dr. Robert E. Minahan, of Green Bay, says: 'The administration of alcoholic beverages in the treatment of disease has practically ceased among intelligent physicians.' In his letter to me Dr. S. J. Crumbine, secretary of the Kansas Board of Health, says: 'Physicians pretty generally are now convinced that the use of liquor as a medicine is a delusion and a snare, and it is rarely, if ever, indicated in any disease.'

"I shall not soon forget the shock experienced when a physician of high standing in Michigan confessed to me that time and again he had killed patients by the use of alcohol while still under the old delusion that alcohol was a stimulant. The common sense of mankind rightly condones the practice of this man because he did the best he and the profession knew at the time; but the time of ignorance on this subject is past. If its use be so dangerous and if it be unnecessary, why use it at all?"

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 pounds, and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for booklet 23 I'd like to tell you my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Boulevard. Chicago

Tired, Nervous Men and Women

who are languid, sleepless and physically run-down get immediate relief and lasting benefits from the regular use of Scott's Emulsion after meals.

Its chief constituent is nature's greatest body-building force to strengthen the organs and nerve centers, grain by grain, to rebuild physical and mental energy.

No alcohol or opiate in SCOTT'S.

Refuse Substitutes.

Scott & Bowne,
14-60 Bloomfield, N.J.

New L. T. L. Pin

in red, white and blue
Price 3 cents each; 25, 50 cents; per 100, $1.50

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SEATTLE'S POLICEWOMEN VALUE PROHIBITION

"No greater factor has entered into the sum total of human happiness in Seattle than the prohibitory law and its most excellent enforcement by the mayor and the chief of police," declares Blanche H. Mason, superintendent of the women's division of the Seattle police department, in a report published in the Policeman's Monthly. "The destitution and poverty formerly dealt with in this division in family cases has appreciably decreased owing to the fact that heads of families are now able to hold steady jobs and spend their money for legitimate needs in the home, instead of over the saloon bar for their own gratification."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MARCH 8, 1917 | No. 10

PROHIBITION MEASURES PASSED BY SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS AND SIGNED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

ALASKA PROHIBITION BILL, passed by the Senate and House without the formality of a roll-call.

PORTO RICAN CITIZENSHIP BILL, containing a provision for prohibition, with a referendum to the people if desired by them.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILL, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District.

AMENDMENT TO POSTOFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, prohibiting the use of the mails for liquor advertising purposes, and also prohibiting, excepting for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes, the shipment of alcoholic liquors, through the channels of interstate commerce, to individuals in states that now prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SWEEPING PROHIBITION VICTORIES: PASSAGE OF DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA PROHIBITION BILL—POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL CARRYING "BONE DRY" AND ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING MEASURES

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Word was received at the Capitol on Monday, February 26, that the President would appear before Congress at one o'clock. Again the galleries were filled and every member of the lawmaking body who was in the city seemed to be in his place. At five minutes of one the Senate was announced and filed slowly into the chamber to the seats reserved for it. Promptly the announcement was made, "The President of the United States." This brought every one to his feet with a burst of applause as the President ascended the rostrum, shook hands with the Vice-President and the Speaker of the House and, turning to the assembly, began his address. President Wilson speaks without effort; his voice is clear, with a fine carrying quality, and it does not rise above a conversational tone, but is heard distinctly in all parts of that vast audience chamber.

Declaring he is not proposing or contemplating war, or any step that leads to war, yet insisting upon the rights of American commerce on the seas, President Wilson asked Congress to authorize him to proceed to a course of "armed neutrality," to arm American merchant ships with defensive arms and take such steps as may be necessary. He also asked for sufficient credit to enable the government to provide adequate means of protection.

The President's Message

The President spoke for fifteen minutes and, bowing to the assembly, left the chamber. Then the buzz of tongues began, the Senate withdrew and the sharp, resounding whack of the Speaker's gavel, with the well-known and oft repeated phrase, "The House will be in order," summoned the Representatives to routine work.

The visit of the President to Congress was followed by the calling of committees on Foreign Relations in both Houses to so formulate the requests of the President that they could be presented in proper shape to their respective bodies.

There is a wide divergence of opinion among Senators and Representatives respecting the request of President Wilson, and this is not confined to party lines, Democrats and Republicans being equally divided in their expressions of approval or disapproval. It is evident that there will be great disinclination on the part of many to give the President broader powers than he now has.

The same day, the evening papers brought the account of the sinking of the Cunard liner, "Laconia," by a German submarine. This aroused a feeling of indignation in Congress. Secretary of State Lansing was summoned to the White House and, after an hour's conference with the President, the following statement from official quarters was made: "The President regards the sinking of the 'Laconia' by a German submarine as a clear-cut case requiring no further investigation."

District of Columbia Prohibition Bill Passed

Prohibition has won another victory in Congress. On Wednesday, February 28, the House, by an overwhelming majority of 273 to 137, passed the Sheppard dry bill for the District of Columbia. The measure, already approved by the Senate, now only requires the signature of the President to make it a law.

Prohibition in Effect November 1, 1917

The terms of the bill provide that at midnight on Wednesday, October 31, 1917, the doors of the saloons of the capital city shall be closed, God grant it may be forever. The victory was preceded by the fiercest parliamentary battle that has been fought in many a long year. It will be remembered that, after passing the Senate, the measure went to the District of Columbia committee of the House, before which hearings were held day after day. When the friends of the bill declared they had finished their side of the question, the opponents, although they, too, had been presenting their views in conjunction with our side, urged more time for all to be heard and the members of the committee, a majority of whom were against the bill, in every way possible maneuvered for delay. This action on their part became so apparent that our friends appealed to the Committee on Rules to discharge the District committee from further consideration of the measure. This was most humiliating to the latter committee, which rose to the situation and promised to report the bill Tuesday, February 27. Chairman Johnson did this promptly at the hour of noon. At once the friends and enemies of the measure lined up. Representative Crisp of Georgia and Representative Randall of California were on guard, watching for pitfalls, and up to eleven o'clock at night the question was still unsettled. The next day the battle was renewed for hours by a stubborn filibuster, which kept the House in a wrangle all day and up to nine o'clock at night, when the final vote was taken with the result as above stated. Ten tiresome roll-calls on various amendments had failed to stem the tide of opposition. It takes forty-five minutes to call the roll of the House, but victory came at last.

The passage of this bill will affect 264 retail establishments and close 91 wholesale places and four breweries. Under the terms of the bill, the manufacture and sale of liquors, or the gift of liquors are forbidden in the District of Columbia after November 1, 1917. The District excise board will be abolished on the date the act goes into effect.

If there was any lingering doubt in the minds of saloonkeepers as to whether Washington was to be in the "bone dry" class on inauguration day, it has been definitely removed by action of the excise board. Just to make the matter absolutely certain, the board, in executive session, decided to give full notice to the public and licensees that it demands strict adherence to paragraph six of the excise law, which provides for the closing of saloons "on Sundays and inauguration days." This means that all saloons will be closed from one o'clock Saturday night till seven o'clock Tuesday morning. The notice is intended to convey a warning to the general public and licensees that any infraction of the law will be strictly dealt with.

Postoffice Appropriation Bill Carrying Reed "Bone Dry" Amendment Passed

The Postoffice Appropriation bill, with the Reed "bone dry" amendment, passed by the House a week ago, had gone to the conference committee, because of a few changes in the main bill, and word reached us Wednesday afternoon that they were in a deadlock and the bill was, in all probability, lost, but later it was reported the committee had reached an agreement and, in this case, the Reed amendment is virtually assured of adoption.

To the surprise of all the flood-control bill, concerning which a battle has raged for several years, was agreed to Tuesday evening in the Senate by a vote of 40 to 15. This commits the government to an ultimate expenditure of $50,000,000 on the Mississippi and Sacramento rivers.

Senator Borah of Idaho introduced a resolution in the Senate appropriating $6,000,000 for relief in the present food crisis and providing for a thorough investigation of the cause of high prices.

Washington is rapidly assuming a gala appearance in readiness for the inauguration. Streets are having the finishing touches added in the way of decorations and extra forces are working to complete the various courts and stands. Major Raymond W. Pullman, superintendent of police, and chairman of the inaugural committee on public order, has issued a series of instructions for members of his command and advice to the public which is aimed to save the people cash, valuables and embarrassment.

Inauguration of President Wilson

It is possible that President Wilson will take the oath of office as President of the United States for the next four years at the Capitol on Sunday. This is because of the fact that March 4 falls on that day of the week and the public inauguration ceremonies will take place at the Capitol on Monday, March 5. It had been President Wilson's intention to take the oath in a more or less informal manner at the White House Sunday at noon, and there has remained the possibility that he again would be sworn in Monday in public at the time of delivering his inaugural address. The legislative situation in Congress may make it necessary for President Wilson to be at the Capitol Sunday for the purpose of signing bills passed at the last minute, in which case, it is said today, it is quite possible that arrangements will be made for him to take the first oath at the Capitol, rather than at the White House. Up to date, thirteen state governors have signified their intention of taking part in the inaugural parade and, in addition, the mayors of many large cities will be here.

On Monday last, just after Mrs. President Wilson had left the Capitol, where, with her mother and other members of the family, she had listened to the message of her distinguished husband, word reached her of the sudden death of her sister, Mrs. Maury of Roanoke, Virginia. It was but a few weeks ago that Mrs. Maury was a guest at the White House where she spent several weeks. This is the first break in Mrs. Wilson's family circle and the sad event has been a severe blow. Her death will halt all White House social affairs for the present.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., Friday, March 2, 1917

MISSOURI LEGISLATURE PASSES REFERENDUM PROHIBITION MEASURE AND CONSIDERS FAVORABLY OTHER BILLS

On March 1, the senate and the house of the Missouri legislature voted to submit a constitutional amendment providing for state-wide prohibition at the November 1918 election; if adopted to take effect January 1, 1920. The following telegram received from Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., announced this victory for prohibition: "Prohibition referendum in 1918 sent to engrossment in Missouri house and senate and final passage is certain. Honest election bills have also passed the senate and will pass the house. The bill for Frances E. Willard Day, which has already passed the house, has been favorably reported in the senate, and will certainly pass. A great victory and a great day."

New Mexico's Prohibition Submission Bill Signed by Governor Lindsey

The bill passed by both houses of the New Mexico legislature, submitting to the people in November, 1917, the question of a prohibition amendment to the constitution, has been signed by Governor W. E. Lindsey, who by virtue of his office as lieutenant governor, upon the death of Governor DeBaca became the chief executive of the state. The amendment if adopted becomes effective January 1, 1918.

The wife of the new governor, Mrs. W. E. Lindsey, is the vice president of the New Mexico W. C. T. U. and the governor has been prominent in the prohibition movement.

Woman Suffrage Scores New Victories—Ontario Women Assured of Suffrage

The women of Ontario, Canada, were virtually assured the right to vote when the government, through Premier Hearst, endorsed the bill providing for equal suffrage. The premier said the government would try to devise some plan under which women might vote at the next general election.

"Having taken our women into partnership with us in our tremendous task," said Premier Hearst in announcing the government's decision, "I ask can we justly deny them a share in the government of the country, the right to have a say about the making of the laws they have been so heroically trying to defend? My answer is, I think not."

Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas Signs "Bone Dry" Bill

The Kansas "bone dry" law was signed the morning of February 23, in Representative hall, by Governor Capper, while 150 legislators stood around the speaker's rostrum and sang with gusto, "No One Knows How Dry I Am." It went into effect a few hours later when published in the official state paper. According to advance notices, the railroads have ceased accepting shipments of liquor for Kansas points.

The signing of the measure turned out to be more of a ceremony than was expected. The governor had intended to sign the law much in the regular course of business, with members of the temperance committees of the two houses and a few active temperance workers gathered in his office. But the legislators wouldn't stand for it. They wanted to be present and add some noise to the last words said over John Barleycorn in Kansas. The members of both houses sang the affecting dirge already mentioned as Governor Capper signed the law. The signature, by the way, was affixed with a Kansas pen, picked from the governor's desk at random, and then presented to the Kansas W. C. T. U.

Most Important Law of Session

Just before signing the measure the governor expressed the sentiments of Kansas in regard to the new law in a few words. He said:

"Gentlemen of the Legislature:

"No act of my term as governor of the state of Kansas gives me greater pleasure than the one you have invited me to come here and perform this morning. I believe the measure which I am about to sign is the most important that will be enacted by this legislature, and I think no measure that you will pass this session will give more satisfaction than this one. No measure will have the approval of the state of Kansas so unanimously as this measure, known as the 'bone dry' law. Not only because it will bring about a more effective enforcement of the law, but it will, in my judgment, come as near cleaning out the bootlegger and the jointist as it is possible for state legislation to do it. One very satisfactory phase of this legislation is the fact that this bill seems to meet with the approval of all political parties in this body. It passed almost unanimously, emphasizing, I think, the very important fact that the people of Kansas, without regard to party or class or creed, stand back of this great measure—the wiping out of the liquor traffic in the state. I think it will aid very materially in doing that. The people of Kansas undoubtedly are more deeply interested in this great question of wiping out the liquor business than any other one before the country today, and I believe that we shall, within a very short time, see the saloons absolutely wiped out of business from one end of this country to the other.

"Now, I am very proud of the fact that Kansas is recognized throughout this country for its leadership on this great question. In Kansas, and in the country generally, the good people are saying more emphatically than ever before, the public health, public peace, public morals and the public welfare demand the abolishing of this traffic from the country.

"I take pleasure in affixing my signature, because I think this will make Kansas the cleanest and the soberest state in this Union."

ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE GIVES RIGHT TO VOTE IN PRIMARIES

The senate and house of the Arkansas legislature have passed a bill permitting women to vote in all primary elections in Arkansas.

Woman suffrage measures have been voted down by small majorities in New Mexico and Delaware legislatures during the past week.

NEW JERSEY CITY ABOLISHES INTOXICATING LIQUORS

The city commission of Millville, N. J., on February 16, by unanimous vote adopted a most drastic and sweeping ordinance abolishing intoxicating liquors from the city. The ordinance prohibits the importation by any common carriers, the hauling by expressmen or the receiving by any consignee of any alcoholic liquors within the city limits. At the time of the passage of this ordinance the city hall was packed by members of the organized Bible classes and brotherhoods and churchmen generally.

IDAHO ADOPTS MEMORIAL TO CONGRESS

The senate of the Idaho legislature has adopted a memorial to Congress asking the submission of an amendment to the Federal Constitution to prohibit the manufacture of intoxicating liquors.

THIRTEEN REASONS WHY THE DAYS OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC ARE NUMBERED

CLINTON WUNDER

Mr. Wunder, a graduate of the University of Cincinnati ('14), for over two years served as publicity manager of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association of America. A year ago he turned his back on his old life and has since given himself to Christian work.

There has been so much said about the liquor question that I am sure it would interest you to know some of the reasons why I believe the liquor traffic of the United States will rapidly become a thing of the past. I have therefore outlined thirteen points which seem to me reasons why the liquor forces are losing ground and eventually will be stamped out. I make these statements after personal observation of the problems that the organized liquor traffic must meet.

(1) There are five great divisions of the business, each division warring upon some other branch. These are: the wholesale liquor dealers and distillers, the brewers, the importers, the mail order liquor dealers and the retailers. The brewer and distiller fight over the alcoholic content of their respective beverages, each blaming the other for the evils resulting. The retailer, because of the high cost of operation and the fact that he is often controlled by the manufacturer and the wholesaler, is bent only upon his immediate profit, and therefore refuses often to "behave," causing trouble for the more enlightened men of the business. The importer feels that his fine wines would not be affected if it were not for the unlawful actions of the domestic trade, and he feels that he is in a class by himself. The mail order dealer fears only national prohibition and thrives upon state prohibition laws, which permit him to ship into a state without being forced to pay high license.

(2) There are no volunteers in the wet camp, and all who work for that cause must be well paid.

(3) There is a general lack of enthusiasm on the part of many in the business.

(4) The evidence to be found of the evil results of the use of alcoholic beverages is becoming greater every day..

(5) The argument of efficiency, which has been so rapidly developed in late years by industry.

(6) The moving picture and its constant portrayal of scenes showing drunkenness and its results.

(7) The press of the United States.

(8) The action of a number of European countries that have adopted dry measures.

(9) The organized church sentiment against the traffic.

(10) The fact that the best type of men in the liquor business are withdrawing and investing their capital in other enterprises. This is especially true of the second generation of the families whose financial interests are largely in the brewing and distilling business.

(11) The increased taxation, cost of operation and cost of campaigns. The latter, consisting of large contributions, usually in proportion to the amount of business done, has been an increasingly heavy drain on the resources of the liquor men for many years.

(12) The general insecurity of the traffic due to constant attacks and an ever increasing number of victories on the part of the dry forces.

(13) The knowledge on the part of the trade that strict obedience to regulatory laws, including sales to minors, closing hours, sales to drunkards, would practically mean the elimination of profit.

When I became convinced of the impossibility of my continued alliance with the liquor forces, in view of my new vision of the social principles which Jesus Christ stood for, I resigned from the position I held with them. It was at a social service dinner that I heard an International Association secretary give the message that changed me. It took me back to the Sunday school days of long ago, back to ideals long submerged. The speaker told of college graduates who were "niched." I saw myself such a man and decided to get out of the niche. And I did get out.

The months since that dinner have been one long succession of answers to prayer and happy fellowship with Christ, in my new field in His kingdom.—North American Student.

RUSSIAN BANK INSPECTOR SAYS RUSSIA IS "BONE DRY"

"The most appealing Americanism I have encountered since I entered the United States is the term 'bone dry,'" remarked Nicholas Iserguine, inspector of state savings banks of Russia, to a representative of the Chicago Daily News.

"It exactly describes the condition of Russia," declared Mr. Iserguine. "Our country is 'bone dry' to the extent that not even beer or mild wines can be obtained. We are fighting in the world war, with every available man at the front, yet since the outbreak of the war the deposits in our state savings banks have increased from 1,800,000,000 rubles to 3,600,000,000 rubles.

Three Years' Work Equals Seventy-three

"Thus in deposits we have about doubled in less than three years the amount accumulated in seventy-three years previous to the outbreak of the war, for our state banks are about seventy-five years old. This vast increase means the enrichment of the poorer classes. They have become the capitalists through the mass of their savings.

"Abolition of all alcoholic liquors—a 'bone dry' regime—brought about this wonderful prosperity. Of course, the war expenditures have gone back to the people, but they have put the money to their credit in the government's banks instead of wasting it on orgies of drink.

Sees Decrease in Insanity

"There have been many other gratifying results," he continued. "Insanity has decreased to a minimum. There are almost no mental disorders among the soldiers at the front, whereas in the Japanese-Russian war these formed a serious problem. Most of the Russian homes are of wood, and in olden days the fire menace was constant and dreaded. Conflagrations have been reduced ninety per cent in towns and cities.

"The Russian peasant was not a regular drinker in the old days, but he expended his earnings about once a month on an orgy which ended in deep intoxication. Now he is sober all the time, not only because he has to be but because in the light of fresh experience he desires to be."

COMPLETING THE JOB —Los Angeles Evening Express.

PASSAGE OF DISTRICT PROHIBITION BILL CAUSES REJOICING ON UNION SIGNAL DAY AT NATIONAL HEADQUARTERS

MISS GORDON GIVES REVIEW OF NATIONAL PROHIBITION TRIUMPHS WITNESSED AT NATIONAL CAPITAL

March first, the birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens, the beloved leader for many years of the white ribbon forces, and editor-in-chief of the official paper, is a day of sacred memories. It is observed at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters by an informal gathering of the workers at the noontide hour, to talk of matters which may help to promote the work and to rejoice over victories.

The day is associated not only with our heroic leader, Mrs. Stevens, but with one of the greatest triumphs of the prohibition cause, the passage, March 1, 1913, of the Webb-Kenyon bill by the House of Representatives, over the veto of President Taft. Again this year the day marked the passage of another momentous piece of national legislation, for the morning of March 1 the Associated Press announced the news that the House of Representatives, by a gratifying majority of 273 to 137, had passed the District of Columbia prohibition bill.

Another cause for rejoicing by the Headquarters family was the presence of Miss Anna A. Gordon, the National President and editor-in-chief of THE UNION SIGNAL, who had returned the Saturday previous from Washington, where she had been for nearly six weeks. In response to an urgent appeal from the entire company, Miss Gordon told a fascinating story of the events in Congress relating to prohibition during the past month and a half.

Four Important Prohibition Bills Passed During This Session of Congress

At the beginning of her talk she called attention to the fact that before this session of Congress ends President Wilson will have had the privilege of signing four prohibition measures: The bill providing for a drastic prohibitory law for the territory of Alaska; the Porto Rican Citizenship bill, which provides for prohibition, with the privilege of a referendum to the people if they desire it; the District of Columbia prohibition bill, and the Postoffice Appropriation bill, carrying a rider providing for an anti-liquor advertising and "bone dry" anti-shipping measure.

Speaking of the personnel of the present Congress which has put through such worthy legislation, Miss Gordon said, "We have always had in Congress strong Congressmen to champion our cause, but their tribe is increasing with remarkable rapidity. The fact that never before have we approached a temperance program of the magnitude of the one of this year proves that we have a fine set of men on both the Republican and Democratic side of the House and Senate. There has been more prohibition legislation in this short session of Congress than was ever attempted in any long term of Congress. Never has there been a year when prohibition has been so frequently the theme at banquets, in hotel lobbies and on the street corners. As the boys say, 'It has had the center of the stage in Washington.'"

Mrs. Stevens' Long Years of Effort to Secure National Legislation to Protect Prohibition Territory

To the decision of the United States Supreme Court sustaining the constitutionality of the Webb-Kenyon bill Miss Gordon ascribed much of the added interest in the question. She recalled, in a most interesting review of history, the long period of years that the Woman's Christian Temperance Union had been working for an anti-liquor shipping law, the yearly visits made by Mrs. Stevens to Washington to speak in committee hearings for this measure, variously known through the sixteen years it has been agitated as the Littlefield-Carmack, the Hepburn-Dolliver, the Kenyon-Sheppard and the Webb-Kenyon bills. She told of its passage by Senate and House and its veto by President Taft, followed promptly by its passage in both Senate and House over the veto of the President; the testing by the liquor interests of the constitutionality of the measure in the lower courts, the carrying of it to the highest tribunal of the land, the United States Supreme Court, and the last dramatic chapter—the decision of the judges of this court, by vote of 7 to 2, that it was constitutional, the opinion being delivered by Chief Justice White in a speech that in its advocacy of prohibition might have been made by an ardent temperance reformer. "Undoubtedly the effect of this significant decision was felt by the Senate and influenced its action in voting upon the District of Columbia Prohibition bill on January 9, and passing it by a vote of 55 to 32," said Miss Gordon. An incident connected with the passage of the bill, which Miss Gordon modestly failed to relate, was reported to us by Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, our National Legislative superintendent. On the day of the passage by the Senate of the District bill there was born to Congressman Cooper of Ohio, a son. Meeting Mrs. Ellis soon after, he informed her of the happy event and volunteered the information that the little one had been named "Gordon Sheppard" Cooper. "For whom is the name 'Gordon'?" asked Mrs. Ellis. "For Anna A. Gordon, president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union," replied Mr. Cooper, who is a warm friend of the temperance cause, and evidently desired to honor his son by giving him the name of the leader of the white ribbon forces and the name of one of the authors of the District bill, Senator Sheppard, in commemoration of the great event of the day of his birth.

Testimony of Liquor Representative

An especially enlightening part of Miss Gordon's talk was her word pictures of certain hearings on the various prohibition bills, among them the anti-liquor advertising measure introduced by Senator Bankhead of Alabama. At this hearing appeared Tom Gilmore, president of the Model License League of America and the owner of Bonfort's Wine and Spirit Circular. The passage of the anti-liquor advertising measure meant the wiping out of the mail order liquor business, and Mr. Gilmore pleaded, as for his very life, for the saving of his publication from destruction. When cross-questioned, Mr. Gilmore cheerfully admitted that he had such a poor memory he could not tell the circulation of Bonfort's and did not know the number of pages devoted to advertising, although being the owner, regular reports were furnished him of these facts. He volunteered the belief that liquor of some kind was good for all people; that it agreed with him, his wife and children, and that he was quite willing to raise his family in a saloon environment.

Miss Gordon said that at the hearing the liquor representatives advanced not a single new argument. "It is the same old tune of 'Personal Liberty'," she explained, "with very little variation. Once in a while there is a reference to state rights, but that argument has been completely demolished by the vote on the 'bone dry' amendment to the Postoffice Appropriation bill. The advocates of the prohibition cause, however, have an abundance of new arguments to advance, for continually there is coming to them from the newer prohibition states, as well as from the older ones, evidence of the benefits, economic, social, hygienic and moral to be traced directly to prohibition."

"One of the most significant things to be noted in Congress is the change of attitude on the part of men who have formerly opposed prohibition," she continued. "Each member of the House and the Senate declares that he must vote to represent the sentiment of his constituency, but the prohibition territory is so rapidly increasing by vote of the people or act of the legislatures that the members of Congress need frequently to readjust their mental attitude to conform to the sentiments of their respective states. There is no doubt that many a man with a liquor constituency would gladly vote for prohibition, if he dared, and the satisfied look on the faces of the men who represent dry states speaks eloquently of their gratification at being in a position to do the popular as well as the virtuous thing."

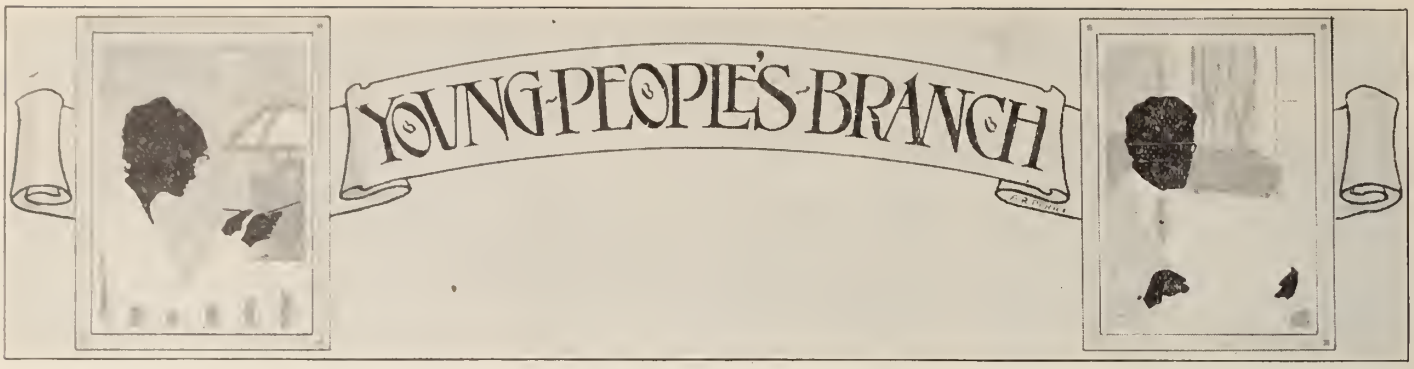
No One for a Dry Representative to Pair With

"An incident that was brought to my attention at the time of the vote in the House on the 'bone dry' amendment to the Postoffice Appropriation bill strikingly illustrates the trend of popular sentiment. A member of the House stopping at the Driscoll Hotel was in very poor health and consequently had not been away from the hotel for some days, but being an ardent friend of prohibition was insistent that he be taken to the House to vote on the measure. His wife demurred, promising to find another member of the House to pair with him, ordinarily a very easy thing to do. She went from one office to another in the Capitol, interviewed dozens of men, but not one could she find who was willing to admit that he intended to cast his vote against this dry measure, and she was obliged to return to her husband and confess that she could get no one to pair with him."

"As we were going down in the elevator on the House side of the Capitol after the vote," said Miss Gordon, "we met this man in his wheeled chair on his way to cast his vote. You can imagine his disappointment at arriving too late."

"Another sidelight on the high type of character of the average man elected to Congress comes to mind: There is a well-known Gospel mission on Pennsylvania avenue, the entire building being given over to humane and Gospel work. Congressmen and their wives have done a great deal to help this enterprise. Almost every Sunday night while I was in Washington I noticed the speakers at their meetings were Members of Congress. Recently the Hon. Champ Clark, Speaker of the House of Representatives, gave a very telling address, taking for his theme, 'The Bible.' His talk was optimistic, and in it he compared conditions in Congress twenty or thirty years ago with those of today, telling of the marvelous improvement, especially in the drinking habits of the members."

In closing her talk, Miss Gordon said, "And thus as the tide of temperance sentiment keeps rising higher and higher in Congress we know that the day is drawing near when our national lawmaking body will go on record in favor of a referendum to the states on the question of National Constitutional Prohibition. Every resolution adopted, every speech made, every letter written by our workers throughout the country is seed sown that will bear fruit in influencing our representatives in Washington to grant our appeal for the passage of the Sheppard-Gallinger-Webb-Smith bill."



"Attempt Great Things for God.
Expect Great Things from God."

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

MESSAGES FROM THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. GENERAL OFFICERS

APRIL—NATIONAL Y. P. B. MEMBERSHIP CAMPAIGN MONTH

THE HIGH AND HOLY PRIVILEGE OF YOUTH

ANNA A. GORDON, National President

Some of us who have seen many blessed years of active temperance service are almost tempted to envy those who are in the beginning of their devoted toil for God and our country.

The phenomenal program of national temperance measures enacted by the Sixty-fourth Congress leads us to believe that by 1920 we may be sure of the crowning victory of National Constitutional Prohibition. In the states the tide of prohibition sentiment is rising so rapidly that the United States Congress must speed up with its referendum on National Constitutional Prohibition if it gets ahead of a demand for this amendment from thirty-six commonwealths already free from the legalized liquor traffic.

The young people in our ranks are to enjoy the high and holy privilege of helping establish and maintain the "Golden Age" ahead of us. I congratulate you, members of the Young People's Branch, and bid you Godspeed upon the future's widening way. My heart rejoices in your plans for membership gains and for more adequate equipment for the service of this glorious today, and the still more glorious tomorrow of our redeemed republic.

EVERY COMMUNITY NEEDS A Y. P. B.

ELLA A. BOOLE, National Vice-President-at-Large

Every activity in life is calling for young people. The business world wants youth, vigor, and enthusiasm. The temperance reform, especially that part of the work under the leadership of the W. C. T. U., needs young men and young women, and the young people need the temperance work.

The young people are interested in schools. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a university of reforms, and through membership in the Y. P. B. young people may learn of all reforms. Identification with one reform begets interest in other reforms.

"Birds of a feather flock together." "A man is known by the company he keeps," and we have only to attend the great temperance demonstrations to be impressed with the fact that a great reform develops strong character in men and women. Every community ought to have a Young People's Branch.

OUR 1917 MEMBERSHIP GOAL

FRANCES P. PARKS, National Corresponding Secretary

Recognizing the vital importance of extending our organization to every hamlet and rural community in the land, of multiplying members and adding to our fighting force, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has set a goal of twenty per cent net gain for 1917. With the hearty approval of state presidents, my co-secretaries of the various states by signing the following have pledged their earnest co-operation in the effort to reach this goal:

"I resolve to meet the Challenge of a Big Task by doing all I can to expand organization and to reach the membership goal, a net gain of ..... members, set for my state by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

To you, dear young comrades, comes the privilege of launching the membership campaign of 1917 as a nation-wide movement. When you are extending your boundaries, adding one society after another to the Young People's Branch, you are not only strengthening the Branch, but you are contributing to the result hoped and prayed and labored for by state and National unions, and are helping along the great cause to which we are pledged. The Master is expecting great things of the young people of the nation. I am hoping and believing they will see a great vision and that April 14 may indeed prove a red letter day for the Young People's Branch.

OPPORTUNITY SPELLS RESPONSIBILITY

ELIZABETH PRESTON ANDERSON, National Recording Secretary

I write unto you, young men and young women, because you are strong. I congratulate you that you may put the strength of your youth into this last great drive against the age-long enemy of humanity, John Barleycorn. No generation which follows will have the opportunity you have to render the same glorious service to our beloved native land. There must be no slackening of effort until the white banner of prohibition floats over a redeemed country. Your fire, energy, and enthusiasm are needed, not only to aid in the last stage of this great battle, but also in the work of law-enforcement which must follow.

Your splendid optimism and your powers of persuasion are needed to enlist the young people of this country—in schools and colleges, in shops and factories and on the farms—in this most patriotic service for God and Home and Native Land.

RECOGNIZE GOD'S CLAIM

MARGARET C. MUNNS, National Treasurer

These glowing days of victory for the temperance cause make us all rejoice. The patient seed-sowing of our elders has resulted in a greater harvest, as was to be expected. The once unpopular subject has come to occupy largely the thoughts of the people, the front page of the daily paper and the attention of legislatures and Congress.

Our greatest incentive in the work of the past years has been the welfare of the young people, whose futures depend so greatly on their environment. Because of their vital connection with the home protection issue, it is fitting our young people should be alert to hasten the victory. A contribution to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund will advance the work of the organization on the outposts; a contribution to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund will assist in the state and national campaigns for prohibition, and the special missionary fund of the Young People's Branch will naturally appeal to its members.

While few young people have large incomes, it is well to recognize God's claim—"A tithe is the Lord's"—for to use for self one's entire income, be it large or small, is to rob God. "Bring ye all the tithes into the store house that there may be meat in mine house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of Hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." If you prove God and give to his work, which includes the temperance cause, even the one-tenth that belongs to Him, you help to hasten the coming of the Kingdom "on earth as it is in heaven."

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

BE A TALLOW CANDLE IF YOU CAN'T BE A POWERFUL LIGHT

HAVE YOU ENLISTED YOUR NEW MEMBER?

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National Y. P. B. General Secretary

"A snowflake is so very small
We scarcely think of it at all,
And yet enough of them will make
A barrier we cannot break.

"A drop of water is so light,
That as it falls it fades from sight,
And yet enough of them will be
A torrent, or a raging sea."

You see what I am leading to—the power of small things, of tiny things—if there are enough of them. It is the accumulation of small things that makes the large things.

It is the accumulation of effort persisted in that makes success. We hear about genius, but genius is only the result of continuous effort. The trouble is, many of us falter. We throw up our hands just when a little more effort, a little more patience, would bring us success.

It is a very fine line between success and failure, between profit and loss: so fine that we are often on the line and do not know it.

Did you win that new Y. P. B. member you went after? Did you secure his or her name under our pledge? Perhaps you came very near winning out and then failed. A little more persistence, a little more effort, and what seemed hopeless failure might have been a new member for your Branch.

One new member—just one—secured by you, then multiplied by 20,000 secured by the other members, would nearly double our power and helpfulness.

April, our great National Y. P. B. campaign month, is at hand. Will you try to win at least one new member? There is no failure except in no longer trying and we know that the one who endures is the one who wins. We are winning new members, but we want more, more, MORE and then some more!

You are the only person in the world who can win them over. Go after them! Excellent work is being done in some states and prospects are good for further improvement and increase, but we want to have a feeling of confidence, enthusiasm, persistence in a special degree throughout our campaign month.

D. L. Moody once told of a meeting held away out in a log school-house of the prairie regions. The announcement was this: "A meeting will be held by early candlelight." The first man who came brought a tallow dip with him. It did not light the building much; but the next man brought his candle, and the next family brought their candles. By the time the house was filled there was plenty of light, and so, "If we cannot all be powerful lights, we can at least be a tallow candle."

Your part, and mine in this campaign may seem small. It is small, measured alone, but then,—remember the snowflake; the drop of water; the tallow dip!

WANTED—RECRUITS FOR THE COLLEGE Y. P. B.

CHRISTINE I. TINLING, National Y. P. B. College Secretary

April will be our membership campaign month. I hope our college members are planning to have a large share in the enterprise of winning new recruits.

There is a splendid opportunity ready at hand in the State Normal Schools. As far as I can hear we have very few Branches in these institutions. The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, which is so strong in the colleges, is leaving the Normal Schools chiefly to us. They consider that work among prospective teachers, chiefly young women, is specially suited to the W. C. T. U. Let us gladly accept the responsibility.

Recently in the course of a talk at a public school, I asked the children how many of them had ever heard of Frances Willard. Very few hands were raised. This is not an isolated case, either. We cannot afford to let her influence wane, for mere lack of knowledge of her wonderful life. The rising generation needs the impress of that God-possessed personality. We must reach the teachers, and the best time to reach them is before they begin work, and the best place is the State Normal School.

We ought to have a strong Y. P. B. in every State Normal. It is especially suitable to emphasize this during membership campaign month. By organizing a Normal Y. P. B. we may win a large number of members in a short time.

Now whose business is it, do you think? Is it not the business of every Y. P. B. member who is a student in a Normal school, of every white-ribbon mother who has sent a daughter there, and of every local union that is situated where there is such a school?

There is probably not a Normal in the whole country which has not one of these three points of contact with the W. C. T. U. Please remember the prize offered to every student who will organize a Branch in his or her school. See THE UNION SIGNAL for February 15, page 11.

"The work of the world is done by few; God asks that a part be done by you."

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMS FOR APRIL, YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH CAMPAIGN MONTH, "A CALL TO THE COLORS"

ENLISTING	MARCHING
ORGANIZING	FIGHTING
TRAINING	VICTORY

Countersign or Password — "WON ONE."

We are in a campaign for 10,000 new Y. P. B. recruits. To win them we need volunteers. The call is given! Let every Y. P. B. member in the United States answer, "Ready!"

What more patriotic service can you render your country than to help banish its deadliest foe?

Let us enter this 1917 membership campaign with an enthusiasm which will refuse to even think of failure.

First Meeting

Song—"A Nation to Save," page 28.

Roll Call—"What I will try to do toward the enlistment of my friends into our Y. P. B."

Brief talk by young woman—"Our April Red Letter Day; Why We Observe It." (Send 15 cents to National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for life sketch of Frances J. Barnes.)

"What it means to become identified with our organization." By many members.

Signs of Victory—Temperance advances in our own community or state. Talk by young man.

A welcome service to new members.

Song—"A Charge to Keep I Have," page 63.

Second Meeting

Study.

Department Review—(Send 10 cts. to National W. C. T. U. for Superintendents' Manual).

For the special feature of this month a "Cold Water Banquet" is suggested and a reception to the new Y. P. B. members.

DO NOT FAIL TO OBSERVE
APRIL 14
Y. P. B. DAY.

Other Y. P. B. articles appear on page eleven.

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAMS FOR MARCH Y. P. B. MEETINGS

UNION SIGNAL Subscription Day (birthday of Lillian M. N. Stevens). (At this meeting there should be a discussion of plans for April, the Y. P. B. campaign month.)

First Meeting

Song—"Rise for the Day is Passing," page 25.

Roll Call—UNION SIGNAL "Tidbits."

Brief talk by W. C. T. U. member, "The History of the W. C. T. U. during Mrs. L. M. N. Stevens' presidency."

Signs of Victory—"How our Popular Magazines are Going Dry." Talk by young man.

The Best One Dollar Investment—THE UNION SIGNAL. Talk by a reader. (Distribute sample copies of THE UNION SIGNAL, secure subscriptions for the Y. P. B. or regular edition.)

Song—"Temperance Rally Song," page 17.

Second Meeting

Study.

Department—Christian Citizenship.

Social Meeting—Poverty Party—(Members come dressed in old clothes and during part of program each tells one way in which drink causes poverty.)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, March 8, 1917

TRANSCONTINENTAL CAMPAIGN TEAMS PREPARING FOR TOURS

The first feature of the transcontinental tours arranged by the National W. C. T. U. will be a luncheon tendered the two teams, to be held at the Auditorium hotel, Chicago, on the afternoon of Monday, April 30. It will be attended and participated in by men and women of national prominence, who will give the two W. C. T. U. teams an enthusiastic send-off. The party taking the southerly route to the Pacific Coast will consist of Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president; Mrs. Florence E. Atkins, National lecturer, and Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, National general secretary of the Young People's Branch. It will stop at the following cities: Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, Mo., Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Austin, San Antonio, Clovis, Albuquerque, Santa Fe, Phoenix, Prescott, Los Angeles and San Francisco.

The party following the northerly route will consist of Mrs. Ella A. Boole, vice president of the National W. C. T. U. and president of the New York W. C. T. U.; Mrs. Adrianna Hungerford, president of the Colorado W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary. The following cities will be visited en route: Minneapolis, Fargo, Aberdeen, Miles City, Bozeman or Helena, Sandpoint, Spokane, Seattle, Boise, Portland, Medford and San Francisco.

At San Francisco the two teams will meet and a big rally participated in by representatives from the western states will take place.

At each stop it is planned to hold a state conference morning and afternoon and a mass meeting in the evening. In some of the states, where the city visited is the state capital, the meetings will be held in the capitol. Governors, mayors and citizens of prominence are to be among the speakers. Among the topics to be considered at these meetings are the necessity for total abstinence, law enforcement, the relation of state to national prohibition, equipment for campaign work, and in non-campaign states, equipment for service, press and publicity, successful team work, methods of increasing membership and co-operation with other reform organizations. Prohibition parades and other spectacular demonstrations are to be features of the occasions. The response received from the states and cities which are to be visited indicates great enthusiasm over the coming event. Nebraska expresses its delight that the team is to arrive in Omaha about the time the prohibitory law goes into effect.

AT THE NOONTIDE HOUR

Although the gravity of the war situation seems not to lessen, we still hope that war with Germany may be averted. Every day at the sacred noontide hour of prayer the hearts of all white ribboners, not only in this nation, but in Europe, are lifted in prayer that through the intervention of Divine Providence peace may come to this war-stricken world. Meanwhile, we must continue to work with greater diligence for prohibition of the liquor traffic in state and nation.

THANK YOU!

Contributions of $32 for the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund and $35 for the Philanthropy Fund of THE UNION SIGNAL have been received from the Board of National Superintendents, through its chairman, Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher. Enclosed with it was Mrs. Thacher's personal gift of $100 for the Campaign Fund.

THE 1917 CATALOGUE OF THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

Many have been ordering the 1917 Catalogue. It will be READY MARCH 10.

It is a most interesting book of one hundred pages that every local union and every W. C. T. U. worker will need to study carefully in order to become familiar with the large and varied output of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House.

Aside from the supplies issued by the publishing house, the catalogue contains a complete list of all National superintendents' publications, thus aiding the worker by having all W. C. T. U. literature grouped in one supply book. Much time and careful study have been given to the compilation of this new catalogue, as the greatly increased and constantly advancing cost of paper, ink and other material has made changes in prices imperative. Kindly note these changes and please remember that each price has been carefully worked out upon a basis that gives the customer the best possible price, with the closest margin of protection to your publishing house.

On and after MARCH 25 all orders will be filled and charges made according to the 1917 catalogue. Please destroy all old catalogues and order from the new one, thus avoiding confusion in titles, numbers of leaflets and prices.

When ordering it is always best to give the title of the leaflet as well as the number, as numbers are often duplicated in various series, thus making it difficult to fill the order correctly.

GETTING AHEAD OF UNCLE SAM

It is really a pity that so much perfectly good oratory, logic and eloquence should have been wasted in the state legislatures during the past six weeks in agonizing over "bone-dry" laws. The Greenville (S. C.) News, remarking on the futility of the efforts of its law makers, says: "South Carolina's hard-fought and long-drawn out legislative wrangle between the 'bone-dry' forces and the champions of modified prohibition seems almost a comedy in view of the action of Congress in passing the 'bone-dry' federal amendment to the Post Office bill."

"It is positively funny to see the way Congress upset all calculations on the liquor question," comments the Adrian (Mich.) Telegram. "We in Michigan were having a beautiful squabble at Lansing, and we were getting ready to fight it out at the polls again, when all of a sudden Congress beat us to it. While we were debating the question of what the people had in their heads when they voted dry, Congress went right ahead and did business without asking any questions. While our wise men at Lansing were struggling with the problem of just how much booze a man ought to be allowed to bring into a dry state, Congress made the state dry at one stroke, and at the same time brought sudden 'bone-dryness' to a score of other states that were not expecting it."

The state of Kansas had no intention of trailing in after Uncle Sam on the "bone-dry" proposition. Spurred on by telegraphic information that a federal measure was about to pass, it enacted its law just three hours before Congress put its measure through.

While the efforts on the part of state legislatures may now seem to have been quite unnecessary, we doubt not the states that had the foresight to enact super-arid laws will consider it well worth while to have gotten ahead of the national government in this particular.

Let the states not yet in the prohibition fold ponder well the moral of this tale. The commonwealth that delays longer to outlaw the liquor traffic may go down in history as having been ignominiously forced by the federal government to abolish the business for the sake of the nation.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 1

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Why ought every physician to be a total abstainer?
2. If a liquor dealer from the Old World should desire to engage in the business in this country, in which of the forty-eight states would he find himself unable, because of a prohibitory law, to secure a license for that purpose?
3. How many states got ahead of Uncle Sam in enacting "bone-dry" laws before the Reed amendment to the Post Office Appropriation bill was passed by both houses of Congress?
4. Who are the two governors who during the past month signed bills passed by their respective legislatures, providing for statutory prohibition to go into effect in the near future?
5. In what states have state-wide campaigns been precipitated by the passage of submission measures by the legislatures?
6. Can you name the four dry bills that have been passed by the Sixty-fourth Congress at its short session?
7. From the point of view of the medical profession of Russia, how has that country been benefited by prohibition?
8. Have the liquorites any foundation for their prediction that in the next few years the prohibition wave will recede?
9. "Votes for Women" has achieved triumphs in what three states during the past month? What states are to vote on the question?
10. If a woman from a non-suffrage state desired to secure the right to vote, to what location might she remove to secure the privilege?

PHILADELPHIA SOCIETY WOMEN ORGANIZE TO PROTECT THE YOUNG PEOPLE FROM INTOXICANTS

The festive highball, the cocktail and the wine cup are losing their supremacy all over this broad land. Big business has raised its voice against them, and in the industrial world they are being tabooed. And now is society looking with glances of lessening friendliness at these hoary-headed aids to festivity. An evidence of this is the formation of a Young People's Conservation League in the city of Philadelphia with fourteen society matrons of the city, the mothers of one-fifth of the next season's debutantes, as members. The pledge taken by the members of this league declares, "I believe in closing the doors of intemperance to the youth of America. To that end I should never offer intoxicants to young people, and I would thus safeguard the young girl just making her entrance in the social world and the young boy at college away from home." The motto of the organization is "Thrift, Total Abstinence, Patriotism." A public mass meeting under the leadership of Bishop Rhinelander is to be held shortly, it is announced.

"Our girls and boys do not want to drink," was the way one of the matrons expressed it in discussing the question, according to the Philadelphia Public Ledger. "Champagne and cocktails do not appeal to them, but when they are urged to drink by an attractive hostess they find it hard to say 'no.' We who entertain should be ashamed to tempt them into drinking."

Mrs. Porter Bradford, of the Lighthouse, an institution for the care and guidance of young girls, told what this action would mean to her. "In my work with girls who come to the Lighthouse," she said, "I find myself facing the example of the society woman at every turn. Many of the girls are governed by a desire to follow the lead of the society women. They read of society women serving drinks, and when I try to tell them that it is wrong they answer: 'Why can't we do it? The best people do it.' And the worst of it was that I could not contradict them or fight them on that ground."

To this remarkable league came a letter from President Lowell of Harvard, in which he said that in recent years the decrease in drinking among college men had become greatly noticeable and that he was doing everything in his power to prevent college youths from drinking.

As to the drinking habits of the society people of Philadelphia the hotels of the city, where many of the debutante parties and balls are held, are in a position to know, and they have said repeatedly that the tendency of the times is toward moderation. Mr. J. M. Frazier, manager of the Bellevue-Stratford, rises to the defense of the young society women and declares that they are very modest in the use of champagne and cocktails, and that among the elite in Philadelphia there is comparatively little drinking.

"What I note as regards the use of intoxicating beverages," says Mr. Frazier, "is that people today are using good, hard, common sense in drinking. There are some banquets today where drink is tabooed altogether, and in every dinner, public or private, scores who do not touch a drop."

COME ON IN—THE WATER'S FINE!

With wonderful unanimity the leading newspapers of dry states record the benefits of prohibition and recommend that it be given a trial in other states. The newspaper man is in a position to know whereof he speaks. There is no reason to discount the truthfulness of the statements made by the Spokane (Wash.) Chronicle in reply to the question recently propounded by the Literary Digest: "Do you regard prohibition as a success in your state and do you recommend it to other states?" To this the Chronicle answers unequivocally as follows:

"Yes; and yes.

"One year of prohibition has saved millions of dollars in money and man power to Washington. It has restored husbands to wives, fathers to children. It has given men better homes, better clothes, better health, better consciences and money in the bank. It has quickened commercial life, stabilized rental values, filled empty houses, lifted the plane of living of thousands whose wage earners once threw their dollars across the bar.

"Prohibition has not stopped entirely the drinking of liquor in Washington. But in one year the people of this state cut down their liquor bill by $20,000,000.

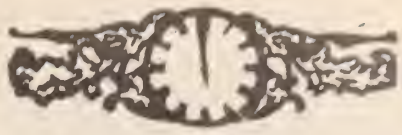
"The Chronicle has yet to hear of a case where prohibition has caused one little child to hunger, one honest man to go bankrupt, one home to be wrecked, one grave crime to be committed, one human life to be cut short. The business districts are crowded with people who jingle money in their pockets. The butcher and the grocer are growing fat. Where saloons moved out busy markets have moved in. The poor farm has lost half its people. Arrests, prison inmates, insane cases have decreased consistently. The refuge for unemployed men is closed for lack of business. The community respect for law has been strengthened. Authorities have been inspired to keener vigilance in the discharge of all duties because of the moral demand aroused in the people for law enforcement.

"Washington recommends prohibition to other states—recommends it in the same spirit that it would recommend happy homes, health, vigorous commercial life, sobriety, sanity and civic progress."

VIRGINIA'S EFFECTIVE PROHIBITION

The Danville (Va.) Register, under the above caption, makes the following gratifying statement:

"While local prohibition had been effective in about 75 per cent of the counties and cities of Virginia for several years, state-wide prohibition as the result of a referendum vote, followed by statutory legislation effectuating the decree, began November 1, 1916. Already the newspapers throughout the state, irrespective of their attitudes as to the wisdom of the plan, bear testimony to the reduced arrests for drunkenness, disorders and minor offenses of every character. In several cities the jails are being depopulated, and sheriffs and sergeants are decreasing their deputies. While some friction is being encountered in enforcing the stringent statutes, appellate court constructions of the phraseology and intent of the enactments is expected to clarify the situation and make law enforcement even more effective."



TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE

VOICE OF PRAYER IS NEVER SILENT

As o'er each continent and island
The dawn leads on another day,
The voice of prayer is never silent,
Nor dies the strain of praise away.

The sun that bids us rest, is waking
Our sisters 'neath the western sky,
And hour by hour fresh lips are making
Thy wondrous doings heard on high.

So be it, Lord; Thy throne shall never,
Like earth's proud empires, pass away;
But stand, and rule, and grow forever,
Till all Thy creatures own Thy sway.

—Woodward

A LESSON FROM THE BOOK OF LIFE

G. W. TUTTLE

The labor of the day was over and the peace of the evening was settling about us. The crimson and gold had faded from out the western sky. Slowly, slowly the curtains of the night were being drawn about us. It was prayer-meeting night. The clear tones of the bells were ringing out upon the still evening air. They seemed to say, "Come! Come!"

I mounted my wheel in the gloaming to hasten to the meeting that I loved so well. Half way to the corner I saw a tin can in the street, battered, shapeless—probably left there by some thoughtless children in their play. It was a menace to unwary wheelmen and I should have dismounted and thrown it from the street, but instead of doing so I thought, "In the morning, when I pass this way again, I will throw this tin can out of the street lest some wheelman meet it and suffer defeat."

When the meeting was over and the hand clasps exchanged, I mounted my wheel and started homeward. As I rounded my corner, I was probably thinking of what Brother A. said, or of Deacon B.'s prayer — certainly nothing was farther from my thoughts than tin cans. The next moment my wheel stopped, but I kept right on. I had met the tin can and suffered defeat. I had left a stumbling block in my brother's way and fallen over it myself.

This lesson was not profitless to me. Many years have passed since this never-to-be-forgotten little incident, but I still think of that real bit of experience when I see some stumbling block that should be removed from a brother's pathway. God pity the church member who will not lift so much as a finger to help remove the stumbling block of strong drink; who can never rise to holy indignation against sin; who will never heave with a willing shoulder and a God-given will to throw out the stumbling blocks from the pathway of life, and make smooth the way for those who come after us. The man who smooths the way for his fellow men shall walk therein himself, and he who helps another to achieve a victory shall be himself a victor.

"We are all roadmakers of one kind or another, making the road rougher or smoother for those who come after us."

"It is a great thing for a young man to be a total abstainer, but it is still greater for him to let his principles be known by working for them."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow
April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes

PRIZES TO BE AWARDED BY THE MEDAL CONTEST DEPARTMENT 1917

ADELIA E. CARMAN

1. The banner will be given to the state that holds the largest number of contests.
2. The silk flag will be awarded to the state holding the largest number of contests in proportion to membership.
3. A set of contest books will be given to the state superintendent who reports the largest number of members gained directly through the Medal Contest department.
4. A contest pennant will be awarded to the state superintendent whose state holds the largest number of high grade contests.
5. Gold honor stars will be given to the four local superintendents who hold the largest number of contests.
6. Silver stars will be given to the next four local superintendents who report the largest number of contests.

NOT QUITE THREE CENTS!

Every W. C. T. U. member knows a young man or a young woman whom she covets for our cause. Here is something definite you can do to help open the gate of mind and heart. Send your young friend our Y. P. B. Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL. This act of yours may be the means of winning a leader for our cause. The Y. P. B. Edition is 35 cents per year. That is not quite three cents a month! We desire many new subscriptions.

RHODE ISLAND W. C. T. U. TO HAVE CIRCULATING TEMPERANCE LIBRARY

Special Correspondence

The day of prayer for National Constitutional Prohibition was quite generally observed by local unions throughout Rhode Island. In one district the local unions held a union service. The state W. C. T. U. is about to establish at headquarters a free circulating library of temperance reference books. The need of this is great because of the many books with misleading titles that are being given away by the liquor interests.

Sunday, February 11, was observed as temperance field day in the churches. At this time pastors presented various phases of temperance and a part of the Sunday school hour was given over to temperance teaching. The following evening in one of the largest halls in the capital city was held the Carlisle-Pierpont dialogue debate, "Wet vs. Dry," which was enthusiastically received by the large audience.

A bill has been presented to the Rhode Island legislature providing for presidential suffrage for women.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Mrs. Amy C. Weech, National organizer and lecturer, is in Alabama working under the direction of the state W. C. T. U. Following the National Convention Mrs. Weech gave several weeks to field work in Virginia with most excellent results. During January she gave two addresses before the Y. M. C. A. in Hopewell, Va., and held a rousing temperance meeting in McKendree church, Washington, D. C.

The permanent address of Mrs. Lila Carlin Moore, National W. C. T. U. organizer, remains as heretofore, Raton, New Mexico, and has not been changed to Van Buren, Ark., as given in the Annual Leaflet.

A chain of W. C. T. U. teas is a social feature which is proving popular among the white ribboners of Little Rock. The president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., Mrs. Minnie U. Fuller, who is a resident of Little Rock, at each of these teas has assigned a definite legislative task.

Western Missouri is becoming aroused for prohibition in 1918. Much of this territory has been wet or indifferent to the matter. Now there is life and even enthusiasm. Rich Hill had a good house for a temperance lecture in the face of a blizzard. In Cass county where it had hitherto been impossible to make sufficient sentiment unions of good strength, with a fine corps of officers were organized at Garden City and East Lynne in one day, February 10, only six hours apart. Mrs. Lora S. La Mance, National W. C. T. U. organizer, calls them her twin unions. Wet Lafayette county had some exceptionally good meetings. In that county, which has always been a trial to the white ribboners, the Y. P. B.'s have interested three talented young people who may revolutionize the entire district. These are Rev. A. B. Bradford, a young Christian minister, and Miss Anna McZentmyer, a bright young girl, both of Higginsville, and Miss Lila Kleinschmidt of Corder. One feature at Higginsville was the prohibition orchestra of the Rahm family. The father, son and four daughters all take part. The significant thing about this territory is that the younger German-Americans are coming out squarely for prohibition.

The school boys of Council Bluffs, Iowa, a correspondent reports, have organized a No-Tobacco, No-Profanity Club, with a system of fines for swearing and for using tobacco.

Before an audience of more than five hundred people the first silver medal declamatory contest ever held under the auspices of the W. C. T. U. in a Rescue Mission, took place Jan. 30, 1917, at Inasmuch Mission, Philadelphia, under the direction of Alice M. Rutter, Medal Contest superintendent of the A. Elizabeth Thomas union. George Long, superintendent of Inasmuch Mission, presented the medal, which was won by Miss Edith Derr. Seven young women, representing as many different schools of oratory, participated. Mrs. A. G. Diefenderfer, mother of the Philadelphia county superintendent of Medal Contests, made appropriate remarks, and Mrs. Caroline A. Moore, Evangelistic superintendent, presided. The affair was a decided success.

TEMPERANCE AND MISSIONS ACTIVITIES OF OHIO WHITE RIBBONERS

Mrs. Rose Rinehart, a county superintendent of Temperance and Missions in Ohio, is rejoicing in the achievements of some of her local superintendents. She writes: "The Cuyahoga county superintendent of the department of Temperance and Missions is trying to enlist the unions of the county in the support of Bible women in Africa, at ten dollars each, under Rev. and Mrs. J. M. Springer. One Bible woman was supported personally by the superintendent and credited to the Berea union, which recently sent six Sunday school wall rolls and 575 Sunday school lesson cards, contributed by the president to missionaries. Five unions in the county, Central, Ensign, East End, Chagrin Falls and Berea, have contributed $2.00 each toward the support of a second Bible woman. A third Bible woman has been helped by contributions of $2.00 each from the Frances Willard and Pryor unions. Pledge cards and white ribbon pins have also been sent to them. All these Bible women are being taught by these unions something of W. C. T. U. work, with the hope that it will help them in their battles for temperance and purity. The Bible women are the wives of the native preachers. The Bedford (Ohio) W. C. T. U. has contributed $10 for the support of another Bible woman in the Belgian Congo, Africa, and two more shares of $2.00 each have been taken by Mrs. Barnard, president of the East End union, and the Shepard W. C. T. U., both of Cleveland.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. ABBIE BOTTS, Kirklin, Indiana, a zealous member of the local union and a faithful worker in the county organization.

MRS. P. E. STEINBACK, president of the Portage Lake (Mich.) W. C. T. U., and a loyal worker.

MRS. M. E. GOLLADAY, Holden, Missouri, for many years a prominent figure in local, district and state work. At the time of her promotion she was state superintendent of Medal Contests.

THE VALUE OF INTENSIVE WORK BY A COLLEGE Y. P. B.

EXPERIENCE OF THE SOMERSET Y. P. B. AT CORNELL UNIVERSITY

MRS. CORA D. GRAHAM

Every leader of a college Y. P. B., before she becomes an effective leader, must answer definitely in her own mind the following questions:

1. What is the special need in this university for education and influence such as can be supplied by a Y. P. B.?

2. What conditions must be met before that goal is reached?

3. How can we overcome—or utilize—such conditions, so as to most effectively reach individuals and influence college activities?

Since the main purpose of a college Y. P. B. should be to influence the teaching in classes where the subject of alcohol can be logically introduced (and that includes many departments), as well as to influence the customs prevailing in living centers and in department, class or college functions, one thing must be very strongly emphasized—the value of intensive work.

By this method our Somerset College Y. P. B., at Ithaca, N. Y., has been declared by a well-known university lecturer to be one hundred per cent true to its purpose. It has been proved that a college Y. P. B. with a handpicked membership of thirty can exert a very positive influence in all the above ways, whereas it is possible for an organization with an enrollment of three figures to be lacking in true efficiency, and rated as only "fifty per cent or less, pure." Let me illustrate what I mean by "handpicked," intensive advantages.

A study is made of the different departments, such as biology, sociology, economics, etc. We choose girls whose major lies in one of these lines. They have charge of one Somerset meeting in which they bring out the relationship or interdependence of their major subject and alcohol. They read with more interest current events; they talk the matter over with their professors; they study with increased understanding the books in their department libraries, as well as those in our own Somerset library, which is housed in the university library. Other departments are each so represented, and in the general discussions which follow much valuable information is given out, and a girl with a major in a department catches a clear view of other departments. She grows in knowledge and breadth of vision. Respect for herself and for her organization is created.

Through a varied program during the year, total abstinence and prohibition, with other vital principles of our organization, are discussed, and the girls are acquiring the habit of looking for current events along these lines. We find, usually, those things we seek in current literature, as elsewhere.

A Somerset library is not a luxury, it is a necessity. Every book bought by the girls is given to some girl to study and review for the next meeting. They enjoy "our books." A write-up of the book is put in the college paper before the book is turned over to the library. The girls call the attention of others in their class or living center and much quiet but telling work is done. In passing, let me mention some of the real gems we own in a collection of valuable books, pamphlets, Congressional Records, leaflets, government bulletins, etc.: "The Drink Problem" (Kelynack), deals with the question in its medico-sociological aspects, with contributions by fourteen authorities, English. "The Progress of Eugenics" (Saleeby) is rich in material for both our medical and biological students. "The Psychology of Alcoholism" (Cutten) is more interesting than a novel and full of helpful suggestions. "The Anti-Alcohol Movement in Europe" (Gordon) and "Alcohol and the Human Body" (Horsley and Sturge) are probably better known than the other three books.

Observance of Mothers' Day (on the preceding Saturday) by faculty and students, floats in university parades, musicals, etc., are some of the other ways in which, as an organization, we gain friends and recognition. We make much of our installation service, annual reception, senior banquet, etc. We have our seasons of informal talks on the white life for two, and other dear, intimate subjects suggested by events of the college world, which, however, are to be met with outside.

Another way in which intensive work helps is this: The Woman's League controls all matters pertaining to other women's organizations, and living centers (of women), etc. No woman's organization has any standing unless recognized by the League (and not if it has men members). Its position is indicated by the "counts" given to the offices by the League. And an organization's counts depend largely upon its recognized value to the university. Our Somerset stands higher than the other minor societies on this basis. It is true that if a girl seriously identifies herself with any such line of work while in college she will be unhappy out of college if not identified with some form of social service. The few years that girls have to give to this work during college seem all too few to teach and impress them as we would. Let us then emphasize this intensive form of our work. They will be better workers in city and country for having learned in college to study the need of the hour and the best way of meeting that need. We must more fully consecrate our concentration, rather than become intoxicated with the idea that to scatter the girls' time among college, city and other outside work, is training them. Give them the vision and the knowledge and their own souls will find expression when the real need knocks upon the door.

WORKING PLAN FOR 10,000 NEW BRANCH MEMBERS THIS YEAR

In view of the great work being advanced for National Constitutional Prohibition, our young people have declared for an increase in membership of 10,000 during the coming year and in order to obtain these dues-paid members the following plans are submitted:

1. That each state not already engaged in Branch work be urged to appoint a state Y. P. B. secretary and appropriate a sufficient sum to enable her to visit and organize Young People's Branches.

2. That each Y. P. B. state secretary, at her own or state W. C. T. U. convention, present prizes or other honors to the individual, the Branch and the county securing the greatest number of paid members during the year. That state secretaries also make it their aim to have a county Y. P. B. secretary in every county in the state.

3. That April, the birthday month of our first "Y" secretary, Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, be especially recognized as Y. P. B. campaign month, and that all through this month special effort be made to secure new members and new organizations as a birthday offering to the Young People's Branch of the W. C. T. U. We urge that April 14, our Y. P. B. Red Letter Day, be observed by an especially prepared program with social meeting. If possible hold an all day Y. P. B. conference on Saturday, April 14.

This year in order to stimulate interest in our Y. P. B. red letter day and campaign month an award will be given the state making the largest net gain in paid-up members during the month of April.

A PLEA TO THE W. C. T. U.

It is our earnest hope that each local W. C. T. U. will plan to observe April 14.

A committee should be appointed at once to arrange an attractive program for this important day.

Do the young people of your community know you are interested in their welfare? Here is an opportunity to tell them. The white ribbon will be pinned upon the breasts of thousands of young people if each local union observes this day.

YOU'LL NOT FAIL US!

(Send two cents to National W. C. T. U. Publishing House for Y. P. B. Year Book containing suggestive programs, etc.)

SEND FOR IT

Send to Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson, Plainfield, N. J., or to National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Illinois, for biographical sketch of Frances J. Barnes. Price 15 cents.

APRIL 14—NATIONAL Y. P. B. RED LETTER DAY

FRANCES J. BARNES' BIRTHDAY

Local, city, county, state Young Peoples' Branches! If possible hold an all-day Y. P. B. Conference on SATURDAY, APRIL 14.

"RUNNERS FOR PROHIBITION"

Daniel A. Poling, associate president of the United Society of Christian Endeavor, was the speaker at the Suffolk county (Mass.) Y. P. B. rally held recently at the state headquarters. We quote excerpts from his address:

"One of the vice presidents of a big National Liquor Association said recently, 'It is my belief that all the people engaged in the alcohol beverage business should be thoroughly prepared and equipped for an up-to-date, authoritative and intelligent discussion of the pros and cons of prohibition. We liquor men may not be eloquent orators but there is no man engaged in this business who cannot present arguments against prohibition to at least one man at a time. It is our business to do personal work.' The liquor interests are arming themselves with arguments and fallacies which we will have to meet. Unless we study and know the facts we will be worsted. There is not a young man or woman in our ranks who cannot equip himself or herself to present arguments to at least one young person at a time. It is our business to do personal work. In old Indian times news was always spread by runners. We are runners for prohibition, and if we are shod with truth and carry aloft the torch of knowledge we will not fall by the way but gain our goal. Your state paper and THE UNION SIGNAL are splendid text-books and we cannot be unequipped when we read their columns. I wish every Y. P. B. member could take one of these papers, but the next best thing is to have one member take it and have a report at every meeting."

ONE PLUS

FLORA SWETNAM

(Continued from last week)

Synopsis of Foregoing Instalment

Mr. Strong, a young minister, arrives in a town in which the young people are surrounded by conditions not conducive in any degree to their uplift. Among other agencies of evil the clergyman discovers the illegal sale of liquor to boys. Facing the determined opposition of the editor of the local paper, who, by underhanded methods in promoting wrong doing, has sent two other ministers, discouraged, from the field, Mr. Strong enlists the school professor as an ally, calls upon God to help him in his efforts for righteousness sake, and goes ahead to win the battle.

On the next Wednesday evening, as the minister and teacher were preparing to go to the mid-week prayer meeting, the janitor of the church appeared before them with the announcement that something was wrong with the acetylene gas lights. The two men went to investigate and found that the works had been tinkered with in such a way as to preclude the possibility of illuminating the church.

"What did I tell you?" reminded Professor Romar. "I knew the editor's call wasn't for nothing. I suppose we shall have to close the church tonight."

"Not a bit of it," declared the minister. "I will have the service if I have to hold it by torch light. Come on with me, Romar." Turning to the janitor he said, "As soon as you have rung the bell, Fred, follow us to Brother Morris' place. Don't speak to any one of this."

"Well, friend," requested the minister when they had arrived at the store, "can you lend us some oil lamps?" Mr. Morris looked his amazement, but a few minutes' talk changed the aspect of things. Soon afterward Mr. Morris began to close the store.

"We are going to prayer meeting," he said in answer to a clerk's inquiry. "Please don't ask any questions now, but if you wish to oblige us, you will all come."

So it came to pass that a procession carrying oil lamps made its way quickly to the church. The second bell rang, and by the time the people began to gather, the house was well lighted. Back in the crowd the minister saw Mr. Scott Jason who was wearing a rather puzzled expression. The minister's face displayed his most cheerful smile. An interesting program had been arranged, and everything went forward without a hitch, though there were a few questioning and mystified glances cast toward the lamps.

At the door, the minister shook the hand of every one who passed out, and had the pleasure of greeting the editor. He squeezed his hand heartily, and for the second time the gentleman's face expressed surprise. He said nothing, but the next week's Gazette carried a paragraph on the editorial page which referred in a jocular way to the old-fashioned oil lamp as a most useful article.

In the meantime, Mr. Strong and Professor Romar had added to the literary society another for the purpose of training those who wished to sing. This was announced for Tuesday evenings, and as there were many young people who liked to pour out their souls in music, it proved so great an attraction that the opposing side was compelled to hunt up something new. Consequently, a dance was held in an old building of the town. None of the Penbury girls attended, but women were not lacking, for in the city not many miles away were found those who had no scruples against such social functions.

"It looks like a losing game, old fellow," said Professor Romar, after the dance. "I don't see what we can do about it. I hate to desert you, but I think when this school term ends, I shall seek another job. What about you?"

"I should be very sorry to lose you," answered the minister. "As for myself, I still believe the scripture which I quoted to you when we first met."

Professor Romar took a turn or two about the room, came back to the minister's side and held out his hand. "Strong, you're a brick," he said huskily. "You can count on me to see you through."

The pendulum continued to vibrate. For every gain made by the minister and his ally, the editor and his gang planned something to offset it. A few weeks later the minister and teacher received an invitation to a moonlight picnic to be held at a certain grove a little out of town. Word was passed that a platform would be built for dancing.

"What do you say to that?" asked Professor Romar. Mr. Strong shook his head. "I'll have to think it all out," he said. "Go on to school, Romar, and let me solve the problem while you are performing your duties."

When the professor returned home in the afternoon, the minister greeted him with a hearty slap on the back as he pointed to a large pile of envelopes on the table. "The plot thickens," he cried boyishly.

Professor Romar took up one of the missives and found it contained an invitation to their home for the same evening on which the dance was to be held. It promised plenty of music and lots of ice cream.

"Well, of all the cheek!" he exclaimed. "How are we to entertain in such style when we have no piano or any other kind of instrument, and who is to furnish the frozen refreshment, pray?"

"I have been holding a conference today," said the minister, "and the Lord is surely on our side. Sister Manning and two or three other ladies will see to it that there is more cream than any number of boys can destroy."

"But the music," insisted Professor Romar. "You will have to be a magician if you keep that promise."

"Among us we raised the money to hire a band from the city."

"Good!" exclaimed the professor. "Remember to count me in on that."

"What's more, Romar, I've invited our friend, the editor," concluded the minister.

The much talked of evening came, but instead of the moonlight for which the other side had hoped and prepared, the rain descended in torrents. The young people talked the situation over and decided that it would be better to go to an indoor party at the minister's than nowhere at all, so the house was soon filled. It was brilliantly lighted with fancy lamps, borrowed for the occasion, and as it was a warm evening early in November, all the doors and windows were thrown open. Mr. and Mrs. Morris, Mr. and Mrs. Manning, Deacon Walsh and his wife, and several others were present to assist in entertaining, and the guests were warmly welcomed in every way. There were sleight of hand tricks, games, and all kinds of amusements. One impulsive youth finally exclaimed, "Say, this isn't half bad. We're having a heap of fun."

"I have a proposition to make, boys," announced the minister. "This town has no band. Suppose we organize a first rate one. Each boy could raise the money for his own instrument and Professor Romar and I would give instruction. In a short time you should all be able to play well enough to give a grand entertainment for the purpose of securing any other money necessary for expenses. The girls can be honorary members if they choose."

"I will loan you boys money and allow you to pay me in work," volunteered Mr. Morris.

"So will I," said Mr. Manning.

"I want to belong," excitedly cried the boy who had first spoken.

"Me, too," shouted several others.

Professor Romar took the names and everything was speedily settled. One stipulation was made—the boys must keep straight. This they promised.

For a time it seemed that a death blow had been given to the other side. The boys were so enthusiastic over their new project they steadfastly refused all invitations to the printing office. During this period, the minister used every effort to turn the tide of public opinion in favor of right living. He induced the boys and some of the older men to join in a "clean up" campaign, which was a great success.

The boys quickly learned to play and a date was set for the entertainment. The holidays came and went without any disaster, the Sunday school continued to improve and things began to look very hopeful, indeed.

The editor praised the minister's efforts, praised the band, and wrote up the coming "affair" in flattering terms.

"We might think we had him beaten," Professor Romar remarked, "if he had not been so voluble about our entertainment. I have learned to know his methods. He is always smoothest and sleekest just when he has a trap set ready to catch the enemy."

"We must be on guard," said the minister. "It is our business to keep awake."

A short time later suspicions were confirmed. "I am now able to tell you with certainty," Professor Romar said one evening to the minister, "that something is going on. When I passed the printing office a little while ago I noticed Scott Jason and old Jared Jones standing off in a corner of the room laughing over a big express package which had just been received. Through the window I caught the words, 'Turn about ought to be fair play.'"

"Who is Jared Jones?" asked the minister. "I don't seem to be able to place him."

"He is the man who is accused of getting those whisky packages and letting the boys have them. He's Scott Jason's tool."

"Oh, I see. But he will not be apt to distribute any of the stuff tonight. He has to have time to send the word around. Tomorrow we must take a little walk after supper, Romar, and carry a flashlight along. We may accomplish something worth while."

When darkness had fallen the next evening the friends went forth. They walked slowly down to the station and watched carefully everybody about. Suddenly a boy who belonged to the band came out of the building and turned cautiously toward a dark corner. They followed silently till a hoarse whisper warned them to stop. It was answered by a low voice not far away. Instantly the flashlight was turned on, revealing the lad just receiving a package from Jared Jones. The minister sprang forward and seized the boy, recognizing him as James Walker, a youth who had been difficult to influence. "Give me that package," he commanded, but at that instant, Jared Jones cleverly knocked the light from the hands of Professor Romar and under cover of the darkness both parties to the underhanded transaction escaped.

"I shall have Jared Jones arrested as a blind pigger," declared the minister. "In the meantime I shall try to see James and his parents and have a talk with them."

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE ANTIDOTE

A TALE OF THE RATTLESNAKE COUNTRY

J. BRADLEY VANDAWORKER

NOTE:—The belief of the chief characters of the story that whisky is an antidote for snake bite is, of course, not now held by the medical profession. Prof. W. Watson Cheynem, surgeon of Kings College Hospital, London, says, "The idea that the saturation of the body with whisky is beneficial in cases of snake bite is in the highest degree erroneous. What is required is to keep the patient alive until the poison has been eliminated. Whisky will not do this, but actually aids the poison in its fatal work by lessening the resistance of the patient, and hence lessening his chances of recovery."

Down the sun-glinted canon blew a breeze from the mountain. A miner came out of the cabin. He was a big, splendid man. He cast a glance overhead and then crossed to the horse shed.

Within the doorway lay his pard, Bill Mason, dead drunk. Such was the man who had won the girl of Woolsy's choice; it had been in her memory that he had shared his belongings and prospects with Mason.

Carefully the sober man removed the bottle from the other's pocket, and gently shook him into consciousness. "With the education you had to start with, you ought to be ashamed of the mess you've panned out—nothing but a booze sot." His tone was sad and touched with sympathy.

"Education don't count," grunted Mason. "You had the right kind of home influence. No college can beat that."

"Martha chose you," argued Woolsy, "so you must have some good in you."

Mason felt his pocket.

"I took it," explained Woolsy. "If 'twasn't for rattlers I'd smash it."

"Don't do that," whined Mason, trying to sit up. "I got to have it. Since Martha died there hasn't anything been right with me."

"Seems to me you owe her something yet," said Woolsy, kindly. "What did you do for her? Nothing while she lived. And she cut a good home to come out here with you. When luck went against you she was brave enough to teach school over the mountain in the settlement and stick to you. And she gave you the boy, didn't she?"

"Yes," said Mason proudly, "and he's a fine little man. If the new hole pans out as we think it may, I'll make him governor of this state. I tell you, Woolsy, I'm going to start the boy right."

"What do you call right? Laying around drunk?" Mason winced, but kept still. "You've said good home influence counts for more than college. Are you setting the kid a good model, and are your booze sprees giving him the right kind of home influence?" Love for the boy, and consciousness of his guilt mingled in the expressions on Mason's whisky-red face. Woolsy asked, "Don't you think the kid's mother wishes he was with her?"

"Yes," trembled Mason. "And it's those big blue eyes of hers staring out of his curly head, reproachfully, that keeps me from tramping out there, barefooted, among the rattlers."

"You wouldn't need to go out there," said Woolsy. "They are under every rock around here. Bill, I'm going to take the kid to the mine. You're too drunk to be trusted with him." The big miner knew that Mason loved that boy of his, but the look in his bleary eyes showed that he had caught sight of the neck of his bottle in Woolsy's pocket. So, determined to outwit the drunkard, Woolsy pushed the bottle clear to the bottom of the half-filled oat bin.

Putting the boy up before him the big miner rode off. Fleecy clouds danced across the heavens. The boy watched them interestedly while he listened to Woolsy's tales. His mother had told him that angels rode behind the sunny clouds, and the child wondered.

Coming to a little clearing in the gorge below the mine, Woolsy cautioned the boy to see that the horse did not stray away and shouldered his pick. "I'd take you along, but the climbing is too hard." Half-way up to the hole he called back, "Keep your eyes open for pesky things!" Of course the boy knew well enough what he meant by pesky things.

It was near grub time when a scream reached the miner above the sound of his pick and sent him quickly to the opening of the hole. The frightened boy was just shaking a big rattler from his wrist. With leaps and bounds Woolsy made his side, grabbed the boy and vaulted into the saddle.

In the bottom of the oat bin, he thought, was enough whisky to save that young life. The trail was pretty well open and his horse could easily make it in plenty of time, unless he should miss his footing and fall into the raging stream below. But the horse never had lost his footing, so there was a good prospect of getting home in half an hour, by hard riding.

The kid bore his pain like a brave little man. He had learned that from the big miner. All the way he watched the clouds dancing above them and Woolsy knew he was thinking of his mother.

"Will my daddy be scared?" he finally asked. Woolsy nodded. When they had covered more than half the trail the boy looked into the eyes of his protector to ask, "If I die, will I ride behind the clouds with mamma?"

"Yes," nodded Woolsy, "but you're not going to die from the snake bite." Then he urged the horse a little harder.

Arriving at the cabin the big miner laid the boy on the bench beside the door.

"I don't want my daddy scared for me," began the boy.

"Keep quiet, kid," smiled Woolsy. "There's plenty of medicine in the horse shed for Mr. Snakebite."

"But I don't want my daddy scared," persisted the boy. "And I don't want to take the medicine in the horse shed. It always makes daddy sick."

Praying that Martha would forgive him for giving her boy booze, Woolsy ran to the stable. On the ground were all the oats the bin had held. They had been shoveled out. The bottle was gone.

In the shade of the horse shed he found Bill Mason sitting on a rock. In his hand he held the black bottle.

"You miserable galoot!" slowly growled Woolsy. The terribleness of his tone was its softness and slowness—it foretold the dreadfulness of all that had happened.

Mason looked up with a jerk as though he had come out of a deep trance. Much to the surprise of Woolsy he was sober, and a touch of pity tinged the cruel words, "The kid's been struck by a rattler!"

"The kid!" Mason's red face and blotched nose paled.

"Yes. If there's any whisky left he needs it."

"It's all left, yet," said Mason clutching the bottle tightly.

"None of that!" growled Woolsy. With a quick wrench he tore the bottle from his pard's hands. "You beast!" he snarled, and started for the cabin on the run. Mason was lumbering behind and Woolsy held up the bottle to see. It was half full. Bill couldn't have touched it. What was the matter! Maybe he had only just found it.

As Woolsy reached the cabin bench he pulled the cork and was about to place the bottle to the boy's lips, when a superhuman grip tightened on his wrist, and a quick hand snatched away the whisky.

And before he could catch his breath Bill Mason smashed the bottle on the rocks a hundred feet below.

"No, Woolsy, you shan't give my boy booze. I'd rather see him die. I'm sober now. I know what I'm talking about. For hours I sat with that bottle fighting the battle of life and salvation. I never tasted a drop. I won, and now you shan't give it to the boy. He'd better be dead than go through a time like that."

The unexpected change in Mason confounded Woolsy. He became the silent man and his partner became the man of action.

Grabbing the boy's wrist in his mouth Mason sucked hard and steadily. Woolsy prayed that Martha might know and turned his head to wipe away a tear. She had been right. Bill Mason was a bigger man than he was after all. The next thing he knew Mason called him to take the boy and lay him on his bunk in the cabin. Though his daddy had got most of the poison out of the wrist the kid was going to be awfully sick. For a long while Woolsy watched, but finally went out to see Mason. He found his pard white as chalk from the poison he had swallowed from the snake bite, but stretched out with a peaceful look on his face, smiling straight up at the white, fluffy clouds.

"I guess Martha'll know I've sworn off," he said half questioningly.

"Sure, Bill," answered Woolsy with conviction.

ONE PLUS

(Continued from Page Twelve)

But every effort to see James Walker was in vain. He could not be found and his people could give no information concerning his whereabouts. When several boys were questioned about him they exhibited a good deal of uneasiness, but failed to disclose anything.

On the day before the entertainment, the Penbury Gazette came out with a very clever cartoon in which a small man in minister's attire, and carrying a big flashlight, was shown chasing a ghostly figure through the darkness. Beneath were the words, "This town needs a searchlight."

Jared Jones attended to the circulation of the paper. He saw that every member of the church received a copy, and publicly made so many jokes and laughed so much, that Mr. Morris called the minister's attention to the matter. "What do you suppose that signifies?" he asked.

The minister understood at once. "They honored me, too, with a marked copy," he said, after he had explained matters. "This cartoon," he added, "gives me an idea, and some time when I own that paper, as Romar and I are planning to do, I shall name it, 'The Searchlight,' and it will reveal a better way."

"Well, well," exclaimed Mr. Morris. "If you and the professor are equal to running it in addition to your other heavy duties, I am with you, hand and pocketbook."

"Oh, thank you," beamed the minister. "We can do it all right, for a while, anyway. We'll get the boys on our side and they'll help us. You will have to manage the deal for me, though, for Scott Jason would never sell to me."

"He will have to give the paper up to somebody soon," remarked Mr. Morris, "for because of your work here he has

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

ANTI-TOBACCO POSTERS

Post Them in Public Schools, Sunday Schools, Academies and Colleges

The

CIGARET

Is Condemned By

EDUCATORS—90% of smokers have low rank or fail in studies, have weak will, weak character, bad habits, disordered nerves, undeveloped bodies.

ATHLETES—Smokers have uncertain "eye," unsteady hand, short wind, weak heart.

EMPLOYERS—Edison, Ford, Carnegie, and others, as well as manufacturers and railroads. Two million positions are closed to cigaret smokers.

PHYSICIANS—Paralyzes nerve cells, interferes with lung and heart action; causes arterial degeneration, stupidity, unreliability, perverseness, etc.

SCIENTISTS—Edison, Maxim, Burbank, Wiley. Burbank says, "Cigarets make a boy a useless, soulless, worthless thing."

JURISTS — "Ben" Lindsey, Judge Burke, Judge Black, and others agree that "Cigarets contribute more than all other causes combined to make the 'bad boy.'"

PUBLISHERS — Who are refusing cigaret advertisements.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS — Cigarets lead to alcohol.

STATISTICS—Twelve hundred boys daily begin the cigaret habit.

Size, 28 by 42 inches
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents

Studies of

COLLEGE SMOKERS AND NON-SMOKERS

By Dr. J. W. Seaver, Yale College

Show this

COMPARATIVE GROWTH IN

Weight
Height
Chest Girth
Lung Capacity

(A comparative table in colors)

Students entering college in 9 years: Non-Smokers averaged 15 months younger than regular smokers—gained 77% more in lung capacity—24% more in height.

Size 25 by 30 in.
Printed in colors.
Price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

ONE PLUS

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

lost many of his subscribers and all of his advertising except that from a whisky house. Lots of us have refused to have our ads stuck up by the side of a liquor layout."

"I wish he and I could have worked together," said the minister earnestly, "but since we could not, we necessarily had to be enemies."

The school auditorium had been selected as the most suitable place in which to hold the entertainment, and it had been prettily decorated for the occasion. The weather was fine and fortune seemed to smile on the minister's plans. It was not for long, however, for as the people began to gather, a boy came in great distress to the minister and said that at least half a dozen of the members of the band were missing. "I've hunted for them everywhere, Mr. Strong," he said, "and can't find a single one."

The minister saw Scott Jason in the audience regarding them with a leering smile. He resolved not to be beaten and turning to Professor Romar, who had come up just then, told him of the predicament.

"Oh, well," Professor Romar commented, "we are prepared for the emergency. We have a good program even if we must do without the band." He could not help noting as he spoke the bitter disappointment in the boy's face. The minister saw it too, and placing his hand affectionately on the lad's shoulder said: "Never mind, we'll have the music," and the boy knew that the promise would be kept.

The three moved down the aisle and were stopped by the editor. "Were you looking for some one?" he inquired politely.

The minister answered with a calm countenance, "Yes, for some of our boys."

"The band boys?" asked the editor.

"Yes."

"I saw some of them going into the cellar as I came in."

"Thank you," replied the minister.

In the basement the six missing boys, James Walker among them, were found stupidly drunk.

Fifteen minutes later the minister walked rapidly through the now crowded auditorium and was again halted by the editor. "Did you find them?" he asked suavely.

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

Going hastily up into the balcony where the other members of the band were stationed, anxiously waiting, the minister cheered them by saying, "I've sent for substitutes by the next train. They'll be here in fifteen minutes. We'll have the music all right. It's a sure thing." The boys waved their instruments to express their joy, while the drummer, a comical chap, went through a silent but vigorous performance.

The program was carried out with the greatest enthusiasm and was well received. The music was all that could be desired. Scott Jason's face was a study; it was plain he could not solve the problem. Taking the opportunity when the band was playing a very loud-toned selection, he stole down to the basement. There were the boys still in a drunken stupor. He returned to the audience room more mystified than ever.

When the entertainment was over, congratulations came pouring in from all sides. Many prominent men, and some of the fathers of the boys, were detained and taken to the basement.

The next morning a deputation of determined citizens waited on the editor. "You may take your choice," the chairman announced; "you must either discontinue your disreputable sheet or be kicked out of the place."

"Your charitable, kind-hearted preacher has ruined my business," answered Scott Jason, doggedly. "I put up a fight against him. I was looking out for number one, of course. In this 'land of the free and home of the brave,' a man ought to be allowed to run his affairs to suit himself. I didn't bother the minister, and a man is a fool who won't take his own part."

"You could have worked together and bettered the conditions in this town and at the same time made a grand success of your paper," remarked Mr. Morris. "You still have a chance."

"Excuse me, please," drawled Scott Jason. "When I head the Salvation Army or a Band of Hope, just tell me about it."

"It would be a better occupation than you have been engaged in," retorted Mr. Morris decisively.

"That may be. I don't mind telling you I don't like my business myself," said the editor. "At the same time I don't propose to let any flaxen haired preacher hand me points on it. I do want to leave this town, though, and begin again somewhere else. Why don't you buy me out, some of you?"

"I will," offered Mr. Morris instantly. "Name your figure."

After some discussion terms were agreed upon and Mr. Morris gave the editor a check. The committee filed out and the matter was ended.

The presses and other machinery belonging to the paper were moved to the building occupied by the minister and the professor, and in due course of time, the first copy of the Searchlight appeared. It was received with enthusiasm.

A day or two later Scott Jason called on the minister and found him with his sleeves rolled up, his face smeared with black spots, but beaming with delight. Two or three young fellows were assisting him. "Come in," he cried cheerily. "I have found this a wonderful adjunct to the work of a minister."

"You seem to have mastered the art rapidly," was the reply, "or have you hired some man from the city to bear the brunt?"

"Not a bit of it," laughed Mr. Strong. "I have helped to get out a college paper, you see, and every experience counts."

Scott Jason held out his hand. "It is nearly time for my train," he said. "I am leaving here but I want to tell you that I have no hard feeling against you. I admire a good fighter and that's surely what you are. For one little tow-headed boy, single handed and alone, to do what you have done is a big thing. You see I don't count the professor," with a wink, "I handled him easily enough before you came."

The minister walked slowly over to the editor and looking him squarely in the eye, said, "Jason, I have none but good wishes for you, but you are mistaken in thinking I was alone. I was one plus. In that lies the power. Nobody can fight against God and win. I don't like to say goodbye, but I'll remember you in your new life. You can think of me as continuing to weed out the blind pigs in this town and everything else that hurts youth. You see things from my viewpoint now, don't you?"

A smile of good fellowship and a muttered, "Here's luck to you," was the editor's reply as he walked to the door and let himself out.

PROHIBITION MAP

25 White States
Size 19x25 inches
Revised to March 1, 1917
Price, 15 cents; two for 25 cents.

Prohibition Map Leaflet

Size 6x9 inches
Map on one side and list of prohibition states, with date of enactment of the prohibitory law, on the reverse side.
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

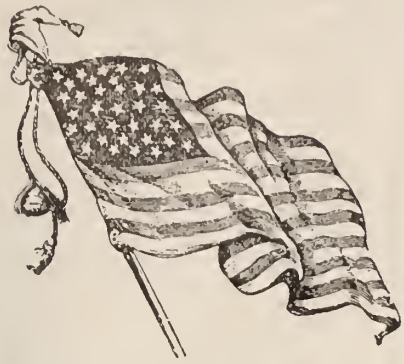
PENNANTS

With name of prohibition state and year of passage of prohibitory law.

26 PENNANTS
(25 states and Alaska)
made of paper 18 inches long, with name of state printed in blue.
Price, per set, 35 cents.
Orders filled for sets only.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

Your Flag and My Flag



"Your flag and my flag,
And how it flies today
In your land and my land
And half a world away!"

A hand-colored post-card with poem by Wilbur D. Nesbit.
Price, 5 cents each; 50 cents per dozen.

A Motto Card with same poem, also hand-colored, suitable for framing. Size 11x14. Price, 30 cents.

FLAGS FOR DECORATION

Printed Muslin, mounted.
2½ in. by 4 in., 50 cents per gross.
3½ in. by 6 in., 80 cents per gross.
11 in. by 18 in., 50 cents per dozen.
12 in. by 22 in., 70 cents per dozen.
20 in. by 36 in., $1.50 per dozen.
Orders not filled for less than gross or dozen lots.

SILK FLAGS
(Unmounted)
8 in. by 12 in., 15 cents each.
36 in. by 60 in., $6.00 each.

WOOL BUNTING
(Unmounted)
3 ft. by 6 ft., $4.00.
5 ft. by 10 ft., $7.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WORDS OF CHEER

For Temperance People. A very Beautiful Book. Printed in Gold and Colors on Every Page. Size 4x7 inches. Gems of Art. Artistic Binding. Sample copy mailed to Readers of This Paper for TWO DIMES. Address W. B. JONES CO., SILVER CREEK, N. Y.

BURNING UP POWER

GEORGE STEWART, Jr., of Yale University
In the North American Student

The world war has brought us face to face with reality in many forms. The men of our colleges, as true scholars and honest men, should face every issue squarely, dissect the corpus of it, extract the irrelevant, eliminate the "unmoral" from the discussion, laud the moral and beneficent, and utterly destroy the immoral. There are certain evils in our colleges today which the saner, wiser, more loyal students should root out at the cost of popularity, fraternal association, grand stand applause and selfish indulgence; for if they do not these evils will continue at the cost of honest scholarship and university honor. To get at evil number one; I mean cigaret smoking.

When our fathers and mothers come upon a modern campus, they are shocked at the sight of the number of men inhaling cigaret smoke instead of fresh air. They feel something is wrong. Freshmen come to college, trained to believe smoking is contrary to every tradition of training and good physical health; they, too, see men they knew as seniors in prep. school, pulling away at "pills." They feel something is wrong. Scientists make accurate studies as to the relative scholastic standing of smokers and non-smokers, and they see something wrong in the smoky atmosphere of college halls.

Coaches urge men in training to quit smoking. Cigaret smoking does not produce the clear head and the nerve needed to push a ball over the line. These trained coaches, scientists, professors, efficiency experts—are all these witnesses to the destructibility of cigarets, liars and impostors? A growing number of sane teachers and students, who look at the real aim of learning, are inclined to think they are not.

A theological seminary senior told me that he could see no "moral" side to smoking. A man is to preach by example as well as by word. How about the young, growing boys in his parish? These boys deserve the best from their minister, the Lord's under-shepherd. A man's message is no bigger than the man.

Then there is that argument about the point of contact smoking gives a man. Every one knows men in college, in business and in the ministry who are the very best sort of mixers, and who do not defile their breath and injure their influence with smoking. Do you have to booze to get a point of contact with boozers? Do you have to be immoral to get a point of contact with those who have a disordered sex life?

If our college graduates go out setting an example of selfish, harmful indulgence, if our seminary graduates cannot see a "moral issue" in a vice which is cursing the growing boyhood of our country, who, pray, is to see the issue and further the crusade? It will be unpopular, but God has rewards for the John Browns.

The difficulty of the task consists in the fact that it is one of these social, pet, habit-forming indulgences, commonly accepted, tremendously hard to break, which has gotten hold of our country until now more money is spent for tobacco than for bread. To say it has no moral significance is to deny our Lord's whole principle of stewardship. Men claim they can break the habit, quit when they want to do so. As a matter of fact they cannot. One of the curious psychological phenomena of habit-forming drugs is that men cleave to the fallacy that they can quit any time. The cigaret smoker is nervous, irritable and grouchy if without tobacco. He is not united in his faculties, he tries to concentrate while his system cries out for the drug to dope him. Men continue smoking for the most part because they cannot quit. The reason most smokers regard smoking as harmless is because they cannot quit and are ashamed to acknowledge their defeat. Will power is at a low ebb or conquered, and anyone who has worked with young men who are cigaret smokers can call to mind men defeated, consciously wrong, and helpless to break the habit. The arm of flesh fails here and only the power of God can succor their weakened will power. Let him who denies this take the young men on his street and make the test.

Let us have light. Why cloud the vision of our growing youth with cigaret smoke? Let the press, the pulpit, the lecture platform, the professor, the entrepreneur give us the facts. We will vote yes to a rational conclusion. Every great issue has a prophet and a seer. Take your choice—there is a place for you.

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN. STEREOPTICON OUTFIT, with more than 100 slides, including two temperance lectures and six illustrated songs. For particulars address H. W. Davis, Providence, Ky.

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should.

I know I can because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight, in your room, without drugs, by scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves.

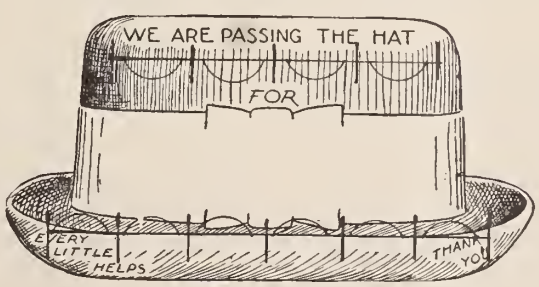
If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience. Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

PASS THE HAT



A Unique Coin Collector—A Novel Way for the Local W. C. T. U. to Raise Money

Each hat holds ten coins, nickels or dimes, which are slipped in the hat card in the little compartments toward the outer edge of the hat. The object for which the money is raised may be written or printed on the hat bands.

These little hat collectors are finished with blue or red bands and orders will be filled in equal parts of each color, making it possible to easily conduct a contest by giving the blues to one side and the reds to the other.

Price, per dozen, 25 cents; fifty, 75 cents; one hundred, $1.25; five hundred, $5.00, postpaid.

An extra charge for printing the name of the local union or the object for which the money is raised will be made and estimates upon same gladly furnished.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL MEETINGS ALL THROUGH MARCH

Reports of March 1 meetings and subscriptions for the official paper taken on those occasions are being received in every mail. We gratefully acknowledge these evidences of continued and increased interest on the part of our friends. May we again remind all local unions that UNION SIGNAL Day meetings may be held at any time during March, the natal month of Lillian M. N. Stevens. In no way can we so definitely help to promote the prohibition cause as to educate the people by placing in their hands THE UNION SIGNAL.

WHAT OUR FRIENDS SAY

THE UNION SIGNAL is a welcome visitor in my home and has been for many years. I wish every mother could take it. I have raised four girls and five boys. All except one of the girls are active W. C. T. U. workers. Their husbands are honorary members, as are my own four boys. That is what THE UNION SIGNAL will do if it is put into the home. I have been a member since 1881, when our beloved leader, Frances E. Willard, organized the union. As a thank offering to my Heavenly Father for my Christian home and sober boys, I expect to work and pray until the victory is won for National Constitutional Prohibition.

—MRS. A. M. VERCHEY, Augusta, Ga.

I am hoping we can induce more of our women to take THE UNION SIGNAL. They need it and it grows better all the time.

—MARY J. M. STIEKLE, Toledo, Iowa.

"With every issue, your excellent paper gives me renewed hope and courage."

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS' WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

"JIM AND ME" and 41 other choice soogs on temperance and prohibition including "A Saloooless Nation 1920" are in Songs and Sayings. A great book. Price 25c, 5 for $1. A free copy of new booklet contaioing "My Father Knows," pronounced "a glorious soog," to all who order, mentioning Union Sigoal.
REV. L. L. PICKETT, Wilmore, Ky.

HOTEL MAN WOULD NOT ACCEPT A LICENSE IF HANDED HIM ON SILVER PLATTER

Mifflin county, Pennsylvania, has been dry for nine years, and so well satisfied are the citizens that at the regular session of the license court held the last week in February no applications for license and no remonstrances were filed.

"Industrial conditions are at high tide," says the Philadelphia North American, in discussing the economic effect of prohibition in the county, "deposits in savings banks have doubled several times over, taxation has been lowered, the public debt of thirty years' standing cut in half, petty crimes reduced eighty per cent and the trend of modern improvement maintained.

"Four of the hotel properties of license regime have been sold for good prices and remodeled for legitimate industry. W. W. Cunningham, proprietor of one of the hotels, says he is making better rentals from the business and would not accept a license if handed him on a silver platter."

THE SPREADING DROUGHT

The wetter grows the weather, why, the dryer grows the land—
The drought is spreading like a leak out far on every hand,
Dry states are getting dryer, the wet ones grow less humid—
It's "high and dry" is living, for the moisture all is doom-ed.

It's Southern states, and Western, East,
North and Central, too,
The districts, territories and the island spots a few—
They are all a-hieing, drying, one or two or three a day—
It's the pro-hi and the so-dry is this anti-wetness way.

They won't let you make it, keep it, sell
it, give it to a friend,
Can't store it, ship it, imitate it—no one will defend
Old Demon Rum these sober times, and few will drop a tear
For this departed spirit, or put flowers on his bier.

—D. G. Bickers in Macon (Ga.) Telegraph

FUNNYGRAPHS

Two women were leaving the theater after a performance of "A Doll's House."

"O, don't you just love Ibsen?" cried one ecstatically. "Doesn't he just take all the hope out of life?"—Everybody's Magazine.

"I'll tell you, old man, Angy is a bright girl. She's brains enough for two."

"Then she's the very girl for you, my boy."—Exchange.

"I think there is some misapprehension about the freedom of the press," declared the editor of the Plunkville Palladium.

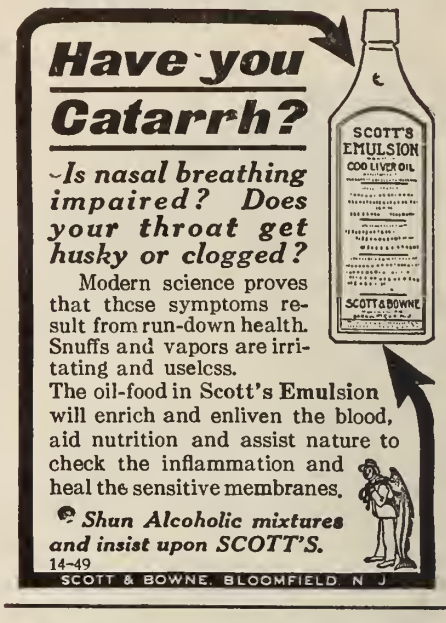
"In what way?"

"A lot of people seem to think they are not expected to pay for the paper."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Margaret, aged five, had been very rude to a little guest, and after the child had gone home Margaret's mother told her very feelingly how grieved she was at her rudeness.

"I've tried so hard to make you a good child, Margaret, to teach you to be polite and kind to others; and yet, in spite of all my efforts, you are so rude and so naughty."

Margaret, deeply moved, looked sadly at her mother and said, "What a failure you are, mother!"—Harper's Magazine.



Anti-Beer Publications

LEAFLETS

Beer From an Economic Standpoint
Truth About Beer
Beer, Fact and Fiction
Beer a Dangerous Drink
What a Beerless Army Did
Beer Drinking and Its Effects Upon Human Progeny
Beer and Wine
Beer an Insidious Poison
Boy or Beer Barrel (cartoon)
The Brewer's Slaves (cartoon)
Is Beer a Liquid Food?
Beer or Flour
Revelation of Science Concerning Beer
The Food Value in Beer
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

Beer Not a Hygienic Drink
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred 15 cents.

Beer Drinking Injures Health
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Beer the So-Called Temperance Drink
Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

POSTERS

Beer
Beware (English or German)
Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $3.50.
Beer or Flour
Price, 10 cents each; per fifty, $2.00; per hundred, $4.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

What Prohibition Has Meant To Colorado

By Governor George A. Carlson

An artistic booklet, full of convincing campaign arguments, issued especially for distribution among

BOARD OF TRADE MEMBERS
REAL ESTATE FIRMS
ASSOCIATIONS OF COMMERCE
COMMERCIAL CLUBS
BANKERS

and business men in general.

Size, 4x9 inches. Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $1.50; per hundred, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLII | EVANSTON, ILL., MARCH 15, 1917 | No. 11

The Hour of Destiny Is Striking

Slogan of the World's W. C. T. U.

THE European war has brought the great alcoholic tragedy home to the governments and to the hearts and minds of men throughout the world as nothing else could have done, advancing by decades, perhaps by generations, the fulfillment of nation-wide and world-wide prohibition.

It does not take a prophetic eye to see the fast approach of the day when the whole world will be sober. Our generation, of course, contains many old drinkers who will continue to drink until they die, but the debauching of the young will end with the prohibition of the liquor traffic and no new drinkers will rise to take the places of the old.

In the generations to come men will call prohibition the greatest reform in the history of the world—a reform that ushered in a new era in the life history of the human race.

—Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

SPLENDID TEMPERANCE RECORD OF SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS—INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT—CLOSING MOMENTS OF CONGRESS—WASHINGTON AT NIGHT A MAGNIFICENT SIGHT

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Two immensely important events have taken place during the past week, the closing of the Sixty-fourth Congress and the inauguration of Woodrow Wilson to succeed himself as President of the United States for the next four years. The weather for the inaugural ceremonies was not all one could wish, but was much better than it was feared it would be. For five successive days it had rained and rained hard. Sunday, March 4, it sleeted all day. Early Monday morning it was cloudy, but by nine-thirty the sun came out and a strong wind arose, which carried the sand that had been sprinkled on the streets to absorb the dampness, into the faces of the crowds of people who lined the streets; it was like a veritable sand storm.

Not since the second inauguration of Lincoln had such precautions been taken to protect the chief executive of our nation. An open carriage, drawn by four horses, carried the President, with Mrs. Wilson beside him, from the White House to the Capitol, one mile distant. The vehicle was entirely surrounded by troops, police and secret service men. On either side of Pennsylvania Avenue, a few feet apart, were stationed soldiers, each with loaded gun, just returned from the Mexican border. On high buildings, at various points overlooking Pennsylvania Avenue, were special detectives, watching the windows and the crowds below. Secret service men had come to Washington to aid in identifying crooks of all kinds who had swarmed here from different sections of the country.

A great concourse of approximately 40,000 people was assembled in the plaza fronting the Capitol. While the coming of the President, who was in the Senate Chamber witnessing the ceremony of swearing in the Vice-President and the new Senators, was awaited, some one in the crowd started the hymn, "America," and such a volume of sound as rolled up the words, "My country 'tis of thee" one seldom hears. The great stands erected outside the Capitol were crowded to their capacity by notable men and women. The scene was most impressive as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, in his judicial robes, faced Woodrow Wilson and administered the following oath: "I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the office of President of the United States and, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God." When the Bible was opened at random for the President to kiss, on taking the oath of office, he pressed his lips to this passage: "The Lord is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble." Upon the conclusion of this solemn ceremony, the President shook hands with the Chief Justice, then turned to Mrs. Wilson and clasped her hand. Mrs. Wilson carried to the White House the little Oxford Bible used, having brought it with her. It is the personal property of the President, having been used when he took the oath of office as governor of New Jersey and again when taking the oath as President at his first inauguration in 1913.

President's Inaugural Address

In beginning his inaugural address, the President touched on the international crisis and declared there could now be no turning back from the tragical events of the last thirty months, which have brought upon Americans a new responsibility as citizens of the world. He declared anew that America must stand for peace, stability of free peoples, national equality in matters of right; that the seas must be free to all, and that the family of nations shall not support any government not derived from the just consent of the governed.

Around the President was a great gathering. Many of the men have worked with him in the past four years and will continue to uphold his hands in the coming term of his administration. Many were in the same great concourse four years ago to hear him utter the words of his first address as President, and today recalled, that as they looked into the future at that time, they were not permitted to see the great burden which the world has since received upon its shoulders.

The procession took nearly five hours in passing a given point. One of the features that attracted great attention and caused much enthusiasm was the Americanization section, which included several thousand "new citizens" representing every one of the many nationalities that go to make up the populace of the United States. On the banners borne by these adopted sons one supreme idea was set forth: "America First." Roumanians, Italians, Serbs and Poles were in line. Real live Indian chiefs in feathers and paint, and mounted on frisky horses, attracted especial notice. The entire pageant, arranged by the inaugural committee, was, in the opinion of persons long familiar with such ceremonies, one of the best ever witnessed.

—Washington Evening Star

On the Way to the President

Jones-Works Law Clears Jail of Intoxicated Persons Inauguration Night for First Time

Police stations did not contain the large number of intoxicated persons found therein on previous inauguration nights. This was due, officials say, wholly to the fact that the dry provision of the Jones-Works law was in operation. It was the first time the saloons were closed on such an occasion, and the recent enactment of the anti-saloon measure means that they will be closed at all times after the last day of next October. Officials are well satisfied with the manner in which the law was observed and not a single instance of a complaint against a licensed dealer for violation of the measure was reported.

Promptly at noon Sunday, March 4, Speaker Clark brought down his gavel, saying, "According to the terms of the Constitution, I declare the Sixty-Fourth Congress adjourned, sine die." There had been hurried, exhaustive sessions for a week or longer in both Senate and House, often extending far into the night. The House had kept up its speed and had almost cleared the docket, but the Senate was in a most unusual state of excitement over the armed neutrality bill requested by the President. A filibuster was started early on Saturday by Senator La Follette, Republican, of Wisconsin, and Senator Stone, Democrat, of Missouri, which lasted up to the hour of adjournment. Mr. Stone's attitude was surprising, as he was chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and had been up to this time the spokesman of the President. So the closing hours of the Senate session were dramatic. Senator Hitchcock, in charge of the bill, and other supporters of the measure determined that, if no vote could be had upon it, at least they would close the debate and they held the floor until the end despite the efforts of Senator La Follette to obtain recognition, which at one time nearly precipitated a riot in the Senate. The galleries were crowded and the throngs watched proceedings with intense interest.

Just outside the Senate chamber, in the President's room, sat President Wilson, signing such messages as were presented to him for approval, while the battle over his bill raged in the Senate.

(Continued on Page Three)

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

(Continued from Page Two)

Although the supporters of the bill were unable to get a vote on the measure and pass it, they had a round-robin signed by seventy-six Senators who supported the measure, showing that the Senate overwhelmingly stood by the President. This was put in the Congressional Record.

The extraordinary situation prevented the ceremonies usual at the close of Congress. Vice-President Marshall, worn out with the long hours of work, was not present and Senator Robinson was in the chair when the gavel fell at noon, bringing to an end the debate on the armed neutrality bill and closing the session. There were none of the usual complimentary speeches by the Senators and Vice-President.

Much important legislation, strongly advocated by the administration, was still awaiting final action when the Sixty-fourth Congress closed.

Besides the armed neutrality bill, the appropriation bills which failed of passage were the Army bill, the Sundry Civil bill, the General Deficiency bill and the Rivers and Harbors bill. The Public Buildings bill also failed to receive action by the Senate.

Splendid Temperance Record of Sixty-Fourth Congress

The Sixty-fourth Congress will always be remembered with gratitude by temperance people for its splendid temperance record. Never in the history of the American Congress have so many temperance measures been passed at one session and this despite the fact that great appropriation bills were pressing for consideration. Our bills are prohibition for Alaska and Porto Rico; the bill for anti-liquor advertising, with the "bone dry" act quickly following, and finally the bill making the District of Columbia dry after November 1, 1917. This last bill was passed by the House last week, by a vote of 273 to 137, and signed by the President on Sunday, March 4. Surely this is a magnificent record.

As the fiscal year closes June 30, the neglected appropriations must be forthcoming to keep the wheels of the government running. A special session of Congress is, therefore, being considered.

Washington now presents at night one of the most beautiful sights within the range of human vision in the illumination of the Capitol by powerful electric lights. Nothing can equal the spectacle of the white edifice floating as it were above the city, the incomparable dome of perfect proportions shining in its purity against the sky, ethereal, yet tangible, a token of the stability of the government. It is a sight that never will be forgotten by those who are fortunate enough to witness it. Nowhere else in the world can such a sight be offered to view and Washington is proud to possess the opportunity of presenting it.

As Congress has adjourned, the National W. C. T. U. headquarters at Washington will be closed and the Washington Letter be discontinued until another session convenes.

Washington, D. C., March 8, 1917

VERMONT GAINS PROHIBITION TERRITORY

The no-license forces made a gain of six towns, according to incomplete returns, at the city and town elections of March 6.

A bill allowing women taxpayers to vote on most appropriations and all town officers except road commissioner at town meetings was passed by the lower branch of the Vermont legislature by a vote of 101 to 89. The bill now goes to the senate.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Indiana
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Arizona	Utah
Alabama	Michigan
Washington	Montana
Oregon	Alaska

STATES TO VOTE ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Wyoming	Missouri	New Mexico
Iowa	Utah	Minnesota

WOMEN PHYSICIANS OF PHILADELPHIA ENDORSE PROHIBITION

The Women's Medical Association has gone on record as the first medical organization in Philadelphia county, Pennsylvania, to publicly favor prohibition. At a recent meeting of the association the women physicians pledged their support to the poster campaign against liquor which is being planned by the Philadelphia W. C. T. U.

"We are proud of the fact that it is a woman's organization which leads in medical endorsement of prohibition in Philadelphia," said Dr. Lida Stewart Cogill, one of the leaders. "We have tried for more than two years to get the Pennsylvania State Medical Association and the Philadelphia County Medical Association to come out in favor of prohibition. Each time they refused to act on the ground that it is a political question. We women have felt it is simply shifting the burden of decision to say it is a political question, when it is clearly a moral issue.

"We endorsed prohibition in the hope that other medical organizations here would follow. Although not enfranchised, and therefore, without power to enforce their principles, the women physicians feel that they can at least let the public know how they stand on this most important question."

ALCOHOL CALLED AID OF PNEUMONIA GERM BY NEW YORK CITY BOARD OF HEALTH

The New York City health department's bulletin of March 6 says:

"Alcohol in whisky, patent medicines or otherwise is one of the most powerful allies of the pneumonia germ. Even moderate drinkers when they get pneumonia are more apt to die than abstainers."

Pneumonia caused 228 deaths in New York City in a week recently.

MERELY A MATTER OF TIME!

Courtesy Woman's Journal.

SUFFRAGE STATUS—States and Territories Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	UTAH	KANSAS	NEVADA
COLORADO	WASHINGTON	OREGON	MONTANA
IDAHO	CALIFORNIA	ARIZONA	ALASKA

Limited Suffrage:

ILLINOIS OHIO ARKANSAS NORTH DAKOTA INDIANA

CHICAGO PAPERS AND PROHIBITION

Mida's Criterion, Prominent Liquor Paper, Tells of Inability to Get Liquor Ads. Into Metropolitan Journals

Remarkable State of Affairs Recently Revealed by an Advertisement

"In the February issue of Mida's Criterion, mention was made of a very silly and extremely inane editorial in the Hearst newspapers regarding a row of bottles. These bottles, as our readers will recall, were supposed to have been opened at the bottom by the use of an electric needle. The story is too old to need repeating again.

"The Charles Boldt Company had prepared an answer to this attack. This answer was in the form of an advertisement, and the advertisement simply went into details and explained what those marks were. And it also exploded the Hearst theory. Mr. Wm. P. Carroll of Chicago, representing the Chas. Boldt interests, sent these ads to the Daily News, The Tribune and the Herald. In fact, took them himself. Each one of the papers accepted the advertisement. But one after another refused to send him proofs, and it was evident that they were all holding out, and that none of them would accept the advertisement. In fact, the Herald came out flat-footed and said that it could not accept anything favorable to liquor. The only newspaper in Chicago that would accept the advertisement was the Journal.

"Now, here was an advertisement that simply refuted something that was of a malicious nature. If anything ever deserved publication, it was that advertisement. We know exactly what it stated, and it said nothing that was not true. In fact, the papers should have been glad to take up the matter without pay, but they were not. They did not care to say anything in favor of liquor even in their advertising columns. They preferred to let the public be blowed and be d——, and a few other things. This is a good idea to keep in mind, because it certainly reveals the attitude of the press of Chicago toward the liquor interests."

Even the papers of license Chicago recognize that the newspaper-reading public have no use for John Barleycorn!

Odette Souet, First French Orphan Adopted by the W. C. T. U.

This is the picture of Odette Souet, the first French orphan adopted by the W. C. T. U. The Suffolk county (Mass.) W. C. T. U., through the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work, is contributing ten cents a day toward the support of this child. There are about 300,000 children in France whose fathers have been killed in the war. The French government allows ten cents per day for the support of each, and a society formed for the relief of French war orphans asks that this sum be supplemented by another ten cents to make the child more comfortable. Many local unions are co-operating with this society and contributing to the support of these children through the Flower Mission and Relief Work department of the National W. C. T. U., Lella M. Sewall, superintendent.

NO BOOZE IN REGIMENT ARMORIES, RULES PENNSYLVANIA COMMANDER

"No booze today—or any other day," is the order recently issued by Colonel Maurice E. Finney of the Eighth (Pa.) regiment, not long since returned from the border, relative to the regiment's armories and other buildings in Harrisburg, Pottsville, York, Carlisle and other places. "The officers of the Eighth regiment have placed a positive and bone-dry prohibition upon the use of liquor in any form in or about armories," said Colonel Finney. "This not only applies to the guardsmen themselves, but to all others. We'll be enlisting a lot of new men shortly, and we don't intend subjecting them to criticism that might arise from affiliation with an organization that permitted booze in its official home."

During the time that the troops were on the Mexican border other commanders took similar action against booze. And in the New York National Guard alone not less than eighteen thousand men were on the water wagon for months due to the no-drink regulations of Major General O'Ryan, commander of the New York Division stationed at McAllen, Texas. Two of these rules which were posted on the army bulletin boards and strictly enforced were as follows:

"Officers and enlisted men of this division are directed not to use alcoholic drink in any form during their service on the border, except on prescription of a medical officer given in the line of duty.

"Soldiers are prohibited entering houses of prostitution, and saloons where liquor is sold, except under orders for the performance of duty."

BEER TEAMS FORBIDDEN TO USE COAL COMPANY'S ROADS

Orders were recently issued from the Shamokin (Pa.) offices of the Susquehanna Coal Company forbidding teams hauling liquor to use the roads of the company in the delivery of intoxicants to residents of Sagon, Hickory Ridge and other mining patches. "The order is in keeping with a plan to bar from these mining villages all intoxicating drinks except those carried in by residents themselves," comments the Philadelphia North American.

WASHINGTON "BONE DRY" LAW COMMENDED BY SEATTLE PRESS

As indicative of the attitude of the press generally toward prohibition in the states which have had a year's experience under dry conditions a recent editorial in the Seattle Daily Times is interesting to the friends of prohibition and should be provocative of considerable hard thinking on the part of the traffic managers of John Barleycorn.

Says the Times: "The state of Washington will be 'bone dry' on June 6 . . . ninety days after the adjournment of the legislature, unless held up by the referendum.

In Line with Popular Sentiment

"There is no present reason to anticipate a successful campaign of this nature. The 'bone dry' law is in line with popular sentiment in this state. Of that there can be no question. Up to the last general election there might have been some doubt as to the attitude of the people on this important question. The legislature was correct in assuming that there is none now.

"After many months under prohibition, the voters of Washington emphatically endorsed the system and made it very plain that they were desirous of strengthening rather than weakening the existing law. The 'bone dry' act was a logical response to this expression of the popular will.

No Out-of-State Liquor Interference Will Be Tolerated in Washington

"The suggestion that liquor houses in California and Montana might foster a referendum campaign directed against this measure is interesting, but not particularly convincing. The booze interests in those two states are not so strongly entrenched at home that they would care to foment trouble in other states.

"Furthermore, the people of Washington would very quickly resent outside interference in their local affairs and promptly would find means to punish the offending liquor interests or their agents in this commonwealth.

"This community is going 'bone dry' on June 6. It is reasonably safe to 'bank on' that prediction.

"It is going 'bone dry' in response to the desire of its people. The law that the legislature has enacted is one that the public wished to see enacted and which the public will approve, now that it has been placed on the statute books.

"Furthermore, the change from present conditions will be less of a shock to Washington than was the change from wet to dry on January 1, 1916—and that 'shock' was accompanied by such unpleasant incidents as increases in bank deposits, decreases in crime and a general expansion of business."

PROHIBITION BOOSTS BUSINESS

More than $2,000,000 worth of new buildings is announced for Spokane, Washington, to begin this year. Contractors, architects and dealers in building material are expecting the best year since 1910. A Spokane correspondent to Business Chronicle says:

"Spokane Dry Goods Co. will start erection of a seven-story home for Crescent Department Store, costing $400,000. Several automobile concerns will build large garages and repair shops; among them Overland Co., which will expend $150,000.

"Two hospital associations are planning structures, each calling for an expenditure of about $200,000. Several large additions are to be made to school buildings, a half dozen bridges put up by the city, and freight yards and buildings laid out by O. W. R. & N.

"Big orders already are being booked by brick and cement manufacturers, and factories are to be speeded up as early as weather will permit."

PROHIBITION IN RUSSIA PROVES LAW ITSELF IS SCHOOLMASTER

ERNEST GORDON in "Russian Prohibition"

Russia, we may fairly say, has soived the drink problem. She has donc morc. She has discovered to thc world how simple the problem realiy is. It is the old story of Columbus' egg. Russia has demonstrated that we need no graded course —reguiation, Gothenburg System, locai option, education of scntimcnt up to prohibition. No people had less anti-alcohol education than the Russians. The law itself is schoolmaster. Nothing educatcs more effectually either upwards or downwards. Thc bcst education for prohibition is prohibition. Only thc law must be enforced. In Russia enforcement is possibie through centraiized autocracy; in thc United Statcs it will be possible by federal action backed by the women's vote.

Thc more radical and general the prohibition the morc successful. Prohibition "fails," not because there is too much of it, but too little.

SWEDEN'S PROGRESS ON THE ROAD TO PROHIBITION

A. SYMONDS OHLIN, Assistant Secretary W. C. T. U. of Sweden

The temporary standstill in the march to victory which the temperance movement in Sweden is now experiencing—caused primarily by internal political changes—weighs heavily on the hearts of all workers for prohibition. A certain listlessness in the ranks, arising partially, no doubt, from high hopes suddenly dashed to the ground, does not make matters brighter, and yet, in our heart of hearts, we are sure this is only a temporary cloud obscuring a noon-day sun, a little delay on the road to total prohibition.

A far-sighted government, we believe, would long ago have prevented, by prohibitory legislation, the appropriation by the distilleries of the grain, etc. The restrictions with regard to gin and other drinks of an exceedingly high alcoholic content, are very stringent, but ale and beer are still free, which is a ridiculous thing when it is considered that bread and flour are not free. We all have bread tickets now and our daily ration is a little over three hundred grammes, which is quite insufficient for certain classes, such as lumbermen and other laborers with heavy outdoor work to do. Milk and butter are also very scarce, working families with small children being given tickets to ensure at least the babies getting their nourishment.

At the riksdag the king's speeches give no hope of any government measures as to either temperance legislation or the abolishment of the police regulation of vice, though a year ago the minister of Home Affairs promised a deputation of ladies that the last named question would be considered. But we still hope on.

As to votes for women, the alert suffrage society, after having waited on the prime minister without success, is now endeavoring to influence members of parliament to bring in a franchise bill.

A rising interest in the spread of peace principles is very noticeable all over the iand, especially among the people. The aristocrats and the capitalists, on whom the burden of war, after ali, does not fall as heavily as on those at the opposite pole of society, are, as a whole, still resigned to the "necessary and unavoidable" evil of war, but among the other classes, and not least among them the women, there is a promising awakening to the incompatibility of war with the religion of Jesus Christ and the requirements of the Sermon on the Mount. It is the ethical and moral side of the peace question which is so largely appealing to the people, even to the Social Democrats, of whom a vast majority are freethinkers. It is true most of them have cut themselves adrift from creeds and church connections and yet they were among the first in the field to stand for the principle of peace.

Crown Princess of Sweden a White Ribboner and Royal Patroness of the W. C. T. U.

Peace societies are growing and peace meetings and peace campaigns are constantly being organized. Our monthly white ribbon organ, Vita Bandet, is constantly publishing peace articles and peace news. President Wilson's peace note elicited appreciative telegrams from several different organizations in Sweden. The W. C. T. U. sent the following message: "We thank you for your appeal to belligerents on behalf of peace and good-will."

FROM EVERY HOME A POUND OF BREAD

LOUISA A'HMUTY NASH

England has at last waked up to the ravages made on her finances by drink. A writer in the Christian, of London, informs us that since the war began the liquor trade has used up the labor of lifting sixty million tons; that the great Pyramid of Egypt could have been pulled down and reset three times over by the labor used in landing the drink stuff at the London docks. This amounts to more than all the rest of the unloading together. With regard to food, it is said there would have been three and a half million more tons of food but for the traffic. From every home an amount equal to a pound has been stolen daily since the war began. The labor is considered equivalent to the whole of the United Kingdom having stood idle for a hundred days.

The War Savings committee has been preaching economy to ladies in their dress, and discovers now that two and a half million dollars are squandered daily for a drink that damages health.

ANTI-ALCOHOL MOVEMENT AMONG THE NATIONS

Great Britain Reduces Beer Output

According to a recent edict of the government brewing will be cut down about one-fourth of the former output. The importation of rum has been stopped altogether, and the importation of wine and spirits reduced to 75 per cent. The explanation of this reduction is that the ingredients used in brewing are needed for food. It is coming to be a question of bread vs. beer.

A resolution has been adopted in the House of Commons requesting the catering committee to observe, in the sale of intoxicating liquors, the same restrictions imposed upon the general public.

Suspension of Beer Brewing in Northern Germany Imminent

The Berliner Tageblatt reports that the suspension of all beer brewing in northern Germany is imminent. This action is to be taken to save the maize for bread and the malt as a substitute for coffee.

But since "beer is liquid bread," why the necessity for this change? The actual food properties of the much-vaunted national drink of Germany sink into insignificance in the face of actual starvation, under war conditions.

France's Anti-Alcohol Campaign

A remarkable work is being carried on in France under the Anti-Alcohol League, in which Madame Fallot, the president of the W. C. T. U. of France, and Mademoiselle Weyer, the corresponding secretary, are prominent. The President of the Republic is the honorary president of the league and the question is given much publicity.

FRENCH ANTI-ALCOHOL POSTERS DISPLAYED IN POSTOFFICES

The citizens of the French republic cannot today be ignorant of the danger of indulging in the alcohol habit, for upon the walls of every post office of France has been posted by order of the government the following statement and appeal, which bears the signature of President Poincare:

TO FRENCH WOMEN AND TO YOUNG FRENCHMEN: DRINK IS AS MUCH YOUR ENEMY AS GERMANY

Since 1870 it has cost France in men and money much more than the present war.

Drinkers age quickly. They lose half their normal life and fall easy victims to many infirmities and illnesses.

The seductive drinks of your parents reappear in their offspring as great hereditary evils. France owes to alcohol a great many mad men and women and consumptives and most of her criminals.

Drink decreases by two-thirds our national production. It raises the cost of living and increases poverty.

Mothers, young men, and young girls, wives! Up and act against drink in memory of those who have gloriously died or suffered wounds for the Fatherland! You will thus accomplish a mission as great as that of our heroic soldiers.

PROMINENT W. C. T. U. WORKER OF CHINA HAS AUDIENCE WITH PRESIDENT LI—PLEADS WITH GOVERNMENT HEAD TO KEEP OUT BREWERIES

China is a land of surprises. Yesterday it was an absolute monarchy of the most extreme type. Today it is a republic with increasingly liberal ideas. A few years ago a woman was regarded as of little value except as the mother of sons. The other day a native Chinese woman, a convert to the Christian faith, was granted audience by President Li Yuan-hung of China. She represented a large missionary organization meeting in Pekin and was delegated by it to present to the chief executive of the republic the question of the state religion. But in addition to being a missionary enthusiast, she is an ardent advocate of temperance and made it a point upon the same occasion to urge the necessity of the government absolutely refusing to consider the passage of a bill through parliament providing for the opening of wholesale breweries in China as a means of revenue. Such a bill is now pending. Only a few short years ago no woman would have been allowed to even enter the presence of the head of the Chinese government and the men who were allowed that privilege assumed an attitude of groveling in the very dust in the presence of the august ruler.

Mrs. Mei "a Red Hot Enthusiast" for Temperance

But to begin at the beginning. The woman who has so admirably distinguished herself and her sex is Mrs. Mei Ren Yien, whose picture, with that of her daughter and son, appears on this page. Some years ago Mrs. Mei spent some time in the Chicago missionary training school of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and since her return to China she has given most of her time to missionary endeavor. She is, however, in the words of one of the missionaries, "a red-hot enthusiast" for temperance, and never loses an opportunity to push the cause. A convincing and eloquent speaker, she is absolutely fearless in denouncing the evils of strong drink.

Mrs. Mei was chosen from among a large company of men delegates, at a district missionary convention of workers from many provinces, to interview the President on the subject of the state religion. In describing the interview Mrs. Mei insisted that she was not at all frightened at this most unusual opportunity. She spoke of the cordiality of President Li, who when she entered the room, immediately asked her "to be seated."

Mrs. Mei Ren Yien, Her Daughter and Son

Wife of Chinese President Promises to Abolish Smoking and Drinking at Her Table

The sequel to this eventful interview with the President is even more remarkable. She had the joy of having a private interview with Mrs. Li, and her persuasions resulted in a promise by the wife of the president to stop smoking, and abolish smoking and the drinking of wines at her own table.

Regarding religious liberty, while President Li said this was a question for the people to settle, he added that Mrs. Mei might say that there would be no worship at the Temple of Heaven this year! If the President adheres to this, it will mean a marked advance for Christianity.

President of China W. C. T. U. Addresses Large Missionary Conference

At a recent missionary conference at Kiukiang, Dr. Mary Stone, president of the W. C. T. U. of China, planned a fine temperance evening program. She saw to it that the church was decorated with temperance banners and posters and made a magnificent appeal for temperance, carrying conviction to the minds of her hearers, keen-minded men and women, representing in their work in various provinces 5,000,000 Chinese. Dr. Stone, needless to say, was well prepared to meet any argument in the minds of her audience, having at her tongue's end scientific proofs taken from her knowledge and experience as a physician. On the tables near her were piles of anti-alcohol literature, supplied by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. These packages were carefully distributed among the delegates. A missionary present writes, "Pastors and other workers fairly devoured this literature." Day school teachers, under Mrs. Mei's supervision, are planning to organize Loyal Temperance Legions in their various schools.

The need of China today is an army of consecrated, trained workers and leaders to instruct and enlighten the young and old concerning the true nature and effects of alcohol, and thus prevent the establishing, in a land that has so recently freed itself from the opium curse, of the even greater evil, alcohol.

WORK OF THE "MOCKER" IN ITALY

Reprinted from Record of Christian Work

During the prohibition campaign of 1914, the drink interests of California were delighted to receive a telegram from a leading New York Presbyterian pastor urging voters to reject the proposed legislation. Wine was, in his judgment, the bastion and bulwark of defense against strong liquors. In a recent number of Nuova Antologia, the leading Italian review, the place of honor is given to an article by Dr. Leonardo Bianchi, M. P., on "Alcoholism in Italy." No better commentary could be made on Dr. Parkhurst's theory. (The italicized sentences are of the author's own underscoring.)

"In truth I have found this pernicious prejudice (that wine is strengthening) in all the lands of the South in which I have been able to investigate. This prejudice has been handed down from the ancient Latins and the great poets. It has been fortified by the idea still current of the value of wine for health and human happiness, veiled by the flattery of its supposed harmlessness which has been transmitted to us as an article of faith. Among us much wine is drunk but acute intoxication, with its corresponding consequences, is rare. Indeed in thirty years of direction and service in clinics and insane asylums of Palermo and Naples I, who have been in the habit of examining directly all or nearly all of the sick who have come to us, have run across only rarely forms of acute intoxication from alcohol and especially of delirium tremens.

"Nevertheless, not less strong and profound is the conviction of a slow intoxication of our people across the centuries and that this slow intoxication has exercised an obscure and insidious, yet certain, action upon the nervous centers, in the regions where wine-growing is most extended. Further, that it has not been without influence upon the lowered powers of resistance in the workman, in the lack of tenacity in civil undertakings, in the greater tendency to litigiousness. . . . I can affirm that the large number of epileptics and of subjects showing the strongest marks of degeneracy come from the provinces where wine-growing is most flourishing and most thoughtless the cult of the vine's product."

Dr. Bianchi suggests as coming from this slow intoxication with wine, epilepsy, criminality, idiocy, arthritis, polysarcia, indolence, indifference, lowered disposition to noble impulses, great excitability, irascibility, excessive impulsiveness, a lack of perseverance in following the ends most useful to one's own existence with the means and methods suitable.

The criminals who are brought into the Naples insane asylum are, he avers, in the majority of cases wine-drinkers. "Almost all of the most dreadful criminals I have had under observation had drunk before committing their crime. Many of the tragedies of the barracks owed their stage-setting to alcohol. Misdea, Radice, Caruson, drank before becoming examples of fierce bloodshedding. Many criminals not themselves drinkers are sons of drinkers. Lombroso and Ferri have sustained the same thesis with strong arguments. It is in the drink-shops that are prepared many of the war plans which criminality undertakes against civilization."

Governor Kendrick of Wyoming Signing Prohibition Submission Measure

The signing was witnessed by representatives of the allied temperance forces and supporters of the measure. Mrs. Anna Allison, president of the Wyoming W. C. T. U., stands at the extreme left.

"LEAD US NOT INTO TEMPTATION"

U. S. CONGRESSMAN WILLIAM C. HOUSTON of Tennessee, Chairman House Committee on Territories

You hear it said that we have periodical revivals of this temperance craze; that the pendulum is swinging forward in the temperance movement, but will swing back when the excitement of the period passes; that the present temper of the public mind is temporary. Not so. The pendulum has not swung backward. It is advancing year by year, gathering force steadily, sometimes checked for a time, but renewed each time with redoubled force, gathering fresh power and vigor with each succeeding onrush, and as civilization proceeds and religion triumphs it will progress.

It is well to develop individual virtue and character as the strongest reliance for safety for nations as for men, but in developing this character I believe in the benefit of healthy and wholesome environments. We are the creatures of influence, more or less, and we do know that "evil communications corrupt good manners," and an ever-present temptation is more than most men can resist.

I believe in that doctrine and that spirit that prays, "Lead us not into temptation," and that asks to be delivered from evil. This prayer should be supported by a live faith that will work for what it prays for and will use every effort to remove this evil as far as possible and always my vote shall be cast to that end.

TENNESSEE BIDS JOHN BARLEYCORN GOODBY

MRS. HOLMAN'S PORTRAIT TO HANG IN STATE CAPITOL

Special Correspondence

Like the little boy's vaccination, the "bone dry" law has "taken" in Tennessee. It went into effect March 1, and now the state is immune from the ravages of the liquor traffic, within and without.

The express companies did a big business on the "one gallon" clause during February, but now they are taking a long rest. Not only is no liquor being brought into the state but it cannot be carried across the state to its unprotected neighbors.

John Barleycorn has found the climate of Tennessee too strenuous for his constitution, and has either moved to wet territory, or shut up shop altogether. Tennessee is proud of the fact that she did not wait for the Federal law, but did it "all by herself," and is now ready to throw her sober strength into the fight for National Constitutional Prohibition.

The present Tennessee legislature is setting a good example for all other state legislatures, not only by passing numerous good measures, but by the recognition it is giving to some who in the past have "fought, bled and (literally) died" for the great cause of temperance in Tennessee.

Senate Joint Resolution No. 53 is a glowing tribute of love and respect to the memory of Mrs. Silena Moore Holman, who for sixteen years led the fight in Tennessee, as president of the W. C. T. U.

At the same time this resolution was adopted, the legislature accepted a life-sized oil portrait of Mrs. Holman, a gift to the state from the W. C. T. U. This is to hang in the state capitol, with portraits of governors and other great statesmen. Surely no one of them has done more for the state than has Silena Moore Holman; and that her portrait should have a place in the capitol with those of other illustrious patriots, is but a fitting tribute to one of Tennessee's greatest citizens.

Mrs. Carl a Welcome Guest

Mrs. Linnie Carl, of Portland, Oregon, one of our National Y. P. B. field secretaries, is "doing" Tennessee for six weeks, to the delight and edification of both young and old, wherever she goes. The state Y. P. B. secretary says of Mrs. Carl: "Her address was one of the most inspiring I have ever heard." Mrs. Carl is an untiring worker, sweet-spirited, tactful, self-effacing. She is a forceful and interesting speaker, and wherever she goes wins friends for the W. C. T. U. and Y. P. B.

Nowhere in Tennessee was Mrs. Linnie Carl more appreciated than at McKenzie, where she spoke four times in one day. In the morning she addressed the McTyeire Preparatory School for Boys, and in the afternoon she very graciously spoke before the Inglenook Book Club, on the "Progress of Temperance." In the evening she gave a public address to an appreciative audience at the Presbyterian church, and later delivered a short talk especially to young people during a reception given by the Y. P. B. in her honor.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under. The Date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.

Remittances should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.

Change of Address. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
Campaign Edition (Monthly) 35c a Year

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, March 15, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

ANTICIPATING THE CROWNING VICTORY

The next convention of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union will be a jubilee gathering in our Capital City from which the United States Congress has driven the saloon. This great victory, also the overwhelming vote for the exclusion of liquor advertising from the mails and for the "bone dry" anti-shipping law for all prohibition states, together with prohibition for Alaska and Porto Rico, insures the passage early in the Sixty-fifth Congress of the federal amendment for prohibition.

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union heartily thanks the Senators and Representatives who voted in favor of these far-reaching prohibition measures. The white ribbon hosts to assemble in Washington, D. C., December 2-7, 1917, for their forty-fourth annual convention earnestly covet as the crowning joy of their jubilee celebration, the enactment of the joint resolution providing for a referendum to the states on National Constitutional Prohibition.

GOODBY LUNCHEON TO TRANSCONTINENTAL CAMPAIGNERS

Only twice do the northern and southern teams of the transcontinental W. C. T. U. campaigners meet, namely, at the starting point and the point of termination, Chicago and San Francisco. To inaugurate the movement there will be given in honor of the campaigners a "goodby" luncheon, to take place at one o'clock Monday, April 30, at the Auditorium hotel, Chicago. Plates will be one dollar. Please correspond with Miss Helen L. Hood, president of the Illinois W. C. T. U., 1118 The Temple, Chicago, concerning particulars.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

POSTER PRIZE OFFER

For the best Prohibition posters suitable for educational or campaign use, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union offers the following prizes: For the best poster submitted, $15; for the second best, $10; and for the next five, in order of excellence, $2 each.

Rules for Competition

1. Illustration may form part of the poster, but is not essential.
2. Striking sentences or words are preferable to crowded lines.
3. Posters may be in two sizes: 19x25 inches or 28x42 inches. Copy need not be presented in actual size of poster.
4. In submitting copy for competition, place your name in a sealed envelope and pin to the copy.
5. All copy submitted will become the property of the National W. C. T. U.
6. The Committee on Publications of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, with two others to be chosen by the General Officers, will comprise the committee on awards.
7. All copy should be addressed to the National W. C. T. U. Poster Competition, Evanston, Ill., and must be received not later than April 15, 1917.

OUR WORLD-WIDE CAMPAIGN

"What are you going to do when national constitutional prohibition has been secured?" is a question asked with growing frequency of members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. In replying it is well to remind the questioner that the W. C. T. U. is organized not only for a nation-wide but for a world-wide campaign. Ever since the day when Frances E. Willard originated the idea of a World's W. C. T. U. our plans and purposes have been world-wide in scope. As we have worked for a dry America we have had in mind, also, the future of China, now being threatened with the introduction of breweries and distilleries; we have been mindful of Japan, upon which nation the eyes of the liquor interests of the Occident are greedily fixed; we have had in our thought the protection of Africa, continually exploited by the traffickers in strong drink from this country and Europe.

In this larger campaign for freedom from the liquor traffic for all nations the emphasis must, of course, be placed upon education concerning the nature and effects of alcohol. Gratifying indeed is the increasing stress being laid by missionaries in foreign lands, in their schools and meetings, upon total abstinence. Much work can be done, also, among the foreign-speaking people at our own doorstep, for in our large cities, and even in the country districts, we have neighbors from all corners of the globe among whom we can sow the seed of total abstinence sentiment, which may bear rich fruit should they visit their native lands or return to them permanently.

The advocates of prohibition in America recognize that in no way can they so directly hasten the redemption of other nations from servitude to King Alcohol as to banish him from their own soil and thus demonstrate to sister lands the benefits that would accrue to a nation freed from the handicap of the liquor traffic. Every bit of sentiment created, every stroke of work done for national prohibition is helping to bring nearer prohibition for the whole world.

CLEARING DR. DAVID STARR JORDAN

The use of the name of Dr. David Starr Jordan, the well-known educator, in approval of the photoplay, "Intolerance," being exhibited in the large cities, must have occasioned surprise to all who know his strong anti-alcohol principles. "Intolerance," as our readers probably know, is an attack, in moving pictures, upon all social uplift work, and is pronounced in its advocacy of strong drink. Its true character is shown by the fact that Mida's Criterion recently said of it: "If liquor had wished to produce a great picture it could not have done more for personal liberty than 'Intolerance' is doing."

An acquaintance of Dr. Jordan, a resident of Evanston, Illinois, recently gave to the public a letter from the former president of Stanford University, explaining the situation. Dr. Jordan writes: "The cinema in question was called 'The Downfall of the Nations' and I was invited to witness the first trial of the different scenes. I saw the check scene for uplift work. I also saw the various Babylon scenes and St. Bartholomew. The scenes referring to liquor I did not see and I did not understand that any such scenes were in the play. I told Mr. Griffith that the scene for uplift work was neither true nor just."

Yet President Jordan is quoted by the producers in a way to make the public believe he has given his sanction to the entire performance. This unprincipled method of securing and using recommendations of noted men savors of the ways of the liquor interests, which the promoters of this play are indirectly aiding by the presentation of "Intolerance."

PROHIBITION ON THE SUNDAY DINNER MENU CARD

If given an opportunity for free, fair and intelligent discussion, the prohibition movement is certain to win converts. Anything that brings it before the people as a popular theme of conversation helps the cause. An idea that may be worth passing along is projected in the bulletin of a Texas church. In it each week appears a short list of subjects "to be read and discussed at the dinner table today." These are excellent, but should include National Constitutional Prohibition. What topic more up-to-date, more thought-provoking, more suitable for discussion on the sacred day? Why not suggest to every pastor or church bulletin committee the plan of the Texas church and add to the list of suggested topics from week to week some subjects relating to total abstinence and prohibition?

POPULARITY OF PROHIBITION PENS

Pens in the future will rank with swords as relics of historic value. Every pen that has been used to sign a prohibition or suffrage measure is treasured by someone who has been active in securing its passage. Among the recent trophies of this kind received by the National W. C. T. U. president is the pen with which Governor Withycombe of Oregon signed the bill providing for a Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of that state.

Mrs. Cornelia T. Hatcher, president of the Alaska W. C. T. U., has in her possession the two pens with which President Woodrow Wilson signed the Alaska prohibition bill passed last month by the United States Congress.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 8

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What important prohibition law enacted by Congress goes into effect November 1, 1917?

2. The policy of what great European country has resulted, according to an official of that country, in an accumulation of wealth in three years equal to that of the preceding seventy-three years?

3. Can you give six of the thirteen reasons named by a former publicity director for the liquor interests, why the drink trade is doomed?

4. The society leaders of what great city of the United States have recently taken definite steps to protect their young people from social drinking?

5. How do the medical fraternity now regard alcohol as a remedy for rattlesnake poison?

6. What important law for which the W. C. T. U. worked for over sixteen years has recently been declared constitutional by the United States Supreme Court?

7. In what respect, especially interesting to workers for temperance, did the inauguration of March 4, 1917, differ from that of other years. Give the reason.

8. The need of the Rhode Island W. C. T. U. for reference books to meet the false statements of the liquor men is being met in what way?

9. Is there any special reason for the apparent depopulation of the jails of Virginia as reported by the press of the state?

10. What National W. C. T. U. event of importance is to take place during the month of May of this year?

MORALS OF THE LIQUOR DEALER

It is not infrequently argued by the liquor men that they are misjudged; that the trade is made up of men of as high and honorable principles as those engaged in any other business. Most communities require that applicants for license to run a saloon shall show that they are men of "good moral character," indicating the skepticism of the public generally on that point. While unquestionably there are degrees of goodness among those constituting the great army of men in the "trade," and doubtless in the past there may have been many who tried to be as honest as the conditions with which they were surrounded permitted, it goes without saying that the business itself is so inherently demoralizing that in the end it lowers and injures the moral fiber of the men connected with it. We say this on the testimony of saloonkeepers who have voluntarily withdrawn from the business and sought some other occupation. A sidelight is thrown on this question in an investigation recently made by Cleveland Moffett, the popular magazine writer, of which he tells in McClure's Magazine. He sent to each of one hundred different names a letter containing a dollar bill and addressed (inside the envelope) to a fictitious company, each carrying, also, the name and address of the sender. These letters were sent to fifty men and fifty women, divided into ten groups of different classes of society, that is, doctors, lawyers, trained nurses, working girls, newspaper men, aldermen, saloonkeepers, actors, policemen, et al. It is significant that the one class that showed to disadvantage in this test was the saloonkeepers, only one of the five of whom returned the dollar. The other classes varied, three of the five in some cases showing themselves highly honorable by returning the money, in others, four of the five, and one group returned the entire five dollars. The saloonkeepers stood in a class by themselves.

A GENEROUS FRIEND OF TEMPERANCE AND MISSIONS

Mrs. Caroline McDowell of Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, the new National superintendent of the department of Temperance and Missions, is a great believer in the systematic circulation of good temperance literature. Never before has our National W. C. T. U. Publishing House in Evanston, Illinois, received from one person such a generous order as lately came to it from Mrs. McDowell.

Two hundred department workers were the recipients of two hundred thousand leaflets. They will see that these up-to-date facts on total abstinence and prohibition are wisely distributed. Using the catalogue as a guide, Mrs. McDowell selected one hundred different leaflets and directed that ten of each of these should be sent to the two hundred interested state, county and local superintendents. There was joy as well as work in filling the order.

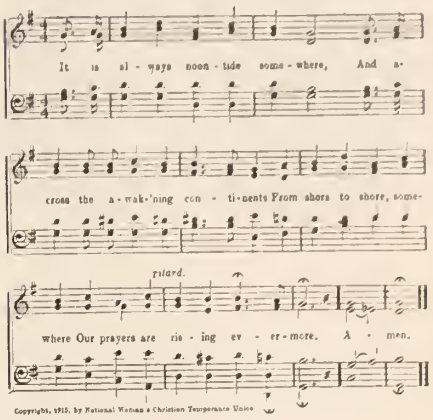
Mrs. McDowell has greatly encouraged those who are working to obtain life and memorial members for the World's W. C. T. U. These are secured at $100 each, and the elect National superintendent generously promises to duplicate each $100 thus given, up to the sum of $5,000.

If Mrs. McDowell were not so modestly averse to any publicity about herself it would be possible to tell much about her altruistic life and her activities in church, missionary and white ribbon lines. It is a marvel that she finds time to do so much. She is not only our superintendent of the department of Temperance and Missions but she is chairman of the temperance department of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Church. She is on many boards, and has a meeting of some kind nearly every day. Those who have been privileged to enjoy her beautiful hospitality realize that her home cares are many. Mrs. McDowell's home office is now fitted up with a new typewriter, new mimeograph, letter files, a big office desk and a room for literature and posters. With an office secretary at her right hand Mrs. McDowell successfully meets the demands of her growing department which more than any other unites the women of the churches and the white ribbon hosts. This federation of the forces greatly helps in the campaigns for national and international peace, purity and prohibition.

DECREASED ARRESTS IN PROHIBITION BIRMINGHAM

Recent reports from Birmingham, Alabama, show conclusively that prohibition decreases crime. Otherwise how can the difference in the records be accounted for? In 1913, under open saloons there was a total of 21,247 arrests and convictions. In 1916, under prohibition, the arrests and convictions dropped to 15,758, and these included the cases for violation of the prohibitory law. In 1916 bank deposits climbed to $30,786,000 or $2,786,000 in excess of 1913 with saloons. Prohibition decreases crime, increases savings; decreases drunkenness; increases the number of happy homes. Why not make it world-wide?

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



HELP LIGHTEN THE LOAD!

Help lighten the load!

Humanity stumbles ahead on its road,
Urged on o'er the deserts, beset by the goad!
Men bend under burdens of hunger and care,
And women must suffer and toil and despair;
Yea, even the children, astray in the strife,
Are bowed by the weight till they weary of life.
Hark! unto each soul that is hero, not slave,
How clear sounds the call to arise and be brave,

Help lighten the load!

Help lighten the load!

With all of the strength that the heart can command,
With all of the power of brain and of hand,
With wills set to sacrifice, struggle, and dare.
With love that seeks ever each burden to share,
With unflagging endeavor that stops not to ask
The length of the journey, the cost of the task,
Come, sons of the kingdom! Come, children of God!
And along the dark path by the world's anguish trod

Help lighten the load!

—Priscilla Leonard

DELAYED VICTORIES

In a vote taken on March 1 in the lower house of the Texas legislature a resolution calling for submission of the prohibition question to the people was defeated by only two votes, the vote being 93 to 41. Two members of the house were absent and five were present who did not vote.

The senate of the New Jersey legislature voted down a local option bill by a vote of 39 to 10 on February 27.

A bill providing for presidential suffrage for the women of South Carolina was lost in the senate by a margin of four votes.

A bill providing for presidential suffrage for the women of New Hampshire was defeated in the house by a vote of 204 to 152.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

March 20—Prohibition Rally Day—Birthday of General Neal Dow
April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes

TREASURER'S REPORT

FRANCES E. WILLARD MEMORIAL FUND
LILLIAN STEVENS CAMPAIGN FUND

MARGARET C. MUNNS, Treasurer

The following contributions to the Frances E. Willard Memorial Fund and to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund have been received since the last report. Contributions to the Memorial Fund are in each case $2 unless otherwise stated:

Memorial Fund

New Jersey: Piscataway; Hoboken (Alexander Y. P. B.); Lambertville; Califon; Bloomsbury; Frenchtown; Hampton $1.65; Almonessen; Paterson. Total $17.65.

Northern Idaho: Hope.

Kentucky: Paducah.

Tennessee: $20.

West Washington: Port Townsend; South Bend. Total $4.

New York: Belmont; Cedar Hill; Mt. Vernon; Stillwater; Fly Creek; Akron $5; Greene. Total $17.

Illinois: Percy.

Maine: Bradford.

Montana: Baylor $1.50.

Louisiana: Loranger $2.30.

Kansas: Spring Creek; Delphos; Howard. Total $6.

Southern California: $1.

Northern California: Santa Cruz.

Ohio: Pleasant Hill; Otsego; Newcomerstown; Chester Hill; New Madison; Felicity; Mallett Creek; Galion. Total $16.

Iowa: Perry.

Minnesota: Dawson $3; Frazee; W. Concord; Starbuck. Total $9.

Indiana: Indianapolis (Swain).

New Hampshire: Candia $1.

Massachusetts: Dorchester $4.09; Holliston $1; S. Middleboro. Total $7.09.

Vermont: Pittsford.

Nebraska: Shelby; Monroe $1. Total $3.

Virginia: Houston.

Rhode Island: Cumberland; Phenix; Watchmoket; Manton; Middletown; Warren $4; Ocean View; Westerly; Spencer L. T. L. $.50. Total $18.50.

New Mexico: $2.

East Washington: Spokane (Hayes Park).

Wisconsin: Brodhead; Cambria; Cobb; Edgerton; Greenbush; Green Lake; Hancock; Harmony; Leon; Milton; Milwaukee 1st; Mineral Pt.; Monroe; Palmyra; Mt. Hope; New Haven; Plainfield; Racine; Seymour; Stoughton; Superior; Waupun; Wild Rose; Williams Bay; Green Bay $1; Markesan $1; Randolph $1. Total $53.

Missouri: St. Joseph; Cassidy. Total $4.

Michigan: Lake Linden; Fowlerville; St. Joe; Spring Lake $2.30; Elkton; Wheatland; Marshall; Plainwell. Total $16.30.

Delaware: Clayton.

Mrs. Hannah T. Patchin $25.

Mrs. Bancroft $2.

Board of Organizers $10.

Campaign Fund

Miss Mary Olney $325; Mrs. L. E. Raymond $100; Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher $100; A Friend $25; Board of Superintendents $32; Mrs. V. E. Mohler $10; Mrs. V. E. Mohler for W. Virginia $100; Miss Anna A. Gordon $50; George Dewey $5; A Friend $1; Mrs. Evelyn Green $1; Mrs. Alice Barnes Hoag $2.45; Miss Mae Russell $25; Mrs. Annetta Nesbit $25; Alaska $2.75; Connecticut $200; Colorado $60.90; District of Columbia $100; Delaware $41; North Idaho $25; Kansas $26; Kentucky $50; Indiana $1; Illinois $4; Iowa $69.06; Louisiana $2; Michigan $1; Mississippi $10.40; Maryland $25; New Jersey $108.05; New York $2.30; North Dakota $50; New Hampshire $100; Ohio $301; Oklahoma $26; Pennsylvania $51; Tennessee $1; Texas $2.25; East Washington $1; West Washington $2; Wisconsin $152.93.

SUPERINTENDENTS

THIRTY-NINTH ANNUAL SABBATH OBSERVANCE WEEK, APRIL 15-22, 1917

A CALL TO WATCH, PRAY AND DO IN THE INTERESTS OF BETTER OBSERVANCE OF OUR LORD'S DAY

MRS. KATE C. HEIDEL

This appeal is to all professing Christians to make the week of April 15-22 one of prayerful retrospection. Their indifference and inconsistency hamper the making and enforcing of laws controlling the use of the Lord's Day.

The arch-enemy of Sunday—greed—frames many pitiful excuses for the keeping open of business and amusement places. One is that the people who do not go to church should have some place to go and something to do. We answer: they who have homes should be in them, and it is for more home and family life we plead. Then there would be plenty of room in the homelike places provided for the homeless and the away-from-home ones. Parents, you can make the home so attractive that no outside amusement will appeal. It will take thought and time. The wits of the parents must be pitted against those of the public-place keepers. Yours is for love—theirs for money. "Love never faileth."

WATCH: Stand as sentry, then, over your own goings and doings. Guard with vigilance the playtime of the family. Keep in view the state Sunday laws, that they be just and fair to all—and enforced. Let the lid be lifted ever so little and, as troubles from a Pandora's box, out will pour the hosts of evil. All our laws are based on the Mosaic law. The law of the Sabbath was embodied in that. It is right that we have the Lord's Day protected by our laws.

PRAY: "And he spake a parable unto them to this end, that men ought always to pray and not to faint." (Read Luke 18:1-8.) "Pray that ye enter not into temptation" to indulge in occupations or amusements on Sunday that would be stumbling blocks to others who are weaker. "Pray one for another" that all together we may be wise, charitable and firm in meeting the opposition to the stand we take on the observance of the Lord's Day as a day of mental, physical and spiritual recuperation.

DO: (This is especially to superintendents of the Sabbath Observance department.) 1. Ask for sermons on Sabbath Observance on either April 15 or April 22. Do this several weeks before, so the ministers will have time to plan for them.

2. Ask that this be the subject of the regular prayer meetings in the churches. Then all members of the W. C. T. U. should be in their places.

3. See that it is presented in the Sunday schools and L. T. L's.

4. Give opportunity for signing of Sabbath Observance pledges.

5. Distribute our literature.

6. Have this the topic for the April meeting of the local union. The closeness of our week to Easter, when all people join in commemorating the resurrection of our Lord, makes this a very fitting time for the emphasis of our department.

SUGGESTIVE PROGRAM FOR APRIL MEETING

SONG: "Safely Through Another Week"
SCRIPTURE READING: Matthew 12:1-21
PRAYER
SONG: "God Speed the Right," No. 7 in "The Temperance Songster"
ROLL CALL: Quotations from the Bible on the Sabbath
READING of the State Sunday Laws
DISCUSSION: (a) Are they sufficient, just and fair? (b) Is there anything I can do to aid in their enforcement?
PAPER: "What Shall We Do for Our Children Sunday Afternoon?"
DISCUSSION
READING: "Are Christians Responsible for Sabbath Desecration?" (Leaflet No. 18)
PRESENTATION of the plan and work of this department (including the report of the state superintendent of Sabbath Observance of last year) by the local superintendent
READING: "Pledge Signing." (Leaflet 12)
Program to be interspersed with special music

605 Normal Avenue, Valley City, N. D.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. MARY FREEMAN TRUESDALE, widow of the Rev. John C. Truesdale. During her husband's pastorate at Stanwood, Iowa, she was for several years president of the Cedar county W. C. T. U., and both she and her husband did valiant service for prohibition.

MRS. MATTIE S. KELLY, for years the state secretary of L. T. L. work in New Mexico.

MASSACHUSETTS W. C. T. U. BURNS MORTGAGE AT INTERESTING CEREMONY ON WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY

Special Correspondence

"Dreams sometimes come true," may well be the jubilant motto of the white ribbon hosts of Massachusetts, for on February 22, with glad hearts they celebrated the total freedom from indebtedness of their fine headquarters at 541 Massachusetts Avenue, Boston. The dream of their very own local habitation, as well as a name, dated from the year 1892 and was first born in the heart of Mrs. Amelia C. Thorp, mother of Mrs. Ole Bull, a warm personal friend of Frances Willard. Other names associated with Massachusetts W. C. T. U. history also entered into the dream. Mrs. Mary A. Livermore was profoundly interested in the movement and in the year 1893 gave her splendid vigor to the carrying forward of an Easter sale to that end. Mrs. Susan S. Fessenden, at that time state president; Dr. Louise C. Purington, Ella Gilbert Ives and others whose names are well known in National annals, were also identified with this special state venture.

Alas, the proverb, "The best laid schemes," etc., was fulfilled in our history, in that unfortunate investments in interests affiliated with the National Union greatly reduced the amount raised and put such a damper on the spirits of the women that for years the idea of having their own headquarters lay dormant, although it never wholly died. In 1910, while the state president was still upon her world tour and Elizabeth P. Gordon, whose name is so closely identified with the W. C. T. U. history of Massachusetts, was so ably filling her place, Mrs. Ella A. Gleason, president at that time of Suffolk county and now vice-president-at-large of the state, as well as a National lecturer, moved that a certain sum received by legacy be set apart, with the remnant of the special fund still on hand, for the purchase of suitable headquarters. From that moment the idea grew in volume. On February 1, 1912, the building was taken possession of and formally dedicated on February 22 of that year. A mortgage of $5,000 was given and at that time we did not dream that it would be retired for many years, but reckoned that the payment of interest was very much less for our commodious rooms than had been the payment of rent for one room only at 14 Beacon street, our previous place of abode. Gifts and bequests, however, made it possible to so reduce the mortgage from year to year that when we came together at Taunton in October, 1916, it was found that only $1,000 of the indebtedness remained. A concerted effort resulted in pledges for more than that amount and we were, therefore, enabled to invite our constituency to the mortgage burning just five years from the formal opening of the headquarters. And they came with glad hearts and in large numbers. The idea had come to the state president of naming the assembly hall, in the rear of the main building, after the woman who had inaugurated this last successful effort, and who, together with her husband, Mr. W. H. Gleason, had been the largest individual contributor to the purchase fund. The executive committee unanimously endorsed the plan so that when we came together on the twenty-second it was to find the space above the large double windows mysteriously draped. The curtain was covered with brilliant bluebirds, the emblem of joy, and the decorations of the hall were in blue and white with bluebirds winging their glad flight everywhere. After the singing of the dedication song, written by Mrs. Mabel R. Makepeace and Mrs. Stevenson, the curtain was drawn aside by two members of the original "Ways and Means committee" who had been instrumental in raising so large a part of the money for the purchase fund and the name "Gleason Hall" was disclosed in gilt letters upon a soft green background, harmonizing with the prevailing tint of the walls. Reverently the hall was re-dedicated "to the service of God and the temperance reform, through the Woman's Christian Temperance Union."

We now own, free from all encumbrance, a fine five-story, twenty-room house in what was, only a few years ago, one of the very best sections of Boston. The tide of population which has swept to the suburbs has taken from the street its former aristocratic character, but the beautiful park remains and the setting is all that could be desired for comfort and convenience. The basement floor is given up to the janitor and matron, the main floor to the offices, also the rear room of the second story to the president's office. The remaining nine rooms are rented and thus form a source of income for our work. We only wish every state union throughout the nation were as commodiously and efficiently housed.

A special feature of interest is the large, beautifully bound leather volume which lies upon the center table in the main office bearing the title, "Names of New Home Donors." The idea originated with Mrs. Frances E. Beauchamp at the 1911 state convention. She was speaker and guest of honor on that occasion. Nearly one thousand names are inscribed, among them those of children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren of many of the women.

The heredity of our women, as shown by a study of this book, is of great interest. Mrs. Harriet E. Sawyer, president of Worcester county (North), started the ball in motion when, at the Taunton convention, she pledged one dollar in memory of her great-great-great grandfather, John Parker, who in 1765 refused to serve liquor at the funeral of his grandmother. In an instant women were on their feet all over the house.

Courageous Ancestors of Massachusetts White Ribboners Honored

We quote some of the significant data now recorded in the volume: "For John Tufts Cook, who worked shoulder to shoulder with Neal Dow for the passage of Maine's prohibition law." "For Judge Butler, who was the first one to abolish the serving of cider to the men in haying time in the town of Deerfield, N. H." "For David Huestis, who cast the first prohibition vote in Jefferson county, New York." "For Rev. G. R. Locke, who never voted anything but the Prohibition ticket." "In honor of Joel Stratton of Worcester, who was the means of reforming and saving John B. Gough." "In memory of Deacon William B. Richardson, who, in 1831, refused to keep a bar in his hotel or to serve liquor to his haymakers." "In memory of Mrs. Philadelphia Southwick Cook, who rode on horseback from her home in Blackstone to Washington to ask the President of the United States, John Quincy Adams, to stop the sale of intoxicating liquors." "In memory of Abigail Stearns, who, when she had charge of the men's luncheon, always refused to serve cider or any form of intoxicating liquor." "In memory of Rev. Isaac H. Lent of Peekskill, N. Y., who cast the first anti-slavery vote in his town and when upbraided for throwing away his vote said: 'I would rather throw it away for the right than to have it count for wrong.'"

All the people named were ancestors of the white ribbon women of Massachusetts and the list is by no means complete. Is it any wonder that we have faith that the good heredity will manifest itself in generations to come and that the Old Bay State yet "shall be redeemed"? To that supreme end is our headquarters dedicated and when the mortgage went up in ashes, as Mrs. Gleason touched the match, we sang "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow" as an earnest of future complete victory, as well as in thanks for the present grand advance. "The Lord hath done great things for us whereof we are glad."

ANTI-SHIPPING BILL RECEIVES SIGNATURE OF DELAWARE GOVERNOR

Special Correspondence

A meeting of the W. C. T. U. executive of Delaware was held at the home of the state president, Mrs. Lena Messick of Bridgeville. Quite a number of women were in attendance and plans were discussed for the holding of the next state convention at Seaford next October. Miss Lillian Cade, president of the Sussex county W. C. T. U., who has labored long and faithfully in the temperance cause, has been obliged to discontinue her service in this capacity, and owing to failing health, has gone south.

A winter institute of the Kent county W. C. T. U. was held in Cheswold M. E. church in January. The church was filled with white ribboners at both the morning and afternoon sessions. The program of the day included addresses by Mrs. Lena Messick, Rev. L. E. Barrett and Mrs. Lulu Shepard on Mormonism.

The anti-shipping bill passed by the Delaware legislature was signed on February 27 by Governor Townsend. The bill prohibits the shipping of liquors into Kent and Sussex counties, the dry territory of the state, except for medicinal, sacramental and manufacturing purposes, and makes it a misdemeanor for any one to have in his possession more than a quart of whisky or rum or a dozen bottles of beer. The bill went into effect as soon as the signature of the governor was affixed. In compliance with the provisions of this law the Adams Express company announced that all consignments of liquors not delivered by 1:30 o'clock February 28 were to be returned to the consignee or broken open and the contents emptied in the public streets and vacant lots. The Adams Express company stated, through R. R. Keeney, its attorney, that it would obey the law to the letter.

CITIZENS OF MINNESOTA MINING TOWN EAGER FOR DRY CAMPAIGN

Miss Rozette Hendrix, president of the Minnesota W. C. T. U., organized a W. C. T. U. of seventy members at Virginia, Minnesota, February 17. Thirty-three paid their dollar dues at the time of organization. A week later the union met and added thirty more members so that now there is a union of 100 members in this large mining town of St. Louis county. One man pledged $25 if they would begin at once a "dry Virginia" campaign. Another man promised $25 if the town goes dry. Miss Hendrix was recently called to Blooming Prairie to organize the women for a dry campaign in that town. The W. C. T. U. with all temperance forces is now working for a statutory prohibition measure to go into effect in 1918.

The price of the "Medal Contest Reciters" has been changed from ten to twelve cents per copy.

WHEN DAD VOTED FOR PROHIBITION

MRS. S. R. GRAHAM CLARK

When Dad voted prohibition
Mother cried, "for joy," she said,
And I know he stooped and kissed her
On her beautiful gray head;
And I heard him whisper to her,
In a tender sort of way:
"Oh, forgive me, dear, forgive me,
For I turned that gold to gray."

When Dad voted prohibition
Brother Steve, he whistled loud,
And he said: "I guess I'll follow,
Stop this drinking with the crowd.
If Dad's straightening up, in conscience
I should quit the business, too;
Can a chap do less in reason
Than help see the matter through?"

When Dad voted prohibition,
Uncle Joe, he did the same.
"John is mighty smart," he grunted,
"Always sensible and game.
If he says drink's day is over,
And that prohibition's here,
Why I'll stake my pile upon it,
And cut out the rum and beer."

When Dad voted prohibition
All our neighbors rubbed their eyes,
And asked what could be the meaning
Of this wonderful surprise?
Then Dad pointed to their kiddies:
"Time, good friends, their chance began"—
And they followed where he led them,
Did the right thing—to a man.

When Dad voted prohibition
Both the town and state went dry,
And he's sure the nation's going,
And he says the reason why
Is that up in heaven it's settled
That the liquor curse must go;
For what God wills is and shall be,
And RUM'S DOOMED—with all its woe.

When Dad voted prohibition
Jesus Christ walked by his side;
And he says he dropped his ballot
For the Lord once crucified.
Mothers, wives, and children counted,
But He counted most—for He
Can no longer bear the enslaving
Of the souls He died to free.

When Dad voted prohibition
'Twas his pledge to follow fast
Right along the Master's pathway
While his life on earth should last.
For who stands out straight for goodness,
And as straight 'gainst all that's wrong,
Is the one who nerves his fellows—
Helps the weak ones to be strong.

THE VISION OF THE HOBO

ROSAMOND NORMAN

Mrs. Evans and her daughter Enid were busily engaged in preparing breakfast, which was necessarily served at an early hour at their home—a southern California orange ranch. The sun just peeping over the horizon touched to splendor the great Sierra Madre mountains upon whose sides deep purple shadows lay like velvet.

A knock presently sounded on the kitchen door. Wondering who the caller might be, Enid answered the summons. There before her stood a young man carrying a roll of blankets on his shoulder, sufficient evidence to the girl that he was a hobo. With surprising grace he took off his hat and asked politely,

"May I get a little breakfast here? I would be glad to pay for it by any work you may have to give me." Enid made no answer but glanced in the direction of the barn, where she knew her father had gone. He was just leaving the building and soon appeared at her side. Immediately upon his approach the stranger repeated his request for something to eat and stated his desire to give his services for the food received. "Can you put up a fence?" asked Mr. Evans. "I need a man today to help me do that."

"I am not experienced at it," the stranger replied, "but, sir, I would be delighted if you would give me a trial for," with a look of real distress, "I'm so hungry."

As if to respond to his need Mrs. Evans now announced that the morning meal was ready and invited the tramp to come in. He at once entered the house, showing by his manner that such friendliness was greatly appreciated and somewhat unusual. When the delicious food was set before him he ate as if famished, then quietly excused himself from the table and went outside to await Mr. Evans.

"I'd be willing to bet a heap that he'll sneak off without doing a lick of work, now he's filled up," commented the young man's employer when the family were by themselves. A few minutes later he left the house and went in search of his helper. Much to his amazement he found him patiently waiting to be put at his task. No longer half starved, he appeared capable of keeping up with the best of fence builders.

All morning long the two men toiled. When they came back to the house at lunch time the tramp, who had given his name as Fred Sharp, looked weary, but no word of complaint did he utter. There was about him a decided air of self-respect as if the doing of good, honest, hard work made him consider himself of some use in the world.

By evening the fence was completed and though Mr. Evans offered the man a place to sleep, he declined, saying he must move on. He stayed, however, to enjoy a fine, warm supper, and when Mr. Evans had paid him, the tramp protesting that he didn't deserve it, Mrs. Evans offered the wanderer a hearty lunch "just for luck." This he received reluctantly. Watched by three pair of kind eyes, he finally shouldered his pack and disappeared into the night. They noticed far down the road the glare of a campfire and decided that the man would have a chance to get warm before settling himself for sleep under the stars.

Months after this incident, a letter addressed to Mrs. Evans caused great excitement in the household. She read the message aloud:

"Dear Mrs. Evans: I suppose by this time you have forgotten all about the fellow you and your husband and daughter treated so kindly one spring morning but you have all been in my thoughts much of the time since I tasted of your hospitality when I was lonely and forlorn and which brought to my heart the glow a man feels when he knows he is trusted though circumstances are against him. Perhaps you will recall that you put up a lunch for me and at the last minute tied about it an extra newspaper to keep the bread fresh, you said. The next morning, after I had partaken of the contents of the package I was about to throw away the outside wrapper when my eye caught the word, prohibition. More from curiosity than from anything else, I am frank to confess, I looked for the name of the paper. Do you believe in miracles nowadays? I do and I think you will agree that I am right when I tell you what happened next. There before me were the two words, UNION SIGNAL—little words but, oh, how much they meant to me. They brought to my mind a picture which during my aimless life as a tramp had been almost obscured. It was a mental vision of my mother, my dear mother, as she sat before the fire in other days and read aloud from that very paper. Alas, how far I had strayed from its teachings. Tears filled my eyes and rained down upon the printed sheet as memories crowded in upon me. Then and there I resolved to go home and with the help of the God whom my mother believed in, try to make amends for the years I had wasted, for the suffering I had caused. Then my heart sank with the thought that perhaps I was alone in the world, that God had called them away. After many miles of travel, footsore but joyful I reached home and found things just the same as they were when I had been there five years before. I say everything was just the same—yes, and yet different for Father's shoulders are a little more stooped and Mother seems older. I am thankful that I can now shield them from unnecessary anxiety and care. Dear old Dad needs me on the ranch, for the work is getting too heavy for him to shoulder alone and I am strong enough to do my share and part of his, besides. Mr. Evans would smile to see how easily I can put up a fence now and not be nearly so "all in" as I was that fortunate day I served as his helper. I have solved the mystery of why that particular paper was the one chosen to envelop my lunch. I know now that the mother of the family purposely used it to set a lonely boy on the right track again. (Mrs. Evans smiled happily when she read these words). Some time I am going to bring Mother and Dad to see you, if I may. We do not live very far away, that is, when traveling is done without a pack on the back! Mother sends her deepest gratitude. Her eyes never fail to fill with tears when your gentle treatment of her hobo boy is mentioned. As for me, ah, friends, but for you I might still be "hitting the road" with manhood and hope all but gone. God bless my benefactors.

"Frederick Sharp.

"P. S. I forgot to tell you that I have pledged myself to work and pray for prohibition even as my good mother has been doing for years. Love of liquor was my besetting sin, you see. That was the reason I disappeared so soon after I felt Mr. Evans' money jingling in my pocket but booze didn't get me that time. We'll talk old prohi. over when we meet."

REMEMBER

to send in your literature order for the

SPRING INSTITUTE

at an EARLY date.

To every institute order amounting to $2 will be added for use as souvenirs, one dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $3 will be added for use as souvenirs, two dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $5 will be added for use as souvenirs, three dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

From west to east, from south to north
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.
—A. A. G.

THE LESSON OF THE EGG

KATHERINE WEST

The children were watching for Thornton to come home from the L. T. L. meeting. When it was time to go to the meeting, it looked so much like rain that mother had said "No" to the younger ones. Now the clouds were gone and Horace, Louise, and Malcolm were gazing eagerly down the street for a glimpse of Thornton. Suddenly, with a whoop, he came up behind them and sat on the curb.

"Tell us all about it!" they clamored.

"It was great, today," Thornton answered. "Miss Maxwell taught us a new Bible verse, and then she told us what it meant. You can learn it. She will ask for it next time. Now all together: 'Wine is a mocker,' that's the first part."

"'Wine is a mocker'," repeated the children.

"That means," Thornton went on, "that wine always tells lies. Wine tastes good and folks think that they feel better after a drink of it, but that's the lie." "Say," he leaned toward them earnestly, "you've seen mother cook eggs; you know how they turn white and hard in hot water. Well, wine and whisky will make them look so, too. Miss Maxwell says that some of our body is like the white of egg, and wine and whisky will sort of cook it and spoil it for the work it ought to do. When folks drink wine or whisky they can't see inside themselves to know how it is hurting them there, and they keep on. By and by, so much of this egg-like stuff in the body has been spoiled they feel badly all the time. And then they drink more and more, trying to feel better, until they are just drunkards, and so sick inside it's a wonder any one of them ever gets well."

"But what's the rest of the verse, Thornton?"

"Oh, yes; but you say the first part again."

"'Wine is a mocker,'" the three repeated earnestly.

"'Strong drink is raging,'" said Thornton. "That's next, and that means that folks who begin with a little, keep taking more and stronger drink until they get crazy drunk, 'raging.'"

"That's easy," said Horace. "'Strong drink is raging,'" and the others repeated the words after him.

"There's a little more yet," said Thornton. "Now don't you think that any one who believes that lie is—is stupid? Well, here's the rest of it, 'And whosoever is deceived thereby is not wise.' 'Not wise?' Why, he hasn't any sense at all, seems to me. We won't be so silly. We'll never begin, will we?"

"No, we'll never," answered the children earnestly.

"And if we don't begin then we can't be drunkards, ever. And maybe we can help keep somebody else from being a drunkard, too," finished Thornton.

OUR PROHIBITION AND SUFFRAGE SNOWBALLS

KATHERINE HAMILTON DAVIS

My home is near a large city, a city that nestles close to a very high mountain, and it is in a state called the Centennial State. Where I live the snow comes early and tarries long and it is very cold, but the atmosphere is so dry, clear and invigorating that you scarcely notice how cold it is until some one says, "Forty degrees below zero." Then everybody begins to shiver.

The other evening we were all talking of North Dakota and the suffrage victory there. Father laughed and said, "Suffrage and prohibition remind me of the snowballs we used to make when I was a boy. No matter how much they were rolled and kicked about by those who wanted to get them out of the way it only made them grow the larger."

The very next day the boys and girls in our school began to make two snowballs. We formed in a line. First, one would give the ball a push and then go to the rear; then the next child would push the snowball and so on, each taking a turn. Such fun as we had! At last the balls grew so large we could roll them no longer. Prohibition and Suffrage we called them, and we rolled them close together, for my mother says Prohibition and Suffrage are first cousins. On top of Suffrage we placed the yellow flag and on Prohibition we placed Old Glory. Then some one called for the Prohibition cheer, and from the mountainside came back the echo long and loud,

"P-r-o-pro, H-i-Hi, B-i-bi, pro-hi-bi T-i-ti, O-n-on, Tie on to Prohibition."

FUNNYGRAPHS

"I met our new minister on my way to Sunday School, mamma," said Willie, "and he asked me if I ever played marbles on Sunday."

"What did you answer?" asked mother.

"I simply said: 'Get thee behind me, Satan!' and walked off and left him," was the triumphant response.—Country Gentleman.

At a recent teachers' convention a small boy who had been asked to take part in an entertainment looked the assemblage thoroughly over and then turned to his teacher. "Are they all teachers?" he asked.

"Yes," she answered, "every one of them."

"My!" he exclaimed, "aren't there going to be any plain people?"

Waiter—soup, sir? Soup, sir?

Haughty gentleman ignores waiter and slowly removes his gloves.

Waiter (impatiently)—Soup, sir?

Haughty Gentleman (angrily)—Is it compulsory?"

Waiter—No, sir; oxtail.—Life.

YOUNG CAMPAIGNERS FOR PROHIBITION

Let the children help
in winning

NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

by forming a society of

YOUNG CAMPAIGNERS FOR PROHIBITION

in your Loyal Temperance Legion or your Sunday School class.

SUPPLIES

PENNANTS. Eighteen inches long; red, white, or blue felt. Ten cents each (8 cents if 25 are ordered); per 100, $7.00.

HATS. Blue felt, with letters Y. C. P. in white. Ten cents each (9 cents if 25 are ordered); per 100, $8.00.

BUTTONS. Red or blue, with letters Y. C. P. Three cents each; per 25, 50 cents; per 100, $1.50; per 500, $5.00; per 1,000, $9.00.

1 pennant,	1 hat,	1 button,	$ .20
25 pennants,	25 hats,	25 buttons,	4.00
100 pennants,	100 hats,	100 buttons,	15.00
1,000 pennants,	1,000 hats,	1,000 buttons,	130.00

LEAFLETS

Young Campaigners for Prohibition
Young Campaigners for No-License.
Songs for Young Campaigners, No. 1.
Two cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Suggested Campaign Plans, Muster Roll, etc., sent free upon application.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

CHICAGO CHILDREN WIN PRIZES FOR DRY SLOGANS

Lincoln freed the slaves; prohibition frees the drunkards.

Sobriety is the best preparedness.

Efficiency is the vital need of the nation; it will not be obtained through liquor.

Close the saloons and our men will be stronger, our women happier and our children healthier.

Saloons, the graveyards of character.

These are the prize-winning slogans sent in to the Dry Chicago Federation by school children of the city, more than four hundred of whom took part in a slogan contest.

ANTI-TOBACCO POSTERS

Post Them in Public Schools, Sunday Schools, Academies and Colleges

The

CIGARET

Is Condemned By

EDUCATORS—90% of smokers have low rank or fail in studies, have weak will, weak character, bad habits, disordered nerves, undeveloped bodies.

ATHLETES—Smokers have uncertain "eye," unsteady hand, short wind, weak heart.

EMPLOYERS—Edison, Ford, Carnegie, and others, as well as manufacturers and railroads. Two million positions are closed to cigaret smokers.

PHYSICIANS—Paralyzes nerve cells, interferes with lung and heart action; causes arterial degeneration, stupidity, unreliability, perverseness, etc.

SCIENTISTS—Edison, Maxim, Burbank, Wiley. Burbank says, "Cigarets make a boy a useless, soulless, worthless thing."

JURISTS — "Ben" Lindsey, Judge Burke, Judge Black, and others agree that "Cigarets contribute more than all other causes combined to make the 'bad boy.'"

PUBLISHERS — Who are refusing cigaret advertisements.

TEMPERANCE WORKERS — Cigarets lead to alcohol.

STATISTICS—Twelve hundred boys daily begin the cigaret habit.

Size, 28 by 42 inches
Price, 10 cents each; 3 for 25 cents

Studies of

COLLEGE SMOKERS AND NON-SMOKERS

By Dr. J. W. Seaver, Yale College

Show this

COMPARATIVE GROWTH IN

Weight
Height
Chest Girth
Lung Capacity

(A comparative table in colors)

Students entering college in 9 years: Non-Smokers averaged 15 months younger than regular smokers—gained 77% more in lung capacity—24% more in height.

Size 25 by 30 in.
Printed in colors.
Price, 15 cents each; two for 25 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Ill.

PENNANTS

With name of prohibition state and year of passage of prohibitory law.

26 PENNANTS
(25 states and Alaska)
made of paper 18 inches long, with name of state printed in blue.

Price, per set, 35 cents.
Orders filled for sets only.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

IOWA IN CAMPAIGN FOR CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

A flying trip across the state shows one thing plainly—the Iowa W. C. T. U. means business. That business is to secure constitutional prohibition for Iowa next October. This will clinch the statutory prohibition already won. Only one thing can lose the state to the drys and that is overconfidence.

Iowa is cocksure that it is going to put prohibition into its constitution. Therein lies the danger. Iowa men have supreme confidence in themselves. Yet only last June the suffrage battle was lost by open, evident fraud. "Floaters" from Illinois and Missouri came over in great numbers and four Mississippi river counties were responsible for the defeat. It will be just as easy to register falsely and get in the work of repeaters next October as it was last June. The anti-suffragists are working in every underhanded and concealed way. Their hope is to seize the state while its defenders sleep.

But Iowa women, with their far-sighted president, Mrs. Ida B. Wise Smith, are not to be caught napping. They are stirring up men and women. All effective modern methods to win a state will be tried. Help will be rushed in. Iowa women are already in the field. Organization is to be pushed. The general officers intend to get out every rural voter. That rural vote is the one that will win or lose the issue. The women are also making special efforts to get every church lined up on the right side. The word has gone out to get in touch with the laboring classes of the state. At Marshalltown the wide awake union sent your correspondent to four factories in two days' time and at Mason City she was sent to the cement plant. The factory men are eager to hear our side of the question, for they feel that statutory prohibition has paid. So in earnest are the Iowa women that at Mason City they even sent the correspondent to the dance hall. The manager called for silence. Dancing ceased and the merry-makers listened to a plea to the young men to register their votes this year so as to make sure of the good work already begun.

Des Moines planned to have the National speaker at a conference of leaders. The state president and corresponding secretary were there, also the editor of the state paper, state superintendents, state organizers and district officers. The occasion was a very profitable one. This rally served a double purpose. Not only were campaign methods discussed and recommended but these officials brought pressure to bear upon a reactionary legislature that seemed possessed to do some remarkably foolish things. For a time a certain element was determined to throw away the cigaret law of the state and license the sale of cigarets. The senate came to the rescue and saved the day on that law. Then this same legislative element, evidently pushed on by forces that smarted under the dry régime, inaugurated by the legislature of 1915, tried to weaken the Sunday laws and to abolish the reformatory farm that the W. C. T. U. worked nearly a score of years to obtain. They also tried to dispense with the home for epileptics. Mrs. Smith has proved a real general and it is hoped she will circumvent the enemy at every point. The legislative campaign has been very strenuous.

The Van Nuys (Calif.) W. C. T. U., organized in January by Mrs. Doughty, Mrs. Warner and Dr. Hutchins, officers of Los Angeles W. C. T. U., with a membership of seven, has held two meetings and doubled its membership. The able and energetic president, Mrs. D. A. Rogers, is a former well known worker in Oregon.

Susanna Cocroft's

Physical Culture for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

WISCONSIN MAY HAVE REFERENDUM ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Many Local Campaigns in Badger State Now in Progress

The fight is on in Wisconsin, both in the legislature and in nearly a hundred centers where a vote may be taken at the April elections, according to Mrs. W. A. Lawson, president of the Wisconsin W. C. T. U., who was a caller the past week at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. While the state-wide referendum bill has not yet been reported out of committee, there seems to be some hope of its passage by the legislature. T. J. Mahon, attorney for the Wisconsin Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers and Distillers, has issued a statement in favor of the bill calling for submission of the prohibition question. He explains, "We feel that the question has become of sufficient importance to demand the attention of the individual voter. I have conferred with the members of the Wisconsin Association of Wholesale Liquor Dealers, and they believe with me that at this time we should gracefully acknowledge that the state-wide referendum involving absolute prohibition should be submitted to the people of the state."

A bill to establish a half mile dry zone around the Soldiers' Home in Milwaukee was defeated recently in the Wisconsin legislature, and this in the face of statistics showing that eighty per cent of the offenses of the residents of the home and thirty per cent of the deaths can be traced to the liquor habit.

Local option campaigns are in progress in Janesville, Madison, Eau Claire, Beloit, Wausau and many other towns. Mrs. Lawson, Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, and Captain Wiard will give much time between now and the April elections to boosting prohibition in the state, speaking and working for it on every possible occasion.

The widespread publicity being given by the liquor interests to appeals for compensation is virtually an admission that they have abandoned all hope of continuing their existence longer than a few years. It is reported that the brewers of Wisconsin have started an expensive newspaper campaign to convince the voters of the state that if total prohibition is enacted, compensation should be allowed those now engaged in the liquor business. They are placing display advertisements in different papers of the state to that effect.

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" —248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Sixteenth Year

The Chautauqua School of Nursing

513 Main St. Jamestown, N. Y.

SUPPLY
the pupils in your schools with
"LIQUOR TRAFFIC MUST GO"
lead pencils, thus keeping before them
the slogan of
NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION.

Price, per dozen, 35 cents; per six dozen, $1.50.

* * *

Also with

BLOTTERS

In Prohibition Maine
Be Strong
Who Is the Coward?
Blot Out the Saloon
A Cigaret Arithmetic
A Cold Water Blotter
John Barleycorn, Goodbye

Envelope size, in pink, blue, or yellow. Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred 35 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

PATRIOTIC SHIELD
in red, white and blue

This shield has on one side a relief map of the United States in white with 1920 in red figures and the words "By the will of God and our united efforts." The reverse side bears the "pledge of the united mothers' movement for a saloonless nation by 1920," with space for signature. These shields are most appropriate for decorating

SUNDAY SCHOOL ROOMS
W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS
CAMPAIGN HEADQUARTERS

and one's own home. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

What Prohibition Has Meant To Colorado

By Governor George A. Carlson

An artistic booklet, full of convincing campaign arguments, issued especially for distribution among

BOARD OF TRADE MEMBERS
REAL ESTATE FIRMS
ASSOCIATIONS OF COMMERCE
COMMERCIAL CLUBS
BANKERS

and business men in general.

Size, 4x9 inches. Price, 5 cents each; per fifty, $1.50; per hundred, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

THE UNION SIGNAL AN AID IN TEMPERANCE WORK IN PORTO RICO

Through the kindness of Mrs. Caroline McDowell, National superintendent of Temperance and Missions, THE UNION SIGNAL is visiting many homes in Porto Rico, and reaching the Christian people of all churches. Miss Annie Robbins, National organizer and lecturer, and president of the Porto Rican W. C. T. U., sends interesting excerpts from letters she has received from the island. The quotations tell of the progress of the work and of the writers' appreciation of THE UNION SIGNAL. These letters were written before the passage by Congress of the Porto Rican bill containing the prohibition clause, news of which has doubtless been received with great joy by the workers in the island.

"We have been receiving regularly THE UNION SIGNAL. I want to thank you very heartily. You will be glad to know that we use a great many of the temperance items in Porto Rico Evangelico and thus try to keep our readers informed as to the progress of this great movement.

"PHILO W. DRURY."

"Mr. Andujar has written Congress for prohibition, and we are expecting it daily. God grant it comes! It will ease our burdens greatly. I am always and ever for prohibition.

"LILY K. ANDUJAR."

"I am especially interested in the medal contests for they appeal so strongly to the Porto Rican. I wish we might have them in all of the towns. I want one in Anasco and I know that the others would like them in their towns as well. You know my former work was that of teacher of elocution and I love that side of the work.

"MRS. JOSE OSUMA."

"Greetings from Porto Rico. I wish to thank you for the interesting campaign copies of THE UNION SIGNAL that I have received. I tell you there is some very interesting reading in them. Of course I have passed them along the line, hoping that the seed will take root and grow. Porto Rico is still in the same place on the map, but some day it will be in the white space.

"EMMA R. SCHMID."

"Your letter of the first has been received. I have also been receiving THE UNION SIGNAL for some weeks and I can assure you that I appreciate this favor. Though some one else may be paying for it you are of course the one who suggested it. The prohibition sentiment continues to grow in Porto Rico. In a new publication just started here in Barranquitas there appears an advertisement of a grocer who calls attention to the fact that he does not sell liquors. I very much doubt if such a thing has ever before happened in Porto Rico. Not only this but one of the contributed articles has for its aim an attack on the liquor traffic. We are hoping for a prohibition clause in the new act for the governing of Porto Rico.

"G. A. RIGGS."

"We have THE UNION SIGNAL and if you want to send us The Young Crusader we will use it. We have had a W. C. T. U. in our church since last year. Many people are interested in it and we hope to go on growing in interest and numbers. We think that we could have in our union at our church a temperance medal contest. Please send literature needed and let us know the rules and regulations.

"EVANGELINA LUGO."

One large potato, in some parts of Wisconsin, will pay for two glasses of beer. By practical experience, certain portions of the country are thoroughly convinced that one sound potato is worth a barrel of any kind of booze.—Seattle Daily Times.

You Can Be So Well

Don't you know, ill health or chronic ailments, in nine out of every ten cases, are due to improper food, poor circulation, insufficient exercise, incorrect breathing, incorrect poise and restless slumber!

I give exercises that strengthen the impaired organs.

Remove those unnatural conditions and your ailments vanish.

This may surprise you, but I am doing it daily; I have done it for eighty thousand women.

No Drugs or Medicines

You follow my directions in your room.

Are you too thin or too fat? You can weigh exactly what you should.

Medical magazines advertise my work; leading doctors approve it; their wives are my pupils.

Regain Health, Poise and Cheerful Spirits. You can. Tell me your faults in health or figure. I will help you. And I want to, so much. I will respect your confidence. Write for my Free Booklet No. 21.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

QUEENSLAND WILL ENTER UPON VIGOROUS TEMPERANCE CAMPAIGN

Special Correspondence

The Temperance Alliance is about to commence a campaign for the reduction of licenses in Queensland. Sixty-four petitions have been lodged requesting local option polls at the senate election which is due in the month of June. This will be the first experience of reduction under the liquor act of 1912. The act provides for local option polls every three years to reduce licenses by one-fourth in the electorates where requests are made for a poll.

Citizens' Six O'Clock Closing League

Owing to the adverse attitude of the government and the unsatisfactory replies given by the premier to the various influential deputations that waited upon him requesting him to bring in a measure to close all liquor bars at six o'clock, the campaign is at present hung up. The committee, however, is determined to enter shortly upon a much more vigorous mission of educating public opinion on the question.

Queensland Young People's Prohibition League

There has long been felt a need in Queensland for more definite temperance teaching among our boys and girls to prepare them for the time when they will be voters and the responsibility of stamping out the liquor traffic will fall upon them. Many of the leading workers have been trying for some time to meet this need. The result is the Prohibition League movement. To mark the launching of the league and also to celebrate World's Temperance Sunday, the young people held a temperance demonstration in the Centennial Hall preceded by a procession through Queen Street, Brisbane, in which approximately one thousand persons took part. The decorated motor cars and lorries created much interest. The cash prize was won by the Valley "Y" union whose car was white and silver, the girls being dressed to correspond. There were various mottoes in silver lettering, among them the League motto, "Pro Patria." It is planned to have a similar demonstration annually.

There are at present twenty-nine women's unions with a membership of 1,023, and ten "Y" unions with a membership of 223, the honorary members totalling 158. The W. C. T. U. is permeating society like the leaven in the meal.

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN. STEREOPTICON OUTFIT, with more than 100 slides, including two temperance lectures and six illustrated songs. For particulars address H. W. Davis, Providence, Ky.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request. Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL SOUVENIR

The large number of requests for THE UNION SIGNAL Day souvenir indicates a keen interest in the observance of this occasion all through the month of March. The supply of the little book-marks is rapidly disappearing and local unions desiring it must order immediately. It was prepared during the absence of Miss Gordon in Washington and without her consent to or approval of the use of her picture. We felt sure, however, that all white ribboners would be eager to possess this souvenir upon which appears the face of our beloved National W. C. T. U. president and the demand for it shows that we were correct in our surmise.

LOWER PRICE FOR CLUBS OF TEN

So many requests are being received from subscribers for reduced rates for the Campaign or Y. P. B. Editions that we take this opportunity to remind our readers that the former price of twenty-five cents a year is still available when clubs of ten or more are sent in at one time. Otherwise the price is thirty-five cents a year. This raise has been made necessary by the increased cost of production.

LENDS SIGNAL TO STUDENTS

"I can not tell you how highly I value your paper. No worker can afford to be without it. Please send us a dozen copies for our March first meeting. I keep a file of my papers and lend to students to consult in preparing for debates. I have also made a Willard scrap book which I find convenient."

THE WAY ONE MEMBER SPENT HER VACATION

"I have been spending a few weeks in this place visiting an only sister and enjoying a much needed rest. It has been my pleasure to organize a fine W. C. T. U. and I am herewith enclosing $1.00 for one subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL, your most excellent paper, to be sent to the president of the new union."

WORDS OF CHEER

For Temperance People. A very Beautiful Book. Printed in Gold and Colors on Every Page. Size 4x7 inches. Gems of Art. Artistic Binding. Sample copy mailed to Readers of This Paper for TWO DIMES. Address W. B. JONES CO., SILVER CREEK, N. Y.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS' WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

NEEDED! CAN YOU HELP?

With at least six states in definite state-wide campaigns, and the resolution submitting the question of National Constitutional Prohibition to the legislatures of the several states practically sure of passing the new Congress, the time has come for a forward move along publicity lines.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. NEEDS FUNDS

at once to make possible the sending of free plate matter to newspapers in the campaign states.

EVERY STATE IS IN A CAMPAIGN FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

and should have this educational matter put before the voters through the secular press. Sufficient funds should be forthcoming from the friends of the cause to make this possible.

THE NEWSPAPERS ARE READY TO CO-OPERATE

by giving their space freely but plates must be paid for if advantage is taken of this generosity. Friends of the cause will be glad to make possible the entering of this open door.

Contributions, large or small, from men or women, members or non-members of the W. C. T. U., will be gratefully acknowledged.

The liquor trade has not only been sending out free plates but has been paying thousands of dollars for advertising space in the newspapers. Shall it have a monopoly of this form of education?

Make all remittances payable to the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Indicate the fact that your gift is for the publicity campaign.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The Indiana W. C. T. U. is one of the women's organizations of the state that is making arrangements for the study of the Indiana constitution and the education of women for the proper discharge of suffrage duties. The Legislative Council of Indiana Women, of which Mrs. Felix T. McWhirter is president, is also planning to follow up its successful work in the legislature with an educational program.

Cobleskill (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. under the very efficient leadership of Mrs. M. W. Putnam is in a flourishing condition. A membership contest is in progress and there are now more than 150 members reported. All the superintendents are working enthusiastically. THE UNION SIGNAL day meeting held on February 28 resulted in increased subscriptions to the paper. Both days of prayer in January were observed and the attendance was good. A fine program was rendered at the Willard Memorial meeting on February 14, with Mrs. D. Quackenbush, president of the Schoharie county W. C. T. U., Mrs. Willard Larkin and Rev. C. J. Miller, as speakers. Mrs. E. S. Ryder paid a loving tribute to Miss Katharine Pindar, who for twenty-five years had been the president of the Cobleskill union and who was called to her reward last summer.

Mrs. Edgar Johnston, the Mississippi superintendent of Work among Colored People, is visiting the colored schools of the state in the interest of the Y. P. B., and the boarding schools, especially, are proving exceedingly responsive. Mrs. Johnston, who was educated at Mary Holmes Seminary, a school for colored girls, is particularly interested in the work among the young people. A Y. P. B. is soon to be organized by her in the Okolona Industrial school. Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National superintendent of Work among Colored People, writes that she is receiving encouraging letters from students in many Mississippi colleges and academies. The Mississippi W. C. T. U. in 1915 took up actively the work among colored people. Appointments were made for Mrs. Peterson, the white ribboners helping in every possible way to secure the organization of colored unions.

PROHIBITION MAP

25 White States
Size 19x25 inches
Revised to March 1, 1917
Price, 15 cents; two for 25 cents.

Prohibition Map Leaflet

Size 6x9 inches
Map on one side and list of prohibition states, with date of enactment of the prohibitory law, on the reverse side. Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

LIGHT ON THE H. C. L. PROBLEM—BARTERING FOOD FOR POISON

TWO BEERS FOR A POTATO

A man came into the saloon and put a potato down on the bar, saying that he didn't have any money but he would like a glass of beer. The saloonkeeper replied, "That's all right. For that potato we'll give you two beers or one whisky."

COCKTAIL VS. POTATO

Proffered a large potato in payment for a pre-dinner cocktail, a Springfield (Mass.) cafe bartender rang up fifteen cents and gave the customer five cents change.

Supple at Sixty

Age and ripe experience mean happiness and usefulness when mental and bodily powers are preserved by keeping rich blood in the veins.

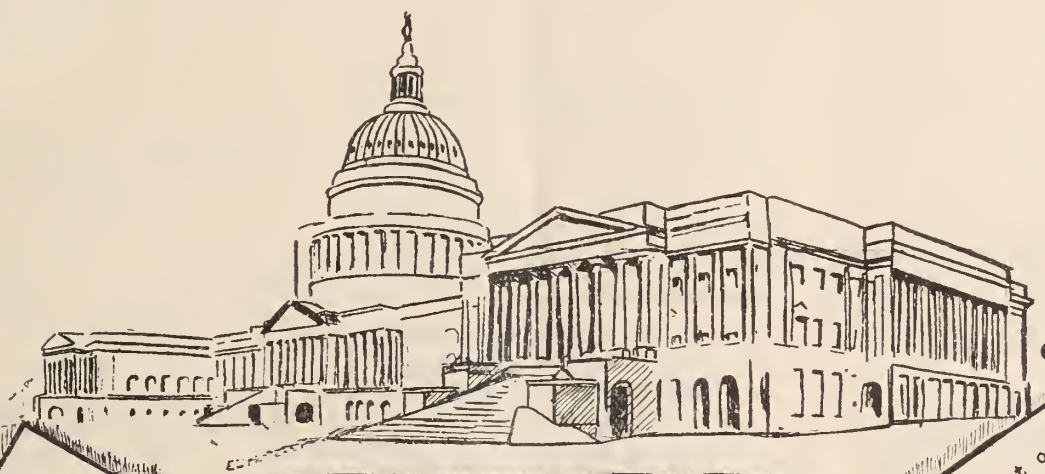
Nature's great strength-sustaining nourishment in Scott's Emulsion creates rich blood while it warms the body and alleviates rheumatic tendencies. Its oil-food imparts strength to both body and brain.

It is Nourishment—not Alcohol.
14b74
SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD N J

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MARCH 22, 1917 | No. 12



The movement for National Prohibition cannot stop because it is grounded in the aspiration of the American people for purity in government, for righteousness in law.
-Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas

The American people do not propose to support their government through the agencies that will finally destroy the government.
-Congressman Percy E. Quin of Mississippi

The drink traffic will continue to prey on defenseless millions until dislodged and annihilated by a sweeping Federal law.
-Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas

On to Washington!

The marvelous progress of the temperance reform hastens the coming of the kingdom of our Lord and of His Christ.

Recent prohibition victories, state and national, thrill our hearts. The prohibition enactments of the Sixty-fourth Congress are a glad guarantee that our greatest victory is close at hand. Impelled by the resistless tide of righteous public sentiment, the Sixty-fifth Congress will give to the forty-eight states of our glorious republic the long desired referendum on National Constitutional Prohibition.

Anna A. Gordon

What is the object of a National Prohibition Amendment? It is to destroy the agency that debauches the youth of the land and thereby perpetuates its hold upon the Nation.
-Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson

The only safe and proper protection which our people can have against the evils of alcoholic intoxication will come from a Nation-wide Prohibitory law.
-Harvey W. Wiley, M.D.

Will not National Constitutional Prohibition aid wonderfully "to provide for the common defense" by making us, or at least helping to make us, a virile, strong and sober Nation.
-Congressman Caleb Powers of Kentucky

CAMPAIGN EDITION

JOHN BARLEYCORN ATTACKED BY MEMBERS OF SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS

Excerpts from speeches made at short session in favor of District Prohibition bill, Anti-Advertising and "Bone-Dry" measures.

CONGRESSMAN MORGAN OF LOUISIANA SAYS ALL CONGRESSMEN MUST LINE UP PRO OR CON ON LIQUOR QUESTION

The day is at hand when every member of this body must align himself with those who favor the passage of all measures that are subsidiary to national prohibition or with those who are arrayed against such measures. There can be no neutrals or straddlers. He who does not take a definite stand either pro or con will certainly find himself ill regarded on one side and viewed with disfavor by the other. Hence I concluded to give this subject some thought for my own guidance. I did so, and my judgment today is that national prohibition will prove to be the most efficacious solution of the liquor question. However, in this connection I wish to say that heretofore in season and out I have uniformly opposed prohibition in all its phases and in every form. Not that I entertained any deep-rooted admiration for or faith in the saloon as an institution. For as a matter of fact, it has never been a golden sunset in my eyes.

FAUX PAS OF ANTI-PROHIBITIONISTS

Much has been said against the desirability of the Reed amendment because it was introduced primarily for the purpose of bringing about the enactment of ultra-liberal liquor legislation. Nevertheless, from the liquor adherents' viewpoint, it was a faux pas. It might have been conceived in sin, but it will be one of the most enticing incentives ever held out to the American people to actively support the cause of prohibition. Why, the most effectual argument the whisky contingency ever put forth was that prohibition did not prohibit. Now their own friend has unwittingly robbed them of that time-honored and oft-repeated declaration. The will of God seems a wondrous way that is often beyond our poor understanding. Personally I am anxious to see prohibition written into the Federal Constitution, and I am afraid of that brand of prohibition whose existence will rest upon the ever-changing personnel of the Congress.

It is doubtless true that innovations are inoperative when prematurely adopted; that is, when they precede the real wishes of the people who are to be affected by them. But if you take the sense of the American people today on the proposition of national prohibition you will find an astounding majority heartily in sympathy therewith. So obvious is this that the liquor adherents are vigorously invoking the assistance of all the friends of the liquor business and industriously calling upon all the enemies of prohibition for their co-operation in the hope of preventing, if possible, the submission of the proposed Federal amendment.

The proponents and friends of national prohibition are not urging Congress to settle this controversy. On the contrary, we are asked to not consult our own will but to relegate the question to the sovereign citizenship of this Nation for adjustment.

I know not what course you will pursue, but there is a large and respectable portion of my district demanding the right to be heard on this subject, therefore I do not think I would overstep the limits of fair play by voting for the adoption of a measure calculated to enable my constituents to exercise a power lodged in them by the Nation's organic law. However, I am not unmindful of the fact that there are those who will impute to me a want of firmness and stamina on account of the views I here give expression to.

"THE FOOLISH AND DEAD ALONE NEVER CHANGE THEIR OPINIONS"

The man who realizes the error of his way and refuses to abdicate that devious course is, in my opinion, unspeakably worse than the one who has the fortitude to publicly acknowledge his mistake. But be that as it may, I have no apology or excuse for saying that the people ought to be given an opportunity to express their own ideas upon this vital question.

To those who will arrogate to themselves the right to criticize me, I wish to say that "the foolish and dead alone never change their opinions."

Does any man think it chimerical to charge that the saloon is a perpetual solicitation to depart from the path of rectitude? Again, does not its accessibility make total abstinence a thousandfold more difficult? Do you think it an exaggeration to say that liquor incites inherited weaknesses and tendencies; that it degrades and lowers the life standards; that it warps and twists the physical structures of our boys at the very threshold of their careers; that it dooms countless women and children to sunless homes and inculcates a supreme contempt for all the decencies of humanity? Of course you do not. Now, on the other hand, can any man who is capable of divorcing himself from every semblance of self-interest—economic and political—conceive of a single instance wherein the liquor business redounded to the permanent good of any community, state, or Nation?

Your sole excuse for its toleration is that the country cannot subsist without its pecuniary assistance. That is positively the saddest and the most puerile plea the liquor aggregation ever advanced. If that contention truly reflects the sentiments of the American people, then the United States will soon become the scorn of the civilized world. If our great Nation's existence is contingent upon the perpetuity of an institution whose many sinister elements and numerous demoralizing influences men will not forswear, then the day is not far distant when our country will be rich alone in memories.

PROHIBITION MEASURES PASSED BY SIXTY-FOURTH CONGRESS AND SIGNED BY PRESIDENT WILSON

ALASKA PROHIBITION BILL, passed by the Senate and House without the formality of a roll-call.

PORTO RICAN CITIZENSHIP BILL, containing a provision for prohibition, with a referendum to the people if desired by them.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA BILL, prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District.

AMENDMENT TO POSTOFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL, prohibiting in states having anti-liquor advertising laws the use of the mails for liquor advertising purposes, and also prohibiting, excepting for scientific, sacramental, medicinal and mechanical purposes, the shipment of alcoholic liquors, through the channels of interstate commerce, to individuals in states that now prohibit the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors.

CONGRESSMAN RUCKER OF GEORGIA SAYS PROHIBITION WILL INJURE ONLY THREE INSTITUTIONS

I know of only three institutions that will be injured by putting liquor where the hand of resurrection can never reach it—the poorhouse, the penitentiary, the lunatic asylum—and I have no desire to see these institutions with a full house. Strong drink never brightened a home, never made a happy wife or mother, never gladdened the heart of a child, never made one of God's creatures wiser or better. And all of us want to make happy homes, I am sure.

Suppose every man when he starts to work in the morning should take the amount which in the progress of the day he will spend for liquor and throw it in the mouth of the first open sewer. What a stupendous sum it would be! More than a million dollars a day. You might say here is waste, stupendous waste, and yet is that true? No; it would be far better for the man and for those whom God has committed to his care if he would make that disposition of the money, for what he gets does not help him, but tends to his destruction.

SENATOR VARDAMAN OF MISSISSIPPI CHARACTERIZES ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING AMENDMENT AS CRYSTALLIZATION OF PUBLIC SENTIMENT

A newspaper that holds money above morals, pelf above principle, and dividends of more value than a human soul is not entitled to any special consideration at the hands of the Congress of the United States. The better class of newspapers, those that are willing to give their best service for humanity and are content with moderate interest upon their investments, have already declined to take whisky advertisements at all. This anti-liquor advertising amendment is but the crystallization of public sentiment—enlightened Christian public sentiment—which has grown out of the universal knowledge of the evils of the whisky traffic. I am in favor of doing everything within constitutional limitations necessary to discourage, hinder, or destroy the traffic in liquor. I regard it as an outlaw, an enemy to mankind, and if I can not strike it in the face I will hit it in the back—hamstring it. I will do anything consistent with honor and duty as a United States Senator to get rid of it. If the newspapers insist upon a recognition of their rights at the hands of Congress, let them come to this body with clean hands. They can not make criminals of men, prostitutes of women, and orphans of children and then be heard to complain to the Senate of proscriptive laws.

As to the effect of such legislation in states that prohibit the circulation of newspapers containing liquor advertisements, I wish to say that I chanced to be in the city of Birmingham, Ala., some time ago, after the law in that state had gone into effect and before a similar law had been enacted by my own state. I saw the periodical Life, published in New York City, offered for sale at a news stand. I noticed the pages of this periodical very much blurred and marked up with a black pencil, and when I inquired what it meant I was told that the law prohibiting the sale of newspapers in Alabama containing whisky advertisements made it necessary to mark out the whisky advertisement. It made me very happy to see this. I think the highest end of government is the improvement of man, and if the man be improved the government will share that improvement, and enlightened moral sentiment will right the laws of the land.

Missouri First License State to Enact Frances E. Willard Day Measure

Missouri's legislature has distinguished itself by passing a state-wide prohibition referendum measure, a bill providing for the observance in the public schools of a Frances E. Willard Day, and some good election bills. A presidential suffrage bill has passed the house by a vote of 87 to 34, and is expected to pass the senate. The state-wide referendum bill provides for a popular vote in 1918, and if adopted will take effect January 1, 1920. Missouri is the first license state to pass a Frances E. Willard Day measure.

Lower House of Nebraska Legislature Passes "Bone Dry" Measure

A drastic enforcement law of a "bone-dry" character has passed the lower house of the Nebraska legislature. The bill now goes to the senate where some opposition is expected.

Prohibition Reduces Police Force in Canadian City

The police force of the city of Kingston, Ontario, Canada, is to be reduced as a result of the prohibition measure in force in the province. The work of the constables has so decreased that the force could be cut almost in two, says a dispatch from that city.

Indictment Against Alcohol by Dr. W. A. Evans, Former Head of the Health Department of Chicago

"The medical profession has been charged with being in favor of the use of alcoholic beverages," says Dr. W. A. Evans, former head of the Health Department of Chicago. "The charge cannot be sustained. Alcohol for internal use rarely is prescribed by physicians except when such prescribing is done for the purpose of evading some law.

"Theoretically alcohol is both a medicine and a food. So far as all practical purposes are concerned it is neither a medicine nor a food. Discussing it as a medicine, alcohol belongs in a group in which there are tropin, aconite, epinephrin, and extracts of thyroid. These medicines are so powerful that they are but rarely used.

"Physicians know so little about the mechanism of the sympathetic nervous system, on which most of the effects of these remedies are exerted, that none of them is liable to be generally used within the next few years. In the meanwhile the old time uses of alcohol for medicinal purposes have either been discontinued or else they are condemned by the medical profession.

—

"Alcohol once was used for consumption. It is not used as a cure for this disease now. It once was used as a remedy for blood poisoning—septisemia and pyemia. It now is known that its use lessens the chance of recovery from these diseases. It once was used as a cure for colds and bronchitis and as a preventive of pneumonia. It now is known that it makes colds worse and it increases the chance of pneumonia.

"It formerly was used as a cure for snake bite. It is not so used now. It decreases the bodily resistance to snake bite. The only good it ever did was to destroy the awful fear which sometimes shocks persons who have been bitten and in that way indirectly contributed to cure.

—

"Alcohol formerly was used for shock on the theory that it was a stimulant. It is not a stimulant. It prevents fear and may in that way do good: otherwise it does harm. Its use in shock is being discontinued. Ammonia and coffee are taking its place.

"It is widely used for the discomforts of menstruation. Physicians condemn its use for this purpose as being unscientific and harmful. There is a notion that gin is good for the kidneys. There is nothing worse for the kidneys than gin.

"Alcohol is disappearing from first aid cabinets, physicians' satchels, and hospitals. Within a few years it will disappear from that part of drug stores devoted to the filling of prescriptions."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Indiana
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Arizona	Utah
Alabama	Michigan
Washington	Montana
Oregon	Alaska

STATES TO VOTE ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Wyoming	Missouri	New Mexico
Iowa	Utah	Minnesota

Yale Seniors Urge Dry Reunions

A communication signed by fifteen prominent Yale seniors was scattered broadcast among the student body of Yale University recently, urging the undergraduates to discontinue the serving of liquors at reunions.

"Leaving aside lurid descriptions," says the communication, "conditions at Yale during the days of commencement, when the reunion classes are back, are distinctly objectionable. To furnish a keg of beer is the easiest way for a class committee. But could not ingenuity and thoughtfulness be substituted for beer? We submit that booze never benefited any Yale man nor any Yale fraternity nor any Yale tradition. Why continue a custom which industry, good morals and half the states have condemned?"

North Dakota Has "Bone Dry" Law

House bill No. 39, introduced by Representative E. A. Bowman and backed by the temperance forces of the state, was amended in the closing hours of the legislative session of the North Dakota legislature to conform with the federal "bone-dry" law. According to its provisions, no person, firm or corporation can deliver, receive, or have in possession for delivery, any intoxicating liquor for any purpose whatsoever, except that such liquor may be delivered by common carriers to registered pharmacists to be disposed of by them, as provided by law.

The present law provides that pharmacists may handle intoxicating liquor for medicinal, mechanical, scientific and sacramental purposes, only after securing a permit for this purpose from the district judge. The "bone dry" law has been signed by Governor Frazier and goes into effect July 1, 1917.

New York to Vote on Suffrage

A resolution providing for a referendum on woman suffrage at the next November election was passed by the senate on March 12. This was the last step in the legislative procedure preliminary to referring the question to the electorate.

Oklahoma Legislature May Submit Suffrage Question

A joint resolution, submitting the question of woman suffrage to the voters of the state, has passed the lower house of the Oklahoma legislature. The resolution, with the literacy test clause stricken out, will be returned to the senate for concurrence.

Russian Women Eligible for Membership in Town Councils

The Petrograd duma committee for municipal affairs has voted in favor of a proposal that women shall be eligible for membership in town councils, according to Reuter's Petrograd correspondent.

The Lumber Interests and Prohibition

To no class of laborers has prohibition proven a greater blessing than to the men in the lumber camps. The owners of large lumber interests have been generous contributors to state-wide prohibition campaigns.

J. J. Donovan of the state of Washington, speaking at a lumbermen's banquet, as reported in the Lumber World Review, says, "Prohibition has lessened accidents among the men, increased their efficiency, given them better homes and better-fed and better-clothed wives and children—the men themselves freely admit it."

"I remember so well when our first prohibition contest was on six years ago," continued Mr. Donovan, "going out to one of our roughest and newest camps on the morning after election and unexpectedly running into a group of about thirty of the men. I knew a few of them, and the leader called out, 'How did the election go?' I undertook to answer by naming a few of the men who were elected. He interrupted me: 'That is not what I want to know. Is it wet or dry?' I said, 'Dry.' And there came to my intense surprise, a hurrah from that rough set of men and the further statement, 'Now those booze-punchers in town will come out here and have to go up against the sawlog and have to earn an honest living.'"

"DO YOU LOVE BABIES?"

The above is the title of one of the health bulletins issued by the Bureau of Public Health Education of the Department of Health of New York City. As an illustration of the trend of modern science toward absolute total abstinence from alcohol, as an essential measure for the preservation of life and health, the following excerpts are remarkably illuminating. We quote briefly:

"A baby is one of the most delicate creatures known. It is hard for it to get used to being in the world, so hard that one baby in every ten dies before it is a year old. . . . One of the chief things that keeps babies from thriving is our old enemy alcohol. This old scoundrel rarely attacks babies directly (for almost anybody with common sense knows enough not to give a baby beer or wine or whisky) but he damages the baby's father and mother.

"Scientific investigations have shown that parents who habitually drink large quantities of alcoholic drinks have babies who show some form of weakness. The baby may have weak muscles, it may have a poor resistance to disease, it may be feeble-minded or even an idiot, it may grow up to be a drunkard, or a criminal. Any of these things may come about because the baby's father or mother had the liquor habit. It is hard to believe these things unless they are backed up by facts, so here are some of the facts:

"In one of the European countries it was found that when the parents did not touch liquor, only thirteen out of every one hundred of their children died. Parents who drank only small amounts lost twenty-three out of every one hundred, and heavy drinkers lost thirty-two out of every one hundred.

"These are the results of parents using liquor before their children are born. . . . Any weakness which babies have at birth is later increased by the presence of alcohol in the home. If a nursing mother habitually drinks much beer or whisky her milk becomes watery and of poor quality and harmful to the baby. But poisoning the baby's food isn't all that alcohol does. It lessens the family bank account. The money spent for liquor should go for wholesome food, warm clothes and decent rooms. Finally, to finish the deadly work, alcohol gets such a grip on father and mother that baby is neglected, becomes ill and dies.

"Do you love babies? You can't keep on drinking and have strong babies. Stupefying alcohol or healthy babies—which?"

And remember that the Health Bureau places beer, wine and whisky in the same category as deadly enemies of the baby because they damage the father and mother. The besotted parent may foolishly imagine that beer is a friend to him, but it is his baby's murderer. Truly has the nation paid in toll to John Barleycorn a stupendous measure of its most costly and precious possessions.

BEER FROM VIEWPOINT OF NEW YORK HEALTH DEPARTMENT

In view of the persistent campaign conducted by the beer manufacturers and their traffic managers, with the avowed purpose of convincing the people that beer is a non-intoxicating, wholesome "temperance beverage," a "liquid bread," and a close second to milk in point of nourishment, it may be well to consider some of the statements made by unbiased authorities, who, we must believe, are not only vitally interested in conserving the health of the people and promoting the general welfare, but whose business it is to do so.

The Department of Health of New York City, through its Bureau of Public Health Education, has issued a number of striking bulletins in which beer is classed with other alcoholic poisons. In a bulletin entitled "Alcohol and Bright's," the Health Department pays its compliments to the Alcohol family in the following language: "Alcohol is alcohol and harmful to the human body no matter in what agreeable form it is handed around. The rich man's alcohol is champagne, wine and cocktail; the poor man's alcohol is whisky, gin and beer. In prohibition communities, alcohol appears in vegetable bitters and patent medicines, and parades under many other fine-sounding names, such as tonics, nervines, medicated wines, etc., but since they all contain alcohol they are all dangerous." The italics are ours.

The writer in justice feels impelled to remark that the exploitation of "bitters, patent medicines, tonics, nervines, medicated wines," etc., is not confined to prohibition localities but has been extensively carried on to the remotest bounds of our country and beyond, and some of our most widely read and influential journals have taken up the cudgel against their use and to their credit, be it said, have refused to sell their columns for the use of poison nostrum venders.

However, the health bulletin says further: "Alcohol is a subtle poison which usually in the long run, even if taken only moderately, does damage. The safest way with alcohol is never to touch it, any more than you would drink carbolic acid. Halfway measures with alcohol are dangerous. It is a cunning enemy and must not be allowed to enter the body in any disguise or on any pretense. It takes quick leaps from the stomach to the brain, and soon makes the poor victims too helpless and too weak in mind to fight it off."

What more inclusive and emphatic can be said against alcohol in any form, than is here said, not by a "temperance fanatic," but by the Board of Health of the metropolis of America?

—The Patriot of Australia

"One of the chief things that keeps babies from thriving is our old enemy alcohol."

And further: "While alcohol is not the only poison causing Bright's disease, it is a very noticeable one, and it is the only one taken into the body that can easily be avoided. Nobody who drinks liquor is compelled to do so. He begins because his neighbor drinks and he thinks he will show himself a good fellow by drinking along. Well, he goes all the way along to early Bright's disease and an early grave also. He is a good fellow to the end once he begins it."

The bulletin concludes with another stab at the alcoholic patent medicines, bitters, etc., appending the names of two dozen which the United States government has listed as not to be sold unless under a liquor license, and ends with the words: "You don't need alcohol for health, you don't need it for strength, you don't need it for food, you don't need it for drink; it never does you any good. Then why drink?"

And bear in mind that in the above excoriation, beer, the brewers' much lauded "liquid bread," the near-milk "temperance beverage," is by the New York City Board of Health included as one of the poison drinks. Why not abolish it?

COLORADO'S FIRST YEAR ON THE WATER WAGON

PROHIBITION AND PROSPERITY AMAZINGLY SYNONYMOUS

EDWIN L. SABIN, Denver, Colorado

"Well, what's the answer?" questioned Colorado of itself, toward the close of 1916 and its first year of the prohibition regime. The returns began to come in.

First, from the November election, to which had been tacked an invitation for the "ayes" and "noes" upon whether beer might not be manufactured within the state. The "noes" had it, two to one—and Denver City went dry for the first time in its history.

Then the reports from department headquarters arrived thick and fast, as the 1916 books were balanced and closed.

The bankers reported: Total deposits increased over 1915 by $93,000,000; savings deposits increased by $6,000,000; in the city of Denver alone 25,000 new savings accounts were opened.

The Tourist Bureau reported an increase of 100,000 tourists.

The automobile dealers reported double the sales of 1915.

Manufacturers reported business 25 per cent better. Retail merchants reported business 20 per cent to 25 per cent better and credits vastly improved.

The state penitentiary reported its patronage decreased almost 50 per cent — and one wing nearly vacant.

The postal savings bank division at Denver reported an increase in deposits of $115,000.

The Denver county jail reported it was half empty of inmates.

The Denver city jail reported that its number of applicants for free lodging had dropped from 874 to 109, a decrease of 87 per cent.

The municipal free lodging house reported that "business" had fallen off 40 per cent—but this was the only hotel with such a complaint.

The famed Sunshine mission and soup-house in the tenderloin district reported that instead of $50 a month support it required only $8, and might devote this to worthy charity.

Real estate interests reported a gain in residence building of 30 per cent, that 75 per cent of the rental properties had been occupied, and that collections were excellent.

The water company reported vacancies reduced by 1,600. The gas company reported 1,200 new gas ranges installed.

The Denver chief of police reported: Arrests for intoxication reduced from 3,219 to 1,549, a decrease of 55 per cent; for vagrancy, from 3,713 to 1,148, a decrease of 65 per cent; for disorder, from 1,069 to 668, a decrease of 38 per cent; for gambling, from 515 to 252, a decrease of 50 per cent; total arrests, from an average of 13,922 for the six years preceding, to a total of 9,985 for 1916.

The docket of the West Side criminal court reported a decrease in felony cases filed of 33 per cent; a decrease in crimes of violence, of 50 per cent.

The public schools reported that the children were apparently better nourished, on the average, and better clothed.

Churches reported an increase in attendance.

But loan sharks reported "business rotten."

Thus Colorado awakened from its nightmare, and to the specter of John Barleycorn said "Boo!" Morning had come and the worst was over.

For Colorado had been passing through all the throes that are foisted upon any community when it is called upon to cut liquor off its menu. By no means had the opposition been confined to the 1,600 saloons and twelve thriving breweries. Many of the first-rank business men in other industries had set their feet down flat against such a radical change in existing conditions.

—Philadelphia North American

Will Now Have to Take his Prohibition Straight

Empty store buildings, depreciation of property, removal of funds, displeasure of tourists—the storm of protests was about the same that has swept other states. But Colorado is peculiar to itself. It has the one large city, central: Denver. And Denver, free and joyous at an elevation of a mile, lives high. Its residents are gathered from all portions of the United States. Its hospitality is Southern as well as Western, and its people are rather fond of having a good time in their own way. It likewise is the rendezvous for a multitude of transients desiring a good time in their own way. To it flock the sight-seeing travelers, the health-seekers, and also the vagrants and the idlers one-time employed in the various camps outside or on the ranches of plains and hills.

The state around contains a multitude of smaller cities and towns, and numerous secluded nuclei of mining-camps and mill-camps and power-plants and ranches, employing a mixed population which includes Mexicans and foreigners.

Altogether, Colorado people are an independent people, and a hard-headed people, too.

At the election which would or would not give Colorado prohibition beginning with the year 1916, Denver city went decidedly wet, as customary. But the state didn't; and amidst dire forebodings Colorado hit the dry trail. Personal liberty uttered agonizing squeals, and a breadline was established for immediate relief of the liquor interests.

What now, after a year's trial trip on the water wagon? Why, Colorado seems to be the most pleased state you ever saw. It was so tickled with its Christmas stocking that it has acted rather extravagantly, in its delight.

Prosperity had come, along with Prohibition. and the two big P's struck it as amazingly synonymous. It would, of course, have had prosperity anyway. Considerable of it was due, regardless of social or moral humidity. Mines, crops and stocks, aggrandized in value by the war, made big business for it. The tourists themselves contributed some $80,000,000. What did prohibition do?

Prohibition won a tremendous victory over public opinion. Before ever the business books of the state could be balanced, the people had been convinced that Booze and Business were not necessarily synonymous. They were given their opportunity to register any change of heart when they were asked if they would not like to have beer, at least, manufactured again in the state. It was put as a simple business proposition: to retain a state industry and increase capital which would be distributed at home. Strong interests were back of this amendment. Not only was it knocked down and out by a fusillade of blows two to one, but Denver City flopped, at last, and joined the majority.

The gain in expressed dry sentiment was 20 per cent. A Denver banker has declared that after investigation through correspondence and conversation, he believes 75 per cent of the Colorado voters would support the prohibition of all alcoholic liquors if the whole question were again submitted.

A department store man from a large Eastern city, where the wet and dry topic was being agitated, came to Denver, last fall, for the purpose of getting the ins and outs at first hand. Of some dozen or fourteen business heads whom he especially sought out, he found not one but was thoroughly satisfied that, in spite of his previous convictions, or in line with his previous convictions, the tapering-off process was the best thing that had ever happened to Colorado. The Colorado press is virtually a unit on the subject. The

(Continued on Page Six)

Colorado's First Year on the Water Wagon

(Continued from Page Five)

Denver Labor Bulletin, official paper of organized labor in Colorado, speaking for labor declares that the working people in Colorado are at least 50 per cent better off; and that while the Bulletin has lost $50 a month in liquor advertising and some 350 bartender and brewery employe subscribers, it is doing four times the advertising business and has five times the number of subscribers, over 1915. And bills are paid much more promptly.

INCREASE IN SAVINGS AND NUMBER OF ACCOUNTS A HAPPY SIGN

So much for the general say-so. Let us get down to concrete examples. The increase in the savings accounts is significant. Checking accounts don't figure so importantly. They represent mainly the people who are accustomed to having money, liquor or no liquor. But with the savings accounts we have arrived at the dimes and the nickels—the one dollar added to the one dollar, the family hoards and the rainy day hoards, put aside painstakingly, and frequently by rigid economy. That most remarkable increase in the savings accounts, and particularly the increase in number, looked mighty good.

AUTOMOBILES SUCCEED BOOZE

I surveyed Denver. Lots of automobiles—but automobiles are not exactly a criterion, for many of the automobiles were expensive ones. What of the cheaper ones—what, say, of the popular little machine that need not be named? A sales increase in the state of 84 per cent over 1915; in the city, of over 200 per cent! What of another popular and medium priced little machine? An increase of over 100 per cent. How are collections, on the installment plan? Splendid.

I tackled the president of a large manufactory.

"What effect has prohibition had on your business? I don't mean the volume. That would be guess-work. I mean the direct effect, one way or another."

"Well," he said, "when the state was wet 10 per cent of the men on the payroll usually failed to report Monday morning, and another per cent was below par. Now these no longer cash their paychecks at the nearest saloon and take home only a bottle; they take their paychecks home—and they go home."

"I'LL NEVER VOTE WET AGAIN"

I tackled the manager of one of those down-town markets—the kind of a market frequented by women in shawls, with baskets on their arms, and soup-bone bargains in their minds; women who needs must fill large cavities with small means.

"I voted wet, the first time, along with the majority of other business men, hut I was mistaken. I voted dry on the beer amendment, and I'll never vote wet again," he said.

"Why?"

"Because we have more trade, the people are huying a better grade of goods, and I am collecting bills that had been outstanding for years."

"You lay this to prohibition?"

"I certainly do."

Almost an identical answer came from the manager of a large uptown department store.

Then what of the liquor interests themselves—the breweries and the bars? One brewery has gone into the manufacture of malted milk, and found it scarcely necessary to alter its regular apparatus. It took advantage of a deposit of potter's clay nearby and added to its output a line of first-class pottery—thus increasing the state's industries. Its pay-roll is larger than in the days of brewing. Other plants have reopened for cold and dry storage, for the manufacture of soft drinks, etc. Another has engaged in the dairy business. There is no whining from the breweries.

The tenderloin district of Denver is being invaded by railroad spurs and warehouses. Uptown bars have been turned into restaurants and cafes. It is astonishing what little bitterness remains—how reasonably liquor stepped out and the new conditions stepped in.

The physical side of prohibition is harder to get at. Physicians say that the public health is generally fine—and so is business! But now that gone are the rows of saloons, basement joints, and lettered doors, gone also are the threshold loafers, the curb-stone souses, the warm-stove bums, the free-lunch bums, and the painted faces. And, as stated by a member of a leading uptown club:

"YOU'LL FIND THEM ALL IN THE GYM"

"It used to be that after business hours the fellows would fool around the club bar, and drink their heads off while waiting for something to do. Now you'll find them all in the gym."

The physical side laps the moral side. On New Year's Eve Denver and Denver's guests gathered by the thousand on the capitol lawn, and the New Year was ushered in with prayer, carols, and a herald's trumpet. At other New Year's Eves some of these people would have been dancing on hotel tables.

WHAT COLORADO GLADLY LOST WYOMING UNWILLINGLY ACQUIRED

But prohibition in Colorado already is proving a further fact: it is proving that a dry state and a wet state cannot exist side by side. Not the dry state, but the wet state, must yield. To be sure, Cheyenne of Wyoming instantly became the liquor depot for Denver and way-stations, and therefore Wyoming apparently reaped a benefit; the mercantile business in liquors in and out of Cheyenne sprang to full height, on an amazing scale. But Wyoming promptly became the Gretna Green for Colorado roisterers, and worse. What Colorado gladly lost, Wyoming unwillingly acquired. It is experiencing all the come-back of the liquor trade. The report of the chief of police at Cheyenne relates that in 1916 the arrests for disorders directly pertaining to drink increased almost 100 per cent over 1915. Indications are that within a twelve-month Wyoming will be dry.

So at the last I sought out an old friend, who had grown to greatness with Colorado; a grand representative of the pioneer, temperate in his passions, and as firm as a rock.

"Old friend, what is your private opinion upon prohibition in Colorado? Do you favor it, or don't you?"

He looked me over with his shrewd, kindly eyes.

"I have no private opinion." That was to be expected, from him. "In the beginning I opposed it, here or anywhere. I agreed with the others. When I came to Colorado the state was only a mining-camp. We had plenty of liquor. We used whisky freely. We drank when we

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

—The Pioneer

MISS CANADA:—"Dear me! I must have a new one. And that big hole must be closed up."

Every province of Canada is dry with the exception of Quebec, and Quebec is three-fourths dry by local option

A STUDY IN LAW ENFORCEMENT BY COMMISSIONER FREDERICK O. BLUE OF WEST VIRGINIA

"The law prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors and the enforcement thereof makes for a great social reform," says Frederick O. Blue, state tax commissioner of West Virginia and ex-officio state commissioner of prohibition, in his new book, "When a State Goes Dry," published by the American Issue Publishing Company. "It is a reform double in its aspects in this, that it touches both moral and economic questions. The liquor question is one of the great problems the world of today must meet and solve. Experiences of our own country and of countries at war, particularly the latter, are forcing the question to the front and every land is feeling the pressure of the question, which, no longer being local, has largely passed from the districts and the counties. It knocks not only at the doors of states, as units, but also at the door of nations does it make its pressure felt as it presents itself for an answer."

The liquor people are wont to say that laws cannot make a person moral. Mr. Blue deals with this subject at some length. While not conceding the above proposition, Mr. Blue makes the counter statement that "Intoxicating liquor can be legislated out of people by entirely prohibiting the possession of intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes."

"Inebriety is a disease," he insists, "and a predisposition to the use of intoxicating liquors may be inherited. The man addicted to strong drink may become the slave to strong drink; and unless he arouses himself and strikes for freedom before it is too late, he may die the slave of the master, Drink. It is not contended that law will take away predisposition, nor that it will take away acquired thirst, nor that it will automatically change the habits of men. The law, however, may be the buffer between the man of inherited predisposition and his weakness: The law may be the bulwark between the man and his habit. And the law may enable the slave to escape before the master has bound him hand and foot. And above all, the law will save, or tend to save, the youths from the drink habit and from becoming victims of this monstrous evil.

"There is in our day a disposition on the part of some to set up a double standard respecting the enactment and enforcement of laws. In other words, this tendency manifests itself in a desire to have and observe such laws as suit one's personal notions and interests and to disregard and violate such laws as do not suit one's personal notions and interests. Such disposition on the part of citizens of standing and influence brings, or tends to bring, all laws into contempt. Violation of laws by the professional criminal does not bring the law into contempt. Laws have never been destroyed by the professional criminal! There is a growing class in this country that has no respect for laws which protect home, family and property. The conduct of the respectable citizen, even his passive conduct, that brings any one law into contempt, encourages the lawless class to bring all laws into contempt.

"Again: Keeping in mind that a dry state must build anew from the 'wreckage' left by the saloon, it is necessary that adequate provision be made to remove officials who will not enforce the law. In the very nature of things there will be officers of the law, parts of the 'wreckage,' who are not in sympathy with enforcement. On the contrary, they are opposed to enforcement. Sometimes such officers are creatures of the professional grafting politician, the politician who profits by non-enforcement. The decent, law-abiding citizen is more or less helpless, unless provision of law is made for the speedy removal of such objectionable officers. Besides, an adequate provision for removal in the hands of the law-respecting citizenship has a wholesome effect on the indifferent, if not worse, officers of the law.

"Legislation can be perfected only by amendments made from time to time—amendments based on experience. Human foresight does not grasp all requirements necessary to prevent abuse and possibly the defeat of the public policy desired."

"'Just so long as the people of a dry state take an interest in the prohibitory law of the dry state and its enforcement, such law can be enforced.' In substance these were the words of a high official of The Model License League to an executive official of a dry state," says Mr. Blue. "The official of The Model License League further observed that frequently the people of the dry state, after the enactment of a prohibitory law, cease to take a personal, active interest in the enforcement of the prohibitory law—that they turn their attention to other things, and that sooner or later the liquor forces come back into power." "There are two steps in every effort to make a state dry," says Mr. Blue, "education and agitation. First, the agitation (which, of course, embraces education in its usual sense) that leads to the enactment of such law. Many seem to think when the first step has been accomplished that the battle is over. What a mistake! When the first step is accomplished the battle is just well begun. Remember the wreckage left to society by the outlawed saloon; remember that class of politicians—not the statesmen—which the outlawed saloon created, and left to the state; remember that class of citizens, the screen of the bootlegger and the divekeeper!

"Moreover, the business does not propose that a dry state shall succeed as such if success can be prevented—for the reason that successful enforcement in a dry state tends to further agitation and eventually the making of the wet state into a dry state.

"Then there are the slaves of the master Drink in the dry state, as well as the sympathizers with the business, although the sympathizers may not be slaves to the master Drink—yet both classes will make more difficult the enforcement of the law in the dry territory. So the saloon seeks to operate for the profit to itself, and the slaves feel the drawing chains of the master, Drink.

"Analyze it any way you will," continued Mr. Blue, "there are two main propositions to the whole matter—the commercial factor as to the man who sells—who wants money for his liquors to satisfy his craving for money—and the man who buys—the man who wants liquors for his money to satisfy his craving for liquor.

"As hereinbefore stated, the driving out of the saloon does not immediately rid the state of this class of politicians. The brazen effrontery of the saloon through such politicians to control parties and dominate legislatures and municipalities has been one of the elements leading to the outlawry of the saloon by the outraged people of a state or a community.

"Let this be remembered: Ordinarily when a state, either by organic or statutory provision, declares its public policy as to any moral, economic or political question, such policy is accepted, respected and observed. Such is not true, however, respecting the state's prohibitory provisions, in regard to intoxicating liquors."

"Enforcement of a prohibitory law admits of no compromise," says Mr. Blue. "To compromise merely means to drive out one devil and presently find that seven have taken his place. The preceding sentence is not intended for application in a personal sense, but is a statement of a psychological truth.

"The best way to vindicate and establish a new law, if the law is for the best interests of society, is to enforce such law. The most certain way to repeal a bad law is to enforce such law. For, most certainly if the law is good for the people of a state, it will not be repealed—if enforced. On the other hand, if the law is not good for the people of a state, but bad, it most certainly will be repealed if enforced.

"A prohibitory law, like all other laws, should be enforced according to the spirit, rather than the letter of the law, always keeping in view the ultimate aim of the law—the prevention of the consumption of intoxicating liquors as beverages. On this question of the ultimate end of the law there can be no compromise."

Not On Account of the War

—Seattle Times

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, March 22, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

HELP THEM TO STEP OVER THE LINE

The good old days when a member of Congress could remain noncommittal on the liquor question are no more. The people at home now insist on knowing where the men who represent them in Congress stand on the prohibition issue.

In the closing days of the Sixty-Fourth Congress a Louisiana Congressman declared it to be his conviction that "the day is at hand when every member of this body must align himself with those who favor or oppose the passage of a prohibitory law" and expressed the belief that he who did not take a definite stand pro or con "would certainly find himself ill regarded by one side and in disfavor with the other." This same Congressman had just acted on his own advice—frankly admitted the error of his ways in having failed to work and vote for prohibition, declaring that from that time forth he intended uncompromisingly to support prohibition legislation.

The Louisiana Congressman is not at all conspicuous for his change of attitude. Very frequently we hear of former adherents of John Barleycorn hitting the prohibition trail. We doubt not there will be in the Sixty-Fifth Congress, which meets in special session on April 16, many men who echo the sentiments of the representative from Louisiana. All that is needed to induce them to cross the line is a little persuasion on the part of their constituents. The events of the past few weeks will make it very easy for them to be entreated. It is hoped and expected that a vote will be taken in both the House of Representatives and the Senate, at the special session, on the referendum to the states of a National Prohibition amendment. A little pressure by influential constituents upon Congressmen who are wavering will add to the number of the friends of our national amendment and positively insure its passage by the necessary two-thirds majority. If the suggestion appeals to you as being a wise one, act upon it without delay.

"BONE DRY" LEGISLATION

The latest state to enact a "bone dry" measure in conformity with the federal law recently passed by Congress is North Dakota. Similar laws are under consideration by Nebraska, Michigan and other states in which the legislature is sitting. The governor of Georgia has called a special session to deal with the matter in his state. The question is frequently asked whether or not it is necessary for states not having a "bone dry" law to enact one now that there is a federal statute. It is our understanding that to insure securing the full advantage of the federal law every prohibition state should have a law in harmony with the federal "bone dry" statute. Because of the provision made by the new federal measure for the delivery of intoxicating liquors for medicinal, mechanical, sacramental and scientific purposes, there will be opportunity for fraud and every state should make such restrictions as have been provided, for instance, in North Dakota, where no liquor for any purpose whatever can be secured without a permit from the district judge. In order to insure satisfactory enforcement of the federal law, separate state laws are desirable for the well-known reason that local and state authorities will not enforce a federal measure with the same zeal and enthusiasm they would enforce a state law. The machinery of the state is necessary to secure satisfactory results from the federal statute.

The enthusiasm with which the legislatures of the prohibition states are falling into line with the action of the federal government augurs well for the success of the "bone dry" movement.

JUST AMONG THEMSELVES

The prohibition worker finds the securing of anti-alcohol argumentative material very easy nowadays. The trade journals of the two branches of the liquor interests are keeping him well supplied. If he is in need of anti-beer arguments, he finds them in abundance in the periodicals published by the dealers in distilled liquors. If he is looking for arguments against whisky, they are to be found a-plenty in the brewery magazines.

Mida's Criterion, representing the distillers, irritated beyond endurance by the low per cent alcohol measures being introduced in state legislatures, utilizes its pages to lay bare the real character of that "harmless temperance drink"—beer—which the Criterion insists is just as capable of sending a man "on a jag" and rendering him brutal as are any of the drinks in which the distillers deal exclusively. At the same time the beer interests in reams of high voltage literature strenuously champion anti-whisky measures and enlighten the public as to the destructive effects of the alcoholic beverages containing more than ten per cent alcohol, in language remarkably similar to that employed by the advocates of prohibition.

The distillers do not hesitate to publish abroad an exposé of the unscrupulous methods of the brewers, and the brewers are not averse to returning the compliment.

The retailers, smarting under the unjust treatment accorded them by the brewers, threaten to rise and give their support to prohibition, pure and simple; and the wholesalers insist that the blame for all the evils charged against the alcohol trade should be laid at the door of the unprincipled retailers—the saloonkeepers, over whom, they explain, they have no control.

The reports of these controversies on the respective merits of the various alcoholic beverages and the methods of the dealers therein furnish instructive reading for the public, and cannot fail to lead the electorate of this nation to conclude that, call it by whatever name one may, a beverage that contains the poison alcohol is unfit for consumption by human beings and that the business of manufacturing and selling it should be forever abolished.

LIQUOR'S SUICIDAL POLICY

The liquor interests claim to be unable to understand the growing opposition to their business. They insist that if the public were taken into their confidence and could be made to see things as they are, that antagonism to them would disappear. It would interest us to see the experiment tried. We would like, for instance, to have the good citizens of a city like Chicago know how closely and intimately related are the liquor interests and the vice resorts. We would like to have a moving picture of gigantic proportions, revealing all the revolting details, put upon the screen to show how the brewery and distillery interests of the state are furnishing the liquid poison that is making possible the unspeakable ruination policy of the dance halls and the houses of ill fame. It might arouse the voters of the windy city to a realization that the only way to rid it of legalized vice is to put the liquor traffic, its patrons and supporters, out of business.

Only the other day Mrs. Joseph T. Bowen, head of the Juvenile Protective Association, brought to light certain facts which should make Chicago parents vote it dry within the year. She gave evidence that a majority of the dance halls are controlled by brewery, saloon and vice interests; that in over two hundred halls liquor is sold; and that under its influence girls lose all sense of decency, and become the prey of degenerate men; that in one hall a cash prize of $100 was offered to the girl who at the end of a month had to her credit the largest number of drinks as recognition of her ability to persuade men to spend money freely.

It has been said so many times and by so many social workers, as to make it a truism, that places of vice cannot exist without alcoholic liquors to stimulate the passions of men and to weaken the higher nature and resistance of the girl victims. If we are indeed a civilized nation that honors womankind and believes that the salvation of its prospective mothers is necessary to insure its future, is there any question of our duty? We have been sacrificing our boys on the altar of King Alcohol; shall we continue also to sacrifice our girls?

HOTELKEEPERS, TAKE NOTICE!

It has long been one of the stock arguments against prohibition that hotels could not be profitably conducted without a bar. In some of the campaign states hotelkeepers' associations were formed to work against prohibition. After a little more than one year's experience in a dry state, the New Washington Improvement Company of Seattle is about to build a new wing, doubling the capacity and gross earning power of the New Washington hotel, already one of the largest, if not the largest, hotel in the city. The company has floated a bond issue of $600,000 for this purpose. The manager of the hotel states that "Business at the New Washington for the last two years has far exceeded our facilities for handling it and during the heavy tourist travel of the summer we have been forced to turn away hundreds of guests." Thus is it proven that it is not in search of booze that tourists tour, and that a hotel does not need to resolve itself into a saloon in order to become a paying investment.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 15

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What evidence is given by Mida's Criterion, a leading liquor journal, that the big Chicago dailies are not interested in liquor advertising?
2. What new peril threatens the republic of China and what is being done by our Chinese temperance workers to prevent it?
3. Mention one of the publicity methods being used by the temperance forces of France to educate the people concerning the real character of alcohol.
4. Are the claims of the wine interests of this country concerning the harmlessness of low per cent alcoholic beverages substantiated by the statements of leading men of Italy, a wine-drinking country?
5. How does the latest action of Great Britain and Germany in restricting the beer output refute the "beer a liquid food" argument?
6. What official warning concerning pneumonia has just been issued by the New York Board of Health?
7. Name a certain photoplay exhibited in many large cities that is being advertised and commended by the liquor interests.
8. To what extent have Spokane (Wash.) building enterprises been injured by the prohibitory law?
9. Name the states and territory possessing full suffrage, and the five states having partial suffrage.
10. What field of labor is open to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union when national prohibition is secured in the United States?

HOW TO USE WHISKY FOR RHEUMATISM

"He is a good husband, your honor, but somebody told him that whisky would cure his rheumatism, so he filled himself up and came home and abused me," testified a victim of a drunken husband before Municipal Judge Swanson the other day in a Chicago court room.

"There is a way to use whisky for the cure of rheumatism," replied the wise judge. "That way is to purchase a gallon of the stuff and walk out to the end of the municipal pier, then drop the bottle into the lake and walk back home and imagine that you have taken the stuff. The results will be better."

CRIPPLED BY LIQUOR

Many an individual bears upon his body evidence of the wrong that strong drink may do to the innocent. The chairman of the temperance committee in the lower house of the Minnesota legislature, Representative George A. Sutherland, is said by the Minnesota press to be one of these. For more than twenty years he has been fighting the traffic in drink. Few members of the house knew it, but when Chairman Sutherland rose to bring in the prohibition bill from his committee, with a recommendation that "the bill do pass," he stood as a living object lesson of the wrong that strong liquor may do to the innocent.

When Mr. Sutherland was a child three years old, he fell one day, breaking his arm and dislocating his shoulder.

A physician was called to set the arm. "He was a good doctor when he was sober," said Mr. Sutherland, "but that day he was not sober. He set the arm but did not notice the dislocated shoulder. Some two weeks later when another doctor was called he found that the cartilage had grown together and it was too late to correct the dislocation."

PHILADELPHIA SALOONKEEPERS WARNED NOT TO SELL TO CHAUFFEURS

Philadelphia saloonkeepers at the recent sitting of the license court were warned by Judges Martin and Finletter not to sell liquor to chauffeurs. If they do so they run the risk of losing their licenses. There will be no new saloons in Philadelphia this year, the court having refused to add to the number of licenses now in force in the city.

SUNDAY CLOSING OF SALOONS IN CHICAGO NAMED AS AID IN TUBERCULOSIS DECREASE

Chicago is showing a decrease in the number of cases of tuberculosis in the city. In discussing the matter Dr. John Dill Robertson, health commissioner, credited this decrease to the purification of the city's milk supply and the closing of the saloons on Sunday.

IT WAS GOOD VINEGAR

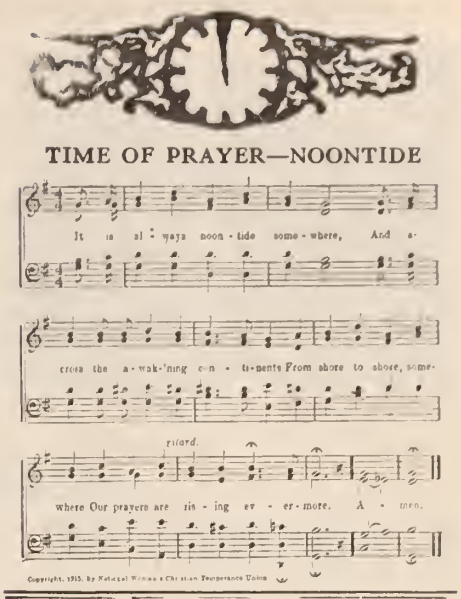
While we do not approve of the ethics of a vinegar agent who recently visited a prohibition community in Kentucky, the following story, told by the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, is significant: Not long since there appeared at Remsen a drummer supposed to be taking orders for excellent Bourbon which would be shipped to the purchaser at $3 a gallon, cash to accompany the order. At least the man carried with him a sample of whisky which to the thirsty Kentucky colonels was most satisfying and he took many orders and much cash, each time tipping a sly wink and saying that the vinegar he was selling would be sent by express and would be found as good vinegar as made anywhere. When the day of delivery arrived the goods proved to be, as the stranger had represented, "as good vinegar as made anywhere," to the sore disappointment of the purchasers.

HAWAIIAN RACE WILL BECOME EXTINCT IF LIQUOR IS NOT PROHIBITED

"Nineteen sixteen was a satisfactory one for King Alcohol in Hawaii," says the Daily Commercial Advertiser of Honolulu. "Friends and patrons of his saloons to the number of 1,307 were booked at the police station in Honolulu, and almost an equal number appeared for various drunken misdemeanors and crimes in the magistrates' courts of the other islands. 'Under sentence of death.' This applies to the native Hawaiian. He is the principal victim. The race is doomed. Nine hundred and forty-two deaths occurred among them last year according to government statistics, with the birth rate unusually low. It really means one death per day and with only 23,000 left out of an original population of 200,000, it is quite evident that the native Hawaiian will soon become an extinct race with booze and disease as the chief destroyers.

"Public sentiment in the Islands is rapidly crystallizing in favor of the elimination of the business that is doing more to create divorces, provoke misery and poverty, fill the jails, keep the hangman busy, crowd the graveyards and bring misery, want and tribulation to the people than all other causes combined.

"Congress appears to be on the eve of enacting for Hawaii a Federal Prohibition Law, behind which will be the force of the United States government, uninfluenced by considerations of local politics. King Alcohol and his satellites see the handwriting on the wall. Prohibition before January 1, 1918, is one of the probabilities."



THY KINGDOM COME

REV. RAYMOND H. HUSE, CONCORD, N. H.

"Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven."

If we would have the kingdom of Christ in the world we must enthrone Him there!

And we enthrone Him not by a dazzling coronation service, not by saying "Lord, Lord," but by doing His will.

Jesus was not an iconoclast. He didn't come to smash the institutions of His time. He was at bigger business. He did not come to chop down poison trees —that would spring up again like willows—He came to kill their roots.

Jesus was not a temperance reformer. He didn't say a word on the subject, but He taught us to pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as it is in heaven," and there isn't a man who has his eyes open to what the legalized drink traffic is doing in the world today who doubts for a moment that if the will of God were done it would be abolished before tomorrow morning! It belongs in the sewage of the universe.

The Bible, we have learned by this time, is not a text-book of specific instructions and prohibitions; it is a revelation of life principles. You can say if you want to that Paul told Timothy to use wine, as an argument against prohibition—just as those old ante-bellum saints used to point to "Cursed be Ham" as scriptural warrant for slavery. But the same apostle said, "If eating meat makes my brother stumble I'll eat no meat while the world stands nor anything whereby my brother is caused to stumble or is made weak," and with that eternal life-principle as a guide, if Paul stood for fifteen minutes on Saturday night outside of the saloon and saw the wreckage drift out to sea, there is absolutely no doubt as to what his attitude would be in this day and generation!

And I do not think that any of us could consider for a moment Jesus present as a patron, in a modern saloon, without feeling it to be the height of blasphemy. In fact, I don't believe there is a saloonkeeper who would dare hang Hoffman's Christ on his walls or in his windows. It would interfere with his business.

And since "slowly the Bible of the race is writ" and as Moses suffered some things because of the hardness of people's hearts, it may be Jesus found many things that He would say but they could not bear them then, but he gave life-principles and wrote them on human history with His own blood and in the light of these principles and in the light of what we know today about the impoverishing, degrading, enslaving, demoralizing, debauching saloon, I do not think we need hesitate a moment as to what Jesus would do or what Jesus would have us do today.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes
May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

MARCH THE PROHIBITION RALLY MONTH

MARGARET C. MUNNS, National W. C. T. U. Treasurer

March has been set aside as prohibition rally month, when the claims of the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund are to be especially considered.

No more fitting month could be found than this, the natal month of the two splendid advocates of prohibition, both from the rock-ribbed, prohibition-enthroned state of Maine, Neal Dow and Lillian M. N. Stevens. The former is called the Father of the Maine prohibition law and the latter might well be called the preserver of the same law. It was on the eve of election day when Maine once again reaffirmed her allegiance to the principle of prohibition, after a terrific campaign on the part of the liquor traffic to overthrow it, that Mrs. Stevens, in the city of Portland, issued her famous proclamation for nation-wide prohibition. Mrs. Stevens saw clearly that if Maine, with fifty years of prohibition history, must needs take up the cudgel of the ballot to defend her law, the time had come to begin the big drive to free the entire land from the liquor traffic in order to protect the states that had already outlawed the business. No other final solution was ever considered by the Woman's Christian Temperance Union and when the hour struck for the forward march, the women were ready to follow the leader.

Captain Richmond Pearson Hobson dared the ridicule of fellow Congressmen, the sneer of the liquor-controlled press, the questionings of many of the advocates of prohibition, when he introduced in Congress the resolution submitting the question of National Constitutional Prohibition to the legislatures of the several states. He has often declared that Mrs. Stevens was like a rock of strength and he gloried to be her knight going forth to the conflict against the greatest foe of the home.

In the six years that have followed greater progress has been made than seemed possible and "a saloonless nation in 1920" looms up as a possibility, not alone seen by the eyes of the ardent reformer but by the men who have commercialized the vices of society.

Funds to push the battle to the gates are needed and we have the promise that our needs shall be supplied. Faith takes hold on the promise and launches great plans, the maturing of which depends upon the response to the plea.

The finance committee proposed at the last National W. C. T. U. convention that each union in the United States be asked to send at least one dollar for the Lillian Stevens Campaign fund. This report was adopted and doubtless every union will gladly give this small amount to the National W. C. T. U. to help in the state and National compaigns. Those who live in prohibition territory will be glad to give a thank offering, while the less fortunate unions will want to hasten the day of their emancipation.

Individuals are at liberty to increase the amount, and for each dollar or more so contributed and sent to the state treasurer a subscription to the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL, to be sent the donor, is forwarded to the National W. C. T. U., and the remainder is divided between the state and National organizations, as is the campaign fund given by the local unions.

Many states pledged to the Lillian Stevens Campaign Fund at the Indianapolis convention, and this is the month the pledges should be made good. If all local unions who wish to assist the plans for prohibition victories in this practical way will send their contributions through the state treasurer, they will receive credit in their state treasurer's report as well as in the National report.

This is likewise true of the Frances E. Willard Memorial fund. Many remittances to both these funds are made directly to the National treasurer which deprives the state treasurer of reporting them.

Never was opportunity so within the grasp of the home protection forces as now. Rally to the call! Let the financial support be as generous as has been the magnificent response to every call made upon the local unions. The victory will be sweeter, the hurrahs louder, and more sincere, if the contribution has meant sacrifice.

Why not make this year a record contribution to the memory of a great woman!

PROHIBITION MAP

25 White States
Size 19x25 inches
Revised to March 1, 1917
Price, 15 cents; two for 25 cents.

Prohibition Map Leaflet

Size 6x9 inches

Map on one side and list of prohibition states, with date of enactment of the prohibitory law, on the reverse side.
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

POSTER PRIZE OFFER

For the best Prohibition posters suitable for educational or campaign use, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union offers the following prizes: For the best poster submitted, $15; for the second best, $10; and for the next five, in order of excellence, $2 each.

Rules for Competition

1. Illustration may form part of the poster, but is not essential.
2. Striking sentences or words are preferable to crowded lines.
3. Posters may be in two sizes: 19x25 inches or 28x42 inches. Copy need not be presented in actual size of poster.
4. In submitting copy for competition, place your name in a sealed envelope and pin to the copy.
5. All copy submitted will become the property of the National W. C. T. U.
6. The Committee on Publications of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, with two others to be chosen by the General Officers, will comprise the committee on awards.
7. All copy should be addressed to the National W. C. T. U. Poster Competition, Evanston, Ill., and must be received not later than April 15, 1917.

We record here the name of a comrade and friend who has recently passed to the higher life:

MISS SUSAN STURGES, Mansfield, Ohio, well known in philanthropic circles and for her interest in missionary, temperance, suffrage, purity and other reforms, state, national and international. The Ohio W. C. T. U. receives an annual income of several hundred dollars from a trust gift made by Miss Sturges some years ago. The Frances E. Willard union of her home city receives by her will $1,000 in trust for the promotion of certain specified lines of work. Miss Sturges has been most generous in her gifts to many W. C. T. U. and other worthy enterprises for social uplift. She gave not only of her means but of herself, regularly visiting the jails and speaking in the public schools. Just before her summons to the other land she had spoken briefly in sixteen schools in one day. In Miss Sturges' memory, at the hour of the funeral five minutes of silence was observed in the schools of her home city.

PREPARE! PREPARE! PREPARE!

SUGGESTIONS FOR PRELIMINARY CAMPAIGN WORK

MARGARET B. PLATT

Doubtless most battles that are lost in the field of moral reform are lost by reason of unpreparedness. In physical warfare the master of strategy outlines in advance his plan of campaign. With scientific accuracy every movement and its prospective results are balanced, and provision is made with consummate skill for every possible contingency. Nothing is left to chance and nothing is too trivial to be noted, for well the leader knows that success may depend upon an apparently unimportant detail. Is it not equally worth while that those who struggle for a great advance in the moral, social and economic world should study strategy and give grave consideration to questions of preparation?

The forty years' warfare of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union against the drink evil has been essentially a conflict of high ideals with those which are of lower concept, but unfortunately ingrained in human nature by ages of habit and custom. Such a conflict must of necessity be first waged in the realm of thought. As the public mind gives assent to the new propaganda its principles find expression through legislation and finally, wrought into actual experience, the tangible demonstration of its value paves the way toward its universal acceptance.

Great captains of industry and masters of statecraft pursue practically the same tactics. The campaign is mapped out in detail and in every fight for the mastery this rule holds: "The thing your opponent does not want you to do, that do!" Surely they who strive for moral and spiritual uplift should do not less.

Under the blessing of God the work already done by reform forces has brought rich results. The precious seed of truth long sown rejoices our hearts today with abundant harvest. But there is work yet to be done, seed yet to be sown, a harvest yet to garner. And to allow a single field now glorious with the harvest to go back to tares would be disastrous. To fail in adding yet field to field would be calamitous. If the husbandmen sleep, the enemy sows tares. If the warrior fails to guard well his outposts the enemy comes in like a flood. "Eternal vigilance is the price of safety," and of ultimate success.

Our hearts bound and our pulses thrill as we think of the victories which have leaped radiant with glory out of the gloom of years of seeming defeat and hopeless struggle. The days brim with the joy of conquest but are crowded, too, with possibilities vast and meaningful.

A whole great nation dedicated to sobriety and lifting high a white standard of purity—is not the mere thought a bugle call to continued service? Ah, there is yet so much to do! Other states are this year struggling for a place in the prohibition column. Our opponents are desperate and will use every device to defeat us. We can expect no quarter from our ancient enemy and we shall give none. It is unthinkable now that defeat should come to our forces, but "Let him that thinketh he standeth take heed lest he fall." Careful, painstaking, far-seeing preparation is absolutely necessary. Nothing less will win.

Truth reaches the mind through eye-gate as well as ear-gate. There are multitudes who must be converted from the old idea that alcoholic liquors are in any way necessary or the liquor traffic in any way desirable. Their support must be won and experience proves that by the use of proper means in a majority of cases it can be won. Usually these will not go to hear the spoken word but they will read the short, crisp message put in attractive form and placed in their hands. Here is an opportunity for seed-sowing that no wise leader will minimize or neglect. Our opponents have expended barrels of dollars in postage in order that their fabrications might, by means of Uncle Sam's trusty employes, be placed directly in the homes of the people. Similar methods are open to us but with the superior advantage that our blessed cause can muster workers who for the joy of service will carry the message of truth and soberness from house to house. Lacking the barrels of money, the latter plan is mostly used and fortunately presents opportunity also for tactful conversation with the home-keepers, thus doubling the possibility of good results. Early in the campaign the entire field should be districted; counties, cities, towns and precincts definitely assigned to competent captains who shall see that at certain intervals certain literature is placed in every home.

Once upon a time a dry victory was attributed in great measure to the fact that on the morning of election day a very striking and pertinent message to the voter was found within, or near the door of each home in that town. But we must remember that this was only made possible by organized systematic effort and was the culmination of a long season of diligent seed-sowing. The method and the result can be indefinitely duplicated.

The W. C. T. U. is capable of arming its forces with ammunition suited to every need. An abundance of carefully prepared material obtained from the field of science, the medical world, the realm of business, expert testimony wrought from experience and observation, coupled with homily, exhortation, appeal, humor, history, illustration, song and story, is all at hand for your choosing. Prepare now. Outline the plan for aggressive action. Be first in the field. Pre-empt the mind of the voter with the dispassionate appeal to reason and sound judgment, leaving time in which to do follow-up work. Arm every worker with the best product of brain and pen and press. Printer's ink is capable of doing deadly execution. It is written, "As a man thinketh in his heart so is he." A modern rendition gives, "As a man readeth in the printed page so thinketh he in his heart." It is not too early to sow the seed for the fall harvest. Hearts may be open now to the reception of truth that later may be closed if we fail to occupy. A word to the wise white ribboner should be sufficient and that word is PREPARE! Write it in capitals and read it every day; and with all thy getting of campaign ammunition forget not the getting of thine own best campaign document, THE UNION SIGNAL.

NEW USES FOR OLD BREWERY AND SALOON BUILDINGS

Prohibition is making such rapid strides in the United States that the brewers and distillers are constantly facing the problem of what to do with their plants after they are compelled to cease the manufacture of intoxicating liquors. Their ingenuity seems quite equal to the task, however, for the list of successful enterprises that are being conducted in these plants is surprising in its length and diversity. The most radical change is the brewery at Flint, Michigan, which was transformed into a church. A Methodist congregation in search of a church home bought the brewery and remodeled it to meet their needs. A Chicago brewery has likewise had a remarkable conversion. The Illinois conference of the Lutheran church bought the plant, at a cost of $100,000, it is reported, for hospital purposes.

Breweries lend themselves readily with little change to the manufacture of ice and for cold storage purposes. Packing plants and creameries and ice cream factories frequently succeed breweries. A former brewery in Aberdeen, Wash., is now canning clams. One in Spokane is manufacturing vinegar. In Olympia the brewery plant is being used in the dairy products business, while in Bellingham the farmers got together and bought the brewery to use for a co-operative creamery. A former brewery in Seattle, the largest in the state, is being remodeled for the manufacture of a fine grade of table syrup from cracked rice, and denatured alcohol will be produced as a by-product. Mention has several times been made of the Coors' brewery of Golden, Colo. which is successfully manufacturing malted milk in a portion of the plant, the remainder being used in the production from Colorado clay of a fine porcelain. It is impossible to give in detail the entire list of transformations, but the products being turned out in former breweries include in addition to the articles already mentioned, yeast, dry cells, soap, chemicals, moving picture films, paint, varnish and loganberry juice, the temperance drink of Oregon.

Saloons are more easily remodeled for other uses than are breweries and distilleries, and because of their cold storage and ice box facilities are particularly adaptable to grocery and market purposes. Restaurants, soft drink parlors and confectionery shops are numerous in former saloon buildings. A Richmond (Va.) saloonkeeper is conducting a successful delicatessen business at his old location.

A parallel to the brewery that became a church is the saloon at Lynn, Mass., which has become a Bible house.

One of the most successful saloons in Portland, Ore., is now Fritz' Great Workingmen's Resort, where everything that a workingman needs is found under one roof. In addition to a lodging house and restaurant, there is a barber shop, lunch counter, employment office, barroom where soft drinks are served, and moving picture shows, admission to which are free to the men. Seattle's most popular saloon has become a tea room for ladies, and its patrons are said to be more numerous than formerly. A Spokane saloonkeeper is conducting a bank in the building where he formerly ran a saloon. In the old days he cashed great numbers of checks, including for each accommodation a ten-cent beer or whisky check as a part of the amount. When it became necessary to close his saloon he continued the establishment as a bank.

A high grade shoe shop is located in a notorious Denver saloon, and the buying of shoes instead of booze is a change which has resulted in nothing but good to Denver and its citizens.

THE FINAL APPEAL

KENNETH W. J. EMERSON

The Story of the Awakening of a Drink-Benumbed Soul

It is a sick-room. The sun, struggling through a yellow window-shade, sheds a subdued and sleep-invoking light upon the poor furniture within. The faded plush rocker, the knobless walnut bureau and the tarnished gold bedstead, with its threadbare blankets and moth-eaten pillow—all of these speak sadly of a time long gone when they had cost much—they, that are now too poor to be sold.

Upon the pillow moves restlessly a head, which fascinates by the pity it awakens. It is not that of an elder, whose tale is told, nor yet of a child, stopped at the beginning. It is the head of a strong man enslaved—of a conqueror in chains.

The chin shows strength and weakness—it is prominent, but trembles. The broad brow is tense and hotly flushed; the generous lips quiver; the deep brown eyes are overbright and filled with an infinite yearning for—something. It is the lack of this something that harries the man like cruel spurs used on a thoroughbred and makes his whole expression a whimper.

A doctor enters and begins to bandage the broken leg. Deftly he works, talking the while to detract attention from the pain. Finally he straightens up.

"Anything else I can do to make you comfortable till the nurse gets back?" he inquires.

The man fawns gracelessly.

"Yes, my dear good friend; pour me a glass from the drawer there. This pain in my leg—I can't stand it."

The doctor laughs.

"You'll have to, I guess," he says shortly. "That's something I never prescribe."

"I don't want much—just a little. That much. See!"

He holds his thumb and fore-finger two inches apart, watching the doctor—an inch, a half-inch, a quarter.

"Just that much?" he pleads.

"No, indeed; not a drop."

"Please! Please! You don't know how I suffer."

"Do you want me to explain that suffering?"

"No! Get out with your explanations!"

"All right!" good-naturedly. "But I will tell you this much."

The man on the bed thrusts his fingers into his ears and turns his face away as best he can, but the doctor persistently shouts:

"Alcohol is a slave-driver with whip let loose in the human system. Apparently the slaves, the various organs, spurred on by the influence of liquor, are doing their honest part but they are deceiving their owner, who, in reality, is tobogganing to bankruptcy. That's all, and it's enough, if you want to understand."

The man turns. He has thought of an argument.

"Won't you give me some now, and I'll change my habit when I'm strong enough?"

"Certainly not! If you can't now, you can't ever. You won't die, I'll guarantee, and you'll get well quicker." Then he adds: "It's nothing to me, except in a professional way, but while I'm your boss you'll live my way; and if you want to get back your splendid physique, you must make a stand now."

The man is sullenly silent, though his look is full of hatred. When the doctor's step has vanished he grasps the cane that he is wont to thump with when in need, until his knuckles whiten with the grip, and pushes his bed a foot or so from the wall. Reaching out on the side opposite the bureau, and using his cane as a propeller, he makes laborious progress toward the object of his desires. He stops frequently to rest, so great is the strain upon him, but the bureau looms nearer and nearer until he can touch it with his hands. He leans over to open the drawer, but the weight comes on the broken leg this time and the strain is too great; he falls back at once in a faint.

There are footsteps in the hall again. Is the doctor returning? No, for the caller, whoever it is, knocks gently at the door. When there is no answer, he enters, a venerable white-haired man. At the sight of the misplaced bed he is puzzled, but starts to withdraw. Then, as with a sudden thought, he returns and studies the face closely.

"That doesn't look just like sleep," he mutters.

INDIA REJOICES IN THE POSSIBILITY OF ENGLAND'S PROHIBITION OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

WHISKY: "Alas! They are going to drive me out from my hearth and home, Mr. Punch!"

MR. HINDI PUNCH: "Farewell! That is one of the blessings of the war—which I would wish for my Indian's hearth and home as well."

—From Hindi Punch (Bombay)

He dips his handkerchief in the pitcher of water which is on the wash-stand and applies it to the brow of the fainting man. Tenderly he works, and anxiously, turning the sufferer again squarely upon his back and loosening his neck-band.

The invalid soon recovers, with a start, and looks around wildly.

"Thank God," breathes the old man; and then, "How did you get over here?" he asks. "And is the pain as bad as all that yet?"

"Hello, Parson! Yes, it is, but you can relieve it if you want to. Are you a Christian?"

"With God's help, yes!"

"Then you'd be willing to do anything to stop my suffering?"

"Anything I can, poor man. What is it?"

"Pour me a glass of whisky from the bottom drawer there!" As a war-horse scenting the battle, he lifts his quivering nostrils in the air.

"No!" the minister thunders. "Never! So that's where the pain lies, eh? So that's what you were after? Well, I guess I'll just put you back where you belong." He starts to place the bed in its accustomed position.

"You promised! You can't go back on your word—and you shan't put me back!"

He seizes his cane and attempts to cudgel the white head, but the stick is torn from his grasp and carried to the closet, where it is securely locked up. The clergyman returns with compressed lips and goes on with the moving, while the invalid tears at his grasp with frantic fingers.

"Perhaps I did promise," says the old man, "but of the two evils I shall choose the lesser. I advise you to do the same."

"I have!"

The clergyman is aghast. "Then what, pray, is the greater evil?"

"Between sorrow and forgetfulness. I have chosen forgetfulness, and you are taking chances, sir, when you meddle with my affairs."

"It is true that it is hard to drink from sorrow's cup, but when it is withheld through cowardice, life becomes embittered—"

"Oh, keep still. I don't want any of your salvation stuff."

"An unselfish sorrow, bravely endured, would have enriched your life, but your sorrow, which thinks only of forgetting—forgetting—is making you as shallow as—"

"Save that rot for your next tea-fight! The ladies you were hired to amuse would be interested."

The words might have remained unuttered so little response do they awaken.

"No one who knew your dear wife, and loved her truly, could desecrate her memory as you have done in her name—"

"Will you get out, or shall I shut you up?"

He unscrews the heavy brass knob that decorates his bedpost—its fellow has long since been lost and never replaced—and holds it ready. No notice is taken of his action.

"I will go so far as to say that the sweet memory of her best self has left you, along with that of her death; that you no longer truly miss her, though it is but two years since she went away, and that your utmost thought is to escape the pain that your cowardice has brought upon you!"

With a snarl of rage, the knob is thrown. Hurtling, with a hollow whistle through the air, it barely escapes the wrinkled temple and crash s full into the thrower's favorite picture of his wife, shivering the glass to atoms and punching a ragged hole in the photograph itself. The good man turns calmly and surveys the wreck.

"That's what you have done, as I said," he observes. "You have destroyed, in your madness, the image that might have made life sweet and useful."

The excited man almost froths at the mouth. He is in a frenzy of fear at what he has done—at his terrible, unknown self—and in his blurred state of mind, his passion finds outlet in the fulmination of terrible oaths at the preacher who has fearlessly told him the truth.

At this the minister walks over to the window and, thrusting aside the shade, peers out. His lips move; he is praying softly.

There is a fever of curses behind him—reckless, determined blasphemy that grows upon itself like a filthy snowball on a grade, increasing at every bound.

At length the good man turns. His face is full of holy compassion. He fills a cup with water from the glass pitcher on the bureau and places it upon the table.

"May God, in his infinite mercy, forgive you! If you are thirsty, drink that." He is gone.

It was an indiscretion. The man's sole thought is to make some connection between the liquor in that lower drawer and himself. He falls to studying the cup before him much as a professional

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

INTOLERANCE: WHEN A VIRTUE?

ANNA E. SATTERLEE

Do you tolerate a mad dog,
Running, frothing through your streets?
Do you let it menace children—
Other people, whom it meets?

Would you give an untamed lion
Liberty to enter homes,
Mangle furnishings and inmates,
Devastate where'er it roams?

Could you let a deadly serpent
Crawl into your nursery,
Coil itself about your wee ones;
Give it there its liberty—

Liberty to sink its venom
Deep within your infants' veins;
Liberty to sting at random,
Making naught of crimson stains?

Do you sanction lawless bandits,
Freedom give to murderers,
Trust your lovely, growing daughters
With the white-slave traffickers?

"Foolish questions," do you answer?
Won't you think a moment, please?
Does your ballot help to license
That which harms far more than these?

Is intolerance an error
When it strives to put away
Alcoholic liquor traffic,
Menacing a world, today?

Is that liberty a virtue
Which endangers young and old,
Casts around them fearful pitfalls,
Strangles millions with its hold,

Feeds on agony of mothers,
Clutches at the children's bread,
Steals the manhood of our brothers,
Gives eternal woe, instead?

Are we free to build a city
With the blood of innocents?

Are we justified in risking
Human lives for paltry rents?

Do you dare to say the Master
Was intolerant in deed
When he purged the olden temple
Of the money-changers' greed—

Overturning seats and tables,
Driving out with whip of cords
Those He knew were desecrators
Of the things that were the Lord's?

Call not, then, our grand reformers
Confiscators—meddlesome;
They would help their needy brothers
In attempts to overcome:

Make of Earth a safer dwelling,
Turn men's hearts from greed to good.
Is not this God's liberty
When rightly understood?

THE FINAL APPEAL

(Continued from Page Twelve)

inventor studies a new material—much as he has studied everything else within reach; muttering the while, cooling down like a volcano after an eruption.

It is a collapsible metal ring cup, such as is used by travelers and doctors, with a handle which flips into the center when closed.

Some minutes of study, and he has solved the problem—at least, there is a chance, he thinks. He begins to tear narrow strips from the blanket and to piece them together. He connects three lengths, completing a rope some five yards long. He wrenches the handle from the drinking cup. It forms a sort of hook, turned in at both ends. He fastens it by the smaller crook to one end of his blanket-rope.

The bureau faces him at a distance of about ten feet. The key is in the lock of the drawer in question. He casts his hook, in an endeavor to get some hold upon the key, but the hook rebounds at every lucky cast and there is small chance of any improvement. He then throws it upon the floor, underneath the key, and flirting the rope in wavelets finally gets it over the key. He draws up the hook in an agony of suspense and breathes a sigh of relief when it holds against the round, rising nub of the handle. He tightens the rope slowly; it is firm. He pulls.

The drawer is an easy one to open—it is used often—but it does not yield; it is locked.

He hears someone coming down the hall, so he hauls in his paraphernalia and conceals it among the bedclothes, feigning idleness.

"Hello, Henry, old pal! For pity's sake give me a drink, will you? That drawer there."

The friend starts to comply. "Is it all right?" he asks. "Did the doctor say yes?"

"Sure. Hurry up!"

The "old pal" turns to the foot of the bed and studies the other severely. At last he says with a gulp:

"Bob, you lie! I never thought it of you. And, Bob, I believe you'd as soon be rip-roaring drunk as not—all the time."

"Oh, well, what's the difference?"

"Yes, to be sure, what's the difference? What's the difference between your little home Anna fixed up for you and this joint? What's the difference between a man whose word is as good as gold and a liar? What's the difference between being a father a little girl can be proud of and one she dreads to see coming—at least in public?"

The man hangs his head.

"What's the difference between being a lion at the club and—and a cur, Bob? What's the difference between thirty-six tons of paper and sixty-three?"

"Did I make that mistake, Hen?"

"You did, and many others. I had a quarrel with the boss, a serious thing, to keep you on."

"Thank you, Hen! I'm sorry. You don't know how I've tried, but I've failed, and that's all there is to it; so give me a drop, boy!"

"I don't doubt you've tried, but you haven't wanted to keep straight badly enough, or you wouldn't have failed. If things go on like this, in time you won't be my old pal at all, for your vices will have swallowed you up."

The man on the bed looks about nervously. He is plainly uneasy and wishes to be left alone. The attitude is sensed by his friend, who says immediately:

"Is there anything else I can do, Bob?"

"No," curtly.

"Well," with hesitation, "good-by, then!"

When his caller has gone the man resumes his work. He renews his cast. Cast! Draw! Cast! Draw! Cast! Draw! He will never give up; it is his only chance and he must succeed. A little higher next time! Higher yet! To the right a bit! Turn the hook; so! Bounce it from the dresser, down! Bounce it from the floor, up! Try it whirling! Try it steady! Cast! Draw! Cast! Draw! Cast! Draw!

Fifteen minutes go by, though the fact is not noted; a half-hour, an hour.

"Not much of a chance," he mutters, "about one in ten thousand. But I must do it ten thousand times to get that one chance." Cast! Draw! Cast! Draw!

It has caught, and caught right. The hook is through the hole in the key-handle. Holding the rope in both hands, he winds it to the left. Its softness vanishes; it becomes rigid. It is a machine in his hands—a stiff rod—turning to the left. The key gives way, turning before it, and the drawer is unlocked. Now he pulls again and it slides out gently to the floor, bottle and goblet clinking. Over the rug it jumps, as in feverish haste he yanks it in.

Now he has his hands upon the bottle, the beloved bottle, and there within it is the magic fluid, not as much as he thought, but enough—oh, plenty—to calm that vibrant body, and still those fiendish clamorings for the time being. He pours it all out, to the last drop, a large gobletful, and lays the bottle aside. A soft step, and his daughter is there, a sad little child of eleven. The man starts guiltily. It is a shock. He has always maintained a pretense of dignity before her. Though she has seen him drunk, she has never seen him taking liquor. He tries to put the glass behind him, like a thief with stolen goods; but she has seen and he knows it, so he brings it out again, and is about to drink, when he is interrupted by a shrill appeal:

"Father!"

That one word freezes the soul within him. Somehow it sinks through the stony panoply that has so deftly parried all other appeals, and makes him wince, frenzied as he is. She buries her small face in the folds of the bed covering and pours out her sorrow with the unrestrained sobbing of a child.

Somewhere in the man's body there is a stir of new life—very faint, but very sweet. It is the spirit of manhood, long lain dormant under sin, unseen, but always present. It rises in its might. The mind behind the brown eyes has been clouded, but not destroyed. There is a rift in the clouds for an instant and the man sees the life of shame meted out to this, his only child—oh, the ghastly pity of it; sees the wasteful folly of a booze-soaked existence; sees again the brave, sweet face of his departed wife; sees everything once more in a sane light. But the quivering clay murmurs of insurrection. Can he quell it? He looks at the liquor, sparkling in the goblet.

The sobbing has ceased now, and the room is still, tensely still, as the two primal forces—good and evil—contend for the mastery. It is a battle royal, but the monstrous jaw is set with final decision. The goblet is hurled like a lightning-bolt through the curtain and to the sidewalk below, spattering its contents with a crash.

The man stiffens to his suffering. "My God! My God!" he cries. "It is for her! Grant, oh, grant me strength."

FOR SALE AT A BARGAIN. STEREOPTICON OUTFIT, with more than 100 slides, including two temperance lectures and six illustrated songs. For particulars address H. W. Davis, Providence, Ky.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS' WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

YOUNG CAMPAIGNERS FOR PROHIBITION

Let the children help
in winning
NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

by forming a society of
YOUNG CAMPAIGNERS FOR PROHIBITION
in your Loyal Temperance Legion or your Sunday School class.

SUPPLIES

PENNANTS. Eighteen inches long; red, white, or blue felt. Ten cents each (8 cents if 25 are ordered); per 100, $7.00.

HATS. Blue felt, with letters Y. C. P. in white. Ten cents each (9 cents if 25 are ordered); per 100, $8.00.

BUTTONS. Red or blue, with letters Y. C. P. Three cents each; per 25, 50 cents; per 100, $1.50; per 500, $5.00; per 1,000, $9.00.

1 pennant,	1 hat,	1 button,	$ .20
25 pennants,	25 hats,	25 buttons,	4.00
100 pennants,	100 hats,	100 buttons,	15.00
1,000 pennants,	1,000 hats,	1,000 buttons,	130.00

LEAFLETS

Young Campaigners for Prohibition
Young Campaigners for No-License.
Songs for Young Campaigners, No. 1.
Two cents each; per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Suggested Campaign Plans, Muster Roll, etc., sent free upon application.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

GOODBY TO THE PERAMBULATING SALOON

We are saying a glad goodby to the perambulating saloon. The rapid disappearance during 1916 of alcoholic liquors from the dining cars of many of the great transportation systems is one of the high lights of the temperance reform. Dry states and "Rule G" are the cause of this total abstinence advance.

Dining car chefs and waiters on transcontinental express trains are often more familiar with the growth of prohibition territory than are some of their liquor imbibing patrons. A humorous cartoon colloquy (New York Herald) is an illustration in point. "Can I have a highball on this train?" queries the thirsty traveler as he takes a seat in the dining car. "No, sir," replies the affable waiter, "we are crossing a dry state, sir. Be patient, for in a few moments we will be across the line." The waiter soon approaches with the highball, saying, "Here's your drink, sir. We are now in a wet state. Hurry up! Be cautious! We are getting near another state line." The passenger is fatally deliberate. To his dismay the waiter soon returns and carries off the drink with the remark, "Give me that drink quick. You are too slow! We are again in a dry state."

—From the Annual Address of Anna A. Gordon, President National W. C. T. U.

ILLINOIS LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM INCLUDES IMPORTANT DRY MEASURES

HELEN L. HOOD, President Illinois W. C. T. U.

The Illinois legislative program includes a number of important dry bills. Hundreds of telegrams and letters urging the passage of the following important measures are being sent out by the local unions to members of the legislature:

A franchise amendment to be submitted to the voters at the election in 1918, if carried will give women full suffrage in 1919.

A state-wide referendum prohibition bill has passed the senate and is now in the house. It provides that both men and women may vote at the 1918 election for state-wide prohibition. If a majority vote is secured the state will be dry January 1, 1919. This special measure is to come up for final action at Springfield on March 28. A large delegation of white ribboners expect to be present at the time of this vote.

Two zone bills, prohibiting the sale of liquor within five miles of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, and establishing a three-mile zone around McKendree College at Lebanon, have passed the senate. The state is alive with men and women who are sending communications to their legislators for the passage of these most important bills.

The resolution calling for a constitutional convention has passed both houses and will be submitted to the people for approval in 1918.

A luncheon will be given by the Illinois W. C. T. U. to the Transcontinental W. C. T. U. Campaigners on Monday, April 30, at one o'clock at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago.

On the morning of that day a conference will be held from 10:30 to 12:30 at which Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, and Mrs. Ella A. Boole, National vice-president, with other workers, will give addresses upon various topics. The price of the luncheon tickets is $1. All communications in reference to this luncheon and conference should be sent to the writer.

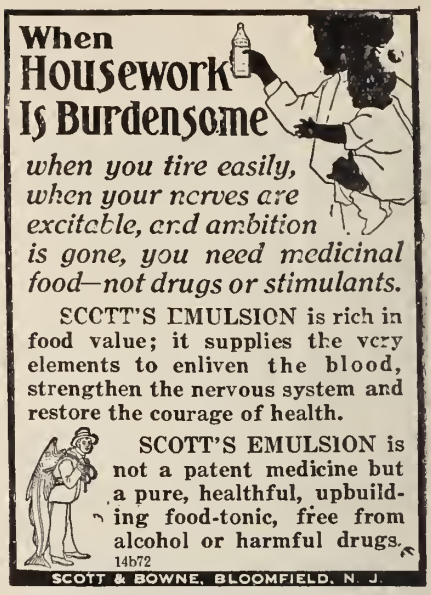
WHY ORGANIZED LABOR SHOULD BE OPPOSED TO THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

CHARLES STELZLE

Organized labor should be opposed to the saloon, because the interests of the saloon are always opposed to the interests of the workingman. The way to find out whether or not organized labor can afford to stand for the saloon is to find out what organized labor itself stands for, and then see how the saloon comes up to its standards. Organized labor believes in better jobs for the workingman, in greater efficiency, in increased wages, in the abolition of child labor, in the dignity and elevation of womanhood, and in the preservation of the home. The saloon breaks down every one of these standards.

HEALTHY HUMAN NEEDS MORE FULLY SUPPLIED

"We have had a year of prohibition in Waterloo and during that period there has been less business for the police court to transact and more for the grocer, dry goods man and others who supply healthy human needs," says the Waterloo (Ia.) Courier in discussing the results of prohibition in the city and county. "We miss the long rows of men who used to crowd the Fifth street establishments after working hours, drinking and chatting—a gay sort of scene in a way to be sure, but we are more than compensated in seeing more little boys and girls going to school warmly clad and with the glow of health in their cheeks. There is less 'social enjoyment,' and more pure domestic happiness, we believe, in Waterloo since the saloons went out and that alone warrants us in asserting that prohibition is a success."



COLORADO'S FIRST YEAR ON THE WATER WAGON

(Continued from Page Six)

wanted to drink; we believed that we needed whisky. It was a hard life, but a fast life, and as long as men kept within the laws, they might do as they pleased. I myself have always drunk liquor, in moderation; I've always had liquor in my house. I voted wet when the prohibition law was put up. But I was mistaken. I feared for the prosperity of the state that I loved and had helped to make. I feared an economic set-back. But now Colorado is more prosperous than ever before in its history. I opposed another 'reform'; what with labor troubles and civic improvements and commission governments and politics and the like we in state and city had been ridden sore with reforms and discussions, and I opposed anything else that by bitterness and depression would unsettle the state and interrupt its progress again. Its progress has not been interrupted, there is no bitterness and no depression. I said that tourists would side-step us, and intending citizens shun us. The tourists increased, and so did the population. I saw vacant buildings and withdrawal of capital. Where are the vacant buildings that will not be re-occupied, and where did the capital go? I shook my head at the shackling of personal liberty. Instead, we have knocked the shackles from thousands of men and women. I was a fool. But even an old fool may change, and I shall vote dry on every such proposition that comes up. I have friends who claim that prohibition itself has not helped the state. All right, then, I tell them that prohibition certainly has not hurt the state, and it is a good thing in itself if it will work out that way." He placed his hand upon my shoulder. "You are young and I am old, but I know Colorado. And mark my words: No matter what new laws are enacted, no matter what their stringency, Colorado never will go back to the days of license in liquor. Neither you nor I will see Colorado an open state, or a state of local option. The majority of the people are satisfied that we are headed in the right direction, and the majority has always ruled, since miners' law, fifty years ago."

"What really brought about the change?" I urged. "I've asked some, and they say woman suffrage. I've asked others, and they say Billy Sunday."

He bravely flung up his grizzled head. "Neither," he rapped. "Whisky did it."

Campaign Ammunition

Convincing Facts and Figures for Voters.

Facts About Kansas
The Reason for Their Prosperity
Individual Rights, Harvey W. Wiley, M. D.
Foolish Liquor Arguments
Kansas Answers Revenue Argument
Maine Vindicated
Untouched Sources of Revenue, Judge Charles A. Pollock
The Workingman's Greatest Enemy. John F. Cunneen
National Constitutional Prohibition
The Workingman Pays
Revenue and the Public School, Prof John A. Nicholls
How About the Revenue? Prof. John A. Nicholls
The Paramount Issue, Daniel A. Poling
America's Greatest Foe, Daniel A. Poling
The Workingman and the Alcohol Problem, Rev. Charles A. Stelzle
The Revenue
Russia's Wealth Conserving Experiment
The Plight of the Farmer
Prominent Roman Catholics Advocate Prohibition
The Industrial World Against Alcohol
The Railways and Prohibition
The Drink Traffic and the Taxpayer
Drink-Manufactured "Facts"
How Men's Bible Classes Can Make Prohibition Sentiment
Social and Economic Value of Prohibition
Partnership With Liquor Traffic Must Be Terminated
Prohibition States
The Liquor Traffic and the Business World
Labor Organizations Favor Prohibition
How Will National Prohibition Affect the Labor Market?
Her Holiday—A Story of Real Life

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

PATRIOTIC SHIELD
in red, white and blue

This shield has on one side a relief map of the United States in white with 1920 in red figures and the words "By the will of God and our united efforts." The reverse side bears the "pledge of the united mothers' movement for a saloonless nation by 1920," with space for signature. These shields are most appropriate for decorating

SUNDAY SCHOOL ROOMS
W. C. T. U. HEADQUARTERS
CAMPAIGN HEADQUARTERS

and one's own home. Price 25 cents; per dozen, $2.50.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

Have you received any communications from the "United Press Association," and if so, have you noticed that they are every one of them attacks on prohibition? The liquor interests have organized an enterprise under the name of the United Press Association, so similar to a well-known and reputable press association as to deceive the public. Beware of the news received through this channel!

The temperance leaders in California see in the introduction by the liquor interests of fifteen wet bills in the present session of the legislature an indication of their increasing apprehension over the situation. "If I were in the saloon business today," remarked Mr. Arthur Arlett, one of the prominent drys, "I would not be content with fifteen bills. I would want the entire fifty-seven varieties."

Property Owners Asked to Contribute to Anti-Prohibition Campaign

The brewing interests of St. Louis are preparing for a "campaign of education" on the liquor question in anticipation of the state-wide campaign inaugurated by the passage by the Missouri legislature of the prohibition referendum measure. They propose to finance this campaign from revenue secured from a tax which they are seeking to impose upon property owners who rent their real estate for saloons and allied purposes. The following circular, addressed to real estate owners and agents, and signed by the Independent Breweries Company of St. Louis, is being circulated today:

"The National Association of Commerce and Labor, with headquarters in Chicago, has been organized for the purpose of raising funds to be used in a campaign of education against prohibition. As this matter is of interest to you, as well as to ourselves, we presume that you will be willing to contribute to this fund to the extent of one per cent on the monthly rentals collected from us. Brewers in Chicago, Milwaukee and other cities have been collecting like amounts for some time, and we trust that owners of St. Louis real estate will gladly permit us to do likewise. Unless we hear from you to the contrary, we will take the liberty of deducting one per cent from our next rent remittance and continue to do so each month thereafter. We assume that our action will have your full approval."

Prohibition and Distillers' Stock

Solemn prohibition speeches and dry newspaper pieces, with accompanying maps of the United States containing "dry" portions in white and "wet" portions in black, are bearing cumulative dividends for the dry adherents. It is indicated in many ways that these United States are rapidly going dry, and it is probable that a fear of such an ultimate outcome has caused the dumping overboard of distillers' stocks. Distillers' securities sold last week at the lowest price since 1915. It touched 18½, a decline of 4 points from the high of the preceding day and of almost 15 points since the beginning of the year. A director is quoted as saying: "With the stock selling at that price it would be an absolute crime to continue the payment of the six per cent dividend."—New York Sun.

NEEDED! CAN YOU HELP?

With at least six states in definite state-wide campaigns, and the resolution submitting the question of National Constitutional Prohibition to the legislatures of the several states practically sure of passing the new Congress, the time has come for a forward move along publicity lines.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. NEEDS FUNDS

at once to make possible the sending of free plate matter to newspapers in the campaign states.

EVERY STATE IS IN A CAMPAIGN FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

and should have this educational matter put before the voters through the secular press. Sufficient funds should be forthcoming from the friends of the cause to make this possible.

THE NEWSPAPERS ARE READY TO CO-OPERATE

by giving their space freely but plates must be paid for if advantage is taken of this generosity. Friends of the cause will be glad to make possible the entering of this open door.

Contributions, large or small, from men or women, members or non-members of the W. C. T. U., will be gratefully acknowledged.

The liquor trade has not only been sending out free plates but has been paying thousands of dollars for advertising space in the newspapers. Shall it have a monopoly of this form of education?

Make all remittances payable to the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Indicate the fact that your gift is for the publicity campaign.

National Woman's Christian Temperance Union

L. J. Taber, Master of Ohio State Grange, asserts that more than 90 per cent of the granges of the state will vote dry this fall and that 75 per cent of all Ohio farmers will register their votes for state-wide prohibition. The farmer takes no stock in the argument that saloons help pay the taxes or, at least, do not make them heavier.

Business is booming under the dry laws of Washington and Oregon. The amusement places are doing the best business they have ever done and the people seem to be complaining less of the high prices of the necessary commodities of life. Undesirables who formerly inhabited the cities are leaving, many of them for California.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

ONE HUNDRED COPIES OF THE CAMPAIGN EDITION FOR EVERY COUNTY

One of the states about to enter a state-wide prohibition campaign is planning to usher in the movement with an educational program. A leading feature will be the sending of the Campaign Edition of THE UNION SIGNAL to 100 voters in each of its counties. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union believes that during these early spring months of uncertain weather there will be more time for reading and studying anti-alcohol literature than during the summer, especially in the rural sections of the state, where later the pressure of spring farm and garden work will occupy the people.

Needless to say, we approve of the plan and believe this method of education will make hundreds, yes, thousands of votes for prohibition. We feel certain that no reasonable, unprejudiced man or woman is proof against such arguments for state-wide prohibition as are presented in this number, for instance, concerning Colorado. Like the pioneer quoted in the closing paragraphs of "Colorado's First Year on the Water Wagon," no matter what may be a man's personal habits, he covets for his own state the benefits economic, social, moral, that are insured by a well-enforced prohibitory law.

Similar vote-making material will appear in each Campaign Edition and in every weekly edition. Can any state contemplating a campaign looking toward a saloonless commonwealth afford to neglect this opportunity to place before its voters the unanswerable arguments that will roll up a huge majority of anti-liquor ballots on election day?

BULBS 50 High Grade Flowering Bulbs Oxalis, Begonia, Gloxinia, Gladiolus, other kinds. Asparagus Fern. All postpaid. Send 25c

Old Homestead Nursery Co., Round Pond, Me.

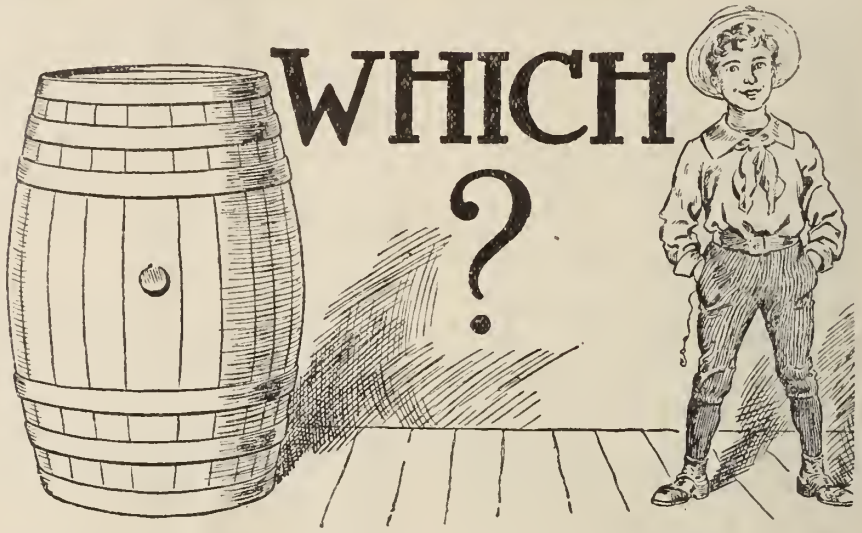
"SUNSHINE POWDERS"—A Dainty Easter Gift for an invalid or one in sorrow. Jewels of thought, lovely for birthdays, hospitals, sunshine work. They were prepared by a "shut in," wife of a home-missionary, once a pupil of Frances Willard, an earnest worker in the W. C. T. U. "Bright, cheery, comforting!" "Worth their weight in gold." Try a box! 25 cts. Rev. H. M. Goodell, Pasadena, Calif.

"JIM AND ME" and 41 other choice songs on temperance and prohibition including "A Saloonless Nation 1920" are in Songs and Sayings. A great book. Price 25c, 5 for $1. A free copy of new booklet containing "My Father Knows," pronounced "a glorious song," to all who order, mentioning Union Signal.

REV. L. L. PICKETT, Wilmore, Ky.

Cartoon Leaflets

Containing Forceful Prohibition Truths and Arguments in Pictured Facts



The Water Wagon.
A City's Account with John Barleycorn.
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy.
When Will Uncle Sam Wake Up?
Farmers, Attention!
His Days Are Numbered.
On to Washington!
A National Duty.
A Lesson in Arithmetic.
The Deadly Upas Tree.
Vote for the Children!
The Liquor Traffic's Vacuum Pocket Cleaner.
Farmer and Saloonkeeper.
Boy or Beer Barrel?
Weighed in the Balance.
Accusing Fingers.
The Brewer's Slaves.
Your Boy Next?
As Big Business Sees It.
National Patchwork.
A Flag for Americanization Day.
Clubbing Him Off the Earth.
The Big Cities Problem.
The Drink Traffic and Revenue.
Spent Annually—A Comparison.
Is It a Square Deal?
The World on the Water Wagon.
What Mother and Children Get.
The Trouble-Maker.

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

WHAT RECENT CONVERTS TO PROHIBITION SAY OF THE LIQUOR BUSINESS

Converts to prohibition are multiplying at a rapid rate and their frank testimony concerning what they think of the business they formerly conducted, worked for, or advocated, as the case may be, furnishes interesting literature for prohibition campaigns.

Major Dan Smith, former attorney for the liquor dealers:

"The liquor business needs not regulation, but strangulation.

"I have drafted model license bills for hundreds of cities in twenty states. I found that the same liquor men who were paying me to draft them were paying legislators and aldermen to defeat them. They did not want them passed. They were pre-election promises.

"The price of a drink ranges from a dime to damnation. The saloonkeeper gets the dime when the man gets the drink. The family gets damnation when the drink gets him."

Nathan A. Cole, former campaign speaker for the United States Brewers' Association:

"You cannot make the American saloon respectable. Its business is evil. No man who sells liquor which makes men drunk, robs them of physical and mental capacity, brings sorrow, poverty, suffering and depravity into homes, can hope to be counted a good citizen.

"Alcohol is a debauching agency when used in any form as a beverage. This is the decision of scientists the world over, and this is also the experience of every man who has quit using it before it robbed him of the power to think clearly.

"It is disgusting to hear brewers talk about reforming the saloon. It is an incontrovertible fact that the brewer has contributed more to the immoral character of the saloon than anyone else. The only incentive behind brewery ownership is greed. The brewers will have money by fair means or foul. This is the system that breeds law-breaking and vice, and it prevails all over the United States. Never have the brewers made one honest effort to reform the saloon."

Clinton Wunder, formerly publicity manager of the National Wholesale Liquor Dealers' Association, now engaged in Y. M. C. A. work, gives the following as one of many reasons why he believes the liquor traffic is doomed:

"There are five great divisions of the liquor business, each division warring upon some other branch. These are: the wholesale liquor dealers and distillers, the brewers, the importers, the mail order liquor dealers and the retailers. The brewer and distiller fight over the alcoholic content of their respective beverages, each blaming the other for the evils resulting. The retailer, because of the high cost of operation and the fact that he is often controlled by the manufacturer and the wholesaler, is bent only upon his immediate profit, and therefore refuses often to 'behave,' causing trouble for the more enlightened men of the business. The importer feels that his fine wines would not be affected if it were not for the unlawful actions of the domestic trade, and that he is in a class by himself. The mail order dealer fears only national prohibition and thrives upon state prohibition laws, which permit him to ship into a state without being forced to pay high license."

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., MARCH 29, 1917 | No. 13

DR. HOWARD A. KELLY, NOTED SURGEON, CONDEMNS BEER

Howard A. Kelly, M. D., of Baltimore, Md.

"I have a good deal of knowledge of the effects of beer drinking, both in this country and abroad," writes Dr. Kelly to THE UNION SIGNAL. "It is injurious all the time, creating drunkards, disrupting homes, and robbing poor children and mothers of millions of dollars wasted over the bar of the saloon.

"The habitual beer drinker stands small chance of recovering from an attack of pneumonia. Moderate quantities of beer impair efficiency, and our working people lose thousands of dollars yearly by being laid off because of the injurious habit of beer drinking.

"Alcoholism is a physical, moral and spiritual disease, and in any form whatever alcohol is injurious. There is no such thing as moderate drinking. All drinking is excessive."

HON. JEANNETTE RANKIN, FIRST WOMAN ELECTED TO UNITED STATES CONGRESS, IN HER ADDRESSES, MAKES FREQUENT REFERENCE TO HER ATTITUDE ON PROHIBITION QUESTION

National Prohibition will have in Congresswoman Rankin a staunch and fearless champion in the Sixty-fifth Congress. State and national prohibition were planks in the platform of Miss Rankin in her campaign last fall for Congress. When interviewed by newspaper men she makes it plain that she has convictions on the subject. On the printed matter used at the various meetings at which she has spoken since her election there appear in conspicuous type the words SHE STANDS FOR—six great reforms then being named, among which are state and national prohibition, national suffrage and child welfare. Neither does this woman, whom Rev. Frank Crane has characterized as "the voice of ten silent centuries," neglect to remind her hearers in her addresses where she stands on the liquor question. Miss Rankin's slogan has been, "Let the People Know," and she believes that the people will act for themselves, as they are doing, in the matter of prohibition, just as fast as they come to KNOW. She represents in her person the new spirit that we all feel is abroad in society, the growing demand for an answer to our question of why, with all the improved means of production, we have failed to increase the products of human happiness. The demand of the American people—women as well as men—for a controlling voice in their own destiny, is daily becoming more imperious.

Miss Rankin is one of the seven Independents who will hold the balance of political power in the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Miss Rankin Will Take her Seat in the House of Representatives as a Representative from the State of Montana, at the Opening of the Special Session of the United States Congress, on April 2.

It goes without saying that Miss Rankin is an ardent suffragist. She suggests irrefutable reasons why women should be given the vote: First, they should vote on all questions for the same reason that men vote. Second, they should vote because they are women and should have the opportunity of expressing themselves from their special viewpoint. Third, they should vote because they have a special interest, which can be represented by no other class—the children. "And unless the children of this generation are protected," declares Miss Rankin, "the next generation will be unable to cope with the constantly increasing problems of this civilization. No nation has a right to claim for itself full recognition as civilized until it gives to its women full suffrage." "I once called upon a member of the Sixty-third Congress," remarked Miss Rankin, in illustrating the point that woman suffrage is consistent and in harmony with the principles of our democratic government, "and he seemed amused because I had come to talk with him on woman suffrage, and hastened to inform me that he was opposed to suffrage, city, state and national. 'You believe that all republican governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed?' I asked. He admitted that he did. 'Are not the women governed by this government?' I asked. 'No,' he replied, 'the government does not govern the women.' 'Who does?' I inquired with curiosity. 'The government governs the men and the men govern the women,' he replied."

Believing that the vote is the fundamental device by which the people directly enter political affairs and that it is a most significant educational factor, Congresswoman Rankin stresses the necessity for the women of this nation securing suffrage in order that they may work, side by side with the men, for the true democracy of the future.

CROWDS AT HEARING ON NEW YORK PROHIBITION BILL—MRS. BOOLE SPEAKS FOR ALLIED TEMPERANCE FORCES

An event of more than ordinary interest in New York was the legislative hearing on the state-wide prohibition bill at the capitol building at Albany, on March 14. Mrs. Ella A. Boole, president of the New York W. C. T. U., and vice-president of the National W. C. T. U., as chairman of the Allied Temperance Forces, presided. There were present from thirty-one counties of the state a large body of white ribboners and temperance workers, among them forty-nine members of the New York state executive. Speaker Sweet invited Mrs. Boole and the president of the W. C. T. U. of his own county to sit with him at the speaker's desk. Three trainloads of liquor men were present, two from New York City, and one from another section of the state. In the gathering were proprietors of the leading hotels and restaurants of New York City. The liquorites all wore a red badge, and the white ribboners wore upon their breasts a white badge reading, "We want a voice on the liquor question." Some of the liquor men adroitly wore this, folded in such a way that it read, "We want liquor."

In the course of the spirited discussion one of the liquor representatives said there were fifteen prohibition states. Mrs. Boole challenged the correctness of his statement, and took occasion in a spectacular fashion to impress the truth upon the minds of all who were present. She signaled to Mrs. Caroline P. Lindsay, National W. C. T. U. superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, and immediately there waved in the air pennants showing the names of the twenty-six prohibition states, and the territory of Alaska. "You should have seen the liquor men count the pennants and examine them to see whether they were right," remarked a worker who was present at the hearing.

Later, to show the strength of the organization, Mrs. Boole called the roll of the county presidents, asking them to stand in response to it. Then she called upon all white ribboners in the house to stand, and the goodly company on their feet made a profound impression. Members of the legislature came up afterwards to meet the presidents of the counties from which they came.

Governor Whitman has stated that if the prohibition measure passes the legislature, he will sign it. In a conversation with one of the leaders of the W. C. T. U. of New York, he said he regarded the Woman's Christian Temperance Union as the most valuable temperance organization in the world.

THE LESSON TO THE DOCTOR

An expressman brought his car, on a bitter cold day, up to the door and could barely climb down from his seat. Hours of exposure had almost benumbed him. He was brought in, the master of the house was called, and a physician, dining at the house, came into the kitchen with the host.

"Bring me some whisky," ordered the doctor.

"One minute," said the host. "Why whisky? For heat?"

"Naturally," answered the doctor.

"Why not try hot water?" suggested the host. "Wouldn't hot water give the required heat?"

"All right. Hot water, if he can get it down," answered the doctor.

After half an hour the man "thawed out," and, as he "came to," he recognized the master of the house and said:

"Mr. Robinson, I don't want you to think that I am a drinking man. I was simply benumbed with cold and had lost almost all feeling. I take great pride, sir, in the fact—especially for my boys—that a drop of liquor has never crossed my lips."

And, as the host and the physician returned to their dinner, the former said to the latter: "A bit of a lesson, isn't it?"

"Yes," answered the doctor. "I fancy we doctors are pretty quick to think that nothing will do the trick at such a time but alcohol. Thanks, old man."—Ladies' Home Journal.

Russian Women to Have Voice in New Regime

Franchise to Women Said to Have Been Granted in Selection of Constituent Assembly

That the women of Russia may be enfranchised by the new Russian constitution seems probable, according to the reports being received through the Associated Press. A special cablegram from Petrograd to the Chicago Herald says: "It has been settled that women shall vote for members of the constituent assembly. With such radical changes here, woman suffrage comes as a matter of course."

Another significant result of the revolution in Russia is the release of Mme. Catherine Breshkovskaya, the "Little Grandmother" of the Revolution, who has been exiled in Siberia for the last thirty years.

"What a challenge to the world would be woman suffrage in Russia," exclaims The Chicago Tribune. "To Europe and to America the swift liberation of Russian women would be a taunt. Already the Slavic women have enjoyed a social equality with men. As revolutionists in earlier struggles the two sexes have stood together. Madam Breshkovskaya has been a symbol of nationalist inspiration. For the franchise to come to her and to her sisters would be a rare realization of ideal justice."

Woman Suffrage Victorious in Oklahoma, Vermont, Iowa and Michigan Legislatures

The constitutional amendment to grant full suffrage to women has passed both branches of the Oklahoma legislature. The question will be submitted to the voters November, 1918. The legislatures of four states, Maine, New York, South Dakota and Oklahoma, have since the first of the year passed measures submitting woman suffrage amendments to the vote of the people.

A bill granting to Vermont women the right to vote, under certain conditions, in incorporated villages for all town officers except road commissioners has passed both houses of the legislature.

A measure giving the women of Michigan presidential suffrage passed the state senate on March 21.

The Iowa senate has passed a measure submitting woman suffrage to the people providing the next legislature passes the resolution. The vote was 35 to 15. It is expected that the house will pass the measure. Woman suffrage was defeated in Iowa at a special election last June through the tactics of the liquor interests.

Danish Women Cast First Ballot

The first vote cast by the Danish women since they have been granted suffrage was on the question of the sale to the United States of the Danish West Indies.

Liquor Men Ask Right to Redistill Liquor for Alcohol When National Prohibition Comes

In anticipation and fear of national prohibition, the whisky distillers are preparing to save themselves from loss when the sale of their product is forbidden. Just before the close of the Sixty-fourth Congress, Senator Penrose of Pennsylvania introduced a bill in the Senate to permit the distillers to take all whisky in bond and redistill it into commercial alcohol.

The bill was placed upon the active calendar of the Senate finance committee, for consideration and report, but did not get any further because of the almost immediate adjournment of Congress. It is presumed Senator Penrose will reintroduce the bill when the extra session begins.

"The significance of the proposed legislation," says the North American of Philadelphia, "is its manifest purpose to protect the distillers from heavy losses if national prohibition is declared in the immediate future. The distillers themselves are asking for the legislation. Under existing laws whisky, as soon as it is distilled, is placed in a government bonded warehouse, from which it can be removed only upon the payment of the tax of $1.10 a gallon. There are 67,000,000 gallons of whisky now stored in warehouses in Kentucky alone, and it is estimated that twice that quantity is stored in other parts of the country. The distillers figure that were prohibition to catch them with any such stock on hand their losses would be tremendous unless some means were found of transforming the noxious article into some innocuous article of commerce.

"The passage of the bill as a measure for the relief of the distillers would amount virtually to the acquiescence of the whisky makers in the prohibition movement, forced, however, by the apparent realization that they could not prevent its success if they tried and are therefore desirous of protecting themselves against probable loss."

HONOR ROLL

—of—

STATES AND TERRITORY WHICH HAVE OUTLAWED THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC

Maine	Indiana
Kansas	Colorado
North Dakota	Iowa
Oklahoma	Arkansas
Georgia	Idaho
Mississippi	South Carolina
North Carolina	Virginia
Tennessee	Nebraska
West Virginia	South Dakota
Arizona	Utah
Alabama	Michigan
Washington	Montana
Oregon	Alaska

STATES TO VOTE ON STATE-WIDE PROHIBITION

Wyoming Missouri New Mexico
Iowa Utah Ohio Minnesota

Wisconsin Assembly Goes on Record in Favor of State-Wide Referendum Bill

By a vote of 52 to 44 the assembly of the Wisconsin legislature on March 22 sent to engrossment the Evjue bill, which if it passes the senate, will bring the question of whether Wisconsin shall be classed as a prohibition state or not up to the will of the voters at the spring election in April of 1918. If the measure at that time receives a majority vote, it will go into effect July 1, 1920. The bill was passed after three and a half hours of debate, mostly on questions of parliamentary practice, after all efforts to refer the question back to the committee, by attempting to add amendments, failed. An amendment which would exempt beer from the referendum was killed by a vote of 74 to 22.

Lower Branch of New Hampshire Legislature Votes for License Repeal

The lower house of the New Hampshire legislature, on March 21, went on record in favor of state-wide prohibition by a vote of 192 to 172. The vote was on the substitution of the minority report for the majority report on the Lewis bill to repeal the present law.

Jail Empty; Keeper Must Be Paid Salary

A great change has come over jail affairs in Frederick county, Virginia, according to the Winchester Evening Star. A few years ago the jailer paid the sheriff for the privilege of letting him, the jailer, keep the bastile. But the people got better, and fewer got into jail and the rent was reduced until now the keeper must be paid a salary if he is to keep the jail. Says the Star: "When the present incumbent came into the office of sheriff he gave the jail rent free to the jailer with the privilege of making out of it what he could. But certain moral and economic influences were at work which were destined to pull the props from under the jail-keeping business as a source of income. These were, first the enactment of local option and later on of prohibition. These measures had a tendency to run the worst elements of the population out of the community; hence, there was less crime, fewer violations of the law, until within the past few years there have been whole months at a time when not even a single prisoner has been confined in jail.

"As the jailer gets no salary whatever and must depend entirely on the profits from feeding his prisoners, it will be seen that the jail-keeping job is an empty honor. The present jailer has been compelled to seek employment elsewhere while still nominally the head of the local bastile. Then to add to his troubles the legislature passed a law which requires all prisoners serving thirty days and over to work on the state roads instead of spending their time idly in jail. This was the dregs in the jailer's bitter cup of woe. With the last opportunity to earn a living at boarding prisoners gone forever, he was compelled to go to work at whatever his hand found to do, and this was the situation recently when the board of supervisors, to rescue the job from oblivion, appropriated a salary of $100 per year, and asked the common council of Winchester to duplicate the action by appropriating another hundred for the same purpose."

WHICH BOY SHALL IT BE?

FELIX J. KOCH

The well-known evangelist, Dr. Henry Stough, had been preaching at a revival meeting in Cincinnati, Ohio, upon the sin of intemperance and the paramount need of prohibition. Finishing his speech against the liquor traffic, he called to the platform of the great tabernacle twelve children, cunning little folk, each in best bib and tucker, for it was Sunday afternoon. Dr. Stough lined them up according to size, then, pacing up and down the platform, as one in rage might do, he thus addressed his audience:

"We will assume that one of these boys is yours," he said, turning to his auditors. "Yes, this is he for whom you are toiling and sacrificing all the year round. With the sweat of your brow you are supporting and educating him. But, my friends, speak the truth: You are preferring the liquor traffic to this lad. How dare you?" Selecting the tiniest boy of the number, a dear little fellow of four, he set him a few paces in advance of the others.

"The liquor traffic," Dr. Stough declared, continuing his pacing, "already has its eyes on this boy. Government statistics show conclusively that one man in every twelve fills a drunkard's grave. One of these children is assuredly condemned to that fate. You men who tolerate the saloon, even though you yourself may not patronize it, are preferring it to the boys whom the saloonkeepers, the brewers, and the distillers regard as the props, the supports of their business by and by. The dragging down to a d unkard's death of one in twelve of all men in every community where drink is sold, is caused by liquor. Think of it."

He selected four children and drew them forward to the edge of the platform. "Which one of the dozen," he asked, "are you willing to let the saloonkeeper ruin? You might as well make the choice as to let the liquor men do it. Are you willing to have any one of the four before you given over into the traffic's tender keeping?" "No!" shouted the crowd. He chose another quartet, a big boy, a little boy, and two of sizes between. He presented first one child, then the next, the next, and the next, asking, as he designated each one, in turn, "Shall it be he?" Each time the welkin rang with the "No!" of the crowd.

Daniel Ewell Atkins, Grandson of Mrs. Florence E. Atkins, National Lecturer. Daniel is a Loyal Temperance Legion boy, the fourth generation in a family of total abstainers and temperance workers. His great grandmother on his mother's side joined the W. C. T. U. when Frances Willard made her first trip to Georgia.

Then the evangelist suddenly changed tone and mien. "Come, men," he said quietly, "you might as well choose. We must have one out of the twelve to fall the victim of drink." There was silence. One might have heard a pin drop, so quiet was the great tabernacle.

"Perhaps," the speaker finally continued, "I would better make the selection for you." Bringing from back of the pulpit a large black flag adorned with skull and crossbones, the familiar sign used by the druggists to indicate poison, he wrapped it around the form of the smallest child in such a way that the insignia of death squarely faced the intensely interested audience. Then he lifted the little fellow in his arms. Men and women shouted, "No!" In a trice the evangelist snatched off the flag and tearing it to shreds trampled it under his feet.

Producing an American flag he draped it about the wee tow-head in his arms. "Men, Americans," he cried, "these children, your children, must be protected by the American colors. Will you continue to disregard your duty as American citizens and let the saloonkeeper make a drunkard of one of every twelve of them, and moderate drinkers of many more, or will you save them by wiping out the liquor traffic which blights their present and blasts their future?" Wild shouts of approval rang out from all sides. The lesson taught in the tabernacle had been driven squarely, surely home.

PROHIBITION GIVES SATISFACTION IN VIRGINIA

The enemies of the alcoholic liquor traffic have long contended that only a trial of prohibition was needed in order to thoroughly convince the people that nothing better could be done for all humanity than to exterminate root and branch the universal source of drunkenness and the prime factor in the vast aggregate of crime, insanity and misery from which the race so greatly suffers. From countless sources comes now the testimony that the predictions of prohibition's friends prove true and conditions everywhere improve when the distillery, brewery and saloon take their departure. Among scores of other items appears the following in the Staunton (Va.) Leader:

"Those who for years have beeu laboring to bring about the enactment of prohibition of the liquor traffic in Virginia expected great things as the result of such enactment if ever accomplished, but they did not dare to dream that the results would at once be so overwhelmingly and universally satisfactory.

"Advocates of prohibition anticipated that the law would be well enforced, but they did expect that there would be a lingering feeling of antagonism and animosity toward the law and those responsible for its enactment; and that even among the better class of citizens some who did not favor the law would throw obstructions in the way of its enforcement, or at least refrain from aiding in its enforcement.

"The contrary has been true in Virginia. All classes of citizens seem to be friendly disposed and to be ready and willing to see the law meet the fullest expectations of its advocates and sponsors. Virginia is a law-abiding state anyway, but the state has made an exceptional record in the enforcement of the prohibition law. There has been a transformation in the habits of the people. It is a rare occurrence for an ordinary citizen to see any one under the influence of an intoxicant. The police court records all over the state show very few arrests for drinking or for the crimes that grow out of drinking or accompany drinking. Apparently all classes of citizens are pleased with the change and if there is any general disposition to bring back the saloons, it fails to find public expression anywhere. So far the execution of the law without any severe methods or anything to give ground for the charge of persecution seems to be as perfect as it well can be and to be wholly satisfactory to the public. There does not seem to be the slightest prospect of a movement to go back to the saloons."

ALCOHOL OR THE BABY?

DR. EUGENE LYMAN FISK, Director of the Life Extension Institute of New York, in The Atlantic Monthly

After twenty-five years of experience in the close, personal observation and physical examination of all types of men, from laborers to statesmen and leaders of scientific thought, and in the sifting and weighing of evidence relating to the influences that affect longevity as revealed by the experience of large masses of men, my cumulative judgment is that alcohol is a destructive force, wholly evil in its total effects. I deprecate the too prevalent tendency to apologize for alcohol, to deal gently and tenderly with it, instead of bringing it to the bar of human judgment to answer for its misdemeanors and justify its right to be exposed for sale on the street corners as a beverage harmless for the average man.

As to its effect on progeny, the degree of this effect in man is debatable, but there is positive proof of an extremely adverse influence on the germ plasm of animals. Until the degree of this influence in man is determined, which should properly receive the benefit of the doubt —alcohol or the baby?

New York Hotel Man Gives Up Lucrative Bar Trade

"DON'T WANT TO BE A RUM SELLER," SAYS FRANK CASE OF THE ALGONQUIN—HIS BAR PROFITS WERE OVER $10,000 LAST YEAR

Can a New York hotel, one of the real hotels that are a part of the life of the city, of the spirit of the thousands who come here for a holiday, be operated successfully without a bar? Frank Case, proprietor of the Algonquin for the last fourteen years, says "Yes," and feels sufficiently sure of it to apply the only real test. He has closed his bar and it will stay closed.

He announced his intention to a group of friends at the hotel the other day.

"Why?" asked one of them after they had recovered from their astonishment.

"Well, there's one reason right there," replied Case, pointing to a small boy crossing the hotel lobby with a bunch of school books under his arm, on his way to the elevator to go to the family apartment upstairs. "That youngster is my own son, just coming home from school. I have decided that I don't want to pay his school bills and the other costs of bringing him up on the profits from booze. I guess that's my chief reason, but there are others.

"The bar got too profitable last year or probably I would not have thought of this thing. It never had amounted to much previously. It wasn't a real business asset as a bar for stand-up drinking by the people who ran in from the street for the sake of drinking and nothing else, but only a source of supply for the people who live in the house and want wine or cocktails or highballs at luncheon or dinner. That was all I wanted it or intended it to be. I did not give the personal attention to the profits from it that I would to the profit on a poached egg.

"But something happened to the bar in 1916. I had a new man in charge of it and he went in for business. He got it. At the end of the year the figures showed that my net profits on the bar alone had been $10,560. Now, I like to make money as well as the next man. That is what I am in the hotel business for. I am not a prohibitionist nor a temperance missionary, and I have no right or desire to interfere with the personal liberty of a patron of my hotel. Nevertheless those figures made me sick. I had to admit to myself that I was a rum-seller and that is something I don't want to be. I am a hotel keeper and believe that a distinction can and should be made between the two jobs. I am going to make it.

"Of course, I'll have to admit that it has taken me three months to come to the scratch, because a human being hates to let go of ten thousand a year as a matter of sentiment before he is sure he can make it up somewhere else. I don't know yet that I can make it up, but I'll have all that barroom space for extra dining room or some other purpose."

"Oh, well, it's your business to do as you like with," remarked one of the listeners who seemed to be a bit skeptical. "But you'll have what satisfaction there may be in being the dry pioneer in the wettest hotel town in the world. And you'll have followers if you wait long enough. When that boy of yours whom you don't want to educate on rum profits grows up there won't be any alcohol snares for him to look out for. It will be something else, but it won't be rum. Prohibition can't get the start it has got in so many states, backed up by the 'bone-dry' bills at Washington, without hitting New York eventually.

"You can see some signs here already in spite of your $10,000 bar profits last year and the ocean of booze in the white light region. I had luncheon in the Harvard club the other day, and noticed that nobody near my table was drinking anything. That aroused by curiosity to the point of doing a little investigating. My table was at a Forty-fifth street window, so to get out I had to pass down the entire length of the big dining room. Every table was full, but I didn't see an alcoholic drink anywhere in the room.

"I consider that very significant, at least, so far as midday drinking in New York is concerned. You know that a few years ago there would have been a cocktail or a highball or a bottle of beer on nearly every one of those tables.

"You also know that the assumption that New York never would go dry, no matter what the rest of the country did, has been based chiefly on the fact that it was such a cosmopolitan town, that its population was made up of so many Europeans. But even that assumption is losing some weight, because every one of the European countries from which our population is drawn is now going in for more or less prohibition on its own account. And the movement, both in this country and abroad, is based entirely on the grounds of efficiency and health and the safety of the property and lives for which men are responsible. Temperance workers wasted several generations in trying to put their reform through as a matter of piety and morals, but they have got hold of the right end of it now. Some time we will have the miracle right here in New York. Maybe Case is starting something."

"Well, that may be, but I am not posing as a dry pioneer or as a reformer. I take a drink myself occasionally, but I don't want to sell it to another man. Would you want to?"

Everybody in the group answered in the negative, although there was not a total abstainer there.

"A bar is a hole, a squalid, rotten hole, no matter how clean it may be kept literally, no matter how well appointed and beautifully decorated it is. A public bar is a hole and it makes no difference whether it is in a hotel or in a corner saloon over in Hell's Kitchen. It is the place of repeated drinking, of treating to drinks that nobody wants, but that nobody has the nerve to refuse, of drunkenness. It is the exchange for oral filth which its patrons would be ashamed to speak or listen to anywhere else. The public bar as an adjunct of a hotel cheapens the whole place.

"All the troubles we have ever had in this house could be traced right to that bar. If a man has got behind in his accounts it was because he was taking too many drinks standing up. If there has been a quarrel to patch up, the trouble began in the bar. If we have had sickness upstairs, a bar victim has been the patient. I am through with it."—New York Times.

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN AND THE BREWERS

Out St. Louis way the Anheuser Busch Brewing Company is a great institution. Also its product is probably purer and more wholesome than most beer. Evidently the Anheuser Busch people fear that the prohibition movement will in time win Missouri even. Therefore they advertise. Here is part of an advertisement printed in Reedy's Mirror. We also reproduce a passage Franklin himself wrote.

Liquor Advertisement

"Benjamin Franklin Father of American Diplomacy.

"America has never produced a greater statesman than Franklin. . . The great Lord Chatham pronounced him not only an honor to the Anglo-Saxon people, but to human nature. . . . He it was who induced France to lend us ships, men and money during the darkest days of the Revolution. Upon his death Congress ordered a general mourning of a month. In France it was decreed that all members of the National Assembly should wear mourning for three days. So long as Americans treasure the Republic and Personal Liberty . . . the fame of Franklin can never perish. Personally he was possessed of robust health. He was . . . a moderate user all his life of Old Madeira and barley malt brews. It is safe to say that he toasted the new republic with every great man of Europe and America."

From Franklin's Autobiography

"At my first admission into this print house (at London) I took to working at press, imagining I felt a need of the bodily exercise I had been used to in America where press work is mixed with composing. I drank only water; the other workers, near fifty in number, were great guzzlers of beer. On occasion I carried up and down stairs a large form of type in each hand when others carried but one in both hands. They wondered to see from this and several instances that the "water American," as they called me was stronger than themselves who drank strong beer. We had an ale house boy who attended always in the house to supply the workmen. My companion at the press drank every day a pint before breakfast, a pint at breakfast with his bread and cheese, a pint between breakfast and dinner, a pint at dinner, a pint in the afternoon about six o'clock and another when he had done his day's work. I thought it a detestable custom, but it was necessary, he supposed, to drink strong beer that he might be strong to labor. I endeavored to convince him that the bodily strength afforded by beer could only be in proportion to the grain or flour of the barley dissolved in the water of which it was made; that there was more food in a pennyworth of bread; and therefore if he would eat that with a pint of water it would give him more strength than a quart of beer. He drank on, however, and had four or five shillings to pay out of his wages every Saturday night for that muddling liquor, an expense I was free from. And thus these poor devils keep themselves always under."

Franklin's "Biography," from which we quote, was written by the "Father of American Diplomacy" himself. The essay in praise of beer which gives the impression that Franklin boozed his way through all the thirteen colonies, across the Atlantic and through every country of Europe, was written to bolster up the wets. This piece of fakery was a bold one, for most intelligent persons know Franklin's Biography and remember the "water American" passage. We showed these two quotations to a philosopher friend of ours and it was his remark that if Franklin were living today he would go much farther and he would be as strong for prohibition in the twentieth century as he was in the wet eighteenth for temperance.—Collier's Weekly.

WHAT WOMEN HAVE DONE WITH THE BALLOT

WHEREVER WOMEN HAVE BEEN GIVEN THE VOTE THEY HAVE USED IT IN THE INTERESTS OF THE COMMUNITY AND ESPECIALLY OF THE CHILDREN

DEBORAH KNOX LIVINGSTON

One of the strange things in the discussion for and against woman suffrage is that everywhere men and women seem to demand that the advocate for woman suffrage shall be able to demonstrate that where women have had the ballot it has proved to be an unqualified blessing. It is not difficult to establish this contention, but nowhere do we find that such a test is required with regard to the granting of suffrage to men. As a recent writer has well stated, "It is for man to say whether woman shall have the vote, and, as a consequence, man views the ballot not as a right that he must give, but as a privilege that he is at liberty to confer or withhold." Women, therefore, must prove themselves fit to receive this privilege.

WOMAN'S BALLOT MEANS PROHIBITION

What have women done with the ballot in equal franchise states that warrants the further extension of the vote to women of the other states, is a question that is being continuously asked. We meet with some difficulties in answering it. First of all, the men far outnumber the women in the eleven states which have granted full suffrage to women and in the four states which have given presidential and municipal suffrage men hold the balance of power. Again, in only one state, namely, Illinois, are the ballots cast kept separate, so that state is the only one in which it can be determined accurately just how women vote on any given issue. We, therefore, must answer the question by a comparison of the results obtained since women have had the ballot with conditions obtaining prior to their enfranchisement. Take, for example, the much discussed question, "Will the woman's ballot mean prohibition?" We answer, "Yes," because results prove that wherever women have had the ballot dry territory has been increased. For instance, the following states and territory went dry after their women were enfranchised: Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Colorado, Arizona, Utah and Alaska. In Illinois, at the next general election after the women were enfranchised, twenty-two counties were added to the dry column.

CONSERVATION OF CHILD LIFE THE SPECIAL AIM OF WOMEN

Women naturally have sought to influence legislation that concerns itself with women and children. In every suffrage state we find them seeking legislation that affects the conditions under which women work, such as wages, hours of labor, sanitary provisions, etc., and the securing of laws governing children, covering the care and education of child life.

Everywhere women have sought to exterminate the social evil by the passage of red-light injunction and abatement laws. In every one of the equal suffrage states, women have secured guardianship of their children equally with the fathers, mothers' pension laws have been passed, the age of consent has been raised to eighteen years in all the suffrage states except Nevada, which fixes the age at sixteen.

The following are a few of the laws secured in the suffrage states since women have had the franchise:

Arizona has passed an eight-hour law for women employed in laundries, a red-light injunction and abatement law, and a law raising the exemption of property, for widows, from $1,000 to $2,000, for all possessed of less than $5,000.

California has passed the following laws since women have been enfranchised: The red light abatement act, the minimum wage law, a law providing that no minor under eighteen shall be employed more than eight hours a day, and that no minor under fifteen shall be employed for wages or profit, a law for the establishing of a state training school for delinquent girls, the equal guardianship act, the raising of the age of consent to eighteen, an act requiring fathers to support illegitimate children, and an act giving married women complete control of their separate property.

Colorado has secured the enactment of many excellent laws since the women received the ballot, among them a child-labor law of eight hours a day for children from fourteen to sixteen, a similar law of eight hours a day for women, a law establishing juvenile courts, detention homes, and probation officers. The age of consent has been raised to eighteen. In 1914 state-wide prohibition was adopted, and in 1915 the red light injunction and abatement law was passed.

Idaho has a labor law affecting women and children, a nine-hour restriction for women and children over the school age, a married woman's property act, giving a wife control over her own property and earnings, also a law making mothers equal guardians with the fathers. Idaho has also passed a prohibition law since the women were given suffrage.

The women of Illinois have limited suffrage but it is sufficient to enable them to vote against the saloon, which they have done, and thus greatly increased the dry territory of the state.

It is generally admitted that the credit for the recent legislation for the bettering of working conditions can be given to women.

Kansas has probably had more progressive legislation passed in the four years since the women have had full suffrage than any other state. We quote from a recent article the following:

"Acts authorizing towns to establish free public libraries, reading rooms, rest rooms, parks and hospitals. An act establishing pensions for mothers in case of death, desertion, incapacity or legal confinement of husband. An act giving right to damages against town or city for injury to person, property or means of support due to intoxication of husband or father. An act giving to wife, child, or employer right to damages for injury due to intoxication against owner of place where liquor was sold. An act establishing boards of public welfare for supervision of dance halls and amusement places. An act providing that prisoners' earnings shall be paid to wife and children. An act establishing an industrial welfare commission with power to fix minimum rates of wages, reasonable hours, and sanitary conditions for women and minors. An act providing pensions for incapacitated firemen and for widows and children of firemen."

The women of Montana in the little more than two years of their enfranchisement have secured the passage of a mothers' pension act, an act for equal guardianship, and an act giving married women control of their own property. Montana secured state-wide prohibition in 1916.

SUFFRAGE STATUS

States and Territory Where Women Have Full Suffrage:

WYOMING	KANSAS
COLORADO	OREGON
IDAHO	ARIZONA
UTAH	NEVADA
WASHINGTON	MONTANA
CALIFORNIA	ALASKA

Presidential and Municipal Suffrage:

ILLINOIS NORTH DAKOTA
INDIANA

Presidential Suffrage

OHIO

Suffrage at Primaries

ARKANSAS

States Which Will Vote

MAINE	SOUTH DAKOTA
NEW YORK	OKLAHOMA

ACHIEVEMENTS OF SUFFRAGE STATES

Nevada is one of the states in which the male vote is far in excess of the female vote, yet the women have been able to secure the passage of an act providing pensions for mothers and for retired teachers.

Oregon has passed a great many excellent laws by the aid of the woman's ballot, notably a state-wide prohibition measure at the first election at which the women voted. Acts have been passed providing juvenile courts, pensions for mothers, and an act for equal pay for equal work for men and women teachers.

When Utah came into statehood it brought its women with it, so that all the sessions of the state legislature have been affected by woman's ballot.

Washington has passed many excellent laws as the direct result of woman suffrage, such as the creation of a woman's industrial welfare commission, mothers' pension law and red-light abatement law. This is another state which has enacted a prohibition law since the women secured the ballot.

The state of Wyoming was the first to grant equal suffrage, and for many years the women worked for the passage of an anti-gambling law, which was eventually passed in 1901. They have helped in the passage of a mothers' pension law, a law giving married women control of their own property, equal guardianship law, and their vote has always been against the liquor interests.

A BLESSING TO ALL HUMANITY

Thus we see that wherever women have been given the power of the vote they have used it as a "blessing" in the interests of the child and their own sex, but such "blessing" is not confined to the women and children but blesses all humanity through them. It has always been the task of woman to contribute to the moral welfare of the race, and there is no more effective way for her to make that contribution than through the medium of the ballot.

What women have done with the ballot may be a prophecy of what they will yet accomplish.

We ask the question, Is there any reason to believe that the women of the East and of the South would be less anxious to use the ballot for the welfare of society than are their sisters of the West?

—Courtesy Rev. Harry A. Hersey.

TRAVELING TEMPERANCE EXHIBIT OF THE UNIVERSALIST CHURCH

Many of the National W. C. T. U. posters are used in this exhibit, in addition to those published by other temperance organizations. The posters are mounted on long strips of cloth which keeps them intact and enables them to be put up very quickly. This exhibit is sent free to Universalist conventions or similar gatherings. Weight, 4¾ lbs.

THE TRUTH ABOUT CIDER

An examination of ciders has been conducted at the Colorado State Food and Drug Chemical Laboratory under the direction of Dr. John B. Ekeley, state chemist. Samples of freshly pressed cider were submitted by two of the leading manufacturers of the state, one contained in a five-gallon keg and the other in a ten-gallon keg. The samples were placed under conditions as to care and temperature similar to those which attend the handling and sale of cider in the retail market. In each of the samples a preservative was found, sodium benzoate in the proportion of one-tenth of one per cent. Small quantities of the cider were drawn from time to time and the alcoholic content determined.

In the first keg the increase in alcoholic content was very gradual for about ten days, after which it increased very rapidly until the twenty-fifth day, when it reached a proportion of 7.75 per cent, after which it started to decrease. The maximum quantity of alcohol, which in these experiments is estimated by volume, is much greater than the quantity in beers.

In the second sample the increase in alcoholic content was negligible until the thirtieth day, when it rose very rapidly, reaching a maximum of 5.56 per cent. Conclusions were reached that this result had been obtained by a very careful selection of stock, extraordinary care in the manufacture and also in the sterilization of the container.

Samples have been taken from time to time from various retail stores where cider is actually on sale. Analysis shows that, with one exception, such ciders contain alcohol to the extent of 4 per cent or more. The exception noted was in the case of a freshly opened keg. Samples of sterilized ciders have been examined and in every instance have proved non-alcoholic.

These experiments prove that sodium benzoate in the proportion above stated is ineffective as a means of preventing alcoholic fermentation. Chemical preservation of cider is not practical. An amount of any chemical preservative which may be lawfully used will not retard the process of fermentation for a sufficient length of time to permit the disposition of the product in the ordinary course of trade.

Freshly pressed cider is almost entirely free from alcohol. Fermentation proceeds rapidly until practically all fruit sugars are converted into alcohol. Under ordinary conditions it is but a very few days until the cider contains as much or more alcohol than does beer. We can find no reason why a fermented beverage such as beer, which contains from 3½ to 5 per cent alcohol, should be judged by a stricter standard than a fermented beverage like cider, which contains from 4 to 8 per cent of alcohol.

There is but one practical solution of the cider problem. Manufacturers must equip their plants to put out a sterile product by pasteurization. Grape juice, which is subject to the same fermentation process as apple juice, has become a most valuable food product in America, available for use at all seasons of the year. Apple juice, which has equal or greater food value than grape juice, should be handled in the same manner as is grape juice.

Imitation Fruit Ciders

Forty or more samples of imitation fruit ciders have been examined. These so-called ciders are made from an apple cider base with added coloring matter and preservatives. The flavor is almost entirely artificial. The samples contained from 5 to 9 per cent alcohol by volume. These products cannot be considered as ciders but rather imitation fruit wines in which an increased alcoholic content is produced by the addition of cane sugar. The alcoholic content is nearly i. not quite as large as that of ordinary wine. Apple cider and imitation fruit ciders are undoubtedly intoxicating beverages, as contemplated by the prohibition law.

STRONG DRINK PNEUMONIA'S ALLY

"The United States public health service brands strong drink as the most efficient ally of pneumonia. It declares that alcohol is the handmaiden of the disease which produces ten per cent of the deaths in the United States. This is no exaggeration. We have known for a long time that indulgence in alcoholic liquors lowers the individual vitality and that the man who drinks is peculiarly susceptible to pneumonia.

"The United States public health service is a conservative body. It does not engage in alarmist propaganda. In following out the line of its official duties it has brought forcefully to the general public a fact which will bear endless repetition. The liberal and continuous user of alcoholic drinks will do well to heed this warning."

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, March 29, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

NATIONAL PRESIDENT LEAVES FOR WASHINGTON

Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president, left for Washington, D. C., Tuesday, March 27, to attend a conference called by the National Temperance Council.

FIVE REASONS

In the recent state-wide prohibition campaign in California an endeavor was made to muster into the prohibition army every man, woman and child. The children in the Sunday schools were asked to bring the question to the attention of their fathers and mothers, and most loyally and faithfully did they respond. The president of the Southern California W. C. T. U. tells the story of one little girl who, after making her plea to her parents, held up one tiny hand, with fingers spread wide apart, and said, "Listen, please. We must vote dry for five reasons," and gave a reason for each finger.

How many adults, how many Sunday school teachers, club women, business men, school teachers, could on a minute's notice name five leading reasons why the self-respecting, right-minded people of this country ought to work to abolish the liquor traffic. Why not suggest the test at the dinner table? Try it in the office among your business associates. Broach it at the social club. What are five forceful, cogent reasons for working and voting for state-wide and nation-wide prohibition?

The first reason you will find in yonder jail or penitentiary. Alas, not one but hundreds, thousands of desperate, heartbreaking reasons are there in the person of men who with trembling voice will confess that John Barleycorn is responsible for the fetters that bind them, that he and no other has imprisoned them behind those gray, dismal walls, has defeated them when they were paroled and brought them back to their cells.

In the public hospitals of our big cities you may find reason number two, for in these places of sadness languish a great company of victims of alcoholism, pale-faced, haggard, afflicted with hopeless diseases, caused by the drink habit.

In that domicile of the friendless, the down-and-out, the flotsam and jetsam of society—the poorhouse—you may come upon the third reason. This family of paupers, in their pitiful old age or indigent middle age, can give you an appalling volume of evidence of the financial side of the liquor question; can tell you how greedy John Barleycorn takes not only the health, the intellect, but the income, the home, the farm, the bank account and the savings hoarded by the family of the victim.

You will not need to search long for the fourth reason. It will call out to you with agonizing voice from the army of failures, the creatures who gather each winter in the cheap lodging houses and free employment agencies, arguments every one, that that enemy of efficiency, alcohol, has a wonderful faculty for separating a man from a paying job and preventing him from making connections with a new one.

Perhaps the fifth reason is the saddest but the most impressive. You will discover it in the retreats for those of impaired intellect, in the asylums for the insane and feeble-minded, many of the inmates of all of which institutions, so alienists tell us, are there because of the liquor habit, which has not only laid its curse upon them for the remainder of their life, but whose devastating influence will be felt even unto the third and fourth generation of their offspring.

Five reasons did we say? If only these were all! Alas, one could go on enumerating five times five reasons and yet fall far short of cataloguing the far-reaching evils that compel Christian people to work for the extinction of the liquor traffic.

NARROW INTERPRETATION OF "PERSONAL LIBERTY"

"Personal liberty" is the favorite argument of the liquor interests. "You need the liquor revenue" has its sordid commercial side and is unpleasantly suggestive to the people of something they would like to forget—that the real reason why they continue to tolerate the business is a dollar and cents reason. "Prohibition does not prohibit" reflects immediately upon the interests back of the bootlegger and blind pig, as notoriously regardless of all laws, and with a federal law now ready to be enforced the argument has lost its value.

But "personal liberty" has a seductive sound to American ears. It calls to mind certain sacred sentiments enshrined in the hearts of every citizen of our republic. To the superficial thinker at first thought it seems plausible. But do the men who so stress the idea of "personal liberty" really believe in it except as it works to their personal advantage? Illustrations in abundance occur to one to show that they do not. For instance not many months ago there were being held in the city of Milwaukee by a noted evangelist a series of religious meetings. In accordance with his custom he sent the large department stores and other great industries an invitation to be present and suggested that one night would be called "Gimbel Night," in honor of a certain large store, whose employes were urged to attend in a body. It happened that the evangelist conducting these meetings was wont, as are all up-to-date evangelists, to call attention in forceful language to the liquor habit and the evils that follow in its train and to urge activity on the part of all converts to prohibition. This fact was brought to the attention of the brewers of the city; it was displeasing to them, for what right had an evangelist or anyone else, they asked, to assail their trade? To express their indignation they sent a letter to Milwaukee mercantile houses asking that they prevent their employes from attending the meeting, saying:

"This is nothing more than the forerunner of Billy Sunday coming to Milwaukee and the beginning of an organized effort to swing Wisconsin and the city of Milwaukee into the prohibition column. If you want to prevent such a calamity I think it advisable to tell your employes not to patronize these meetings."

A man connected with a large department store who received one of these letters thought it too valuable a dissertation on "personal liberty" to be filed away in his office and decided to share it with his fellow-citizens, that they might have at first-hand the liquor interests' interpretation of "personal liberty." He had facsimiles of the Miller Brewing Company's letter struck off and on the reverse side had printed an urgent invitation to the meetings, with references to the "personal liberty" slogan of the brewers.

The incident is one that may well be kept in mind and used with good effect when the anti-prohibitionists urge "personal liberty" in defense of the continuance of their business.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

PLANS TO ENTERTAIN THE TRANSCONTINENTAL W. C. T. U. CAMPAIGNERS

Every mail brings interesting suggestions of plans being made all along the line from Chicago to San Francisco, for the meetings to be held in connection with the visits of the two teams of Transcontinental W. C. T. U. Campaigners. The tour is to be inaugurated by a luncheon in honor of the speakers at the Auditorium Hotel, Chicago, Illinois, April 30, the program to be participated in by representative men and women of that city. All along the way there will be parades, demonstrations, banquets, mass meetings, etc. From one of the largest cities to be visited by the southern team comes the word that the campaigners will be met at the station by an automobile reception committee which will escort them to their places of entertainment, the procession assuming the proportions of a parade. That evening a banquet will be held at the hotel, followed by a mass meeting, at which state legislators, the governor, mayor and other prominent citizens will be heard. Watch THE UNION SIGNAL for further notices concerning the campaigners. If you reside in the neighborhood of any of the cities to be visited, plan to be present at the time of the arrival of the W. C. T. U. team.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 22

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. How is the New York City Board of Health trying to safeguard from disease the health of the babies of its city?
2. What attitude does the New York Board of Health take regarding beer?
3. Give seven reasons why prohibition is becoming increasingly popular in Colorado.
4. What is the best way to vindicate and establish a prohibition or other good law?
5. How are the various branches of the liquor interests unintentionally helping to promote prohibition?
6. What commercial interests of the United States are destroying the native Hawaiian race?
7. Name half a dozen different lines of business that are being conducted in transformed breweries, distilleries and saloons.
8. What have three prominent men formerly connected with the liquor interests to say concerning the evils of the liquor traffic?
9. Why, according to Charles Stelzle, should organized labor be opposed to the liquor traffic?
10. What preliminary work in a statewide campaign is absolutely necessary? Suggest three definite plans for such work.

BREWER'S SON SENT TO "PROHIBITION" SCHOOL AND SUMMER CAMP

The liquor people are fully aware of the value of a no-saloon environment for their children and they very often have their homes in the prohibition districts of their home cities. More than one man whose present means of livelihood will be destroyed with the coming of prohibition to his place of abode has sent his children, notably his sons, to Kansas to avoid the ever-swinging door of the saloons in license territory. An instance of this nature is the action of an Oshkosh (Wisconsin) brewer, who brought his thirteen-year-old son to the Read school, a school for boys between the ages of twelve and seventeen, where drinking and smoking are strictly forbidden. Said the father, in explanation, "I will not have my boy hanging around the brewery, loafing with boys and standing treat with them." The principal, Mr. Henry Everett Polley, received the boy as a pupil, and he was also taken for the summer to the Algoma Kamp for Boys, of which Mr. Polley is organizer-director, where he passed the vacation days in a wholesome environment, under careful supervision and away from the evil influences of his father's business.

RUM SUPPLIES TWO-THIRDS OF CASES BEFORE PHILADELPHIA DOMESTIC RELATIONS COURT

"Alcohol causes more than one-third of the cases which come into the domestic relations court," said Miss Sybil Gordon, assistant probation officer of the Philadelphia municipal court, in addressing the New Century Club of that city recently.

"In the domestic relations court," Miss Gordon said, "one-third of the complaints made by wives are laid directly at the door of the saloonkeeper, in addition to those cases in which alcoholism is specified as the cause of trouble. In another third of our cases the complaint arises from abusive treatment, and here, again, the cause is most often drink."

DISCOURAGE DRINKING BY EDUCATION

Gradually, but none the less surely, big business is coming to realize that the chief trouble-maker among workmen is strong drink, and just as surely as this conviction comes, a revolution will be evolved which will work out untold and even unanticipated benefits to employer and employe.

One of the big firms to which has recently come this arrest of thought is Cudahy Brothers Co., meat packers, of Cudahy, Wis. The following excerpt from a communication from the firm, under date of March 21, sets forth clearly their present attitude toward drink among their employes:

"Our company does not permit any alcoholic liquors inside the plant, and tries to discriminate against drinking men in our employment.

"We started this rule last winter. We were having a great deal of trouble on account of men being off duty, caused by excessive drinking. We have been doing all we could in an educational way to discourage drinking. We believe we are having some success, although it is a work that takes some time to bring about results."

Let us emphasize one means used by Cudahy Brothers Co., to discourage drinking, that is, the educational method. John Barleycorn poses as "a friend" of the drinking man. Show him up in his true light and the laboring man, unless already enslaved, will forsake him.

CRIME THE OUTGROWTH OF LIQUOR

The number of arrests in Newport News, Virginia, formerly averaged 450 to 550 monthly. In December, the holiday month, under prohibition, the number of arrests fell to 219, according to a statement made by the chief of police:

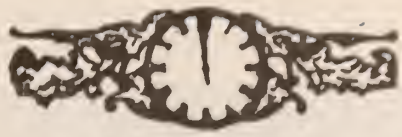
"There have been few serious criminal cases since the state went dry. Most of the murders, shootings and cuttings were the outgrowth of whisky, and with the going of whisky this class of crime has been lessened."

LIQUOR AND EFFICIENCY DO NOT MIX

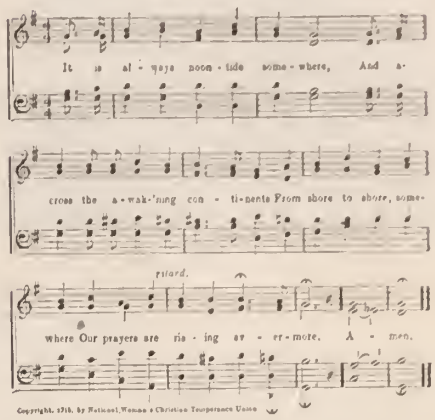
B. G. Royal, general superintendent of the Victor Talking Machine company, a concern which employs ten thousand men at Camden, N. J., gives this testimony:

"The company is firmly of the conviction that liquor and efficiency in business will not mix any more than will oil and water. Intoxicating liquor is the workingman's worst enemy; it robs him of his physical equipment, which is his most vital asset. It is often directly responsible for accidents that otherwise would be avoided. Non-indulgence in intoxicants means safety to the workmen; indulgence, jeopardy of one's safety. Even liquor in small quantities destroys the efficiency of the employes because it brings on a feeling of drowsiness and there is again the possibility of accident.

"The day has come when conservation of human energy must be seriously considered by large employers of labor, and by employes themselves. The European war has cost millions of human lives, and no one knows how many more millions will be sacrificed. Men are at a premium, and they will be in greater demand before this war ends. Hence it behooves us to give grave attention to this economic problem, so that industrial America shall continue to be able successfully to compete with all the world in all lines of industry."



TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



WHEN PRAYER IS NEEDED

Those who are much with the Lord need to pray much; and those who are little with the Lord need to pray much. Oxygen is needed in the blood of both the well and the ill. But the strenuous business man or the overworked housewife thinks that much prayer may properly be left to those whose work is more spiritual, and who have more time for it; while the distinctively religious worker constantly persuades himself that the very nature of his work makes him less in need of deliberate, time-consuming prayer than other folks. What a rebuke to both forms of mistake is found in this glimpse of the daily life of a tireless missionary, now well past seventy, whose whole life is given to serving the Lord, and whose duties are as onerous and as high-pressure as those of any American "captain of industry": "No matter how early the start or how cold and comfortless and hurried the journey-preparations, Dr. Corbett takes plenty of time to pray and has a deliberate strength-giving meeting—a 'morning watch' with his Lord—before all else." Men's "spiritual" work would be more blessed, and their "secular" work more effective, if this simple method of starting the day were as unvarying as the morning meal. Plenty of persons take time for prayer when it is convenient to do so. Few do it when it is inconvenient. But inconvenient prayer is the greatest time-saver and trouble-smoother there is.—Sunday School Times.

THE SALOON ITSELF RESPONSIBLE FOR THE COMING OF PROHIBITION

"The persistent breaking of the law by the liquor people, including the fact that most crime and vice is directly traceable to the saloon and its influence, is causing the general uprising against that institution seen in the vote of state after state for prohibition of the liquor traffic," remarks Nathan Cole, former speaker for the liquor interests. "There is not a respectable business that would not take warning from such events as have been recorded against the liquor business. But the liquor man seems blind to all ocular demonstrations and deaf to the protests of the people. He goes right on creating crime, debauchery and inefficiency until the people rise in their indignation and put him out of business. Then he shouts 'confiscation' and cries aloud for compensation, all unmindful of the fact that he has confiscated the money of the drinker and has never offered compensation to the starving wife and family of the drunkards he has made."

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes
May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

SUPERINTENDENTS

SOCIAL MEETINGS AND RED LETTER DAYS

MRS. MARY DAVIS TOMLINSON

At the last National W. C. T. U. Convention held in Indianapolis, Indiana, Miss Anna A. Gordon in her annual address recommended "that we revise our list of National W. C. T. U. Red Letter Days. Some of these sixteen days relate to vital forward movements of our organization and are quite universally observed; others, because of the time of year on which they come, are seldom utilized for public meetings and their purpose is thus defeated. I recommend that we discontinue July 21 as Loyal Temperance Legion Day and make September 28 our great day for the children and for The Young Crusader. July is a month when many local unions do not meet; white ribboners are away from home and very few can observe our summer Red Letter Days. The work among the children is of consummate importance. I recommend that Mothers' Day, January 3, be changed to the second Sunday in May, now observed by the nation as Mothers' Day, and that our membership week close on that date. I recommend a change in the name of our December 23 Red Letter Day to 'Crusade and Pioneers' Day.' In the quick step forward march of the W. C. T. U. today, our faces are toward the future. We can, however, utilize Crusade Day to pay our tribute of fervent gratitude not only to those who were our founders and early leaders but to many who blazed the way for us along difficult paths which are today highways toward nation-wide prohibition."

In the post-executive committee meeting these recommendations were considered and the motion carried that we continue July 21, the birthday of Miss Gordon, as L. T. L. Day. Mothers' Day, January 3, is changed to the second Sunday in May, now observed by the nation as Mothers' Day, and our membership week is to close on that date. The name of the Red Letter Day observed December 23 is changed to "Crusade and Pioneers' Day."

I am confident that the unions can observe Mothers' Day any time during the month of May, and the biographical sketch of Madam Willard, which contains many valuable suggestions to mothers, might be read with profit at these meetings.

While there is an unprecedented awakening in the consciences of men and women concerning National Constitutional Prohibition, we need to continue the social work, that the people in every community may be reached and urged to lend their influence in pushing forward the movement for universal prohibition.

I have been surprised to learn from some of the superintendents in prohibition states that the women have lost interest in social work. To the white ribboners in these most fortunate states, I would suggest that by means of social meetings you interest the women in the departments that need assistance. Read the appeals in THE UNION SIGNAL written by Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, our National superintendent of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors, and prepare articles on this department. Flower Mission and Relief work is well worth your endeavor to create sentiment among your friends. Read in your meetings leaflets on Medical Temperance, written by Mrs. Martha M. Allen, and send these to the physicians of your community.

Invite the missionary societies of the churches to meet your union in a social capacity and use the set of charts, "Relation of Temperance to Missions," prepared by Dr. L. C. Purington and Ella Gilbert Ives, which can be purchased at the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill. We should emphasize the department of Anti-Narcotics, preparing and reading papers upon the evils of tobacco. There is pressing need of forewarning mothers to carefully teach both daughters and sons the danger in using the cigaret, that they may not become victims of the habit.

Moral Education and Race Betterment is another department that can be made interesting and instructive and one that should claim our serious attention.

While evils exist there should be no relaxation on the part of any member of our W. C. T. U. organization, but rather a fervent desire to see righteousness exalted in this nation.

"Our success depends upon the strength of our purpose; and if we would make much progress we must use much diligence."

212 E. 7th St., Plainfield, N. J.

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR

MRS. LUCIA FAXON ADDITON

The question comes from various sections, "Is not the Labor department organized essentially for social service?" I answer, "Most assuredly. Its work is entirely that of social service of a strictly constructive nature."

We are interested in this service for three hundred different groups of working people, with that number of occupations represented. Our first thought is to bring this mighty army of workers close to the Master. Let us, therefore, not neglect the noon-tide hour of prayer for them: "God bless us, every one." (The brotherhood prayer.) Then may we not have a trysting time at nightfall when petitions shall ascend especially for those who are doing night work. Work during that time by women, girls and boys is a menace to them morally and physically.

It is time now to begin to plan for the cultivation of vacant lots. Many cities are waking up to the possibilities for good in this movement. It helps the poor man, or the worker on half time, or the underpaid, to raise vegetables for their families, thus reducing the high cost of living. Set the ball rolling in your community. Interest your Public Welfare or Social Service commissioner.

Plan the systematic distribution of department leaflets monthly, in car barns, police stations, firehouses, etc. Keep in close touch with the work of the police matrons, as they aid women and girls. Trace up any and all questionable advertisements for working girls. There are many decoy ads that need to be investigated. Watch for them.

Get scrap books of medium size and fill them with up-to-date matter. The campaign issues of THE UNION SIGNAL furnish abundant material. Place these books in barber shops and other places where men wait. Put wall-pockets filled with literature giving true facts concerning temperance and labor in all mills, factories, car barns, etc.

There is one special class of wage-earners that has been brought forcibly to our attention just now—the longshoremen. Charles B. Barnes, an expert in social research, has just published a report on the life of the longshoremen for the Russell Sage Foundation. It characterizes the longshoremen as men, enumerates the conditions of labor that affect them, analyzes their relations to their employers, and tells of their efforts to cooperate with one another in trying to improve their lot in life. Mr. Barnes reveals the harm of intermittent employment of longshoremen and tells of the extraordinarily long, continuous periods of labor that often result in exhaustion and physical breakdown. He describes the lack of safeguards against accidents to these loaders and unloaders of great steamships and lets it be known that most steamship companies provide no place where the men may wait while no work is going on, or may sit and eat during their lunch hour. As a consequence they are driven to the only places where they are welcome and not treated as trespassers—the many saloons of the waterfront. I appeal to every state having any longshoremen or stevedores at work to see to it that coffee rooms are opened for the benefit of these men. They can be made self-supporting. The men do not want charity, they pay for their drinks in the saloons, why not give them a chance to pay for warmth, comfort and hot harmless drinks. I earnestly urge that this effort be set on foot at once.

New leaflets on "A Living Wage and an Eight Hour Day," "Vocational Guidance Trade Schools vs. Blind Alleys" and "Social Service Through Substitutional Work" are issued. Watch for announcement in THE UNION SIGNAL.

Hotel Seward, Portland, Ore.

MEDICAL TEMPERANCE

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN

The new, so-called "bone dry" prohibitory amendment laws are showing the need for greater effort in this department. All of these laws permit the sale of alcohol for medicinal purposes, with some restrictions. Were it necessary or helpful to recovery to use alcohol as medicine it would be wrong to seek to remove the legal permission for such use. But, as an ever-increasing number of skilful physicians have laid aside alcoholic liquors as remedial agencies; as leading hospitals are using very little liquor; as death-rates in fevers, pneumonia, smallpox, diphtheria, etc., show a much smaller mortality when no alcohol is given to the patients, it is the duty of temperance workers to try to overcome the prejudice and ignorance which exempt the medical whisky bottle from the provisions of the "bone dry" laws. People are not yet ready for this exemption, nor will they ever be ready without more education on this question. Prejudice and ignorance can only be overcome by painstaking effort in setting forth the truth as to the non-necessity and the positive harmfulness of alcoholic liquors in the treatment of disease, and this truth is plainly taught in the literature of this department. If people learn that they have a much better chance for recovery from illness without alcohol than with it they will soon cease to demand a continuance of its sale for the benefit of the sick. It is simply the nerve-deadening effect of alcohol which makes people think it is doing good, but the public generally does not yet know this fact.

Another weakness in prohibition laws is that they do not forbid the sale of alcoholic patent medicines. The Baltimore Sun of February 24 reported that 700 bottles of Hostetter's Bitters were sold in Danville and Schoolfield, Va., during a recent Saturday and Sunday. The paper did not name the medicine, but inquiry from the police of Danville revealed the name of the medicine used to take the place of whisky. The Sun said that much drunkenness was resulting from its sale. A Maine newspaper a short time ago published the statement that Tanlac is coming into that state by the car-load. A state can never be "bone dry" while such alcoholic nostrums are permitted free sale.

Vinol is a preparation sold considerably in dry territory, some say. It contains 18.8 per cent of alcohol, according to the reports of the Massachusetts state board of health. The claims made in its advertising are absurd. Wampole's Compound was listed as containing 20.05 per cent alcohol, and Waterbury's Cod-Liver Compound, like Vinol, was said to be without any oil. These patent medicines are named here by request of persons desiring knowledge regarding them.

The liquor traffic is quick to make use of the few medical men of good standing who are now willing to align themselves in favor of alcohol. A recent letter in the New York Times from Dr. Beverly Robinson, and a statement from four Baltimore physicians, both letter and statement defending alcohol and attacking prohibition, have been printed as circulars and widely circulated by the anti-prohibition forces. These circulars are calculated to do much harm as the physicians writing them are prominent men.

The W. C. T. U. has an abundance of literature to counteract such efforts of the liquor traffic and its sympathizing medical friends, and this literature quotes a great many physicians of unquestioned standing, not simply five.

But, REMEMBER, the liquor traffic is not letting the opinions of these five pro-alcohol physicians lie on shelves unused. They are making these statements tell in the fight by sending them out broadcast. The W. C. T. U. is allowing its own splendid literature to lie on shelves instead of circulating it. Even the free literature for physicians which I offered in THE UNION SIGNAL in January has not been called for so largely as it should be. Why? The women say they have so much other work to do. Is there anything more helpful to the prohibition cause than to drive out from people's minds the old delusions as to the helpfulness of alcoholic liquors in illness? This delusion has some hold in W. C. T. U. and Anti-Saloon ranks, as well as in general society, and it must be driven out by the faithful, enlightened ones, or we shall never reach the goal of the W. C. T. U., which is the entire disuse of alcohol internally.

I now repeat my offer of free literature and add to it. I will send free to all who will use it the "Question for Physicians" and the leaflet to go with it, "Russian Physicians Oppose Alcohol." This last named publication is a most excellent leaflet which our National president, Miss Gordon, asked me to issue for use among physicians. In sending for it please state the number you desire to use. I should like very much if you would add to what I offer free an equal number of the "New Evidence Against Alcohol," which is 40 cents per 100. Even a prominent man like Dr. Beverly Robinson needs the information in "New Evidence" as he calls alcohol a stimulant in his anti-prohibition letter.

I also make this offer to induce work in this department. Every one sending for one dollar's worth of leaflets, or more, will receive one to two hundred or more leaflets extra, free. Those making small orders will receive in proportion.

New leaflets for 1917 are those named in the foregoing, and two others, "Some Things Women Should Know About Alcohol," and "Don't Drink Coca Cola." These are about the best two leaflets this department has ever published. They are 40 cents per 100. The high price of paper and printing make this price reasonable. The new Coca Cola leaflet contains some startling testimony against this drug drink. May I urge the free use of this leaflet for the summer season?

There are about fifty leaflets issued by this department all telling something you want to know. Five of them are handsome picture leaflets. Some are on patent medicines; one is a story, "Mrs. Clapsaddle's Experience," 50 cents per 100. Every union should have the sample package of these leaflets at 30 cents.

Those wishing to raise money for purchasing literature will find the little play, "The Sick Baby," and the motion song, "My Temperance Dolly," great helps. "The Sick Baby" is very entertaining and teaches a much needed temperance lesson. It costs ten cents and the "Dolly" is five cents.

Remember the fine leaflet, "Save the Babies" for baby week. This leaflet has received high commendation from good authorities. It is 35 cents per 100.

For any literature of this department send to Mrs. M. M. Allen, Forest Hills, Long Island, N. Y., or to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill.

NOTE

For free leaflets mentioned above, be sure to send to Mrs. M. M. Allen, Forest Hills, Long Island, N. Y. Do not send for free leaflets to National W. C. T. U. Headquarters.

The price of "Don't Drink Coca Cola" is listed in catalogue at 25 cents by error of superintendent. It is 40 cents per 100, a larger leaflet than those at 25 cents.

BULBS 50 High Grade Flowering Bulbs Oxalis, Begonia, Gloxinia, Gladiolus, other kinds. Asparagus Fern. All postpaid. Send 25c

Old Homestead Nursery Co., Round Pond, Me.

BABY WEEK CAMPAIGN

MRS. FRANCES WAITE LEITER, National Superintendent Department of Health

A Circular of Information has come from the Federal Children's Bureau under the United States Department of Labor, regarding Baby Week Campaign for 1917.

May 1 to 6 is announced as the time for the Baby Week Campaign, although it may be held at another time and still be considered a part of the national movement. Copies of this bulletin, giving the purpose of the campaign, and methods by which it may be carried out, can be obtained free by addressing the Children's Bureau, Washington, D. C.

This year's campaign will deal with the problems not of infancy only but also of children up to five or six years of age. The subject of maternal care is pertinently connected therewith.

More than two thousand places reported work done in the 1916 campaign, which number, the Bureau estimates, represented probably half the work done.

Seven hundred of these places were villages and rural districts, showing what well directed effort can accomplish. In some cases, where the full time celebration was impossible, a "Baby Day" resulted in good and promised better plans for the future.

The importance of complete birth registration is emphasized. The circular of information referred to tells where to secure helps and lantern slides, for conducting an exhibit.

Unions will please bear in mind that while any society or club may take the initiative in inaugurating such a campaign, to accomplish the largest possible results, it should be a community effort, enlisting all societies and local officials.

Missionary Charts

Showing the relation of temperance to missions

Africa—Three.
Effect of Liquor Traffic on Native Races.
India—One.
Responsibility of the Christian Church to Non-Christian Religions.
China—Two.
By a Chinese Artist. Effects of Nicotine and Opium Habits.
Bulgaria—One.
Results of the Temperance Work of One Missionary.
North American Indian—One.
Under the Temperance Gospel.
A set of eight charts in color 11x14 in. Complete set in envelope, with key. Price, $1.00.
These sets are not broken.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. KATE CUSHMAN, Claremont, N. H., for over thirty-three years an active worker in local, county and state organizations, having several times been a delegate to National Conventions.

MRS. M. D. TURN, a charter member and treasurer of the Middle Smithfield (Pa.) union. Mrs. Turn was a devoted white ribboner and an earnest worker in all lines of Christian activity.

MRS. R. C. HALL, president of Rockland (Me.) W. C. T. U. for more than twenty-five years. Mrs. Hall was also for more than twenty years president of the Knox county organization and superintendent of Press and Sunday school work. It will be difficult to fill her place in church and temperance work in Rockland and in Maine.

MR. MELVILLE C. DAVIS, Washington, D. C., husband of the local superintendent of the Stevens Memorial Fund and Red Letter Day departments. Mr. and Mrs. Davis have been subscribers and readers of THE UNION SIGNAL since 1882.

MRS. MARIA POOR, Campbell, Calif., for nine years president of the local union. Mrs. Poor was a subscriber to THE UNION SIGNAL from the publication of its first number until her death, which occurred on the anniversary of the promotion of Frances Willard.

THE NEW MANAGER

MABEL DUFFORD PINKERTON

"Were you, or were you not, in the saloon named 'The Upper Ten' last Saturday afternoon?"

The senior partner's voice was stern, and Clark Davison visibly paled at his words; but his eyes met the older man's with a straight gaze, as he replied, "I was."

"That will be all, Mr. Davison," said Hesketh, and the door closed upon the latest candidate for the new managership under Hesketh, Stone and Company.

"Well, well, I am surprised, greatly surprised." Mr. Stone's voice at last broke the gloomy silence. We were all surprised, and disappointed.

"I must confess that I also am surprised," responded John Hesketh, his white head a little bowed. "I had high hopes for young Davison. I never knew of any lapse of this sort upon his part, until this. But I had it upon the testimony of an eye-witness, albeit, a—ahem—a somewhat erratic one—that he was seen coming out of 'The Upper Ten' in company with two half-intoxicated young men. My —ahem—my sister-in-law, Mrs. Clackenham, who is visiting at my home, chanced to tell, at dinner last evening, of having seen him as she was passing along that street. She recognized him from having met him here at our offices that same morning. I must confess that I would not have credited the report, if we had not heard the young man's own admission."

"I'm sorry," said Mr. Stone. "That's the third possible man for a new managership that drink has got away from us this year."

He stopped with an odd look which I understood better a few minutes later. But here was an opportunity I couldn't resist. "I hope," I put in, "that the next time this firm is asked to take a stand on the question, you will consent, Mr. Hesketh, to a clear statement in favor of prohibition."

Mr. Hesketh looked at me in a strange, pained way. "Possibly, possibly," he said, as he arose to leave the room.

"You were decidedly rubbing it in, that time, Woodland," Stone said to me, after the senior partner had gone.

"How so?" I asked. I still felt a little belligerent, and a bit doubtful, too, remembering that straight look of young Davison's. Yet there seemed no room for question, after his clear confession.

"Why," Stone was saying, "haven't you heard that Jack Hesketh, the chief's only son, is a drinking, carousing young scapegrace? It's his father's greatest grief, I believe, that he can't bring his boy into the business here."

"I didn't know," I managed to stammer, and with that we both started for the door.

I had recently come to the central office of Hesketh, Stone and Company from a Western branch—the very one, in fact, to which we had expected to send Clark Davison. I was the youngest, newest partner; and I was fast learning that there was much more of the history of the firm than appeared on its books, although mighty little to its discredit. Mr. Stone was at his desk telephoning, as I passed through the outer office on my way home. I could not help surmising from what I overheard that it was Polly Hesketh with whom he was talking, and that he was telling her of Clark Davison's failure to receive the Western appointment. My quick temper blazed up at the thought that Stone seemed to be trying to help his cause with Miss Polly by such a means.

"Big Business" Has No Use for an Employe Who Patronizes the Saloon

For I was boyish enough to have listened to the undercurrent of gossip among the clerks and stenographers in the office, to the effect that K. Stone, "good old K," as he was surreptitiously called, was a suitor for Miss Polly Hesketh's hand, and that Clark Davison was his most dangerous rival. Doubtless, I reflected, Stone's seeming anxiety to advance young Davison was due to his desire to have the younger man at a safer distance.

While I waited for an elevator, Miss Morgen, of our telephone exchange, joined me. I had known her when we were youngsters. I like to think that, but for this early acquaintance, she would have been more discreet in her narrations of office and personal information.

"Miss Hesketh called 'K' just now," she volunteered. "Told him she must see him at once about Mr. Davison's case. Gee! Won't he rejoice to have her try to get that place for Clark D? I don't think."

I went home feeling slightly comforted. I had been at least partly wrong about Stone's 'phone calls. Perhaps Miss Morgen was right in her surmises. But even Polly Hesketh would not be able, I knew, to bring about a deviation from the firm's ironclad rule against employing drinking men.

Next day was one of tension in our offices. There was trouble in the air. Clark Davison was at his desk; but if his everyday output of work had averaged no better than that day's, he never would have been mentioned for the Western branch managership. Mr. Stone's was the only serene face in the office. He was in his place on time, as always. His imperturbable mind seemed to run with as little regard for outside conditions as the works of the office clock.

Mr. Hesketh did not come down till afternoon. Evidently he found nothing of importance in the forenoon's accumulation of mail, for he had no more than time to glance through it when our respective desk buzzers called Stone and me to the inner office.

While we crossed the room to our accustomed chairs, Mr. Hesketh turned to his 'phone. "Get me Miss Hesketh, in the rest room down stairs," he directed Miss Morgen. And then, to Miss Polly, "We are ready for you and Jack, my dear."

While we waited, the senior partner swung about facing us. "I find that I was perhaps a bit hasty in regard to Mr. Davison yesterday, gentlemen," he said. "Possibly I should have asked him for an explanation, though I am quite sure he would not have given it. It occurs that I have some additional evidence in the matter." He spoke with his usual calm dignity, and I found my jumping nerves somehow quieted thereby. This was a chief who would do what was just, I felt.

When Miss Polly and her brother had entered, and the latter had been presented to me, Mr. Hesketh rang for Davison, and gave orders that no one else be admitted to the room. Then he turned to his daughter.

"Now, my dear, will you repeat to us here what you told me this morning in regard to Mr. Davison?"

Clark Davison looked surprised and uncomfortable. I fancy he had no warning of what was to come.

Polly Hesketh's hand trembled a little, but she had a good deal of her father's poise, and she did not falter or hesitate.

"Last Saturday afternoon," she began, "I had an appointment to meet Aunt Clackenham at Brent's at four, and my shortest way there was past 'The Upper Ten.' It was nearly four, and I was hurrying, when I passed there. As I came near the door, I saw three young men in front of me. Two of them had the third between them, and were pulling him toward the saloon door. He didn't want to go in, but they dragged him through the swinging door, and I saw his feet slide along the tiled floor before the door closed, and once he turned so that I saw his face. He looked horrified at the idea of going in there. I glanced around for an officer, but there wasn't any; and anyway I couldn't have called one, because—because just then I saw who they all were. The middle one was Mr. Davison. I suppose Aunt must have come along just in time to see them as they came out. I didn't know what to do when she told of it at dinner the other night, but as soon as I knew how important it was I talked with Kenneth—Mr. Stone—about it, and he said he'd talk to Jack and see if he wouldn't agree to help, and—he did."

She stopped. I guessed by the look on Davison's face that he had supposed it was Miss Polly who had told tales of him. Her father turned to his son, who had the grace to flush deeply.

"I—my memory of last Saturday afternoon is rather foggy," he confessed, "but I am sure Polly has the right of it. I was one of the two who dragged Clark into 'The Upper Ten.' We were frat brothers in college, you know, Clark and I. Not that he behaved as I did—he was always trying to pull us up, my chum and me, and get us to go straight. So when we came up to him there on the street Saturday, it came into our befuddled heads that it would be a fine stunt to get him into that saloon and make him take a drink. The bartender knew us, and he was more than willing to help. I'm sure it was Clark's first drink of whisky, and I think he managed to spill the most of that. I wouldn't have done old Clark any harm for the world—wouldn't have thought of such a cad stunt if I'd been sober. It was just like 'Auntie Clack' to see old Clark and tell on him, and never

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

TWO HEROES

Two heroes do the world's insistent work;
One rushes in the battle's blood and murk,
And, knowing the foeman flies,
In one rich moment dies.

The other, on a path he long has feared,
By bugle-blast and drum-beat all uncheered,
At duty's chill behest
Gives life to want and waste.

For him, the battle hero, high we pile
The sculptured stone; his ringing name, the while,
In praises and in songs
Its lyric life prolongs.

For the other, we fashion a heaven of late reward;
His life, all dark, and desolate, and hard,
Down to oblivion goes,—
Unless some great God knows!

—Richard Watson Gilder.

From west to east, from south to north
We boys and girls are marching forth
To lay the liquor traffic low.
With happy hearts we are afield,
We're boys and girls who never yield,
The liquor traffic now must go!

Chorus:
In Nineteen Twenty comes the day,
Comes the children's happy day;
In Nineteen Hundred Twenty
There'll be prohibition plenty
When Columbia drives the drink away.

—A. A. G.

THE NEW MANAGER

(Continued from Page Twelve)

notice my chum and me. But I'm quitting the booze. From this on it's the water wagon for mine."

Davison was at Jack Hesketh's side as he finished his somewhat stumbling confession, and made his sincere if slangy pledge. "Good for you, old man," he cried, his hand on young Hesketh's shoulder. "I'd lose a dozen jobs to hear you say that—and I know you'll stick to it."

Jack was on his feet, reaching for his old friend's ready hand. None of us could think of anything to say. It was like John Hesketh that he got hold of himself first.

"And now, Mr. Davison," he said, in his quiet voice, "if you will accept my apology as readily as you have my son's, I take it that these gentlemen will concur with me in asking you to take charge of our Western branch." Stone and I nodded with quite unnecessary vigor.

"How soon can you be ready to go?" Mr. Hesketh questioned Davison.

It was the new manager's turn to hesitate. "I — it depends — I must consult some one else, sir, some one whom I hope to take with me. But I am sure I can be ready very soon."

"Taking some one with you? Congratulations, young man!" Again Mr. Hesketh was the first to speak. Report to us as soon as you are sure when you can start. You know enough of the business to understand why we desire haste. Meanwhile, consider your time your own—you will need to—ahem—make preparations. We will see you again tomorrow morning."

The senior partner was making it easy for Davison, whose strain-wearied nerves were quite apparent. He took advantage of the implied dismissal, and was at the door before any of the rest of us could add our congratulations. He turned there, with the smile that had helped to make us all his friends. "I thank you, all of you," he said with a bit of a choke in his voice, and was gone.

Stone and I were about to follow, but the chief detained us with a word. "Gentlemen," he said, "I have a request to make. I have said nothing to my son on the subject, but if you and he will consent, as soon as he has had a reasonable time to prove the sincerity of the pledge you heard him make today, I would like him to have a place here in our offices—a beginner's place, you understand."

All that Jack Hesketh really said was one word—"Dad!" But it conveyed all he meant.

Stone was the first of the firm to answer, as was his right. "Mr. President," he said, "I move that Mr. Hesketh, Jr., be given the railway clerkship, which is now vacant, at once."

My vote was a hearty consent, and the chief thanked us with a manner that showed us how deeply he was touched. I may add that John Hesketh, Jr., has Clark Davison's old desk now.

As we left the inner office that bewildering day, my mind, hitherto too busy with other matters, reverted to the tangled love affairs of Stone, Davison, and Polly Hesketh. I was not left to puzzle over them very long, however. Again Miss Morgen joined me at the elevator.

"What do you think?" she gasped. "Miss Polly and 'K' are engaged. They're back there talking now—and I couldn't help listening in a little this noon when they were 'phoning. Clark Davison is just a college friend of hers, that's all. And Mr. Davison's engaged, too. It's a girl out in Englewood. I just got her on the wire for him; and she says she'll go West with him whenever he's ready. Gee! It all comes out like a story in a magazine."

There is but one thing more to be added to this story. Last week a representative of the "Dry City" campaign committee called at our offices, and John Hesketh himself put the firm name to the list of those companies willing to support prohibition.

FUNNYGRAPHS

The prodigal son had just sneaked in the back way, between two days.

"Owing to the greediness of the beef trust," explained the old man, "we are entirely out of fatted calf, but here's a can-opener. Get busy." — Indianapolis Star.

"My brother bought a motor here last week," said an angry man to the salesman that stepped up to greet him, "and he said if anything broke you would supply him with new parts."

"Certainly," said the salesman. "What does he want?"

"He wants two deltoid muscles, a couple of kneecaps, one elbow, and about half a yard of cuticle," said the man, "and he wants them at once."—Christian Register.

American people have a very high appreciation of the humor of Englishmen, and have been specially tickled by a story Colonel Cody used to tell. He said that some years ago an Englishman who had never been in the West before was his guest. They were riding through a Rocky Mountain cañon one day, when suddenly a tremendous gust of wind came swooping down upon them and actually carried the Englishman clean off the wagon-seat. After he had been picked up, he combed the sand and gravel out of his whiskers and said:

"I say! I think you overdo ventilation in this country!"—Tit-Bits.

Recruit: "If you was to put the lid on, you wouldn't get so much dust in the soup."

Cook: "See, here, me lad, your business is to serve your country."

Recruit: "Yus, but not to eat it!"

—Epworth Herald.

"So you think Hobbs is miserly."

"Miserly! Why he makes a point of going out to lunch early before his appetite comes on, so that he can save money."

WANT A BOY

"The saloon has to have two millions of young recruits a year to keep its business running."

I want a boy at my saloon,
A boy has died, and now there's room
For a new boy to start right in
To live a life of shame and sin.

I want a boy with a fine home,
A boy who has a good income;.
I want a boy with many friends,
For without boys my business ends.

I want a boy, some mother's boy,
Who is her comfort and her joy;
Such boys to me are worth the most,
For they are leaders of a host.

I want a boy who's not afraid
To start right on the downward grade,
A boy who's always very brave,
For he must fill a drunkard's grave.

—Record of Christian Work.
(Author unknown)

USE EVERY OPPORTUNITY
to wield your influence
AGAINST THE CIGARET

Anti-Cigaret Seals, gummed Stickers for Letters, Packages, Leaflets; three designs, with following sentiments:

1. Nothing will put a boy in touch with the saloon quicker than a cigaret.
2. The boy who smokes cigarets need not be anxious about his future; he has none.
3. Cigaret smoking is a mark of degeneracy.

Each seal, boxed, 25 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

W. C. T. U. ACTIVITIES

A bequest of $500 has been received by the Los Angeles (Calif.) W. C. T. U. from the estate of the late Charles M. Stimson, wealthy capitalist and philanthropist. According to the provisions of the will, the bequest is to be used in securing and maintaining prohibition in Los Angeles and California.

Sixty boys are lined up for contest work in Los Angeles. A grand gold contest, with only boys participating, will be held at the state convention. A boys' orchestra will furnish the music, assisted by a boys' chorus and a boy whistler. Boys are to usher and have charge of the devotionals.

Frances Willard Memorial Day was observed by a joint meeting of the unions of Reno and Sparks, Nevada, at the home of the state superintendent of Red Letter Days. A goodly number were present and an excellent program was rendered. In addition to Frances Willard, whose heavenly birthday occurred in February, two other noted February patriots were remembered at this time: Abraham Lincoln and George Washington. Tributes to the three, in the order named, were given by Mrs. Patrick, a prominent club woman, Mrs. Trout, wife of the pastor of the Congregational church, and Mrs. Franzman, a prominent civic worker. The symposium was led by Mrs. Nora R. Linville, state W. C. T. U. president. A collection of eight dollars for the Memorial Fund was received.

Miss Flora E. Strout, World's white ribbon missionary to Burma, is leaving Rangoon in April on a furlough. Because of the uncertainty of travel at this time the date of her arrival in the United States is not definitely known.

Mrs. Mary Harris Armor was a speaker at THE UNION SIGNAL Day meeting of the Macon (Ga.) W. C. T. U. "Facts are the fuel that kindle temperance fires," she said. "Information must precede inspiration. For reliable, conservative, readable, up-to-date information about temperance and prohibition THE UNION SIGNAL is by far the best paper I ever read—and I have read most of those published in the country. I have read every issue of THE UNION SIGNAL during the past twenty years."

The fifty or more members of the W. C. T. U. who are also members of the Mulberry Street Methodist church, where the meeting was held, had prepared a pleasant surprise at the end of the program, a birthday party for Mrs. Armor, who is a member of both this union and church, and her natal day was celebrated in a charming manner.

The W. C. T. U. of the District of Columbia, in celebrating the passage of the bill which will make the District dry after November 1, next, prepared a window display which was exhibited at 1329 14th st. A prohibition map of the United States, framed in white ribbon, occupied a central position, temperance placards being grouped about it. Flags and festoons of white ribbon were in evidence, also cards giving the names of the prohibition states.

Saratoga county (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. held an enthusiastic mid-winter institute March 6, 1917, at Saratoga Springs under the leadership of Mrs. Jennie E. Wright, county president. Short speeches were the order of the day with every number on the program promptly filled. Of special interest was the valuable and informing paper presented by Dr. Hirst of the Homestead Sanitarium on "The Relation of Alcohol to Tuberculosis and Other Diseases." Suffrage was well presented by Mrs. Coleman of Troy, a representative of the New York Woman Suffrage party. Mrs. Ida H. Read, a former president of the Vermont W. C. T. U. and now leading the local forces in Saratoga, was the gracious hostess and all were inspired to new zeal in the work.

At the large and enthusiastic meetings which are now being conducted in East Orange, N. J., by the Lyon evangelistic movement, the temperance cause is being constantly brought to the front. On a recent afternoon the county W. C. T. U., upon invitation, attended a meeting in a body. Carrying their banners, the women marched to the tabernacle where they gave their rally cry and sang "Some Glad Day." They were welcomed by Mrs. Lyon, an earnest temperance worker and white ribboner, and listened to a stirring address by Mr. Lyon, in which he paid a high tribute to Frances Willard, whose success he attributed to a vision in early life of a land free from the liquor curse. On the following Sunday Mr. Lyon preached his celebrated "booze" sermon to men.

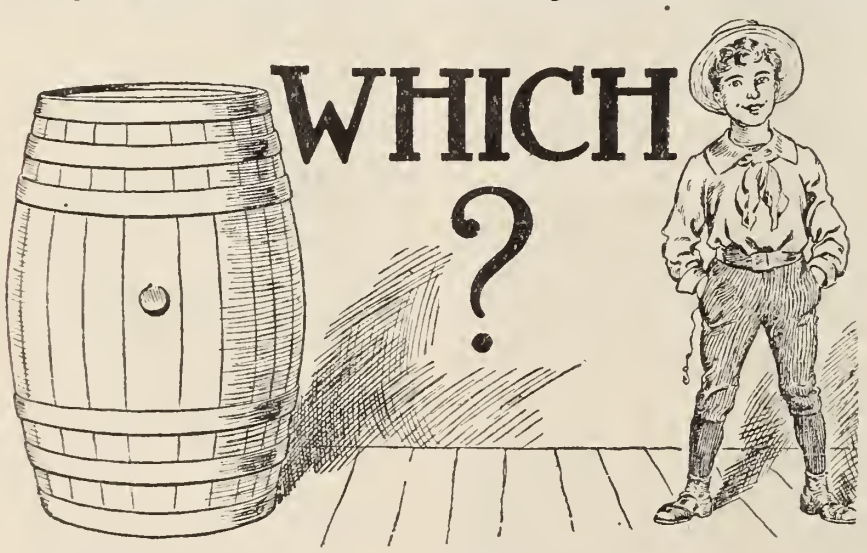
Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer and lecturer, has just completed a tour of Center county, Pennsylvania. At Boalsburg, the only unorganized territory in which she spoke, she organized a union with a membership of twenty-three, including four honorary members, with Mrs. S. C. Stover as president. She also organized two Y. P. B.'s, one at Millheim and one at Rebersburg, and paved the way for two other Branches which will be organized very shortly by the county secretary. The county membership was increased by 173, and a generous bonus added to the county treasury after all expenses had been deducted from the collections received. Mrs. Parsels also conducted an institute at Center Hall, making in all thirteen addresses at eleven different places.

The Congregational, Methodist, Episcopal and Baptist churches of Norwich, N. Y., on March 8 merged their mid-week prayer meetings into a Frances Willard memorial service. The W. C. T. U. attended in force. Mrs. S. E. Johns, president of the local union and for thirteen years county president, was in charge of the meeting. She spoke most eloquently of the life and service of Miss Willard. Other numbers on the program were the reading, "How Still She Stands," by Mrs. Fred Ames, county superintendent of Medal Contests; "An Appeal to Voters," by Mrs. June Ferris, and a forceful and impressive talk concerning the economic aspect of prohibition by the pastor of the Baptist church.

The annual spring institute of the Wells county (Ind.) W. C. T. U. convened at Liberty Center, March 15-16. The county president, Mrs. Theodore Hearsh, and a goodly number of the officers and members of the local unions were in attendance. Miss Martha Speicher, institute leader, was an inspiration to her hearers, arousing new enthusiasm for the temperance cause. Plans of work for the year, and a study of the different departments occupied one afternoon. The second afternoon was given over to delightful and instructive addresses on systematic giving, suffrage, etc., with a general discussion at the close. A medal contest was held, and on the closing evening Miss Speicher gave a stirring address.

Cartoon Leaflets

Containing Forceful Prohibition Truths and Arguments in Pictured Facts



The Water Wagon.
A City's Account with John Barleycorn.
What Two Beers a Day Will Buy.
When Will Uncle Sam Wake Up?
Farmers, Attention!
His Days Are Numbered.
On to Washington!
A National Duty.
A Lesson in Arithmetic.
The Deadly Upas Tree.
Vote for the Children!
The Liquor Traffic's Vacuum Pocket Cleaner.
Farmer and Saloonkeeper.
Boy or Beer Barrel?
Weighed in the Balance.
Accusing Fingers.
The Brewer's Slaves.
Your Boy Next?
As Big Business Sees It.
National Patchwork.
A Flag for Americanization Day.
Clubbing Him Off the Earth.
The Big Cities Problem.
The Drink Traffic and Revenue.
Spent Annually—A Comparison.
Is It a Square Deal?
The World on the Water Wagon.
What Mother and Children Get.
The Trouble-Maker.

Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

ARKANSAS LEGISLATURE MAKES RECORD IN HUMANE LEGISLATION

Special Correspondence

The present session of the Arkansas legislature will go down in history as an especially notable one because of the many good laws of a social nature that have been enacted. Mrs. Minnie U. Rutherford Fuller, president of the Arkansas W. C. T. U., has spent weeks at the state capital furthering legislation in which the W. C. T. U. is interested, and with a few exceptions these measures were successful.

In addition to the "bone dry" and primary suffrage bills there were enacted a mothers' pension law, a compulsory education bill, one admitting women to the bar, measures providing for a state charity hospital, an institution for the feebleminded, a girls' and a boys' industrial school, a state board of charities and correction, appropriations for state aid to high schools and for university extension work under the Smith-Lever act, improved vital statistics, and amendments to the child labor law, bringing it in line with the federal child labor law. There were still other measures enacted in which the W. C. T. U. was interested, although it did not work for them so directly. The calling of a constitutional convention is considered one of the best legislative acts. Some excellent measures to relieve the finances of the state were passed, among them a loan that will put the state on a cash basis. A bill to repeal the anti-cigaret law was defeated, while the red light injunction and abatement bill died on the house calendar. Under another law, just enacted, a commission to study the state's illiteracy and make recommendations to the next session of the legislature has been appointed. This will result in some form of adult education, it is hoped.

There has been an unusual amount of interest in the legislation passed. The suffrage jubilee mass meeting was one of the most enthusiastic gatherings of any kind ever attended by the writer. The governor pledged his aid for suffrage in the new constitution to the extent of "stumping the state" for it. The "bone dry" law is being well enforced.

DELAWARE'S DRY LEGISLATION

"Every temperance measure proposed at the present session of the legislature has passed," wires Mrs. Lena S. Messick, president of the Delaware W. C. T. U. As mentioned heretofore, the first temperance bill to receive favorable action was the anti-shipping measure, prohibiting the shipment of alcoholic beverages from wet to dry counties.

The latest measures to pass are the re-submission bills for rural Newcastle and the city of Wilmington, and the bottle repealer law. All these measures are certain to receive the signature of Governor Townsend.

NATIONAL CONFERENCE OF CHARITIES AND CORRECTION, PITTSBURGH, PA., JUNE 6-13

The conference at Pittsburgh will continue for one week. Thirty-five hundred delegates are expected to attend. The president is Frederic Almy, secretary of the Charity Organization Society of Buffalo. The prevention of human distress through the operation of all sorts of agencies has been adopted as the main topic of the meeting.

The well-known tendency toward emphasis of the religious basis of social work at the National Conference of Charities and Correction appears in a meeting to be devoted to "The Gathering of Moral Forces." This will occur under the chairmanship of Robert A. Woods of Boston, the author of a number of valuable articles on the liquor question in The Survey. One of the leading speakers will be Rev. Charles Stelzle of New York.

Thomas Mott Osborne of Auburn, New York, is chairman of the division on corrections. A discussion of alcohol and drug inebriety is scheduled to occur in the proceedings of the committee on mental hygiene.

NEEDED! CAN YOU HELP?

With at least six states in definite state-wide campaigns, and the resolution submitting the question of National Constitutional Prohibition to the legislatures of the several states practically sure of passing the new Congress, the time has come for a forward move along publicity lines.

THE NATIONAL W. C. T. U. NEEDS FUNDS

at once to make possible the sending of free plate matter to newspapers in the campaign states.

EVERY STATE IS IN A CAMPAIGN FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

and should have this educational matter put before the voters through the secular press. Sufficient funds should be forthcoming from the friends of the cause to make this possible.

THE NEWSPAPERS ARE READY TO CO-OPERATE

by giving their space freely but plates must be paid for if advantage is taken of this generosity. Friends of the cause will be glad to make possible the entering of this open door.

Contributions, large or small, from men or women, members or non-members of the W. C. T. U., will be gratefully acknowledged.

The liquor trade has not only been sending out free plates but has been paying thousands of dollars for advertising space in the newspapers. Shall it have a monopoly of this form of education?

Make all remittances payable to the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Indicate the fact that your gift is for the publicity campaign.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

PROGRAMS

A group from which to select an evening's entertainment for the

W. C. T. U.,
Y. P. B.,
L. T. L.

Price

The Saving of Daddy. A Service of Song, Della F. Wentworth. (Requires a reader and a quartet or chorus) ..... .10

The Man Who Spoiled the Music. A Service of Song, Rev. Mark Guy Pearse. (Requires a reader and a quartet or chorus) ..... .12

Consecration of the Colors. Patriotic Program, Nellie H. Bradley. (Characters: Uncle Sam, Aunt Columbia and a number of young people) .10

A Temperance Tally-Ho Trip. (A Game for Loyal Temperance Legioners), Nellie H. Bradley..... .10

A Sick Baby. (For 12 little girls and one boy) ..... .10

My Temperance Dolly. (Motion song for 6 or 8 little girls)..... .05

The Trial of Prince Nicotine, Mrs. A. J. Bradbury. (For 35 boys).... .10

A Lark at Nonotuck Hall, Ruth E. Chew. (For 7 high school or college girls) ..... .20

Uncle Sam's Party, Julia F. Deane. (Characters: Uncle Sam, Aunt Columbia and 48 states)..... .10

At the White Queen's Court, Clara B. Drake. (Requires young women, young men, and chorus composed of representatives of W. C. T. U., Y. P. B., L. T. L., and other societies) .10

Glimpses of Fifty Countries—A Happy Evening with the World's W. C. T. U., Elizabeth P. and Anna A. Gordon. (Requires 27 women, 27 children, a quartet or chorus)..... .10

Prohibition Program, Anna A. Gordon. (Requires an L. T. L. of 30 or more children, and a leader)..... .10

L. T. L. Harvest Home Program. (For children) ..... .10

The Milkmaid's Convention, Laura J. Rittenhouse. (Twenty-four young women, two young men, two boys) ..... .10

Anti-Cigaret Speaker ..... .10

Frances E. Willard Program, For Use in Public Schools, Anna A. Gordon. (Requires 15 children)..... .10

The Children's Tribute to the Prohibition States—A playlet, Anna A. Gordon. (Requires enough young women to represent the prohibition states; also several children)..... .10

An Hour in Japan, Edna Rowan. (Six little girls, three tiny girls, a number of young women)..... .05

Processional of Prohibition States, Dora E. W. Spratt. (Young women to represent prohibition states, children to represent campaign states) .05

Ten Temperance Governors, An Exercise for Boys, compiled by Anna A. Gordon ..... .05

It Is Coming, Uncle Sam, Mabel Reynolds Makepeace. (Characters; Uncle Sam, boys and girls)..... .05

The Liquor Traffic Must Go (Cantata) compiled by E. C. Knapp..... .10

An Hour with Miss Columbia, Mary Stewart Powers. (Requires 30 young women, 14 young men, 10 children) .10

Moving and Living Pictures. Presenting the work of the W. C. T. U. and its Branches. (Requires women, young people, boys, girls, babies).. .10

Uncle Sam and His Children. (Characters: Uncle Sam, Columbia, the 48 states, represented by women; prohibition states, represented by children) ..... .20

The Coming Victory, Helen I. Root. Requires a Loyal Temperance Legion of 25 or more boys and girls, 25 young women, a quartet or chorus) ..... .15

Wash-Day Program, Edna Rowan Harvey. (For 26 children)..... .15

Yesterday and Today, Ida Lillian Page. (A suffrage playlet for 6 young women) ..... .15

His Flag, Minerva L. Guthapfel. (Six characters; also court-room spectators) ..... .07

Prohibition Axmen, Edna Rowan Harvey (a game for the L. T. L)..... .05

Temperance Program Series—For Public Schools, Sunday Schools, and Loyal Temperance Legions:

1. Entertaining Moments with Great People, Elizabeth P. Gordon. (For six girls and six boys)..... .10
2. The Men and Women of Tomorrow, Mildred A. Moody. (For seven girls and seven boys).... .05
3. Lester Brown's Battle, A Temperance Colloquy, Anna A. Gordon. (Four girls, two boys)..... .05
4. Temperance Pleas in Columbia's Court, Julia H. Johnston. (For fifteen boys or girls)..... .05

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

LOWER PRICE FOR CLUBS OF TEN

So many requests are being received from subscribers for reduced rates for the Campaign or Y. P. B. Editions that we take this opportunity to remind our readers that the former price of twenty-five cents a year is still available when clubs of ten or more are sent in at one time, but no premiums will be allowed. Otherwise the price is thirty-five cents a year. This raise has been made necessary by the increased cost of production.

ARE YOU USING THE QUIZ?

We all know how true is the saying of Christ, "To him that hath shall be given," and in no way, perhaps, is its application shown more clearly than by the well known fact that the surest way to interest people in any great work is to have them somehow know something about it. As soon as true knowledge begins, interest seems automatically awakened.

An illustration of this may be seen in the comments that come to us from those who read THE UNION SIGNAL. Here is one and we have dozens of others:

"I received notice several weeks since of the expiration of my subscription. But you may consider that it never expires as long as THE UNION SIGNAL and I are alive. I have many papers to read as I must keep up with the news in relation to temperance, etc. I read THE UNION SIGNAL every Monday night so I am freshly prepared for our meeting on Tuesday."

But how can we get this paper into the hands of those who do not as yet seem to care to subscribe, and do it in such a way that they shall be vitally interested? Why, the answer is plain—let us see that they know its contents. To subscribe for some one else may be a splendid plan, but if the paper lies on the shelf unread the desired results will not be apparent very soon.

One remedy no doubt is THE UNION SIGNAL Quiz which appears week by week. Have you made careful note of this? Read over the questions in this issue. How many can you answer without reference to last week's paper? All? Well done! But "spring them on" some one else and see whether you can catch them. Do it at your next meeting. Note that these questions are about national affairs, and that a knowledge of the answers will certainly keep us well informed and broaden our outlook, which is what we want in these days.

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS' WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.
J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

"We really want the people of this country to know the facts," the secretary and treasurer of the St. Louis Brewers' Association said recently. "Then we will be content for them to judge this issue at the coming election. The battle is not going to stop until the country at large knows the truth of the wet and dry issue."

The friends of prohibition are more than willing to rest their case on the full evidence concerning the traffic in drink, but they insist that all the evidence shall be produced, which heretofore the liquor interests have shown a decided disinclination to do. We recall the refusal of the officials of the U. S. Brewers' Association to show their records on order of the Federal Court, preferring to let one of their number go to jail rather than take the public into their confidence.

A resolution has been introduced in the South Dakota legislature providing for the appropriation of $1,000 to conduct an investigation to ascertain the damage the brewers will sustain when the state prohibitory law goes into effect, July 1, 1917, with the idea of recovering from the state compensation for such damage. Unfortunately for the success of the measure, the good people of the state have for many years been carrying on an investigation at their own expense to ascertain the damage the people have sustained by reason of the liquor business, and have rendered their decision through their legislators, and a provision for compensation to the brewers does not enter into their plans.

A. P. Stitzel, president of the Stitzel Distilling company of Louisville, Kentucky, has announced to a representative of the Christian Science Monitor, that the distillery will be closed because of a decrease in business due to the passage recently of federal legislation affecting the sale of liquor in many states and that the distillery property, valued at $350,000, will be sold for what it will bring. Discussing the matter, Mr. Stitzel said: "Recent federal legislation has made it impossible for many of our customers to sell whisky, and, therefore, we have found it necessary to discontinue our business. I think a large number of other distilleries in Louisville and Kentucky will have to follow our example on account of the passage of prohibition legislation by Congress and the several state legislatures."

Officials of St. Louis mail order liquor houses doing business in prohibition states, when interviewed by a representative of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, stated that they would be practically forced out of business by Senator's Reed's "bone dry" bill.

PROHIBITION BAD FOR BUSINESS

Prohibition is bad for some kinds of business, and this fact must be admitted. It is bad for the business of loafing, bad for the fellow that runs a drunk cure establishment, bad for the fellow whose business is robbing drunks on the street, bad for the jailkeeper, bad for the gamblers, bad for the bawdy house, bad for the wives who have formed the habit of being beaten up every Saturday night by a drunken husband, bad for the parasites who live off saloonkeepers by permitting them to disobey the law.—Cole's Review.

REMEMBER

to send in your literature order for the

SPRING INSTITUTE

at an EARLY date.

To every institute order amounting to $2 will be added for use as souvenirs, one dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $3 will be added for use as souvenirs, two dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

To every institute order amounting to $5 will be added for use as souvenirs, three dozen "Liquor Traffic Must Go" lead pencils.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

LADIES!
Why Use Alcohol?

Ordinary flavoring extracts contain 25 parts alcohol to one part of flavor.
Alcohol is expensive and is of no use in food flavors.
You will be delighted with

Concentrated Non-Alcoholic Food Flavors

Almond	Peach
Apple	Vanilla
Cherry	Thyme
Lemon	Anise
Blackberry	Caraway

Put up in Pure, Tin Tubes

Convenient, Economical, Sanitary. Ten times stronger than ordinary flavors at one-quarter the cost

Price, any flavors desired, 25c per tube; 6 tubes for $1.00.

Henry F. Wilson, Dept. 5. — 56 Van Court Ave., Detroit, Mich.

SPECIAL OFFER TILL JUNE, 1917

Four Stirring Prohibition Songs (sheet size) or three sheet and two octavo size for $.50. Send for list. Ella S. Clark, 412 William St., Rome, N. Y.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., APRIL 5, 1917 | No. 14

Glad Easter Comes!

Katharine Lent Stevenson

Death reigns today.
The brown fields lie neath ruined stubble, dead,
The bare trees lift grim branches overhead,
The wild storm raves, like breath of Ruin, dread,—
Death reigns today.

Hate reigns today;
Wave upon wave men meet in deadly strife,
In far flung battle lines stern Death is rife,
Reckless and wild the waste of human life,—
Hate reigns today.

Dead is our Lord today.
Hid in the rock-bound tomb, fast bound in chains,
Crushed neath the weight of human griefs and pains
No longer King, for a dread tyrant reigns,—
Dead is our Lord today.

Is this the end?
Hath Love from out our world been banished quite?
Has Spring's fresh hope been slain by Winter's might?
Must Hate now rule, hath darkness vanquished light?
Is this the end?

List, 'tis the robin's call,
Lo, neath our feet the snowdrop gleams anew;
Look, 'tis an empty tomb the women view;
Hark to the Voice which sounds the ages through,—
"Ye see not all.

"Still I am Life.
"Nor bolts nor bars could hold me captive when "Hatred and wrath their triumph wrought through men,
"I conquered Death, I led him captive then.
"Still I am Life."

We heed, and lo, the Spring
Comes swiftly o'er the earth with dancing feet;
Grim winter cannot check its progress fleet
Nature throws off its sleep and joys to greet
The radiant Spring.

So must it be;
"Not possible" to hold Him in death's bands;
"Not possible" for Hate to rule the lands,
"Not possible" to wrest men from God's hands.
So must it be.

Glad Easter comes;
Beside the riven tomb we learn new hope;
Men yet shall love and life shall have free scope,
No longer in the dark, with fears, we grope
For Easter comes.

REVOLUTIONIZING THE BEER INDUSTRY

DISCOVERY OF FORMULA TO EXTRACT ALCOHOL FROM BEER AND RETAIN FLAVOR REGARDED AS EPOCH-MAKING IN HISTORY OF BEVERAGES—HUGE PLANT ALREADY AT WORK UNDER CHEMIST'S DIRECTION

"The immense plant of the Seattle Brewery and Malting Company, covering seven acres, idle since prohibition struck Washington, is soon to blossom into an industry larger than before, sending out a greater variety of products, employing more men, and circulating more money than ever. The new process, it is believed, will revolutionize the brewing industry and provide a way of utilizing profitably the tremendous properties which it was said prohibition would render useless." The above statement appears in the Seattle Daily Times.

What is to become of the great brewery and distillery plants thrown out of operation by the coming of prohibition? What can be done with the masses of valuable machinery lately used in manufacturing beer and whisky? How can the millions of dollars worth of property made useless by prohibition be utilized in order that they may be of real service to the community and income-producers for their owners? These are the problems that have confronted the men who had invested huge sums of money in a business which the people are now repudiating, and these are questions which for lack of a satisfactory answer have caused many a voter, otherwise well disposed toward prohibition, to hesitate and ponder and perhaps cast a wet ballot on election day.

However, the problem is being solved. In fact, according to a full page article appearing in the Seattle Daily Times of March 18, the industrial problem of prohibition is solved and the Seattle brewing plant which formerly produced more than 1,250 barrels of beer a day, but which since the advent of prohibition has stood idle, will soon become "an institution that will be a constructive, upbuilding force in the community."

The Times is authority for the statement that "D. Cozzolino, a chemist of Los Angeles, California, long ago conceived the idea of developing a process for eliminating the alcohol from wine, and other beverages. His efforts have culminated in perfecting a method of distillation which transforms intoxicating liquor into a harmless drink." The chemist and the proprietor of the idle brewing plant came in touch with each other. The former outlined to the latter his process of extracting the alcohol from beer and wine without affecting the appearance, taste or aroma of the beverage. "Everything to which the drinker is accustomed is retained, except the kick." Mr. Hemrich instantly recognized an opportunity to develop a new industry, manufacture a non-intoxicating beverage, produce numerous by-products at the same time and turn the force of his immense property into constructive channels.

It is stated that "the formula used has been approved by the government and the entire process is closely watched by internal revenue officers, who keep the tanks locked until the alcohol is denatured and no longer of any use in the manufacture of intoxicants." Mr. Cozzolino has letters from about seventy-five sources, representing many of the largest brewery interests in the United States, seeking rights to the new process. How much this discovery will mean to the idle breweries is suggested by the fact that practically all of the former equipment is utilized.

A quarter of a million dollars is to be expended in the Seattle plant in the installation of necessary equipment for the manufacture of by-products. When complete the output of denatured alcohol will be a carload a day. Nor will this be all. The highest possible grade of malt vinegar will be produced by a new process vastly superior to the old. Maltose syrup, yeast, stock food, vinegar, denatured alcohol and Rainier Cereal Beverage comprise the variety of products now proposed to be manufactured by the new process.

Thus it is found that a revolution which seemed in the minds of many to foretell economic disaster and financial ruin to thousands has proven a means of widening the field of scientific research, greatly increasing development in industrial spheres, employing many more workmen, and providing untold social and economic benefit.

How strongly the emasculated "cereal beverage" will appeal to the former devotees of the real thing who drained the flagon for the sake of "the kick" remains to be seen! However, should it prove unpopular "necessity, the mother of invention," will devise still other methods for solving the industrial problem by the manufacture of more useful products.

SELLING BIBLES OVER THE BAR

KATHERINE A. CASEY

"The corner saloon" has ceased to exist in Lynn, Massachusetts, and so has the back alley saloon and the one on the public thoroughfare, for the voters—none of whom are women, as yet—forced the city back into the dry ranks at the election last December. Therefore, many of the citizens had their curiosity aroused, a few weeks ago, by the sight of carpenters busily painting and fixing and putting into shape one of the most prominent liquor properties in the city, one owned and controlled by brewery interests and used for that purpose for many years. It might be said that the store was guarded against the invasion of other business interests, but the truth is the liquor people held the store vacant each year waiting and hoping for the return of license. And can anyone imagine what has happened?

The conversion of abandoned churches into moving picture houses is not unheard of; neither is the use of summer gospel tents for dancing pavilions unknown, but the development of a saloon into a Bible House is truly a new idea. And the fact that a Bible House has been established on premises primarily because a saloon once occupied the corner makes the circumstance more impressive. Nevertheless, it has been accomplished, and Lynn people now purchase Bibles, religious books, and current religious literature over the same counter where once intoxicating liquors freely flowed.

The Bible House is located in Andrew Street, one of the busiest streets in one of the busiest shoe cities in the world, whose population is more than 100,000 people of every race. The store is particularly prominent with great plate glass windows through which twelve months ago the foolish stare of the man with the whisky-sated mind and body was noted by the passerby. Today as one looks into the store the sight that meets the eye is calm and refreshing.

The interior is bright and cheery with walls of buff enamel and scores of inviting chairs. A piano is at the rear of the great main room, where before purchasing, one may try out a hymn if he desires. Indirect lights of artistic finish which shed a soft radiance have been installed, and those who purchase by night may be as well pleased as those who choose by day.

"Bibles in Eighty-five Different Languages" are the words which appear on one of the windows, and in the short time the establishment has been open—since February 26—there has been a large demand for Bibles in foreign tongues. On the door where once the word BAR beckoned and coaxed the weak and the weary, the word "BIBLE HOUSE" now gleams in great white enamel letters.

Many novelties, not strictly religious, such as cards for festive occasions with a friendly greeting of good cheer or a kindly blessing are to be found, as well as birthday books, and various Sunday school supplies. Good books for home reading with a religious thought here and there are listed in the catalogue of the store to the number of nearly one hundred.

One of the most important undertakings is the noon-day meeting from twelve until one o'clock, when the working people engaged in the factories and stores assemble for fifteen or twenty minutes, or longer if convenient, to listen to the word of God spoken and explained by a minister from one of the local churches. A musical program is included—a decided attraction for many of the tired men and women. Though the meeting hour is over at one o'clock a few men and a large number of women visit the Bible House during the afternoon to rest and take advantage of the cordial invitation extended by the kindly old minister in charge of the rooms to enjoy the comforts afforded.

The transformation of the corner is a marvelous one, and surely it is his Satanic Majesty's turn to rant and scowl, and truly may he cry: "This was my place, my den of sin, but you temperance lovers and Bible preachers, you have made it a house of God and prayer."

Wisconsin Prohibition Referendum Measure May Pass Both Houses

From present indications, Wisconsin, called the wettest state in the Union, is going to permit the people to vote on the subject of abolishing liquor. The Evjue bill for the submission of the question at the spring elections in 1918, when it came up for final action in the lower house of the legislature, on March 29, passed by a vote of 56 to 37. It is confidently expected that it will receive favorable action in the senate. Governor Philipp, though himself the owner of a private car line whose chief business has been the shipment in refrigerator cars of Milwaukee's best known beverage, is said to have declared he will not veto the bill if the measure passes the legislature.

State-Wide Prohibition Legislation Checked by Liquor Forces—Campaign for "Dry Chicago" to Be Pushed

"Six months shorter lease of life for Chicago's 7,000 saloons" is the challenge hurled back at the liquor interests of that city who on March 28 defeated the passage of a state-wide prohibition measure in the lower house of the Illinois legislature. The fight for "Dry Chicago" will now be pushed and a vote taken six months earlier than the state-wide question could have been submitted. The prohibition referendum bill had passed the senate by a vote of 31 to 18, but was defeated in the lower house by a vote of 67 to 80. It was the closest call the liquor interests ever experienced in the history of the prohibition movement in the state. The illness of a number of dry members and the pressure brought to bear upon men who would have liked to vote for the referendum but were threatened by wet constituents prevented the bill having a fair chance. Chicago liquor politics, needless to say, defeated the measure. The fact that the bill provided for a vote of the women as well as of the men led the liquorites to fight it with all the unprincipled tactics at their command. With a lively remembrance of the number of saloons that have been voted out of the state since the women have had suffrage, they reasoned that to let the question be referred to the people was to practically put themselves out of business. The victory for the pro-liquor legislators will be a costly one, for already there has been launched a campaign for the election of members to the 1919 legislature who will represent the real interests of the people, not the interests of the liquor dealers. With a determination that defies the possibility of defeat the good people of Illinois will henceforth labor to wrest the legislature from the control and dictation of the allied liquor forces—and they will win!

Wiley Prohibition Bill Adopted by Michigan House of Representatives

By unanimous vote the lower house of the Michigan legislature passed the Wiley bill, making prohibition effective in the state May 1, 1918.

Favorable Action on Suffrage by Iowa Legislature

By a vote of 86 to 20 the woman suffrage constitutional amendment bill passed the lower house of the Iowa legislature on March 29. It had already passed the senate. It must be passed by the next legislature before submission to the people.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah Missouri
Minnesota Wyoming

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama Oregon
Tennessee North Dakota
Kansas Missouri
New Mexico South Dakota

"Bone Dry" Bill Passed by Both Georgia Houses

A "bone dry" bill, barring liquor from the state except for medical, mechanical, and sacramental purposes, was passed by both houses of the Georgia legislature on March 28 and Governor Harris is expected to sign it shortly. The legislature was called primarily to consider "bone dry" legislation.

Congresswoman Rankin to Introduce Suffrage Amendment

Hon. Jeannette Rankin of Montana, the first United States Congresswoman, soon after the convening of the special session of Congress on April 2, will introduce a Federal woman suffrage amendment. Although this is the fortieth time the measure has been introduced it is the first time that a woman has been privileged to sponsor the bill.

British Women May Be Given Suffrage—Majority of 279 in House of Commons Favors Such Action

At the close of an interesting debate, on March 28, the House of Commons by a majority of 279 expressed its approval of legislation on the lines of the speaker's conference recommendations for franchise reform, including woman suffrage. The small minority against the measure represented not the actual opponents but rather those who were desirous of deferring such legislation until the end of the war. The significant feature of the debate was the acceptance by ex-Premier Asquith and Andrew Bonar Law, chancellor of the exchequer, of women's right to vote as a result of their services and sacrifice during the war. Premier Lloyd George said he welcomed the recommendation in favor of woman suffrage. He paid the warmest tribute to woman's work during the war, especially the devotion, courage and zeal of women munition makers and said that when after the war, the nation came to recast the whole industrial fabric, to give women no voice therein would be an outrage; it would be inequitable, unjust and ungrateful, and he believed that the country would not sanction such injustice for a moment.

Porto Rico to Vote on Prohibition July 16, 1917

Campaign of Education Inaugurated by Temperance and Missionary Workers

The liquor interests of Porto Rico have initiated an anti-prohibition campaign in Porto Rico. They are exhibiting posters and distributing circulars and literature all over the island and are using other methods to influence the people against prohibition.

The Jones-Shafroth Citizenship bill for Porto Rico, passed during the last days of the Sixty-fourth Congress, provides that "one year after the approval of the act and thereafter it shall be unlawful to import, manufacture, sell, or give away, or to expose for sale or gift, any intoxicating drink or drug, provided that the legislature may authorize and regulate importation, manufacture and sale of said liquors and drugs for medicinal, sacramental, industrial and scientific uses only, and provided further, that at any general election within five years after the approval of this act this provision may upon petition of not less than ten per cent of the qualified electors of Porto Rico, be submitted to a vote of the qualified electors, and if a majority of the qualified electors voting upon such question shall vote to repeal this provision, it shall thereafter not be in force and effect; otherwise it shall be in full force and effect."

Our correspondents write that the labor element, the missionaries and all Christians are in favor of prohibition. The rum and the sugar interests are opposed to it. The missionary and temperance forces of the island have inaugurated a campaign of education and propaganda among the churches in certain districts. One missionary writes, "We shall have our annual conference next month at which time the matter will receive attention."

Arrangements are being made for a representative of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union to go to Porto Rico to assist in the campaign.

The Rominger bill, abolishing saloons in California and making it unlawful to manufacture or sell alcoholic liquor containing more than 14 per cent alcohol, was defeated in the senate by one vote.

INAUGURATION OF THE WOMAN'S NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEAGUE IN ARGENTINA

GREATEST TEMPERANCE DEMONSTRATION EVER WITNESSED IN SOUTH AMERICA

HELEN STEWART

The first great temperance rally and festival which has ever taken place in the city of Buenos Aires was held in the Theater Colon, the municipal theater of this great metropolis.

It is worthy of remark that this modern city of a million and a half inhabitants thought it worth while to give the use of its splendid theater and offer the services of its magnificent municipal band, free of charge, to our World's W. C. T. U. representative, Miss Hardynia K. Norville, who, having secured the cooperation of the principal schools of the city, brought to a happy fruition this wonderfully beautiful festival for the furtherance of the temperance cause throughout the republic. After the theater had been closed for the season it was placed at the disposal of the W. C. T. U., its most artistic scenery being proffered, its whole staff of 150 employes called back to service, and every possible aid given to facilitate the work of our beloved white ribbon missionary and the school teachers who aided in the preparation of this great demonstration, in which about 2,000 children participated.

Such great interest was shown in the unprecedented occasion by the government officials, the Minister of Education, the National Board of Education, and the teachers and parents that the house was packed and hundreds offering to pay for standing room were turned away.

Noted Educator Makes Temperance Address

The program aroused much enthusiasm among those privileged to hear and witness it. First, the national anthem was sung by the representative commissions of the Loyal Temperance Legions of the respective schools. These groups, clad in white, formed a beautiful tableau. This was followed by a short address telling the object of the festival—to celebrate the affiliation of the Argentine children with the World's W. C. T. U. for the promotion of universal purity and peace, and for the final overthrow of King Alcohol and the vices which follow in his train. We were most fortunate in having Dr. Ernest Nelson, who represented the Educational work of the republic at the recent Panama Exposition, deliver this address. He gave an enthusiastic and glowing account of the triumph of our prohibition cause in North America.

Then followed other beautifully executed numbers, prominent among them the fine choruses selected by the general inspector of public school music, Prof. Mastragiani, who directed the festival for us. One was an enchanting whistling chorus by over three hundred boys of the Rodriguez Peña school, whose director, Sr. Picarel, is the national treasurer of the Teacher's L. T. L. Committee.

The contestants for the gold medal were representatives of seven of the leading boys' schools.

Miss Norville has been most fortunate in securing Señora Alvina von Praet de Sala, one of the most cultured and beloved ladies of the land, and the president of the Woman's National Council, as honorary president of the Woman's National Temperance League; the Ministers of State, with their wives, also the National Education Commission, and many other gentlemen and ladies in the highest social circles as the national honorary committee.

There were four exceptionally beautiful numbers of "fantasia," which delighted the children. One, by forty-five

Miss Hardynia K. Norville
World's W. C. T. U. Representative in South America

girls of the Normal School of Modern Languages, in which we have a flourishing L. T. L., taught the lesson of loving kindness. Another was by fifty beautiful madonna-eyed girls of the Sarmiento school L. T. L., the largest in the republic. Clad in white, with baskets of natural flowers and live birds, which they finally set at liberty, they recited and sang, with beautiful rhythmical motions, of the joys of springtime, and of the blessing of God's great gift—pure, life-giving water.

The little temperance play rendered by the boys and girls of the first L. T. L. of Buenos Aires, and composed especially for the occasion by their superintendent, Senorita Maria Herminia Livorno, an untiring worker for the cause, delighted the children. Clad in native costume they represented the ancient country-life of this faraway land beneath the Southern Cross. Their big-flowered dresses and bright colored head-kerchiefs were extremely becoming, while their folk-lore songs and country dances in heavy wooden shoes were thoroughly appreciated. Last a lovely rose drill was rendered by seventeen girls of the Methodist Mission School of Lomas, a little city nearby of 20,000 inhabitants. For grace and beauty this drill excelled in delicate art. Miss Norville's patience and skill were exercised to the height of her powers in the development of this dream dance, her own creation, which she took especial delight in presenting as it was rendered by Christian girls of the first English Loyal Temperance Legion of the republic, who were permitted by their parents to appear before an Argentine audience in order to show the interest of the English colony in this national awakening in behalf of the temperance cause.

Public Officials Express Great Interest

Sir Reginald Towers, the British Minister, also the English and North American Consul Generals and their wives, and the Secretary of the North American legation gladly attended, not only as a manifestation of interest, but as a token of their appreciation of the great courtesy extended to the representative of our world's organization of women and children, which had its birth in North America and is now presided over by our beloved Rosalind, Countess of Carlisle.

The Minister of Public Instruction, Señor José Salinas, who has enthusiastically authorized Miss Norville's work of scientific instruction and the formation of L. T. L.'s in the public schools, also attended the festival, which he afterward commended highly, as also did Señora Alvina von Praet de Sala.

Dr. Miguel Lainez, a congressman of great renown, after studying the constitution of the World's W. C. T. U., has consented to serve as the honorary president of the committee of men.

The principal papers, including La Prensa, which owns the largest printing building in the world, have all placed their columns at Miss Norville's disposal for temperance propaganda. They spoke in glowing terms of the festival and of the wonderful manifestation of interest on the part of school officials, teachers and pupils and extolled most highly the plan of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union in forming the children of the world into a united band to fight all forms of vice, and especially alcohol—the principal cause of disease, poverty, crime and death—and to promote universal peace by teaching the children of every land to know and love each other.

JOHN BULL AND JOHN BARLEYCORN

As a result of the compulsory restriction of the beer output in Great Britain thirty thousand saloons will probably be closed during the next few months, says the London Mail.

The better secular newspapers and the religious papers of the British people, almost without exception, are demanding that the enormous waste of grain and sugar which goes to the making of alcoholic drinks shall be stopped. The Spectator, which has been insisting upon prohibition for the period of the war, puts at the head of its editorial page these words: "We are threatened with food shortage of a most serious kind. That being so, the government should surely say that not a grain of food shall be turned into intoxicants till that danger is passed. Instead, they say, 'After the first of April we will allow the brewers to destroy only 70 per cent of the food stuffs they are destroying in the manufacture of intoxicants.'"

"Munitions and bread are two of the necessities of our situation which point straight to prohibition," says an article by Principal James Denney in the British Weekly. "The third, and, to judge from the activity of the government in connection with it, we should say the greatest, is money." "If prohibition is gained for the period of the war," he predicts, "it will look after its own future. Twelve months' experience of a sober nation will make us look with other eyes on proposals of purchase and management and alter our view as to the price we should pay for being masters in our own house." One English writer in commenting on the proposal to curtail the leave granted to soldiers in order to relieve the railways, points out that "The drink stuff carried on our railways in one week would equal all the soldiers in the kingdom going home. Every week the drink stuff on our railways fills over 1,000 trains of 200 tons apiece."

THE GROWTH OF W. C. T. U. WORK IN JAPAN

ALICE G. LEWIS in "The Christian Movement in Japan"

Last year witnessed the exceptional growth and strengthening of our white ribbon organization. A commodious and attractive headquarters building was erected for the national W. C. T. U. in Tokyo and as a result the secretaries have been able more fully to define and develop their departments of work. Beside the president, Madame Yajima, who in spite of her eighty-five years remains active, and freely gives all her time to W. C. T. U. activities, there are four salaried secretaries and several paid office assistants.

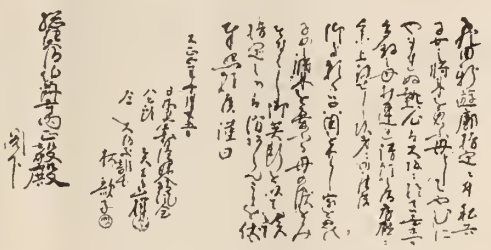
Two periodicals, the Fujin Shimpo, which has a circulation of 2,000, and the Shonen Shimpo, which now numbers 5,000 readers, are published monthly.

The number of local unions has increased. There are also a goodly number of Loyal Temperance Legions with a total membership of 8,700.

The greatest activity of the year was along purity and rescue lines. A campaign of education was started by means of envelopes used in soliciting five sen contributions for the work. Although the primary object was educational, the contributions totaled yen 700. Part of this money has been used in giving forty lectures in public halls, churches and schools. Invitations to organize have come from towns where there is no local W. C. T. U. A group of speakers has been formed who, when invited to do so, willingly give addresses on the subject of purity. Literature is also being prepared and editors of many magazines and newspapers have shown a desire to co-operate in the work. Soon after the campaign was launched Miss Ume Hayashi came to Tokyo from Osaka to confer with the officers of the National W. C. T. U. and with voice and pen a vigorous protest against impurity was raised, which continued throughout the year. Side by side with all the other Christian forces the W. C. T. U. has fought for the right of the women of Japan to live in purity. Three times letters on this subject have been addressed by the national W. C. T. U. officers to every church in Japan, special issues of the Fujin Shimpo have been devoted to the subject, and yen 200 forwarded to Osaka to assist in the campaign. A plan for wider rescue work has also been made and an organization known as the Florence Crittenton Rescue Union of the W. C. T. U., whose purpose is to assist in the establishment and maintenance of rescue homes in the various large cities of Japan, has been formed.

Mrs. Kaji Yajima, President of the Japan W. C. T. U., and Miss Hayashi, President of the Osaka Union

Mrs. Yajima is holding the Mother's Petition against the licensing of new vice quarters in a place called Tobita in Osaka situated near the high schools, and Miss Hayashi, the 1,200 signatures of the mothers of Osaka. The petition and signatures were presented to the Premier of Japan by these two leaders of white ribbon work, on October 25, 1916.



Facsimile of Anti-Vice Petition

The Home Health department of the W. C. T. U., under the superintendency of Mrs. Dr. Fujii, has been especially active in Tokyo. Regular classes in massage have been conducted and instruction in home hygiene given. There have been several graduates and interest has been aroused among higher class ladies. The department also has a class in cooking.

The foreign auxiliary of the national W. C. T. U. has a paid-up membership scattered all over Japan. The circle in Yokohama has done fine local work, especially among foreign children, and another circle has been organized in Tokyo to carry on various lines of work. The activities of the auxiliary include furnishing the new headquarters building, holding a summer conference, canvassing for funds in support of the rescue home, pushing purity work in every possible way, investigating the daily Japanese press and periodicals of all kinds to find what the Japanese standard of morals is and what the people are writing and reading; also gathering together a group of women writers to study into the questions of prohibition and purity and ultimately to furnish articles on them. The auxiliary also published a bulletin to inform its scattered members of various W. C. T. U. activities.

Although there is no foreign secretary of the W. C. T. U. in Japan, it is very evident that the W. C. T. U. has sent its roots deep into the hearts of many Japanese women, as the forward movements are all initiated and carried on by them.

"THE BREWERS' BIG HORSES" WINS SUIT AGAINST BREWING COMPANY

Little Antonio Adamo, of Carbondale, Pa., was run down by a wagon belonging to the Fell Brewing Co. and crushed to death. The brewing company refused to pay damages to the father, a poor Italian laborer. The father sued, and D. J. Reedy, of Philadelphia, handled his case. When Mr. Reedy asked for a settlement of $400 the manager of the brewing company replied, "Nothing doin'; not a cent." But Mr. Reedy was not to be frightened by the liquor men. The case came to trial, the evidence was presented, and at the close of his argument to the jury Mr. Reedy began to sing in a low voice:

"Oh, the brewers' big horses,
Comin' down the road—"

The North American of Philadelphia tells the rest of the story in these words:

"Two fagged jurors sat up and showed interest. Reedy went on

"'Totin' all around
Old Lucifer's load—'

"The other jurors were now awake, and all twelve were smiling broadly, while Judge Witmer sat back tapping time to the air with his gavel. The judge did not interrupt, so Reedy went right on

"'Steppin' so high
And steppin' so free,
But the brewers' big horses
Can't run over me!'

"That was the lawyer's closing. The jurors filed out, all of them still smiling and showing that the song had touched a sympathetic spot. In fifteen minutes the twelve men filed back to their box, the verdict made up.

"'That song got us,' said two of the jurors on leaving the box to compliment the lawyer, not on his singing particularly but for his resourcefulness in using the hymn to state the case vividly." The brewing company was compelled to pay $1,400 damages.

A WOMAN SPEAKS IN REICHSTAG

For the first time in the history of Germany a woman has participated in the business of the Reichstag. Fraulein Else Lueders, war office chief of the female general staff, was recently invited to appear before the anti-race suicide committee of the Reichstag to take part in the discussion of questions pertaining to the protection of working women, especially in ammunition plants and other war industries.

MISSOURI'S LEGISLATIVE VICTORIES

NELLE G. BURGER, President Missouri W. C. T. U.

The prohibition forces of Missouri were a unit in the plans for a legislative campaign. The heads of the various organizations were banded together under the name—Advisory Council of the Temperance Forces of Missouri—and after plans had been fully decided upon, each society became responsible for the very best effort possible along its own definite lines.

The Missouri W. C. T. U., because of its splendid machinery and trained workers, became a compelling power, and each of the other organizations did its part nobly. Perfect harmony prevailed and brought results.

We decided to demand three laws from the legislature, viz., a prohibition referendum to the people in the 1918 general election; a law providing for a recount of ballots on amendments in case of trickery; and a law providing for the appointment of challengers for the amendments in the polling places. Tremendous frauds were perpetrated in many places in the 1916 election and we had no redress, so that the passage of these "honest election" laws was of supreme importance. Both of the election bills passed by immense majorities.

The prohibition referendum passed the house 97 to 28. The house was so dry that it simply laughed at the amendments offered by the wets and promptly voted them down.

The senate was a different proposition. By its organization all of the committees were controlled by the wets, but persuasion, oratory, petitions, letters and telegrams finally won out by a vote of 24 to 9.

Plans for further united effort for the campaign will be made immediately and we confidently expect Missouri to vote dry in 1918.

The Missouri W. C. T. U. presented a bill providing for September 28 to be set aside as Frances E. Willard Day in the public schools of Missouri. This was the first bill passed by the house, by a vote of 123 to 18. To our great surprise, it encountered bitter opposition in the senate, the committee refusing to report it. All "rock-ribbed" rules of senatorial courtesy were broken and our champion, Senator E. L. Moore, demanded, under the rules, a return of the bill to the senate. After a half-day of parliamentary fireworks it was done, and the bill was placed upon the calendar with a favorable report. Later in the session it passed the senate unanimously, though a tremendous amount of home pressure was brought to bear by the white riboners before that occurred. This bill was signed by Governor Frederick D. Gardner and the pen presented to the state president for the Missouri W. C. T. U.

This was a constructive legislature and many other measures endorsed by the Missouri W. C. T. U. passed, viz., ten laws of the children's code, chief among them being a state-wide mothers' pension law, a state-wide Juvenile court law, and one providing for a home for neglected children, with an appropriation of $30,000 from the state. All of these were needed laws for the protection of women and children.

For many years the W. C. T. U. has educated against capital punishment and we rejoice in a law for its abolishment in this state.

Prison reform occupied much time this session and under the new provisions contract labor was abolished, a prison farm purchased, a night school instituted and the honor system established. Many other splendid measures were enacted which will place Missouri among the "front rank" states.

Missouri women have not a scintilla of suffrage, yet a law was passed making women eligible as members of school boards. They already serve as county clerks, treasurers, recorders, etc.—but vote?—never!

The Equal Suffrage Association introduced a bill granting Presidential suffrage to women, which passed the house 84 to 37, but was promptly defeated in the senate. But suffrage sentiment is steadily growing and Missouri women will yet have the privileges of the ballot.

We are filled with enthusiasm for the coming campaign and plans are now being prepared for further united effort. Our great liquor stronghold is St. Louis, but a compact dry organization is being perfected in that city.

A great state-wide temperance rally and convention was held in Jefferson City, our state capital, early in the winter, at which time William Jennings Bryan delivered three masterly addresses. He took the legislature by storm and undoubtedly crystallized sentiment for prohibition. A luncheon was tendered Mr. Bryan by the governor, to which the heads of all temperance organizations were invited, besides supreme court judges, senators, representatives and others of note.

The Missouri temperance forces have organized for the 1918 prohibition campaign under the name Citizens' Dry Alliance. The organizations represented are the Missouri W. C. T. U., Missouri Anti-Saloon League, Prohibition party, Dry Federation, Ministerial Alliance, and State Sunday School Association. Mrs. Nelle G. Burger, president of the Missouri W. C. T. U., and Mrs. Lettie Hill May, state corresponding secretary, are members of the executive committee.

PATRICK CUDAHY'S VISION

IF ALL THE ALCOHOL IN THE WORLD COULD BE CHANGED TO WATER

The millionaire packer, Patrick Cudahy of Cudahy Bros., Cudahy, Wis., has been doing some fine temperance educational work in his packing plant. He recently posted a notice barring the bringing of beer into the plant, stating that any one who failed to observe this rule would be discharged. He has also distributed among the men, with their pay checks, anti-alcohol literature. In a series of open letters by Mr. Cudahy published in the Milwaukee Times, he philosophizes concerning the evils of intemperance and the harm done by the licensing of thirty-eight saloons which prey off of the men employed in his packing plant and other factories of the city. In one of the articles he mentions a letter received by him in which the writer refers to the fact that Christ turned water into wine at the marriage feast. "His reference to the wedding feast reminds me," says Mr. Cudahy, "that God taught the doing of good to one's fellow men. Speaking of miracles, if some all-powerful person were to appear at the present time on earth and perform a miracle, changing all the booze in the world back to water, and issuing a decree that any person who attempted to make another drop of it would be struck dead by an electric bolt from Heaven, just imagine if you can the change that would take place in the world, say ninety days after this event. See the red noses changing to white; the fat beer bloats shrinking to their natural size; the man whom alcohol made a brute of, returning to his normal condition; his wife, whose life this alcohol brute saddened and almost destroyed, returning to her normal condition; the wrinkles and tear furrows in her face being smoothed out; the color coming back to her cheeks; her eyes becoming bright again; her saddened and wretched face becoming joyful and happy. Her children are now wearing shoes. They no longer hide under the bed when their father is coming home, but run to meet him with joyful faces. In short, the home that alcohol made wretched is now joyful and happy. We also see the saloons changed into places of usefulness—some of them ice-cream and soda water parlors. A great many of them are used for book stores, for the men who spent their time in saloons are now reading books.

"The saloonkeepers themselves have gone back to their trades and are now useful citizens. And by doing away with alcohol we do not need nearly so many policemen. About seventy per cent of the policemen have been discharged and are engaged in other employment in the shops and on the farms, changed from idle men to useful producers. The prisons, such as our house of correction, are changed from prisons to recreation halls. The grounds about them are converted into beautiful parks. People are now saving the money they formerly spent for booze. Savings banks are springing up all over the country. In short, the drunkards and criminals of the world, made so by alcohol, of all classes, are now industrious people and living happy lives. What a glorious change, if this could be brought about, and it may be partially brought about some time by prohibition."

Mr. Cudahy is by his own confession a man who drinks both beer and whisky, and he says he would not like to live in a town where he could not get them. Yet, seeing the evils of intemperance in Cudahy, he pledges his influence against the saloons. Moreover, great numbers of drinking men in the United States are taking the same attitude he claims. A friend of Mr. Cudahy, J. P. Beuscher, in a letter which was published in the Milwaukee Times, says: "I am not a prohibitionist. I drink beer, although I have never touched whisky, but I have seen the misery which it has created, especially in Cudahy and I shall do everything within my power to wipe out the thirty-eight bum factories which we now have in Cudahy."

Thus the men who have all their lives been moderate drinkers, but are not unmindful of the evils of intemperance, are voting out the saloons of the United States.

CHINA ACCOMPLISHES ITS FREEDOM FROM OPIUM

MARCH 31 LAST WITNESSED END OF TRAFFIC

March 31, 1917, witnessed the end of the traffic in opium in the Chinese republic and hereafter in all its broad extent no frenzied victim will be able to buy even a pipeful to still his craving for the drug. Although for nearly a century China has been held captive by the product derived from its countless acres of gorgeous poppies, for ten years or more it has been making superhuman efforts to shake off the shackles of opium and to save the life of the republic.

For God and Home and Every Land

In its fight for freedom China had many difficulties to surmount, says a writer in a recent number of the Chicago Sunday Herald. As revenue has been one of the powerful weapons with which liquor in this country has maintained its position, so the Chinese government derived large sums from the opium traffic. On the poppy imports from India alone the government received nearly $40,000,000 annually.

The opium habit held in its grip rich and poor alike. Statesmen and coolies, men and women, daughters of wealth and girls of the street were equally its victims, which numbered fully 220,000,000, or half the population of China. Popples were grown on a large proportion of the land, and their care meant work for millions of coolies, while the crops of the poppy farms brought fabulous wealth to hundreds of mandarins. Even more numerous, possibly, than the American saloon in days gone by were the "hop" dens of China. In every village they were to be found and in every city was a district given over to them. Moreover China loved its broad poppy fields, aglow with beautiful blossoms, only less, perhaps, than the dreams induced by the treasured opium pipe.

But China woke up. Young men of China, educated abroad, principally in the United States, spread the word of warning against opium. The people were quick to respond. It was during the reign of the empress dowager, in 1906, and due to her courageous initiative that the doom of opium was pronounced. "In ten years there must be no more opium within the empire," declared the edict. And the plan inaugurated to bring about this result was the closing of every den and a reduction of one-tenth each year in the size of the poppy fields.

The Chinese government had a hard struggle to achieve its purpose, but it believes in law enforcement. One by one dens were closed, steadily the area of poppy farms decreased. Bonfires of pipes and opium were of frequent occurrence. Death was meted out to violators, and the reform steadily gained ground. Since 1914 opium has been sold in only three of the eighteen provinces of China, Kiangsi, Kuantung and Kiangsu, where the foreign capital is located.

In its fight for freedom China also had outside influences to combat. European money was heavily invested in opium, and every means was taken to induce the government to allow a continuance of the traffic. Huge sums of money were offered the government, which was hard pressed financially, but such offers were rejected, and the work of closing out opium was steadily prosecuted, until at the present time China stands free and unshackled, a rebuke to every nation on the globe that is allowing the enslavement of its citizens for revenue.

TWO YEARS OF SOBRIETY IN RUSSIA

"Does prohibition continue to be popular in Russia?" is a question frequently asked. No more satisfactory answer can be given than a quotation from the Petrograd correspondent of the Neue Züricher Zeitung, as given in a late issue of the Literary Digest. In a survey of the results of the prohibition ukase of 1914, this writer says:

"A representative of the Duma has said that the very thought of the fateful consequences on the battle-fields and in the country itself of a continuation of the inveterate alcohol régime makes every patriot shudder. We are, therefore, more than overjoyed to know that it has been statistically proved that the daily producing capacity of the workingman, since the promulgation of that message of salvation, has been increased by 15 per cent, and that Monday, the day when millions of muzhik (farmers) were found in the gutters, has become a normal work-day in Russia. But not only the mir (village community) felt the consequences: the life also in the city was as if of a sudden transformed. The population rushed to the schools and savings-banks, co-operative societies opened their counters by the hundred. The whole aspect of the family life, the very looks of the people on the street were changed. How quickly the population grasped the prospective benefits of the great reform is best shown by the fact that when it became known that the Imperial ukase, in order to become legally valid, will need the express consent of the majority of the mirs, only an exceedingly low percentage refused the indorsement.

"January last (1916) the Zemstvo (County Assembly) of Moscow circularized the peasants in order to ascertain in the most direct possible way the impression of the population. A few of the replies made by the village elders, most of them as illiterate as their charges, have a great economic and psychological value:

" 'The men feel stronger. Their treatment of their women folk and attitude toward their neighbors is not the same as before.'

" 'The children are now nicely dressed and have even shoes on their feet. One hears no more quarreling in the izbas (farmhouses).'

" 'I was amazed to find among our farmers some who subscribe to newspapers.'

" 'The people have become more honest.'

"Nobody has so quickly and completely grasped the import of the social revolution as woman, the greatest sufferer from the old alcohol curse. We are, therefore, not astonished to learn that as soon as the saloons were definitely closed the peasant women marched to the churches in Indian file to burn a candle each, thanking the Lord for the great delivery.

"When, last spring, the question of repermitting the sale of beer and red wine came up in the Duma, Tarasov, a farmer-deputy, exclaimed: 'If the women would hear you, they would pull you down from this platform.' "

KING GEORGE TABOOS WINE

It is no longer according to etiquette to place any wines or liquors on the table whenever King George of England is a guest at military messes or with the fleet, says the Spectator, which is conducting an active campaign for prohibition during the war. No wine is served even at dinner parties at Buckingham palace or Windsor.

PRESIDENT OF PERU ADVOCATES PROHIBITION

At the recent meeting of the congress of Peru, the president in a message is reported to have said:

"It is time that the government should intervene in view of the great damage which the traffic in liquor is causing among the native population." He recommended prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating drinks.

It is reported that the congress of the republic of Bolivia has passed a bill closing all saloons on Sunday.

ROUMANIAN OFFICIALS SURRENDER RECEIPTS FROM VINEYARDS TO SECURE PROHIBITION FOR THEIR NATION

The action of the Roumanian government in prohibiting intoxicating liquors is patriotism of a high order, for, according to Mrs. Tom F. Jenkins in the Daily Chronicle, prohibition means a personal sacrifice on the part of many of the leading men of Roumania. "The Bratiano brothers," she says, "of whom one is prime minister, another minister of war and a third almost equally useful; the Lahovarys, a family of eminent statesmen, Prince Stirbey, among others, are owners of vineyards, as are many senators and deputies. Many of them also own plum orchards, from which tsouica, the national drink, is made. Yet, dependent for part of their income on the sale of their wines and liquors, and, notwithstanding the well-known temperance of the people, they have thought fit for the perfecting of their plans to prohibit the sale of intoxicants."

50 PER CENT CUT IN LIQUOR CONSUMPTION IN FRANCE

The retail liquor dealers of France, according to the Paris Letter in the Journal of the American Medical Association, are making the claim that the use of alcohol for drinking purposes has diminished 50 per cent since the beginning of the war. The consumption has fallen from 1,800,000 to 900,000 hectoliters.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, April 5, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE COUNCIL MEETS IN WASHINGTON

The Intercollegiate Prohibition Association, at its conference at Lexington, Ky., last December, adopted a resolution requesting the National Temperance Council to call a conference of all temperance organizations to consider National temperance legislation, and campaigns relating thereto.

Such a conference was called and met March 28-29 in Washington, D. C., the dates chosen coming, most unexpectedly to all, on the eve of an extra session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

It was voted by the Conference to form a National Legislative Conference, with delegates from some twenty-six temperance organizations, the Conference to have power to add to its membership. The members of the Conference thus created will be responsible directly and solely to the organization naming them. The Conference is not to open headquarters, raise funds, or elect salaried officers.

At the next annual meeting of the National Temperance Council, it will be requested to designate this Conference as the Legislative Conference of the National Temperance Council.

The first meeting of the National Legislative Conference will probably be called for Tuesday, April 17, in Washington, D. C.

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

DRY NAVY A CAUSE FOR SATISFACTION

It was not many years ago when certain newspapers and men were wont to refer slightingly to the straight-laced, puritanical ideas about total abstinence of our Secretary of the Navy, Hon. Josephus Daniels. They even spoke lightly and facetiously of his anti-alcohol regulations for the Navy. Today when we are depending upon our naval forces, in the event of war, to defend us from foreign foes, when there is in progress a campaign to recruit 25,000 or more young men for the United States fleet, it must be a source of keen satisfaction to every American citizen to know that total abstinence is the rule in the Navy; that not a ship in our fleet carries intoxicating beverages for the use of the men or officers, and that the youths who are enlisting for service will not be permitted to have alcoholic liquors in any form.

Grave responsibilities rest upon these young patriots who may be called upon at any moment to risk their lives in protecting the honor of our flag. No sane man for a moment questions the necessity of safeguarding them from the temptation of strong drink, which might in a crucial hour unfit them for their duties. But having admitted that such protection should be given to our defenders on the sea, is it not obviously inconsistent to decline to approve a program that has as its object the protection from the same evil of the great army of young men on land—equally valuable, equally necessary for the defense from enemies within and without our borders, upon whom the nation must rely in all emergencies, today and tomorrow, in peace as well as in war.

"BOYS' DAY"

Overcrowded as is the calendar with special days, one feels little inclination to criticise the governor of New Jersey for the suggestion that his state observe each year a Boys' Day. His official proclamation for the occasion may be read with profit by the fathers of all states. He proposes that the day shall be one upon which the fathers shall be urged "to take more interest in the affairs of their sons, so that the young manhood of the state may have the benefit of the experience of the older men and be guided in the right direction, avoiding pitfalls and missteps which are occasioned through ignorance, and absence of the spirit of brotherly love and fatherly interest; that if they have any ideals that they would like passed on to the next generation, that they pass them on through their sons to the benefit of posterity, the strength of the government and the happiness of their community."

Possibly the average father needs an arrest of thought along these lines; certainly the recent unfavorable vote of the New Jersey legislature on a local option bill indicates that the members of that body at least ought "to take more interest in the affairs of their sons" and the sons of their fellow citizens. The deliberate slaughter of the very mildest and most rudimentary form of prohibition legislation seems to indicate that the protection of the boys of the state is a matter of secondary importance.

The chief executive of New Jersey is laying a sure and firm foundation for the future when he initiates an event of such significance. But for New Jersey and every other state that has as yet failed to provide protection for its youth from the liquor traffic, one Boys' Day a year is utterly inadequate. Every one of the three hundred and sixty-five should be devoted to the subject, to educating and agitating for the election of men to our city councils, our state legislatures, our national Congress who appreciate the real value of boys as national assets and will crystallize that appreciation into laws that will safeguard them as far as possible from temptation.

LIQUORITES' "NO MOLESTATION" MEASURE

The suicidal desperation of the California liquor interests is indicated by certain legislative symptoms. They have introduced an amendment providing that "hereafter no bill, act, resolution or petition intended to be enacted into law shall be presented to the voters of the state looking toward the controlling, regulating or prohibiting of liquor." The intent of this measure seems to be to forever, to the end of time, protect them from molestation. Truly those whom the gods would destroy they first deprive of their common sense. The veriest novice in the study of human nature would recognize that such a proposition would tend to make votes for prohibition. The worst bum on the city streets, shedding maudlin tears at the possibility of being deprived of his beer or whisky, would not consent to barter away his privilege as an American citizen of some day having the chance to redeem himself by voting out the institution that is ruining him. The most violent champion of "personal liberty" who may resent having taken from him the right to drink and sell and buy alcoholic beverages would be righteously indignant at closing the door of opportunity to reconsider the matter, if he so pleased.

The very possibility of such an un-American, undemocratic, "black-ages" measure becoming a law would arouse in every thinking man suspicions that would lead to thought and study, and eventually convert him to a belief in prohibition.

Like the "nursing mothers bill" in Oregon, the "no molestation for all time" measure will speed the movement for state and national prohibition.

POSTER PRIZE OFFER

For the best Prohibition posters suitable for educational or campaign use, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union offers the following prizes: For the best posters submitted, $15; for the second best, $10; and for the next five, in order of excellence, $2 each.

Rules for Competition

1. Illustration may form part of the poster, but is not essential.
2. Striking sentences or words are preferable to crowded lines.
3. Posters may be in two sizes: 19x25 inches or 28x42 inches. Copy need not be presented in actual size of poster.
4. In submitting copy for competition, place your name in a sealed envelope and pin to the copy.
5. All copy submitted will become the property of the National W. C. T. U.
6. The Committee on Publications of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, with two others to be chosen by the General Officers, will comprise the committee on awards.
7. All copy should be addressed to the National W. C. T. U. Poster Competition, Evanston, Ill., and must be received not later than April 15, 1917.

OUR COMRADES OVERSEAS

The Baroness de Laveleye, president of the W. C. T. U. of Belgium, is devoting herself to relief work. She spends four mornings each week visiting interned prisoners in Geneva, Switzerland. The Baroness will be remembered by all who attended the World's W. C. T. U. Convention at Brooklyn, N. Y.

Cape Town (Africa) white ribboners are doing a worthy and successful work in getting the soldiers passing through from New Zealand and Australia to sign the total abstinence pledge.

Temperance teaching is now a recognized part of the curriculum in all government schools in Burma.

COLORED PASTOR EULOGIZES PROHIBITION

The value of prohibition as a safety guard for the people of his race was recently emphasized by Dr. H. H. Proctor, pastor of the First Congregational church, colored, of Atlanta, Ga. In enumerating "Stepping Stones to Higher Things" he said:

"Prohibition means more to the colored people of this state than to any other people of Georgia. No greater boon has come to us since our emancipation. The chief value of this movement will be to give us a chance to work out our own salvation unhindered by the evils of strong drink.

"It is up to us, however, to make the most of this chance. The money we save from this source should be directed to the highest ends. We must see to it that every child is sent to school. There must be more stress placed on our home life, out of which must come the real uplift for the race. There must be greater obedience to law and order, so that we shall spend less money in the courts. We must have a more practical and powerful church life.

"I call upon colored people throughout the state to stand by this law, and use their highest influence to see to it that it is observed everywhere among our people."

MOTION PICTURE ACTRESS DECLINES TO FIGURE IN SCENES DEPICTING DRUNKENNESS

Those who enjoy good, wholesome motion picture plays will welcome the action of Miss Blanche Bates, a popular and successful "movie" actress in declining to appear in any production in which drunkenness is depicted. She does not believe that there is anything mirth-provoking in the befuddled state of mind manifested by the devotees of liquor and expresses her views thus:

"There are many reasons why all the plays in which I've appeared have been on the water wagon, and one of them is that I would not participate in a drunken orgy, any more on the stage than off. My managers would often say to me, 'But it gets the laughs, and that's what we want.' And I would answer: 'Drunkenness is one of the most pitiful and unpleasant conditions that any man or woman can descend to, and if the American theater audiences laugh at the antics of an intoxicated person, I firmly believe that the American sense of humor ought to be censored. One can get more fun and lightness and gaiety into a scene by picturing high spirits and the joy of living.' "

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of March 29

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What human interest reason did a prominent New York hotelkeeper give for abandoning his bar trade which netted him a profit of $10,000 a year?

2. The Anheuser-Busch Brewing Company advertises Benjamin Franklin as a man who used alcoholic beverages. What reference to that question does he make in his autobiography?

3. Enumerate some of the good laws women have secured through the use of the ballot.

4. For what four evils does Dr. Howard Kelly, the noted surgeon, say beer drinking is responsible?

5. What forceful medical argument does the United States Bureau of Health urge against alcoholic drinks?

6. Which states will vote on woman suffrage amendments during the next two years?

7. Can you give five reasons why you believe in prohibition?

8. How is Patrick Cudahy, the millionaire packer, helping the anti-liquor movement?

9. What recent federal and state legislation is showing the need for effort along the line of medical temperance?

10. Name some of the patent medicines which contain large quantities of alcohol.

EX-GOVERNOR CAREY TO WORK FOR A "DRY WYOMING"

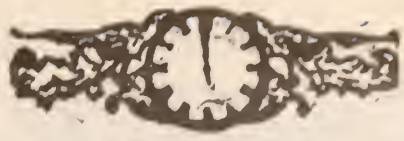
"The saloon costs this country as much in money and broken hearts as the war is costing Europe," said Ex-Governor J. M. Carey of Wyoming at a meeting in Cheyenne, for the outlining of the prohibition campaign in the state.

"More women are weeping in the United States today because of drunken husbands, sweethearts and brothers than from any other single cause. The saloons furnish a steady supply of recruits to the mad-houses and the penitentiaries, for the upkeep of which all the people have to pay. A prison is a losing proposition. The men there have to have guards, doctors, ministers, and other attendants, all of whom must be paid by the state. The saloons go a long way toward keeping these places going."

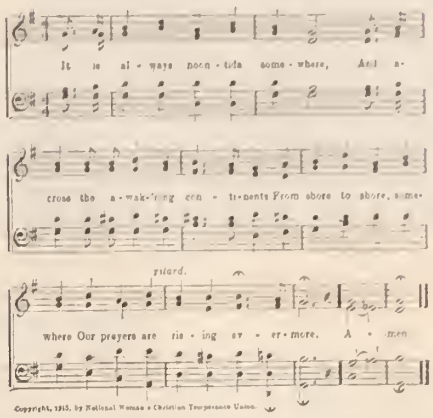
BOSTON ELEVATED OFFICERS AND EMPLOYES INVITED TO SEATS ON WATER WAGON

The Boston Elevated Railway Company, which has previously required that its employes be men of temperance principles, has extended its rule to include its officials as well. In a general order posted recently in all carhouses, shops and other departments and put in the hands of everybody connected with the service, President Brush says:

"The use of intoxicating liquor by officials or employes, whether to excess or not, and whether on or off duty, in such a way as, taking the nature of their duties into account, may impair their efficiency or render doubtful their fitness for the responsibilities involved in their employment, shall be sufficient cause for their discharge."



TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



THE NAZARENE

"So the Nazarene is dead,"
Caiaphas the High Priest said.
"His wonder-working deeds are o'er,
He will trouble us no more.
May blasphemers such as He
Perish on the shameful tree,
And our holy Temple's law
Be kept free from ev'ry flaw
For the Temple must have sway
Till heaven and earth shall pass away."
"So the Nazarene is dead,"
Caiaphas the High Priest said.

"So the Nazarene is dead,"
In his palace Pilate said.
"Good His words and just his life.
But the priests who stirred up strife,
Said His followers would be
From imperial Rome set free.
Vain their plotting and their care—
All the yoke of Rome must bear—
Rome that will forever stand
Mighty Lord of every land."
"So the Nazarene is dead,"
In his palace Pilate said.

The Temple now has passed away,
Ended Rome's imperial day,
But the Nazarene still lives,
Peace to myriad souls He gives,
Lives in gentle words and deeds,
In all that meets the spirit's needs,
And the cross on which He died
By his death is sanctified;
Hosts in many lands acclaim
The Crucified One by His name;
In their faithful hearts is seen
The ever-living Nazarene.
Priest and Pilate both have said
That the Nazarene is dead.
False their wisdom—false their lore—
He lives now and evermore.

—William E. A. Axon

SHALL LABOR BE DOMINATED BY THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC?

The Commission on Temperance of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America of which Governor Carl E. Milliken, of Maine, is chairman, is undertaking a campaign to educate the workingmen of this country on the liquor question. The plan of the commission is to "purchase advertising space in over one hundred leading labor papers to counteract the influence of the liquor men and the professional labor leaders who are on the payroll of the liquor men." Rev. Charles Stelzle, who is directing this campaign, spent two years studying the liquor problem as it affects workingmen, and in pushing unusually effective campaigns with this information as a basis.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:

PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes
May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

AMERICANIZATION

MRS. ELLA BOUCHER BLACK, National Superintendent of Work Among Foreign Speaking People

"A problem unknown to other lands will become accentuated in the event of war. Within our borders are eight millions of aliens who, by birth, tradition and training, will find it difficult, if not impossible, to understand the causes which have led to the war. War invariably breeds intolerance and hatred and tends to arouse antagonisms inimical to the best interests of a nation."

That many thousands of men of foreign birth contemplate standing by our colors has been demonstrated by the way they have rushed to take out naturalization papers. In Chicago in one day there were fifty applicants. Are we doing our part to help these men become good citizens? And what about their wives? An incident which occurred in Pittsburgh a few days ago serves to show that our foreign-born sisters, if properly educated, are as patriotic as we are. Miss Virginia Steller, born in Budapest, Hungary, nineteen years ago, and coming to America ten years ago, was the first woman of Pittsburgh to apply at the recruiting office for enlistment in the naval coast defense reserve. Miss Steller, although in this country a comparatively short time, uses faultless English and operates a typewriter at the rate of seventy-five words per minute. She also speaks and writes Polish, Hungarian and German.

Vastly more important than handing these men and women a leaflet in their own language is some act of ours that will help them understand our language and our customs.

The men invariably pick up our language just as fast as they can, but many women, especially the older ones, are timid about trying a new language. Yet, if they do not speak and understand English, they are handicapped at every turn of the way.

At the beginning of this year we announced that we would make the immigrant woman our special work. We asked that each member of the W. C. T. U., if possible, do two things:

1. Place the name of one immigrant woman on her calling list.
2. Induce one non-English speaking woman to speak English.

The slogan for "Baby Week" this year is not only "Save the Baby," but also "Save the Mother." Mrs. Martha M. Allen, National superintendent of Medical Temperance, can furnish you with some very good leaflets in English for both mother and baby. These can be secured also from National W. C. T. U. Headquarters. I have a limited number of leaflets in English, German, Italian and Hungarian on "The Care of Babies" which I shall be glad to send to anyone desiring them.

Write to your state superintendent for "Plan of Work" and other helps, or if you have none, write to me.

The following prizes will be awarded in this department this year:

1. To the state with the most children of foreign parentage in Loyal Temperance Legions, $5 in gold.
2. To the state having the largest number of foreign women enrolled, $5 in gold.
3. To the state holding the most public meetings in the interest of New Americans, the banner.

At the last National W. C. T. U. convention, a representative of the Massachusetts W. C. T. U., which has taken the banner for a number of years, remarked that it had come to be so a matter of course that it would go to Massachusetts, it might be as well to leave it in the state rather than bring it to the convention each year. Will you let the Massachusetts white ribboners carry it back to their state from the National convention at Washington, D. C., next December?

Beaverdale, Pa.

AMONG OUR WORKERS

The pen used by Governor Norbeck of South Dakota in signing the Frances E. Willard Day bill is now in the possession of the South Dakota W. C. T. U. It was presented to the white ribboners by the governor.

An interesting meeting in the interest of Scientific Temperance Instruction was held by the W. C. T. U. of Phoenix, N. Y., in the Congregational church on March 20. Members of the faculty and board of education were present on invitation of the local union to meet Mrs. Anna Oberlander, state S. T. I. superintendent. After an informal reception, prayer by the pastor of the Baptist church and music, the local president, Mrs. W. D. Thompson, introduced the speaker, who gave a fine address. It is hoped that this meeting will result in the introduction of prize essay contests in the public schools.

The Cooperstown (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. placed "The Life of Frances E. Willard," "Four Decades" and "The Compendium of Temperance Truth," in the high school library. On the occasion of an address by Mrs. Carlotta Conrad in the Baptist church four active and one honorary member were gained.

Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary, on a recent visit to Newburg, Mo., gave an address at the high school. On this occasion a number of soldier boys who were in the city for only a few hours were in attendance on invitation of Prof. C. Specking. In the evening she delivered an inspiring address and organized a Y. P. B. "We will be glad to welcome Mrs. Carl any time in the future," writes our local correspondent.

The annual spring institute of the W. C. T. U. of Nottoway and Prince Edward counties, Virginia, comprising the unions of Crewe, Burkeville, Rice, Prospect, Farmville and Blackstone, met at Blackstone, March 15-16. A gold medal contest was the special feature at the opening session Thursday evening, Miss Mildred Vaiden of Farmville being awarded the medal. The following morning the meeting was called to order by Mrs. B. T. Taylor, and the thirteen delegates present made their reports. At the afternoon meeting there occurred the reading of the president's address, reports of department superintendents, a service for the dedication of white ribbon recruits, and an address, "The Onward March of Prohibition," by Mrs. James Cannon.

We record here the names of comrades and friends who have recently passed to the higher life:

MRS. CHARLOTTE LEWIS ROUNDEY HOSKINS, former National president of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of India, World's superintendent of the department of Anti-Narcotics, and a writer of many worthy articles for the India Temperance Record and White Ribboner. Mrs. Hoskins was a pioneer missionary of the Northwest India Conference, and with her husband, Rev. Robert Hoskins, spent thirty-six years in India, at Bijnour, Badaon, Shahjehanpore and Cawnpore. After the death of her husband in 1903 she returned to America, taking up her residence with her son in Cheyenne, Wyo. She re-organized the Cheyenne W. C. T. U., which had been discontinued for several years, an organization which has since been very helpful in bringing about the recent legislation for the submission of a state prohibition amendment to the constitution in 1918, a fact which gave her much joy during her last days.

MRS. JULIA H. BREWER, Delaware City, Delaware, a charter member of the local union.

MRS. ELIZABETH WARING, a pioneer in temperance work and for twenty-five years an active white ribboner. Mrs. Waring was for thirty years a resident of Clearfield, Iowa, moving eight years ago to Colorado. She died at Nunn on February 24.

MRS. JULIA P. STEWART, of Aiken, South Carolina, sister of Mrs. Imogen La Chance, president of Arizona W. C. T. U.

THE W. C. T. U. IN THE BABY WEEK CAMPAIGN

ALCOHOL THE ENEMY OF THE BABY

CAROLYN P. LINDSAY, National Superintendent Fairs and Open Air Meetings

Nation-wide baby week is again to be celebrated May 1-6. National, state and local organizations of every conceivable character all over the United States are uniting in the interest of "King Baby" and are ready to serve his little majesty to the very best of their ability.

Campaigns for Baby Week were conducted in every state in the union in 1916, some 2,100 reports having reached the Children's Bureau at Washington, and requests for information having previously come from 4,234 communities. This report is far from complete. The plan was adopted in a few instances even in territory outside the United States—three campaigns were reported from Canada, one from the Isle of Pines, West Indies. Rumors were received of a baby week in Alaska, and one detailed report came from Honolulu where Orientals entered their babies, and the native mothers showed the keenest interest.

Exhibit Suggestions

These campaigns, or celebrations, varied from the simplest kind of afternoon meeting on a single day in a rural community to the well planned, elaborate program of a week's duration in a large city. The cost ranged from two dollars to four thousand dollars, but everywhere the effort was put forth for better babies, the community has profited, as after results show. One reason for the great success of these campaigns everywhere was the splendid co-operation given. Once the idea took hold everybody helped. It mattered not where the idea started, or who took the initiative, the get-together community spirit was the star feature and the secret of success.

No white ribboner ever misses an opportunity to show her real interest in the little ones by proving that alcohol in any form whatever is the baby's enemy. A W. C. T. U. exhibit during Baby Week may be made most beautifully attractive by effort on the part of a committee composed of women from three of our departments, viz., Health, Medical Temperance, Mothers' Meetings and White Ribbon Recruits. In view of the fact that many other organizations may exhibit, each emphasizing its own particular work, it is well to confine the W. C. T. U. exhibit strictly to the temperance phase of the question, the effect of the use of alcohol before and after birth. The place should be the first consideration. It may be a school-house, a welfare station, a town hall, a church; in cities preferably a great educational building, a club house or a theater. Oftimes the whole aspect of things changes if one is not allowed to drive a nail, or a tack, and only bare wall space is granted. In this case it is quite possible to fabricate a wall by the use of the shallow boxes large panes of window glass come in. Pile them one on the other in the corner of a well lighted room, first having reinforced them at the back. Being very shallow they will occupy little space. Cover them with good background material of a neutral shade. Your exhibit may then be put up with push pins. One in course of construction is to be blue and white. All mounted posters will have a binding of blue (book binders) to simulate a frame. There will be a frieze of blue prohibition fans around the top, some palms in blue jardinieres and literature printed in blue with a dear wee baby as an illustration. The general color scheme will conform with the civic poster which is also blue in tone. Your exhibit may contain a beautiful Madonna (Sichel, preferably) with the word, "Purity," beneath it. Posters, charts, cartoons and statistics relative to the baby and the effect of intemperance on its life, a shelf of good books recommended for mothers to read, a medicine closet with all the evil nostrums in it not good for babies, labeled "Things Bad for Baby," are all taking features. Many well lettered posters (in blue) such as, "The best gift to a baby is a healthy father and mother, physically healthy, mentally healthy and morally healthy," can be used to good effect. Have the sentiment printed in Italian, Polish and Yiddish, also use these:

"Baby's Health Nation's Wealth"

Slogans for Baby Week

"The race marches forward on the feet of little children."

"Look back—what did you inherit from your father and mother? Look ahead—what will your children inherit from you?"

"Better parents, better babies, better city."

Bristol board, twenty-two by forty-eight inches can be used for these posters.

Your exhibit should also contain a panel (window shade) with W. C. T. U. and other leaflets mounted artistically by the use of pictures of babies' heads at the juncture of the leaflets. Have, also, a revised prohibition map labeled, "States where it will be easier for babies to live and thrive."

Have attractive literature in English and in foreign languages put up in neat white envelopes of generous size with the words, "Compliments of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union" on the outside. Your exhibit should also have a fine victrola with as many records as possible of the beautiful slumber songs and cradle songs. Some attractive white ribboner who can talk temperance intelligently should be in charge to explain the exhibit. She will be a great addition and will have a splendid opportunity to win members.

There are, however, other ways of helping in the campaign besides preparing and installing exhibits. Have a baby clinic under the direction of the W. C. T. U. or a doll medal contest, a lecture with lantern slides, a baby health conference, story hours and informal talks, a succession of them. A window exhibit, with a baby demonstration, using a real baby and a nurse attracts attention. Urge proper birth registration, give a play, write newspaper articles, or engineer a baby parade.

It is wonderful how many agencies will co-operate in a baby campaign. First of all the governor or the mayor will issue a proclamation and the state or city board of health ally itself enthusiastically with the movement. Other forces that may be enlisted are the churches (for Baby Sunday), the Sunday schools, Parent-Teacher Associations, school teachers, Little Brother Leagues, Boy Scouts, Camp Fire Girls, Woman's Clubs, Y. W. C. A.'s, and Y. M. C. A.'s, nurses' guilds, ministerial associations, chambers of commerce, newspaper editors (who can do so much), musicians and movie men, etc., etc.! Do not be afraid to press people into service, and you will marvel at the response that a baby's call brings.

So many things can be done that it is difficult to choose. In a parade last year one handsome youngster wore a label, stating, "I am a milk station baby." Surely we can produce a handsomer youngster wearing a label, "I am a temperance baby!"

"100 Per Cent for the Babies"

Many special days may be observed during a campaign, such as visiting day, father's day, little brother and sister day, outing day, baby flag day, little mother's day. It is fine to have a slogan and then live up to it. "Better fare, better air, better care for babies," "Baby's health means more than wealth," "Baby health nation's wealth," "100 per cent for the babies," "Let's make a better nation by baby conservation." This is the age of the child. We cannot do too much for him. An interesting feature of the campaign is that it includes children up to six years of age, which gives splendid opportunity for instruction relative to teeth, tonsils, adenoids, etc. A tooth brush brigade in a school is a unique idea.

Many suggestions will come to women who enter this splendid field of endeavor, but be it remembered that the "temperance twist" (as our musical director calls it) must be given to all that is done. And if you have an exhibit and it is a success please have a picture taken of it for the encouragement of others. If you have a successful baby parade you may feel like saying,

"Babies to right of us,
Babies to left of us,
Babies in front of us,
Babies to dazzle us,
God bless 'em,
So say we, all of us."

OKLAHOMA LEGISLATURE PASSES SUFFRAGE, "BONE DRY" AND ANTI-CIGARET MEASURES

ABBIE B. HILLERMAN, President Oklahoma W. C. T. U.

During the recent session of the Oklahoma legislature, which adjourned the middle of March, the W. C. T. U. was actively at work for reform measures of various kinds. An anti-cigaret bill different from most laws of the kind was passed. It was not the original bill introduced by J. O. McCollister, but a substitute measure, which we hope will be more effective than the present law. In the closing days of the legislature a resolution passed both houses to submit to the voters of Oklahoma at the regular election in November 1918, a straight suffrage amendment providing for full suffrage. The time elapsing before the vote will give opportunity for much educational work and a thorough campaign. A "bone dry" law was passed, also a bill for the removal of officers who fail to perform their duty in enforcing the prohibition and anti-gambling laws.

AN EASTER INSPIRATION

CECILE L. HOUGHTON

"Inez has caught an idea, a very pleasant—a very important one! Just now the broom and the carpet must suffer the effects of her enthusiasm but by-and-by—. And you and I, Irma, must await with patience the eventful time of the unfolding for till then 'Wild horses couldn't drag it out'!"

Inez laughed good-naturedly at her younger sister's banter as she grasped a dusty rug and carried it out of the room. They were such a busy, happy, jolly trio, these Paton sisters, enough alike in appearance and age to be often mistaken one for the other by acquaintances, yet as different in manner and tastes as sisters could well be.

"It's just the Easter idea that has seized me, I think," said Inez as she again passed the two at the sink, where they were washing and wiping the breakfast dishes. "You see I have been thinking of Irma's lilies which she has so skillfully tended that they are sure to beautify the church on Sunday and gladden whoever is fortunate enough to receive them afterwards. Nobody has such luck with flowers as you do, Irma. You know what the bulbs would do for me! Whenever I shut my eyes I can see the poor drowned things I killed last year."

"Well, but Inez," insisted the sister, "you were not really to blame. You did all right only—"

"That is just it—only. Hereafter when I want my bulbs to receive fair treatment I shall hand them over to you before I have hardly looked at them. Then I thought of Irene's solo. Mr. Potter said only yesterday that her singing does more good than his sermons."

"Compliments all around! What a morning this is! And what is there left to be said of Inez, the wage-earner without whose efforts the baby and pride of the Paton family must have remained forever in obscurity—as a musician?" asked that young lady, hurrying the carefully dried cups into their places.

"That is just the trouble," rejoined Inez. "You and Irma can do such lovely helpful things while I—am—just—a—Martha. But I do have a little tiny inspiration this morning and as soon as this room is set to rights I am going to see what there is in it—I mean the inspiration."

"Now you keep watch to see if she changes her dress or puts on her coat and hat, Irma. I will accidentally take a peep into her room occasionally," teased Irene. "Won't it be interesting!"

"She hasn't gone out of the house and she isn't in her room," announced Irene an hour later. "She is in the office running the typewriter as if it were a regular work day instead of our Easter vacation. What can it mean? If it were private correspondence she would use her pen."

And yet if the mischievous Irene had but known it her sister was busy with

"Inez was busy with correspondence of a very personal sort"

correspondence of a very personal sort. First, there was the dear old lady who had meant so much to her when she was a little girl. All the town remembered her as a zealous and efficient worker in the cause of temperance. Particularly had the children claimed her thought and attention, which resulted in a live organization of their own with parades, contests, interesting instruction, and friendly helpfulness for everybody. "I wonder that we have not taken more pains to thank her for her efforts," thought Inez. "She can surely read the typewritten letter much more easily than she could my writing now that her eyes are so bad." So she let the love and gratitude in her soul find expression through the medium of the machine. When she had finished the lengthy message, she read it with a sigh of satisfaction. "There—I have not only thanked her as well as I could but I have shown her what I honestly believe her influence has been in securing the recent temperance victories of our town."

"And now there is Jamie, poor little sufferer. If his parents could have had the training which we have been given they would not now have cause to regret the condition which intemperance has imposed upon the child. I will write him a happy little Easter message and if I use simple words I think he can read the letter himself." Several times, as the work progressed, the writer stopped and removed the paper to insert on its page little pencil sketches. When it was all done Inez surveyed the result with a smile. "It is kind of cute if I do say it myself. The dear little chap! I hope he will enjoy it as much as I have done."

The more Inez wrote, the fuller seemed her heart. "I wish," she meditated, "that I knew how to write to Jamie's parents and somehow get them to understand what it means to receive the risen Jesus in one's heart. If only they could realize just a little how much He loves them they could not help loving Him in return." Then with a little prayer that her Master would guide her thoughts and her fingers she slipped a clean sheet of paper into the machine.

The lilies in their lovely purity unfolded in the Easter sunshine; the Easter music ascended like fragrance from sincere hearts overflowing with love and praise. At the close of the opening prayer the pastor waited a moment in silence then said, "We have a special little service to perform—one that seems to make this beautiful day one of perfect harmony and joy. A family of three has asked for baptism. They will now come forward." At the sight Inez could have wept for happiness—Jamie's parents—Jamie carefully borne in his father's arms! The three receiving the outward sign of the inward purity! What part in the result her words may have had, Inez did not even question. Sometime, somewhere there had been a sowing and now there was the joy of harvest. "He is risen! He is risen!" her joyous heart sang out, "And lo, He is with us alway!"

A SONG OF EASTER

The golden sun climbs up the sky,
The shadows flee away,
Oh! weary heart, forget to sigh:
God sends thee Easter Day!

Long was the night, and chill the air,
The darkness lingered long,
Yet is the morning bright and fair,
Uplift thine Easter song.

The cross that bowed thee with its weight
By strength of prayer is stirred,
Until it bear thee soon or late
As wings upbear the bird.

The life that thrills from star to star,
And beats in leaf and stem,
Is wider than the heavens are
And blesses thee from them.

Not held of death, the King went forth
From out its shattered prison:
Oh, tell it, utmost South and North,
To-day "The Lord is risen!"

—Margaret E. Sangster

MONSTER DEPUTATION OF WOMEN DEMANDS SIX O'CLOCK CLOSING OF LIQUOR BARS IN QUEENSLAND, AUSTRALIA

Special Correspondence

The largest deputation of women ever congregated in one place in Queensland waited on the premier recently to request an emergency war measure to close the liquor bars at six o'clock p. m. Long before the hour for the interview the audience hall in the executive building was packed. Passages and stairways were filled and the throng reached out into the street where crowds patiently waited to hear the result. Half a dozen of the best women speakers in Brisbane, among them the state W. C. T. U. president, presented their case. Although they advanced unanswerable arguments the premier was obdurate. In his reply he evaded the question and strayed off into questions of politics. One woman said, "We did not come here to be instructed in politics. We are here for six o'clock closing." Another said, "Mr. Premier, grant the prayer of the women." A third said, "Mr. Ryan, you have a little boy of your own. We have grown up sons—that is why we are here." Still another said, "Do not talk law and expediency and 'ifs' to us. We want six o'clock closing and we mean to have it." "Don't be frightened for your party," said another. "The women in the community are strong enough to make or mar a party, and they mean to have six o'clock closing." The government has its own policy which must be adhered to whatever happens, it appears, but something may happen.

The bill framed in the legislative council providing for the closing of liquor bars at six o'clock was passed through all its stages in one day and sent to the legislative assembly. It was received and read a first time and the second reading was made an order for the next day. The bill has not been heard of since although eighteen weeks have elapsed. "It will be dealt with 'in due course,'" is the answer invariably made to any inquiry concerning the measure. The present parliament was put into power by the Labor party, aided by thousand of pounds from the licensed victualers. The cabinet is bound hand and foot to the liquor sellers.

HOW HELEN'S LILIES HELPED TO MAKE COLTON DRY

Entering the house with a gay little skip Helen put up her school books and went at once to inspect the lily beds which she had been so carefully tending that they might be in bloom for Easter, which was now only a few days away. Dozens of beautiful white blossoms seemed to joyously nod to her as though they recognized in her the little gardener who had so carefully watered them. "Thank you, thank you," the lilies seemed to be saying in chorus as they courtesied in the breeze, "We have come to help you celebrate Easter."

"You dear posies," cried the delighted child. "I wonder how you'd really like to be used—if you could only tell me. Last year I took lilies to the church and to the hospital. I wonder where you'll do the most good?"

At the dinner table that evening the conversation turned, as it was very wont to do in that home, to the subject of the prohibition campaign then in progress in the city. Election day was but a few days after Easter.

"Whether or not we win," Helen's father remarked, "is merely a question of getting the decent men interested enough to look into the matter. It's going to be a close vote. Most of the men I meet in business think that saloons are necessary, and they don't want to experiment with anything so dangerous as prohibition. Let well enough alone, seems to be their motto. I really believe that if all the men in our office building were to vote for prohibition their votes would be sufficient to turn the tide and win the election."

"There has been enough informing literature sent them to convince them," said Helen's mother.

"Yes, no doubt, but I fear a great deal of that goes into their waste paper baskets. If one could devise some unusual, spectacular way of persuading them to really read, for instance, that leaflet about Seattle's experience one year without saloons, I believe it would accomplish wonders."

"What does spec-tac-u-lar mean, papa?" inquired Helen.

Her father carefully explained the long word, laughingly illustrating it by saying, "For instance, if we could send every man of them a bunch of your fragrant lilies with the leaflet it might have the desired effect."

Everybody laughed at the quixotic idea.

"Catch Sis wasting that lily sweetness on unappreciative business men," said Big Brother Hugh.

"Of course I wasn't in earnest," explained Helen's father, noticing how seriously his little daughter seemed to regard the proposition, but I do wish in some way the beautiful Easter spirit might influence the voters to do their duty on election day."

And then everybody except Helen promptly forgot the conversation. But that night Helen dreamed of elections where the ballots were lilies and because of the whiteness of the flowers the voters were unwilling to mar their beauty with a black cross for license, and so the lilies were all carefully deposited in the ballot box white and beautiful, and Colton was voted dry by the unanimous desire of its citizens.

The next morning Helen awoke with a definite plan in her mind. She talked it over with her mother and in the afternoon at the meeting of the W. C. T. U., of which her mother was president, the matter was carefully considered.

The result was that on the day before Easter, Helen cut the lilies and arranged them in baskets. Later a friend stopped with her electric to take the child and her mother with the flowers and a supply of leaflets down to the big building where her father's office was located.

Timidly but bravely Helen entered the building, and while her mother waited in the hall, she went in turn to each office and approaching the men seated at the desks handed each a flower and a leaflet. "Good morning," was the grave greeting of the child. "Won't you please read this leaflet and celebrate Easter by voting Colton dry?"

The unusual gift and the child's soft-voiced request met with a gracious response and every man, as he thanked the little flower girl for her fragrant gift, resolved to take the time to read the leaflet.

Now it happened that the men in the big office building which the little girl visited lived in different parts of the city, and many people heard through them the incident of the little Easter lily campaigner. The newspaper representatives found in the incident the basis for a picturesque write-up and helped to spread the story.

By Easter morning hundreds in Colton were talking of it, and an added Easter glory pervaded many homes through the presence of a lovely lily which had been carefully preserved. The church attendance was unusually large that morning. Men who hadn't been to church for many an Easter went that day. The preachers all knew of the visits of the little girl who wanted Colton dry, and it touched their consciences, and woven in with the beautiful Easter story was a practical temperance note. In fact on Easter the whole city seemed to be talking of prohibition.

On election day the white ribboners decorated the polling places with lilies. Helen and her mother were early at the polls, and no one worked more industriously handing out literature and helping to serve refreshments to the voters than did the little girl who had distributed the lilies.

When the last ballot had been cast and the votes were counted, it was found that prohibition had won by a small majority. As the evening paper said, "The prohibition victory in Colton was in large part due to the little girl with the Easter lilies. Although the child was the first to think of it the voters of Colton quite agreed with her that a vote for prohibition was a most satisfactory way to celebrate Easter."

EASTER LILIES

O! Easter lily, pure, and sweet, and fair,
Your chalice filled with fragrance to the brim
Like that which wafted on the Easter air
When Jesus' mother brought the sweet perfume
Of myrrh, and frankincense, to Jesus' tomb;
O let some drops of thy sweet incense spill
Into our hearts thy purity, until
Some day we may see Him.

—Sarah Ellis Summerland

BULBS 50 High Grade Flowering Bulbs Oxalis, Begonia, Gloxinia, Gladiolus, other kinds. Asparagus Fern. All postpaid. Send 25c
Old Homestead Nursery Co., Round Pond, Me.

Philadelphia Physicians Urge Passage of Anti-Liquor Bill

PETITION ASSAILS BOOZE AS MANKIND'S FOE

"Recognizing the harmful effects of alcoholic beverages upon the physical and economic condition of the human race," 527 Philadelphia physicians sent a direct request to the legislature to give the state a local option bill. The chairman of the committee which inaugurated the movement is a woman—Dr. Lida Stewart Cogill, who two years ago started a petition among the doctors of the city asking similar action. Dr. Cogill herself carried to the capital the list of names, among which were many well known in medical circles. Some went beyond a mere endorsement of local option. For example, Dr. W. W. Keen, the noted surgeon, added that he would like to sign one for state prohibition.

"A sane nation and a prepared nation should be a sober nation," wrote Dr. Frederick Eft.

In addition to Doctor Cogill, members of the committee who sent out the letter were Drs. E. E. Montgomery, Charles A. E. Codman and Walter S. Cornell.

"We felt," said Doctor Cogill, in speaking of the movement to representatives of the press, "that since we had spent sums of money and much time advocating legislation to insure pure milk, campaigns against tuberculosis and the like, we should be in the front rank of the local option movement, since the physician, above others, knows the physical effects of alcohol."

As physician on the staffs of the Women's Hospital and the West Philadelphia Hospital for Women, Doctor Cogill has not used or prescribed alcohol for internal medication for two years.

The letter which brought the ready signatures to the petition said:

"During the last two years the aggressive action of church organizations, corporations and social workers throughout the country has resulted in a strong effort to abolish the liquor traffic, or at least allow, through local option, each community to decide whether the liquor traffic is worth the expense, crime, misery and sickness caused by it.

"Pennsylvania is one of the few remaining states without either prohibition or local option.

Urge Stand Against Alcohol

"We are confident that the medical profession at this time will take a public stand regarding the effects of alcohol on the community. Such a stand is not necessary for the ultimate success of local option or of prohibition, but it is proper that the professional class to whom is intrusted the health of the community shall not leave to corporations, police and social workers the education of the public in a matter which vitally affects the health and morals of the community."

LITERATURE IN FOREIGN LANGUAGES

WELCOME TO AMERICA, by Anna A. Gordon. A leaflet for distribution at ports of entry. Published in German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Swedish, Spanish, Bohemian and Bulgarian. Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.

ARABIC or SYRIAN
The Awful Giant
Price per 50, $1.00; per 100, $1.50.

BOHEMIAN
A Study in Faces
A Plea for the Home
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Saloons Must Go
Opinions of Men Who Know
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

CHINESE
Debarred

CROATIAN
The American Saloon
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

FINNISH
May I Ask?
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.
How the Liquor Traffic Defies the Law
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
The Duty of a Citizen
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

FRENCH
A Brave Boy
Employers Prefer Total Abstainers
The Home versus the Saloon
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Kill the Saloon
A Model Prescription
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

GERMAN
The Vow. Boy Lost
Scientific Testimony on Beer
Girlhood and Purity
Lighthouses Better Than Lifeboats
Judge Morse's Reason
The Cruelty of the Drink Habit
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.
Is It Right? Is the Saloon a Good Thing?
I'll Try
Employers Prefer Total Abstainers
Somebody's Son
A Talk to Mothers, or The Price of a Home
What the Emperor Said
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
The Saloon Catechism
Serious Questions for Voters
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.
An Appeal to the Christian Citizen
Civic Proverbs
Vote No License
Why We Wear the White Ribbon
Royalty and Teetotalism
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

GREEK
The International Bank
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.
The Saloon Must Go
Kill the Saloon
Banks and Saloons
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

HEBREW or YIDDISH
The Saloon Catechism
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.
In the Tower
Banks and Saloons
Serious Questions for Voters
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Kill the Saloon
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

HOLLAND
Wanted, Two Million Boys
Beer! Beer!
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Attention, Voters
The License Voter Gets What?
Wanted
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

HUNGARIAN
Facts About Beer
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.
What Liquor Does
The Indictment
The Clergy and the Saloon
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.
May I Ask?
Beer or Flour
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.

ITALIAN
Why I Am What I Am
One of Many Victims
Alcohol
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.
An Appeal Against the Bottle
Reasons Why I Should Not Drink
A Study in Faces
Banks and Saloons
Grains of Wisdom
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
The Exchange
Vote No License
Priests in Judgment
Civic Proverbs
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

NORWEGIAN-DANISH
How Saloons Benefit Business Men
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.
White Hair in a Single Night
A Plea for the Home
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Labor Condemns the Drink Traffic
Sayings of Noted Men
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

POLISH
Duties of Citizenship
A Study in Faces
Employers Prefer Total Abstainers
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Saloons Must Go
The Clergy and the Saloon
The Exchange
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

PORTUGUESE
Blot Out This Curse
Saloons Must Go

ROUMANIAN
What Liquor Does
The Indictment

RUSSIAN
Temperance News
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

SLOVAK
Duties of Citizenship
A Study in Faces
Facts About Beer
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Drunkenness
The Indictment
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

SPANISH
Scientific Temperance Manual, Edith Smith Davis
Price, 50 cents each
A Handful of Hints, Christine I. Tinling
Spanish Reciter
Price, 10 cents each
The Great Destroyer, Hon. Richmond Pearson Hobson
Price per 50, 30 cents; per 100, 50 cents.
How Cigarets Affect the Heart Beat
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
Excluded
Whose Boys?
The New Catechism
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

SWEDISH
Is It Right? Are Saloons a Help?
Which Will You Protect?
Do You Know These Facts?
The Licensed Saloon
A Study in Faces
Price per 50, 12 cents; per 100, 20 cents.
White Hair in a Single Night
Voting and Fighting
Why a Church Member Should Belong to the W. C. T. U.
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents
Why We Wear the White Ribbon
An Appeal to the Christian Citizen
Only Pieces of Paper
Kill the Saloon
The Duty of a Citizen
Labor Condemns the Drink Traffic
Don'ts for Girls
The New Arithmetic
True to Life
The Thing to Do
Price per 50, 10 cents; per 100, 15 cents.

BLOTTERS
German, Hungarian

PLEDGE CARDS
German, Italian, Bohemian, Hungarian
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 30 cents.

PROSPERITY POST CARDS
The following series of post cards on "Prohibition and Prosperity," in German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Swedish and Spanish:
Of Interest to Wage Earners
What Every Merchant Knows
Prosperity Statistics
Of Interest to Bankers
Of Interest to Taxpayers
Price, 3 for 5 cents; 50 for 60 cents; 100 for $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

RHEUMATISM IS SLOW POISONING

because the entire system becomes permeated with injurious acids.

To relieve rheumatism Scott's Emulsion is a double help; it is rich in blood-food; it imparts strength to the functions and supplies the very oil-food that rheumatic conditions always need.

Scott's Emulsion has helped countless thousands when other remedies failed.

No Alcohol. Refuse Substitutes.

14-48

SCOTT & BOWNE, BLOOMFIELD, N. J.

Become a Nurse

WE have trained thousands of women in their own homes to earn $10 to $25 a week as nurses. Send for "How I Became a Nurse" —248 pages with actual experiences. 48 illustrated lesson pages free.

Sixteenth Year

The Chautauqua School of Nursing

513 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y

$150.00 SALARY FOR 60 DAYS' WORK PAID WOMAN OR MAN in each town to distribute Free circulars, and to take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring.

J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7 G-E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Ill.

ALCOHOL THE SOURCE OF HUMAN ILLS

SENATOR VARDAMAN, of Mississippi

The use of intoxicating liquors is hurtful to man physically and financially, mentally and morally. It is an evil without a mitigating incident. Alcohol is the one deadly drug by which the jewels of the heart's best love are dissolved and poured into the mouths of men to madden the brain and destroy the soul. It has caused more crime, heartaches, sorrow, poverty, and ruin, blighted more lives, frustrated more ambitions, caused more scalding tears to fall from the eyes of woman than all other agencies for evil in modern society. It is an enemy, malignant, untiring, sleepless, and unscrupulous, and I submit that this great governmental agency, the Postal System, ought to be denied to the newspaper that would sell its columns, prostitute its high purposes, and poison the otherwise good influences that flow from its dissemination.

USE EVERY OPPORTUNITY

to wield your influence

AGAINST THE CIGARET

An i-Cigaret Seals, gummed Stickers for Letters, Packages, Leaflets; three designs, with following sentiments:

1. Nothing will put a boy in touch with the saloon quicker than a cigaret.
2. The boy who smokes cigarets need not be anxious about his future; he has none.
3. Cigaret smoking is a mark of degeneracy.

Each seal, boxed, 25 cents per hundred.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

SOUTH CAROLINA'S ANTI-LIQUOR ADVERTISING LAW IN EFFECT MARCH 16

MRS. JOSEPH SPROTT, President South Carolina W. C. T. U.

The anti-liquor-advertising law went into effect March 16. It is a pleasure to read the papers without having our eyes offended by a display of the frantic appeals of the mail order houses to lay in a supply of wet goods against the coming drought. There is no doubt about it, South Carolina is in the midst of a wet spell just now. The express offices are working overtime for whole families are getting their gallon apiece. But on April 25 the DuPont law goes into effect, and then some of this supply will eventually find its way into the gutters, for in that law there is a little clause relating to the storing of alcoholic liquors.

Mrs. Emma Graves Dietrick, National organizer and lecturer, has just finished a month of splendid work in South Carolina. Mrs. Dietrick is a favorite in the Palmetto state. Her first visit was in 1907, and she has made frequent visits since. Each time we think her work better than it was the time before. On this trip she went principally to the new weak unions where the women need the instruction, practical working plans, inspiration and a vision of the magnitude and power of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union which this untiring, consecrated worker is so eminently fitted to give.

Miss Cleo Attaway, state organizer, is constantly "breaking new ground," as well as cultivating the fields already sown, and while the W. C. T. U. is not, perhaps, "on a boom," it is making good, steady, strong growth.

October 19-21 have been fixed as the dates of the state convention, and the great privilege of having the National vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, as a guest, is to be ours.

EDUCATED PUBLIC OPINION HELPS LAW ENFORCEMENT

STELLA B. IRVINE, President Southern California W. C. T. U.

Even with a good law the millennium has not arrived, for a "law can no more enforce itself than it can enact itself." So until the liquor traffic and allied and kindred evils are driven out of our state, out of the nation, out of the world, we will find the Woman's Christian Temperance Union doing business at the same old stand. "We'll organize and agitate and educate till the map's all white." For agitation culminates in education; educated public sentiment results in right laws being enacted; educated public opinion results in laws being enforced. Educating the individual so that the law may remain unbroken is a still higher achievement.

So we will continue our agitation and education through the home, the church, the Sunday school, the public school and the press.

Reduce Your Weight

You CAN do it in a dignified, simple way in the privacy of your room and surprise your family and friends.

I know you can, because I've reduced 35,000 women from 20 to 85 pounds, and what I have done for so many I can do for you.

Don't reduce by drugs or diet alone. You'll look old if you do. You should have work adapted to your condition.

No woman need carry one pound of excess fat. It is so simple to weigh what you should, and you enjoy the process. My cheerful letters and your scales keep you enthused.

I build your vitality, strengthen your heart and teach you to stand, walk and breathe correctly, as I reduce you.

Don't endure fat when it is so easy to reduce.

If you send me your height and weight I'll tell you just what you should weigh. No charge—and I'll send you a 24-page illustrated booklet FREE. Write me. Ask for booklet 23. I'd like to tell you my wonderful experience.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Boulevard. Chicago

EVERY CHURCH MEMBER SHOULD BE IN THE W. C. T. U.

"Unions are disbanding because they think there is nothing more to do, as the people voted to stop the liquor traffic about two years hence. Look over the last two copies of Voice, look over THE UNION SIGNAL, study your Annual Leaflet, take up department work, raise your share of money to keep the state work going, unite to bring every church woman in Montana into the W. C. T. U., prepare to be present at county conventions and National Conferences and be ready to take the speakers your president sends you," writes Mrs. Mary L. Alderson, president Montana W. C. T. U., in the state paper. "These speakers will come as her proxy to help along the work. If any union does not take a speaker offered it, it will not only break a link in the chain of unions, but deprive itself of an opportunity to get help and inspiration. The unions need the personal touch of the expert who knows how to solve its problems and to give it a vision of service."

WOMAN ELECTED TO MEXICAN CONGRESS

Miss Hermila Galindo, of the fifth federal district of Mexico has been elected to the lower house of the Mexican Congress, the first woman in Mexico to fill such a position. It was Miss Galindo who introduced the suffrage measure at the constitutional convention in Queretaro last December, and while no action was taken concerning suffrage she pointed out that the constitution does not forbid a woman to be a candidate nor to vote. With 460 candidates in the field Miss Galindo was one of the successful twenty-four deputies and alternates elected from her district.

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS

118-120 Fifth Ave., New York

WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

1917—SUBSCRIPTION RATES—1917

UNION SIGNAL, weekly edition, $1.00 per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Campaign Edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL, Y. P. B. edition, 35c per year.

UNION SIGNAL DAY IN SOUTH DAKOTA LEGISLATURE

The following interesting bit of news appeared in the South Dakota state paper for March:

"You will all rejoice to know the legislature had a UNION SIGNAL Day. Our beloved president, Mrs. Simmons, ordered enough copies to place one on each member's desk—103 in the house and 46 in the senate. This was done 'in the nick of time,' that is, during the days when the legislators were considering the prohibition bill. It was very satisfying to note that most of the members read THE SIGNAL and gathered from it valuable material for speeches that followed."

WHAT OTHERS HAVE DONE—WHAT ARE YOU DOING?

PASS IT ON!

I send my UNION SIGNAL, after reading, to California, where it is enjoyed by a lady not able to take it. She makes good use of it; then lets others have it. I think eventually my copies must be entirely worn out. I believe all of our literature should be passed on to those who need it. There are so many ways in which we can be of service if we "have a mind to work."

REMEMBER THE "SHUT-IN"

The New Haven W. C. T. U. used the song, "The Steady Subscriber" at its UNION SIGNAL meeting, and we voted to send the paper to our president for the coming year. We paid also for five yearly subscriptions of the Campaign Edition to send to our old members, some of them feeble and not able often to come out to the meetings.

PUT THE PAPER IN THE HANDS OF WORKERS

I am very much interested in getting THE UNION SIGNAL into the hands of our women. I ordered 100 of the February 8 edition, and distributed 80 copies at the last social meeting as well as 80 copies of the four page leaflet, "Report of THE UNION SIGNAL." At our next meeting some of the women are to give the exercise, "The Resurrection of the Blanktown Union." I do not know how a white ribboner can get along without the paper.

"JIM AND ME" and 41 other choice songs on temperance and prohibition including "A Saloonless Nation 1920" are in Songs and Sayings. A great book. Price 25c, 5 for $1. A free copy of new booklet containing "My Father Knows," pronounced "a glorious song," to all who order, mentioning Union Signal.

REV. L. L. PICKETT, Wilmore, Ky.

THE DAY OF LOCAL OPTION PAST

REV. RAYMOND H. HUSE, Concord, N. H.

(Excerpt from Sermon)

We are living in great days in the temperance reform. The pendulum is swinging far and wide. We have had a great spell of "local option." There is something about the argument "Let each community settle the matter for itself" that appeals to democratic New England all chopped up into tiny republics.

When I was pastor in Exeter a bill was introduced into the legislature placing our school towns—Exeter, Hanover, Durham, Tilton and New Hampton—under perpetual prohibition. I remember well the enthusiastic applause that greeted an eloquent speaker in the Exeter town meeting who offered resolutions protesting against the attempt to deprive the people of Exeter of the right of suffrage on the license question, resolutions which carried by an overwhelming majority. The citizens of that classic old academy town wanted the question to come up for vote whether or not anybody should poison their citizens for so much a year.

But, as I say, the pendulum has swung—the American nation has concluded that the American saloon is a menace to manhood and our people are concluding that it is foolish to go over the matter again every year. It is too much like a mother holding a debate with her son every morning as to whether he shall have his face washed. It may possibly develop his argumentative qualities, but the average old-fashioned New England mother was wont to conclude, since there was only one way for the matter to end, it was a waste of time and patience to postpone the conclusion.

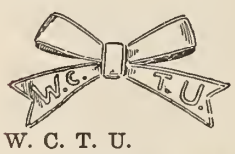
There might possibly be some educational advantage in an annual, biennial or quadrennial discussion as to whether smallpox germs should be scattered in a community, or whether a mad dog should be permitted to go unrestrained, but the average American town would conclude that while such subjects might be all right for a juvenile debating society to play with, it is childish for a company of grown up men to have to bring the matter up once in so often, and if there were certain men or institutions who hoped to reap financial benefit by swinging the vote in the wrong direction that it would be extremely dangerous to keep opening the door of opportunity to them.

And the American saloon stands in the light of scientific investigation, in the light of business efficiency as well as in the light of every movement for the conservation of manhood, the protection of womanhood and childhood, as surely condemned as smallpox germs or mad dogs and as dangerous to the physical and moral health of the community and the nation.

Regarding that there is no doubt. The rank and file of American people feel that way about it—and it is as useless to oppose the rank and file of aroused American people as to blow back into the face of the north wind. Even the brewery plutocrats and rum advocates are only trying a little feebly—they are for the most part huddling in a corner and whining: "Don't do it yet! National prohibition is coming. Let us alone until it arrives."

And that is why the pendulum has swung, and while yesterday some of our finest citizens were saying "It is a community issue—let Hart's Location or Jones' Creek settle it for itself," today, they are saying "It is a national issue. Let us go at the root of the matter."

W. C. T. U. Badges



LOOP BOW PIN, white enamel on sterling silver, with letters W. C. T. U.

Price, 60 cents each; per dozen, $6.50.

Smaller size, same style.

Price, 40 cents each; per dozen, $4.20.

FLAT BOW PIN, white enamel on sterling silver, without letters.

Price, 30 cents each; per dozen, $3.35.

FLAT BOW PIN, white enamel on gilt, without letters.

Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.00.

BROOCH PIN, white enamel on gilt.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

SCARF PIN, white enamel on gilt.

Price, 15 cents each; per dozen, $1.25.

HONORARY PIN OR BUTTON, blue enamel with white bow in center.

Price, 25 cents each; per dozen, $2.75.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

Susanna Cocroft's
Physical Culture
for the Face

will make the outline of your face, neck and chin graceful—relieve wrinkles, sagging muscles and facial blemishes—make your skin clear and soft, your eyes bright. You can make your hair glossy and abundant—your hands smooth and white—your feet comfortable, through definite directions which will take only a few minutes at home each day.

Write for information and our free booklet giving many valuable hints.

Grace-Mildred Culture Course
Dept. 16, 624 So. Michigan Blvd. Chicago

LEGISLATIVE JOTTINGS

A drastic anti-cigaret bill has passed both houses of the Kansas legislature.

A bill prohibiting the manufacture and sale of cigarets and cigaret paper has passed the lower house of the Delaware legislature. This is the first of two anti-cigaret measures introduced at this session.

Missionary Charts

Showing the relation of temperance to missions

Africa—Three.
Effect of Liquor Traffic on Native Races.
India—One.
Responsibility of the Christian Church to Non-Christian Religions.
China—Two.
By a Chinese Artist. Effects of Nicotine and Opium Habits.
Bulgaria—One.
Results of the Temperance Work of One Missionary.
North American Indian—One.
Under the Temperance Gospel.
A set of eight charts in color 11x14 in.
Complete set in envelope, with key.
Price, $1.00.
These sets are not broken.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., APRIL 12, 1917 | No. 15

Your Flag and Mine

Your flag and mine! How proudly there
It flutters in the morning breeze
And who, beholding it, shall dare
To turn in doubt or let despair
Assail his nobler ecstasies?
Your flag and mine, and ours to guard
So that in future centuries
Still proudly striped and bravely starred,
Unsmirched by Shame, by Wrong unmarred,
Its might shall thrill, its beauty please.

Your flag and mine! And shall we let
Its glory die or splendor fade?
Who doubts that Freedom flaunts it yet
Or dares to heedlessly forget,
By selfishness or passion swayed?
Your flag and mine, and ours to hold
In tender reverence, unafraid,
Our faith adorning every fold
In virtue strong, in honor bold,
Its grace to all the world displayed.

Your flag and mine! How splendidly
It flutters out against the sky;
How glorious it is to see,
How fair to you, how dear to me—
Most proud of all the flags that fly!
Your flag and mine, and ours to keep Unsoiled, unshamed and waving high—
Our trust unfeigned, our courage deep—
For those whom, after we shall sleep,
It shall inspire and glorify.

—S. E. Kiser

Florida Legislature Passes Prohibition Submission Measure. Senate Vote, 29 to 3; House, 62 to 5.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

PRESIDENT'S WAR MESSAGE AWAITED WITH INTENSE INTEREST—SENATOR SHEPPARD INTRODUCES NATIONAL PROHIBITION RESOLUTION AS VITAL WAR MEASURE

MRS. MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

The opening of the extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress will stand out in history as one of the most momentous periods in our nation's life. The call by President Wilson to consider the question of war with Germany brought back to Washington every member who found it possible to come.

Monday, April 2, was a bright and beautiful day. Birds were singing, trees and shrubs were bursting with new life and all nature was glad. Yet over it all hung the dark, angry cloud of war, with all its horrors.

The opening of a new Congress is always an occasion of great interest, but this time more than ever, for two especial reasons: first, for the reason already named; second, because of the seating of a woman in the historic House of Representatives for the first time in its history. The demand for special tickets to the gallery was unprecedented. Each Congressman had but one to dispose of, though besieged by dozens of applicants. Noon was the hour set for the opening, but as early as 10:30 the galleries were filled. On the floor of the House old members and new ones were exchanging warm greetings and the word "Hello" was heard on all sides, as men sprang toward each other with outstretched hands. Five minutes before twelve, Miss Jeannette Rankin entered the hall, escorted by her colleague and fellow townsman, John M. Evans of Missoula, Montana. Instantly every man on the floor and many in the galleries arose and applauded most vociferously. With an inclination of the head, she acknowledged the compliment paid her and took a seat on the Republican side of the aisle, well in the rear. At twelve o'clock sharp, South Trimble, Clerk of the House, took his place on the rostrum and called the body to order. Prayer was offered by the blind chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden. This was followed by the roll-call and when the name of Miss Rankin was reached, again there was an outburst of applause as she responded in a clear voice, "Present." Of the 433 living members 429 answered to their names. Three were kept away by illness and two have died since the close of the last Congress.

Immediately following the roll-call, Representative Schall, a Progressive of Minnesota and totally blind, stepped forward and made an eloquent appeal for Champ Clark as Speaker. Democrats applauded roundly, but the Republicans sat silent in their seats. Representative Green of Massachusetts then nominated Representative Mann of Chicago for Speaker. The roll was then called, each member responding with the name of his choice. When Miss Rankin voted, the applause was so continuous she rose and bowed.

Speaker of the House Chosen

Champ Clark was chosen Speaker by 217 to 205 votes. All the Democrats present and four of the so-called Independents voted for Mr. Clark. Representative Mann and two others were appointed a committee to escort him to the rostrum and when he ascended the steps, the entire House rose and a great ovation followed.

The senior member of the House administered the oath that every member, new or old, takes at the opening of the new Congress. After the Speaker had been sworn in, the states were called in alphabetical order, and when Montana was reached Miss Rankin stepped forward and moved up the aisle in the midst of some thirty or forty men, who seemingly involuntarily made an opening for her to pass to the front, just as a father or brother would do. She was surrounded all day with groups of members who came to offer congratulations and I felt sure her small hand, for she is a slight, small body, was lame from the hearty grips given it.

There were nine roll-calls in electing the officers of the House, namely, the Speaker, sergeant-at-arms, doorkeeper, postmaster, committees, etc.

The hours were filled with the work of organization and when evening came, it was whispered around that the President would appear before the joint session of Senate and House at 8:30 and at that hour, the announcement from the door by the sergeant-at-arms, "The President of the United States," brought every one to his feet. With solemn mien and rather low voice, the President began his address which was listened to amid almost painful stillness, except when applause stayed his words. Members of the Supreme Court were present and it was noted that frequently the hand clapping was started by the Chief Justice of the United States, or one of his associates.

Senate Considers President Wilson's War Message

Outside the building were hundreds of people, massed, awaiting the word from the President as to the possibility of war. When he came, and when he entered his automobile to return to the White House, a mighty cheer followed him.

On Wednesday, April 4, the Senate took up the matter of war, as presented by President Wilson. The session began at ten in the morning and continued until eleven at night, when, after a day of excitement, a vote on the resolution declaring the United States and Germany were at war, was taken, 82 so deciding and 6 voting in the negative, viz., Senator Gronna of North Dakota, Senator La Follette of Wisconsin, Senator Norris of Nebraska, Senator Lane of Oregon, Senator Stone of Missouri, and Senator Vardaman of Mississippi. The result was received with marked silence. The resolution which was drafted after consultation with the State Department was as follows:

"Whereas the imperial German government has committed repeated acts of war against the government and the people of the United States of America: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

"That the state of war between the United States and the imperial German government which has thus been thrust upon the United States is hereby formally declared; and that the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to employ the entire naval and military forces of the United States and the resources of the government to carry on war against the imperial German government; and to bring the conflict to a successful termination all of the resources of the country are hereby pledged by the Congress of the United States."

Matter Discussed by House

Thursday, April 5, the House devoted the entire day to a discussion of the resolution passed by the Senate. Those favoring war and those opposing such action on the part of the government, were all given full opportunity to express their views. At times feeling ran high and not until 3:15 in the morning was the vote taken, resulting in 373 for war and 50 opposed. The leader of the Democratic side of the House, Representative Kitchin of North Carolina, spoke most emphatically and voted against the resolution, while the leader of the Republican side, Mr. Mann of Illinois, spoke as earnestly and voted for it. Miss Rankin cast her first vote against war.

The enormous sum of $3,502,517,000 has been asked by Congress to put the country in condition to meet the enemy. The government plans to raise a war army of 1,000,000 men within a year and 2,000,000 within two years. God help us as a nation and God help us as individuals.

On Monday 309 bills and 27 resolutions were introduced in the House. Of these, three bills were presented by Mr. Randall of California, namely, one proposing an amendment to the Constitution for national prohibition; a second, to exclude intoxicating liquors from national parks; and a third divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character.

Senator Sheppard Introduces National Prohibition Resolution as Vital War Measure

On Wednesday Senator Sheppard introduced in the Senate a resolution for an amendment to the Federal Constitution providing for national prohibition "as a vital war measure." Before introducing the resolution he declared that the "adoption of the amendment is a measure of preparedness." The bill provides authority for Congress to absolutely prohibit the manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors. Said the Senator, "From the great war we have learned that prohibition is necessary to the efficiency of our man power and conservation of our resources."

American Flag Finally Flies Over Danish West Indies

The final act of more than fifty years' effort to bring the Danish West Indies under the American flag was completed with formal ceremonies at the State Department this week, when Danish Minister Brun was handed a treasury warrant for $25,000,000, the purchase price, and wireless messages were sent to American and Danish authorities at the islands to lower the Danish flag and raise the Stars and Stripes. At noon on April 3 the new possessions passed definitely and finally under the authority of the United States.

With the formal transfer, the islands become known as the Virgin Islands of the United States, a designation chosen by the natives and adopted by the United States government. In all there are fifty islands, but only three large enough to be of importance. St. Thomas is the most important and has one of the finest harbors in the West Indies. This harbor will be transformed into a strong naval base by the United States for the protection of the Panama Canal and for general military purposes.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters Again Open

When on March 4 the Sixty-fourth Congress closed, National W. C. T. U. headquarters at Washington were given up for the time being, but the calling of the extraordinary session brought us back and we are again at our posts. Miss Gordon has been here during the week, coming on from Evanston.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., April 6, 1917

Two State Capitals Outlaw Liquor Traffic

Madison, Wisconsin, and Springfield, Illinois, Give Dry Majority

Two cities of great importance were won for prohibition on April 3: Springfield, the capital of Illinois, and Madison, the capital of Wisconsin, and the seat of its state university. Springfield went dry by a majority of 458, and the voting women of that city are credited with this victory. While the men of the city gave a majority of 1,877 for the saloons, the women rolled up a majority of 2,335 against them.

In Madison, the vote was 4,556 dry and 4,155 wet, and the result was achieved after one of the hottest campaigns ever waged in that city.

Over ten townships were won in Illinois and it is estimated that approximately 240 saloons will be compelled to close their doors as a result of the April election.

In Wisconsin, a total of 45 cities, towns and villages are claimed by dry leaders to have swung from wet to dry, while only a few were lost. The popularity of prohibition as evidenced by the vote in the Wisconsin towns will undoubtedly influence the senate of the legislature to act favorably upon the prohibition referendum measure that has already passed the house.

The vote in the Illinois cities shows a steady growth of prohibition sentiment and justifies the fear of the liquorites that were they to permit the legislature to submit the question of statewide prohibition to the people, they would be voted out of business.

Duluth, Minnesota, Votes Dry Again

Last June the citizens of Duluth, Minnesota, voted dry by a majority of 400. Last week they raised that majority to 1,200, thus proving the entire satisfaction of the people of the city with prohibition. The liquorites gave as their excuse for bringing up the question again this year that "there was confusion among the voters about marking their ballots; that some voted dry when they really intended to vote wet." If that statement has in it any truth, evidently those short-sighted individuals who regretted their vote for a dry city, in the past twelve months repented of their error and at the April election not only intentionally voted on the right side but saw that all their friends and neighbors did likewise.

Circus Receipts Doubled in Dry Towns

Every line of business prospers under prohibition, and the circus business is no exception to the rule. In addressing a business men's banquet of the Dry Chicago Federation W. H. Rice, a circus man, said:

"I have never before attended a temperance meeting and I am not a temperance man, but all my men believe in the dry cause because of its good effect on the pocketbook.

"We have toured the west when it was wet and since it has become dry. In Seattle, wet, we made $3,120 and in Seattle, dry, $6,710. In Portland, Ore., wet, we made $3,264; dry, $8,206.

"We got twice as much work out of the men in dry towns for the expenditure of the same amount of time and money as in wet towns. In wet towns our expenses were the highest. The show business needs sober, reliable men just as every other business does."

Prohibition a Liberalizing Agency in Russia

The historian of the Russian revolution, searching for the causes of the epochal upheaval in that despotism-ridden country, may point to the edict prohibiting the sale of vodka as one of the most important of the liberalizing agencies responsible for the unseating of the Czar.

The other and earlier efforts of the Russian people to overthrow the bureaucracy were aimless, unorganized movements. There was none of the daring precision and the amazing cohesion displayed in Petrograd and Moscow during the period preceding the Duma's defiance of the imperial authority. The Russia which planned to throw off the old regime and institute a new one was a cool-headed, purposeful Russia. It prepared in advance for many contingencies that necessarily would arise in connection with such a startling change; it met others with a decision and a unity of purpose that has commanded the world's admiration.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1880
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa†† Ohio New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah†† Missouri
Minnesota Wyoming

STATES HAVING TEMPERANCE DAY IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Alabama Oregon
Tennessee North Dakota
Kansas Missouri
New Mexico South Dakota

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

May these qualities not be directly attributable to the fact that the Slavic world previously had thrown off the age-long burden of intemperance? There is reason to believe that this may have been the case, for it is certain that other things have happened in the past two years, directly attributable to prohibition, which were only a little less sensational than the change in government. The remarkable story is told thus by an eastern contemporary which evidently has devoted considerable study to the matter:

"In 1912 the people saved in their banks or deposited in securities just over twenty million dollars; in 1913 not quite so much. In the first eight months of 1914 they took out fifty-five million dollars more than they paid in. Then came the war and prohibition, and in the first four months of the war, with no vodka to lure their money from them, they poured seventy million dollars into the banks. In 1915 they saved four hundred and five million dollars, and the budget for 1917 gives their savings to September, 1916, with securities, at seven hundred and fifty-five million dollars. The figures of savings and deposits of securities are hard to believe. Look at them again:

"Last eight months of vodka, net loss of $55,000,000.

"First four months of prohibition, savings of $70,000,000.

"First full year of prohibition, savings of $405,000,000.

"First nine months of 1916, savings of $755,000,000.

"In two years Russia has recovered her lost revenue and enriched her people. The bank deposits for the last year of vodka were forty million dollars, the deposits for a year of prohibition have been eight hundred and eighty-five million dollars. There has been nothing like this in the history of the world before."

The nation which effected these wonderful savings was a sober nation. Moreover, it prized its improved condition. Prohibition had not been in force in Russia a year before the Duma formally petitioned the Czar never again to permit the sale of intoxicants. The provincial assemblies sent similar requests to the Emperor. The sentiment of the nation was overwhelmingly in favor of reform.

Is it not distinctly possible that it also came, in time, to prize those qualities of honesty and justice in government which the bureaucracy never displayed? Having profited by one change from tradl tional conditions, may not the people, and, in particular, the better educated elements in the cities, have perceived the need for still another change—this time from the traditional form of administration?

Remarkable as is the tribute that Russia's increased savings pay to prohibition, another age may pay it even a greater tribute, by ascribing to this reform much of the success that attended the movement to gain for the empire's masses a larger measure of personal freedom and increased power in the administration of governmental affairs.—Seattle Times.

Liquor Barred From California Training Camp

At the military training camp at Santa Barbara, California, during June and July, the students will be allowed to have no intoxicating liquors. Official orders just issued state:

"The co-operation of the students with the camp authorities in the matter of maintaining the highest possible moral standards is insisted upon.

"Students are urged to abstain from the use of any kind of intoxicating liquors, including beer, during the entire period of the camp.

"The introduction of intoxicating liquor into camp is prohibited.

"Any student discovered under the influence of liquor will be summarily dismissed."

PERSONAL LIBERTY OF THE RACE TO BE

DOROTHY BURROWS MARTIN, Northwestern University, in Alpha Gamma Delta Quarterly

From the dance-halls, poolrooms, and gambling-houses, from the slums and tenements, from the saloons, opium-dens, and dives—from the mad, the sad, and the bad places—there comes to us a cry, clear, powerful, and incessant—

"We are American citizens, free to eat and drink as we choose. We want personal liberty."

And that cry, strengthened and encouraged by the clever talk and ready money of men who make and sell liquor, gaining wealth through the misfortune of others who buy and drink—that cry is heard. From the distillers, the brewers, and the keepers of the saloon, the cry comes in tones, righteous and indignant —"We demand personal liberty—the right to make and sell what the people want."

From the fashionable restaurant, yes, and from the quiet home, comes the defiant declaration of the man who drinks moderately—who "can stop when he chooses."

"A man who gets drunk is a fool," he confidently asserts. "No one need drink to excess. Why should anyone dictate to me what I shall or shall not eat and drink? I believe in personal liberty."

We who do not know the taste of liquor, who have never felt that miserable, craving thirst, we who have never suffered from the ravages of drink, we whose comforts and even luxuries are seemingly untouched by it, we who have naught to gain, naught to lose, we who are unconcerned and indifferent, we also hearing, believe in personal liberty. That sentiment prevails and the lights of the saloon are allowed to burn high, so that men and women may drink and be drunken.

Then from the future there comes to our ears another cry, with less arrogance and defiance, but with a note of earnest pleading, almost of despair. It is the cry of the epileptics that are to be—the horde of those whose cursed existence of wretched social exile and hopeless disease is rivaled in its horror only by that of the lepers. Faintly and yet truly we hear their cry:

"We are the unborn children of alcoholics. Naught have we to give the world. Naught has the world to offer us. Slaves are we with none to free us, for those who are here today and gone tomorrow by personal license rob us of personal liberty."

As an echo of the same voice we hear from the hospitals and asylums, from the prisons and the streets, "We are the children of alcohol, condemned before we are born to lives of misery and crime. We are feeble-minded, idiotic, and physically unfit. We are deprived of all will-power, all reason, incapable of deciding, even of knowing right from wrong, good from evil. You punish us for what you call our crimes. You imprison us again and again for our display of congenital weaknesses. You try to reform us. How can you reform what has never been formed, a normal and healthy mind and body? Oh, we are not born free and equal. Some of the least of us have nothing—worse than nothing on which to build a life. Yet we shall live—we shall ever 'grunt and sweat under a weary life,' and mix good blood with our poisoned stock, reproducing our kind in vast numbers to live and die as we shall live and die, degenerate and drunken. We plead for personal liberty."

Saddened and sickened we turn from these, only to hear the plea from the poorhouse—more hopeless than that from the tenement or slums.

"We, destined before our birth to become beggars, beg now for personal liberty, because our fathers wasted our substance before we were born, and will ever continue to waste, that those who make and sell may grow sleek and fat off the land. Born of defective parents, half-starved in unwholesome surroundings, we shall grow up without a chance of decent life."

Then we hear the plaint of the babies that are to die—"Our fathers affirm with sullenness, 'It is our concern if we kill ourselves with liquor,' and the law upholds them until they kill their neighbors. But they kill their children and their children's children and the law is silent. Is that not a greater outrage, a crime against a race? We are those babies who must perish—deprived of our natural food by a grandfather who values his personal liberty above the life of the race. The sins of the fathers are visited in truth upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that love the wine when it is red —yes, unto the third and fourth generation, for science has at last taken up our cause, made exhaustive investigation, and proved even to the sceptics, that no mother, herself conceived of an alcoholic father, can possibly nourish her children. We are that pitiful fifty per cent of all artificially fed children, who died before their second year; while our brothers live, as epileptics, idiots, and criminal degenerates. We die for personal liberty."

These pleas, these cries, do we hear them—and hearing, heed?

We who make it our highest boast that no child is allowed to mature, unschooled, untaught, are unwilling to legislate that no man—but child of larger growth—be allowed to rob his children of that very opportunity—and we say we believe in personal liberty. Do we realize that it is not they who drink and are drunken, not they who make and sell, not they who are secure in their temperate drinking, who defeat the cause of prohibition? That it is we who are untouched by the need of the liquor traffic, we who are content to view the handwriting on the wall and say, "prohibition is bound to come," we who by our indifference and watchful waiting, hold the balance. On our heads is the burden of those who seek the freedom, and the liberty, those who now die in infancy, or whose only alternative is to live, to exist rather, as defectives.

Our fathers fought against the oppression of an unjust taxation. They were strong, and they won. Our children have to battle with the greater oppression of this racial poison. They are little, and they are weak. When will we hear and heed the cry of the little children, the cry for freedom, for personal liberty?

LET US SUPPOSE

ROBERT E. SPEER

Let us suppose that there were a society in which men were working earnestly and efficiently. There is plenty of work to do and all are busy six days in the week. Wages are not what they ought to be, but they cover the necessities of life and some comforts for the home. The children are clothed and sent to school. In the mills the workmen on Monday are able after the Sunday rest to do a better day's work than on other days. Now suppose that in this society it were to be proposed to open shops to sell a certain drug to the workingmen which would make them incapable of work until its effects had worn off, and which would even then make them careless and inefficient, so that Monday would become, after a Sunday debauch with the drug, the least productive and most dangerous day in the mills. How would rational men greet such a mad proposal?

The establishment or the continuance of the saloons is just this.

"No, I don't believe in prohibition," said a leading capitalist and manufacturer in a great state which went dry at the last election. "But there was nothing to do but to destroy the saloon and the liquor business. It had grown so strong that no laws could be enforced against it. Its political powers were becoming so great and it was so bold and contemptuous that for the sake of life and liberty it had to be wiped out."

When did the liquor business ever obey the law? It does not matter what concessions are made to it, it does not keep faith. It will not observe laws. It sells to drunkards and to minors. Its central purpose is a breach of the law of nature and of God, and it never has kept—it never will keep—the laws of the state. A business which produces waste and want and poverty and crime and unhappiness, and which ruins men and manhood, can't be anything but lawless.

Poverty and poor homes are said to be the cause of the saloon, not the saloon the cause of poverty and poor homes. Doubtless the misfortune works both ways and there is need of reform at each end. The social provision the saloon is supposed to make can be made otherwise far better, and as a matter of fact the idea that men go to saloons for social relaxation and fellowship is an illusion. They go to get a drink, and the drink is what does the damage.

A saloonless nation seems to be really in sight at last.

But it will not come easily, and it will not be easy to keep it when we have it.

But it will be easier to stop the bad business of the saloon than to make the people decent and sober and upright. We can stop the saloon, but only Christ can do this other and greater thing.—Sunday School Times.

STORY OF ONE TOTAL ABSTINENCE PLEDGE

HON. WILLIAM J. BRYAN

When I went home to vote at the election of 1914 I found that a neighbor had been drinking to excess. I asked him to sign the pledge with me and he consented to do so. I prepared the pledge in duplicate and we signed it together. It read:

"We, the undersigned, promise, God helping us, never to use intoxicating liquor as a beverage."

I gave one copy to his wife and took the other with me back to Washington. As I approached Chicago I met a man who came out from Michigan with an invitation from the high school boys to address them at a meeting to be held near the end of the month at Ann Arbor. I asked him whether there was any objection to my asking the boys to sign the pledge with me. He approved of the plan and I presented the pledge at the meeting. When a large number of the boys indicated a willingness to sign it we circulated slips of paper containing the pledge and the boys took the slips home and obtained signatures. In a few weeks I received a book, one of the most precious in my library. It contains the names, ages and addresses of 8,200 high school boys in Michigan who signed the pledge with me. I learned soon afterward that these boys helped to make several counties dry, and last November they helped to make Michigan dry.

Scientific Temperance Instruction Exhibit of the Kansas City (Mo.) W. C. T. U. at the Recent Convention of the National Education Association

MISSOURI PREPARING RECEPTION FOR TRANSCONTINENTAL W. C. T. U. CAMPAIGNERS

Special Correspondence

On May 5-7 the southern division of the Transcontinental Campaign team en route from Chicago to San Francisco will hold a campaign conference in Kansas City. Many notables will be included in the reception committee to meet Miss Anna A. Gordon, National W. C. T. U. president; Mrs. Florence E. Atkins, National lecturer, and Miss Mary Frances Willard Anderson, National Y. P. B. general secretary. State and city dignitaries will sit at the legislative banquet, which will be the great social feature of the occasion. At this time the Missouri campaign will be formally launched. Two mass meetings Sunday, a Y. P. B. rally and an all-day conference Monday are included in a program that is to be rich with eloquent addresses and striking demonstrations. The Missouri W. C. T. U. is planning to make this the largest temperance meeting ever held in the state. To those finding it impossible to attend a National Convention this occasion offers opportunity to meet and hear some of the finest speakers and workers in the long list of noted W. C. T. U. women.

Advisory Temperance Council

The church and temperance forces of Missouri are banded together in an advisory council. The presidents of the seven organizations compose the board. This board met in St. Louis March 27 to complete plans for the campaign. Missouri is out to win and no detail of organization will be overlooked down to the last precinct and the last man in the state. St. Louis will be the center of the fight. The whole world knows that Missouri, outside of St. Louis, voted dry November 7, 1916, and St. Louis will be won in 1918. Missouri's third campaign for prohibition must be successful. People are stirred as never before and are going in for victory. The whole state is praying for St. Louis and the brave W. C. T. U. and temperance workers there.

For several years the Kansas City W. C. T. U. has conducted educational exhibits at various conventions and gatherings in the great Convention Hall. The new superintendent, Mrs. Rosa M. Webb, was able to present the best local exhibit ever shown at the great convention of National Education Association superintendents February 26-March 3. After hours of patient labor, the exhibit was a "Brighten the Corner" spot in the hall. Charts, posters, pennants, flags, literature and cut flowers were artistically arranged in a commodious space, which all who attended the meeting passed. It was very gratifying to have groups of teachers around the exhibit a good part of the time. Quantities of literature were distributed and many took the address of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House for the purpose of ordering charts, posters, etc. About fifty voluntary testimonials were written extolling the value of the exhibit, the S. T. I. work of the W. C. T. U. and the prohibition movement.

Among these appreciations were the following:

I consider the subject of alcohol instruction one of the most, if not the most, vital of school subjects. The exhibit at the National Education Association was expressive of the results thinking people agree upon.—J. W. Patterson, Superintendent, Cook, Neb.

I believe that the campaign of education carried on by the W. C. T. U. in the schools of our country for the past twenty years has had more to do with the spread of dry legislation and the growth of temperance sentiment than any other one cause.—Chas. H. Carey, Germantown, Ohio.

Your scientific temperance display will certainly create public sentiment in favor of making Missouri dry. Your display is large and to the point. Teachers will be enthused and strengthened by it. —Mrs. Frank Organ, Topeka, Kas.

The W. C. T. U. was a pioneer in the crusade against intemperance. In my judgment no single factor has been more potent, and none deserves more credit, than it for the prohibition wave which seems likely to sweep John Barleycorn from the face of this fair country.—J. O. Engelman, Supt. Schools, Decatur, Ill.

No organization in America has been more useful, more resourceful, and more enterprising in the fight against intemperance than the W. C. T. U. A great measure of the success of the struggle is due to the efforts of the Union. I am glad to add my testimony to the efficiency of their educational campaign.—G. O. Bunting, Supt. Schools, Chippewa Falls, Wis.

Whoever doubts the benefits of a dry town should investigate Helena, Arkansas. Better business and more of it; an awakening civic and social conscience, and a dawning sense of the value of the finer things of life, where before were sodden commercialism and blinded sensibilities.—E. B. Tucker, Supt. Schools, Helena, Ark.

My work lies with children of subnormal mentalities, and nearly every child of that type with whom I personally dealt either in a diagnostic or an educative way has had a liquor history as a largely detrimental factor. Our town is wet—notoriously, defiantly, disgracefully wet; but we hope a better time is coming through state legislation.—Frances R. Fletcher, Director of Psychopathic Clinic, and Principal of Cottage School for Retarded Children at Streator, Ill.

Exhibits are a permanent feature of

(Continued on Page Ten)

"Attempt Great Things for God.
Expect Great Things from God."

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Secretary Young People's Branch

"IMBIBE FROM NATURE'S OWN CANTEEN," ADVICE OF CAPT. "JACK" CRAWFORD TO YOUNG PEOPLE

MARY FRANCES WILLARD ANDERSON, National General Y. P. B. Secretary

You have heard of Capt. "Jack" Crawford, who was chief of scouts under General Custer, and known everywhere as the "Poet Scout," but did you know that Captain "Jack" was one of our Young People's Branch honorary members? Just before his death he wrote a poem dedicated to the North End Y. P. B. of Boston, Massachusetts.

Last December it was my privilege to meet him and hear the story of his life and of his deep interest in young people. He told how as a boy he promised his mother upon her deathbed that he would never use liquor and how he kept his word. With great pride he made mention of his "Boy Heroes of the World," numbering 25,000 men and boys whom he had pledged to total abstinence. His blue eyes kindled as he pleaded for the young people to lay firm foundations for body strength, mind strength, and soul strength, and to illustrate to the young people his own perfect physical condition he gave a sudden Indian war-whoop and kicked above his head, although he was seventy years old!

APRIL 14—NATIONAL Y. P. B. RED LETTER DAY

We are in a campaign for 10,000 new Y. P. B. recruits. To win them we need volunteers. The call is given! Let every Y. P. B. member in the United States answer, "Ready!"

What more patriotic service can you render your country than to help banish its deadliest foe?

I wish you all might have known this brave scout, but we can all profit by his advice and take to ourselves the sentiment with which he closed his little Y. P. B. poem:

"Look up and smile, keep sweet.
Imbibe from nature's own canteen,
And, young folks, you will be Worth while through nineteen seventeen."

Within a month another sterling character has left us. Like Captain "Jack," Franklin B. Sanborn, the "Sage of Concord," philosopher and historian and friend of the oppressed, laid the foundations in early youth for a life of service to humanity and we young people have a lesson to learn from his life of eighty-six years. His quick step, lithe body, keen eye and kindly smile showed he had builded right and that he, too, had cultivated body strength, mind strength and soul strength. I know you who read his life will resolve anew to build upon total abstinence and purity.

A few years ago at the centenary of the birth of Ralph Waldo Emerson, Mr. Sanborn was the orator of the day at the exercises held in the historic Sleepy Hollow cemetery. Before the oration was half over down poured the rain, but our dear old friend did not flinch. He stood hatless and never shall I forget what a proud moment it was when he

(Continued on Page Eleven)

A MESSAGE FROM "OUR" MRS. BARNES

On the west side of the famous Central Park in New York City is a home you would all delight to visit, for there you would find the one who founded our "Y" work.

One day last month we sat together in one of the sunny rooms and our dear Mrs. Frances J. Barnes spoke of her great longing that the young people be won for our cause and enlisted in the Y. P. B., this most vital branch of our W. C. T. U.

She loves you with fervent love and nothing could make her more happy than to see hundreds of young people join our ranks, not only during April, but during every month of the year. Already you have planned to celebrate our National Y. P. B. Red Letter Day, April 14, which is Mrs. Barnes' birthday. Here is a message from her to read at your meeting.

We want Mrs. Barnes to know how much we Y. P. B. members honor and love her. M. F. W. A.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., APRIL, 1917.

Dear Young Friends:

Amidst the dark and threatening warclouds, with tumult abroad and at home, we have great cause for thankfulness that, as never before, people are realizing the necessity for clear brains and steady hands and that the foe that has assailed every land is the one now being attacked and driven from county and state. That you are bravely fighting this

Mrs. Frances J. Barnes, First General Secretary of the Young Woman's Branch of the World's and National W. C. T. U.

moral warfare means more to the history of our republic than any physical combat.

"In the cross of Christ we glory, Towering o'er the wrecks of time," and beneath that cross we fasten our beloved stars and stripes with the white banner of peace. Thus combined, they stand for victory representing humanity, fraternity, and patriotism.

The blessed Master knew if we loved God we would love our neighbor also and hence we could not "put the bottle to his lips," nor thrust the bayonet into his side; indeed, neither could we learn war any more.

You will serve your country best by living up to the highest spiritual ideals as defined in the New Testament and interpreted to open hearts by the Holy Spirit. Some day when the great Book of Life is opened, the names of moral heroes will shine with enduring lustre and it will be seen that their deeds had the deepest and most effectual influence for the betterment of mankind and the bringing in of the kingdom.

My very special message to you is found in Ephesians 6:10-20, and as I look at the saloons and think of the liquor traffic, the text comes like a slogan of courage, "Our God is able." Through Him, we shall do valiantly to win a saloonless nation and National Constitutional Prohibition.

Yours in that faith,
FRANCES J. BARNES.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BRANCH

WAS IT WORTH WHILE?

CHRISTINE I. TINLING, National Y. P. B. College Secretary

In very many colleges it is not possible, for one reason or another, to organize a Y. P. B. The next best thing is to try to do some work in connection with the Y. W. C. A. A temperance committee may be formed and by this means the question of nation-wide prohibition can be brought before the young men and women, W. C. T. U. literature can be distributed and a good deal of useful work done.

Suppose after all the W. C. T. U. gets no "credit" for all this, gains no new members and puts not a cent of money into its treasury, is it not worth while?

Let the following letter give the answer to that question. It was received by the president of a state W. C. T. U., who is deeply interested in young people and who secured an entrance to a certain college through the Y. W. C. A. Later she persuaded one of the students to attend the state W. C. T. U. convention and to take up temperance work as a department in the Y. W. C. A. This college girl writes as follows:

"I want to tell you about our temperance rally in the Y. W. C. A. hall last night. It has been so easy to arouse enthusiasm in the work of my department. The audience room was packed with interested, sympathetic girls, and this means much to a speaker, especially one who is an amateur. The hall was attractively decorated with posters, flags and white chrysanthemums. . . . . I endeavored to give a clear, concise report of the convention. A request to sign the pledge followed and I was so gratified at the number who responded. . . . I am so glad I heard of you women and that I went to the convention. It was just wonderful and my whole outlook was broadened. We are glad that you can appreciate the college girl's viewpoint. We are profoundly interested in your work, though we may not always know how to show it. . . . . I have planned many careers for myself, from that of a writer to that of a housekeeper. My present enthusiasm centers entirely in the W. C. T. U. I would like so much to specialize upon the temperance question. I propose to study the subject intensively and extensively until I have mastered at least the essentials. . . . . Thank you for opening up a new world to me, and enabling me to dream dreams and see visions."

It is right and proper to report all work done just as fully and as accurately as we know how. Often we are told that we do not report enough and this is perfectly true. All the same, it is equally true that the best results can never be reported at all. We can count members and money and meetings but we cannot measure spiritual values in terms such as these or set them down in black and white and add them up in columns. You can no more tabulate a heavenly vision in the soul of a girl than you can tabulate the glory of the sunrise, or analyze the perfume of the rose. But none of them are the less real because of that.

When the faithful white ribboner makes up her report she will not be able to speak of any organized work in that college, any members of the Y. P. B., or any funds raised for our own society. But surely no one will doubt for a moment that this uncounted work was among the best things that she ever did.

"LAY THE AXE TO THE ROOT OF THE EVIL"

Excerpts from an essay by Joshua B. Lee, University of Oklahoma, awarded the first prize at the recent national convention of the Intercollegiate Prohibition Association in Lexington, Ky.

An evil deserves annihilation. The liquor traffic is an admitted evil. The logical solution, then, is root-and-branch destruction. But, before we know how to destroy an evil we must know what the nature of it is. Is this a personal, a community, a state, or a national evil? If a personal evil, moral suasion is the remedy; if a community evil, local option is the cure; if a state evil, state prohibition is the solution; and if a national evil, national action is demanded. It is national, because of its scope; because it is protected by national law; and finally, because it violates the spirit of the constitution.

Liquor affects the nation as a whole. Not a city, village, or hamlet in the land but has felt the blight of its touch. Beer manufactured in Milwaukee carries poverty to homes in every state of the union. Whisky distilled in Kentucky causes murder and robbery in every section of the country. In Chicago every day there comes a plaintive cry for bread from five thousand hungry little mouths. In New Orleans the potter's field is continually gorged with the untimely dead. In San Francisco liquor-infuriated criminals swarming in the alleys and subways ever harass the citizenry. In the tenements of New York City countless hordes gasp for breath, while upon the streets shivering, freezing, dying women and children beg for the crumbs that fall from the tables of their masters, the liquor dealers. Lame feet, palsied hands, deaf ears, blind eyes, crazed brains and deformed bodies from every populated district in America point to the liquor traffic as the cause of their infirmity.

When Evil Becomes National

The evil becomes national when it violates the spirit of the nation's constitution. Do we "form a more perfect union" when some states manufacture liquor and others prohibit its sale? Do we "establish justice" when bread is taken from children's mouths to quench the insatiable thirst for rum? Do liquor-crazed husbands "insure domestic tranquility?" Do intoxicated soldiers "provide for the common defense?" Is "the general welfare" promoted when alcoholism swells the mortality figures two hundred thousand a year? No! Nor will the "blessings of liberty" long be insured to us and our posterity, when the great chain gang of degenerates is continually enlarged as other souls are newly fettered with the shackles of deformity, insanity and idiocy.

Do you want national prohibition? Then proclaim the facts. Tell the lumberman of the northern forests how many thousand of houses will be built in all the suburbs for the workmen when none of them drink away their money. Show the shoe manufacturers of Massachusetts what it means to take all the bare feet of the drunkards' children off the ground. Let the iron men of Pennsylvania know that new stoves will be needed in a hundred thousand homes when the saloonkeeper ceases to get the money. Tell the cotton raisers of the South there will be a demand for calico dresses when fathers stop drinking. Tell the charity organizations that it is better to prevent crime and misery than to take care of it. Let the bankers know that Russia has more money in her savings banks with prohibition than she had without prohibition.

Let the prohibition movement continue to gather momentum and let us all, like blind Bartimaeus, not be hushed until we have rolled up such a mighty wave of public sentiment that National Constitutional Prohibition will become the law of the land.

TEMPERANCE WORK AT WESLEYAN COLLEGE, MACON, GEORGIA

MIRIAM ROGERS

Temperance work in a college must necessarily be developed by a different process from that used in promoting the ordinary organization. In our efforts at Wesleyan we make no attempt to present the emotional side of the question as that phase would not appeal to the college girl. Nor is it necessary to discuss the topic from a scientific standpoint as that angle of vision is presented in the psychology and science departments of our curriculum. We have stressed the legislative and biographical sides of the prohibition movement exclusively.

While I am at present chairman of the Y. W. C. A. temperance committee, being a senior I cannot, of course, have further charge of the work. Next year's chairman will begin her work immediately.

Much interest is being manifested in the prize essay contest, especially now that one of our English teachers has agreed to let these essays take the place of regular work in her department. Some of our girls write unusually well, so we hope to win a measure of success, at least.

The student body is looking forward with unusual pleasure to the visit of the national college temperance secretary in April.

One of the policies of our temperance committee is to allow no pamphlets to be read at a meeting, because we believe that whatever is spoken has more force. Of course, much of the material is gleaned from books and papers but each girl strives to make her presentation as original as possible.

An interesting service was that held on the evening of February 17, in commemoration of the Home-going of Miss Frances E. Willard. The chairman was in charge. The program was a comprehensive study of the life of the great prohibition leader and included the following topics presented by those named: "The Transmission of Personality," Miriam Rogers; "Childhood of Frances Willard," Mary Atkinson; "Intellectual Development: Frances Willard, the Student and Teacher," Mary Kilgore; "Frances Willard, the Organizer," Miriam Rogers; "Frances Willard as Founder of the World's W. C. T. U.," Ethel Butner; "Answering Armenia's Cry," Nannie Kate Shields.

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, MISS ANNA A. GORDON
MANAGING EDITOR, MISS JULIA F. DEANE

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, THE UNION SIGNAL, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston, Illinois, April 12, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

A CALL TO THE COLORS

War has been declared. Whether or not we approve of the action taken has ceased to be a subject for discussion. One thought is now uppermost in the minds of the patriot—My country needs me. How can I best help in this emergency?

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union is primarily a patriotic organization; its motto, "For God and Home and Native Land," voices its dominating purpose. For over forty years it has worked tirelessly and courageously to protect the homes of the land from an enemy within its borders. In this hour of crisis our half million members will render to their country whole-hearted, loyal service.

In co-operation with the National Council of women, of which it is a part, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is prepared to engage in definite work under the Labor Department of the Federal Government for military and general relief and for the establishment and maintenance of employment bureaus for women who will be obliged to take the places of men called to the colors. The machinery of the National W. C. T. U. department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors (Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, superintendent), is especially adapted to service along Red Cross lines, and already the members of the 20,000 local unions of our organization are mobilizing for duty of this nature.

There is also urgent need at the present time that all good citizens in the vicinity of recruiting stations and mobilization and training camps use their influence to see that the soldiers are not subjected to undue temptation. Past experience has shown that at such times as these the liquor and vice interests seek to establish themselves near military centers for the purpose of luring the boys and young men, many of them unused to the ways of the cities, into vile resorts. Wherever such a situation exists, the facts should be given publicity through the press and be brought to the attention of the proper authorities.

Meanwhile in no more definite and direct way can we prepare for the trying experiences through which we may be called to pass in the next few months than by working for total abstinence and prohibition, thus helping our soldiers and sailors and our private citizenry to be made fit and efficient to adequately protect our country.

SAFEGUARD OUR SOLDIER BOYS!

Washington, D. C., April 8, 1917.

Beloved Comrades:

From the day it was founded the Woman's Christian Temperance Union has been a foremost factor in educational work for peace and international arbitration. But we are loyal daughters of our country and we are face to face with war and all its appalling possibilities. We shall meet the situation with sublime courage, with Christian optimism and with the self-sacrifice of the patriot.

Let us be worthy of Frances E. Willard's last words concerning her W. C. T. U. comrades, "There never were such women as our white ribboners, so large-hearted, so generous, such patriots, such Christians." Let us give to our soldiers and sailors our best service. We are fortunate at this critical hour to have in both Senate and House of the United States Congress many strong prohibition friends. Prohibition as a war measure will be vigorously pushed by the National W. C. T. U. as well as by other temperance agencies centered in Washington. Already our friends in Congress are considering how they can best safeguard our boys. The prohibition program of this extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress ought to fully meet the ardent, prayerful hope of mothers whose boys may soon be subjected to the awful fortunes of war. The enactments of this Congress, called to deal with war measures, should be in accord with the mighty progress of public sentiment in favor of a sober nation, a sentiment which today is insistently calling for national prohibition.

WHY MADISON VOTED DRY

As a result of the election in Madison, Wisconsin, last week the University of Wisconsin is to be surrounded by a dry zone. Prominent among the reasons for the outlawing of the saloons on that occasion was the desire of the citizens of the state capital to safeguard the students who form such a large part of its population. The growing antagonism to the liquor traffic in the community has been largely due to the lack of concern for the welfare of the student on the part of the dealers in drink. There can be no more serious charge against the supporters of John Barleycorn than their heartless disregard of the right of youth to be protected from the "diabolical accessibility of the saloon."

Movements to provide a dry environment for training camps, naval institutes, colleges and universities are invariably fought bitterly by the representatives of the distilleries and breweries. Even in these days when the nation's defense is of supreme importance we find the liquor interests in the Illinois legislature opposing the establishment of a five mile dry zone around the United States Naval Training station.

This conscienceless position on the part of the liquor tribe eloquently negatives the truth of their oft-repeated protest that they have no desire to instill in the young the habit of drinking alcoholic beverages; that the trade simply exists in response to a demand from those who have already formed the habit. They will find it impossible to convince the public of their sincerity as long as they continue hostile to all dry zone measures sanctioned and urged by leading educators, military men and public spirited citizens.

POSTER PRIZE OFFER

For the best Prohibition posters suitable for educational or campaign use, the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union offers the following prizes. For the best poster submitted, $15; for the second best, $10; and for the next five, in order of excellence, $2 each.

Rules for Competition

1. Illustration may form part of the poster, but is not essential.
2. Striking sentences or words are preferable to crowded lines.
3. Posters may be in two sizes: 19x25 inches or 28x42 inches. Copy need not be presented in actual size of poster.
4. In submitting copy for competition, place your name in a sealed envelope and pin to the copy.
5. All copy submitted will become the property of the National W. C. T. U.
6. The Committee on Publications of the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, with two others to be chosen by the General Officers, will comprise the committee on awards.
7. All copy should be addressed to the National W. C. T. U. Poster Competition, Evanston, Ill., and must be received not later than April 15, 1917.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 5

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. What discovery of a Los Angeles chemist is destined to revolutionize the beer industry?
2. How has the war affected the attitude of British statesmen toward woman suffrage? What prominent members of the government have publicly announced a change of heart?
3. Give particulars of a prohibition campaign now in progress in one of the dependencies of the United States.
4. How are leading educators and officials of South America showing their interest in scientific temperance instruction?
5. On March 31, 1917, China accomplished its entire freedom from opium. Tell the story of the ten years' campaign against this evil.
6. Is there any assurance of the continuance of prohibition in Russia under the new regime? Give three reasons for this belief.
7. What event of nation-wide importance is to be celebrated May 1-6? What department of the Federal government is promoting it?
8. Give five suggestions for the local observance of this week by the W. C. T. U.
9. What is the custom as to the serving of intoxicating liquors at banquets where King George is a guest?
10. Can you give the reason advanced by the president of a South American republic for desiring the prohibition of the liquor traffic in his country?

WHY HE SIGNED THE PLEDGE

"My reasons for taking the temperance pledge were partly general and partly special," says Dean Farrar.

"1. I became convinced that the use of alcohol in any form was not a necessity. I saw that whole nations had lived and flourished without it. I believed that the whole race of man had existed for centuries previous to its discovery.

"2. I was struck by the indisputable fact that in England fifty thousand inhabitants of our prisons, accustomed to strong drink all their lives, and the majority of them brought into prison directly or indirectly by it, could be, and were, from the moment of their imprisonment, absolutely deprived of it, not only without loss, but with entire gain to their personal health.

"3. I derived from the recorded testimony of our most eminent physicians that the use of alcohol is a subtle and manifold source of disease even to thousands who use it in quantities conveniently deemed moderate; also that all the young, and all the healthy, and all who eat well and sleep well do not require it, and are better without it.

"4. Then, the carefully drawn statistics of many insurance societies convinced me that total abstinence, so far from shortening life, distinctly and indisputably tends to longevity.

"5. Then I accumulated proof that drink is so far from being requisite to physical strength or intellectual force that many of our greatest athletes, from the days of Samson onward, 'whose drink was only of the crystal brook,' have achieved without alcohol mightier feats than have ever been achieved with it.

"6. And besides all this, I know that the life of man always gains by abolishing needless expenses and avoiding artificial wants. Benjamin Franklin said, a hundred years ago, 'Temperance puts wood on the fire, meat in the barrel, flour in the tub, money in the purse, credit in the country, clothes on the bairns, intelligence in the brain, and spirit in the constitution.'"

ALCOHOL—I AM AGAINST IT!

H. ORVILLE PAGE, Assistant Athletic Director University of Chicago in Examiner

Alcohol—I am against it all. Fortunately here at Chicago we have a clean bunch of boys who are abstainers, and so the problems which whisky produces we do not have to meet. But its effects are known to every man who is interested in the physical, mental or moral well-being of youths.

The change which has come over the country in this respect is nowhere more definitely demonstrated than in professional athletics, such as baseball. In the old days managers used to wink when a good man took a drink now and then, provided his batting average was up to snuff.

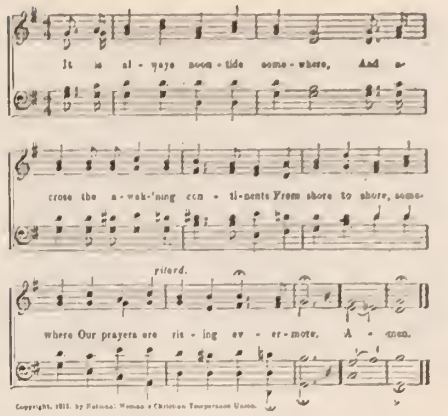
Now, no matter what his standing or daily record, a professional baseball player who is caught "off the wagon" not only is likely to receive a harsh reprimand, but also a fine will usually be assessed against him.

It is just as true, though not as noticeable, that the use of whisky by the man in business slows up his pace and makes his batting average waver. In athletics the results of its use are registered more quickly, perhaps, but in the other activities of life they show up just as surely.

GOOD FOR THE UNDERTAKER!

Out in Nebraska there is an undertaker who thinks more of the welfare of the boys of his town than of his own business, says a certain newspaper. He keeps in his window a large, pictured card. On it are seven illustrations, showing the seven stages of a cigaret-smoker's downward progress. The first shows a bright, handsome boy, rejoicing in his youthful strength; the last is a mere pitiful shadow of the same lad, drawn-faced, emaciated, vacant-looking, self-evidently ready for one of the undertaker's own coffins. But the undertaker is going to do his best to keep him out of it, for on the pictured card, painted at the bottom in large, bold letters, is an urgent warning to boys: "Beware of the cigaret."

TIME OF PRAYER—NOONTIDE



TO FIND OUT GOD'S WILL

In his life of Henry Drummond, Dr. George Adam Smith has inserted the following eight maxims that he found inscribed on the flyleaf of Drummond's Bible.

First. Pray.

Second. Think.

Third. Talk to wise people but do not regard their decision as final.

Fourth. Beware of the bias of your own will, but do not be too much afraid of it. (God never unnecessarily thwarts a man's nature and likings, but it is a mistake to think that His will is the line of the disagreeable.)

Fifth. Meantime do the next thing (for doing God's will in small things is the best preparation for knowing it in great things.)

Sixth. When decision and action are necessary, go ahead.

Seventh. Never reconsider the decision when it is finally acted upon.

Eighth. You will probably not find out till afterward—long afterward perhaps—that you have been led at all.

There is something morally sublime about a heroic decision, born of obedience to the will of God and sacrifice of self as well. Perhaps the noblest thing any man ever does is to see the plan of God in his life and for his life, and then patiently and persistently do it; as Constantine said when he marked out the limits of the eastern metropolis, "I am following One who is leading me." Such a man alone can, like Roebling, when he looked on the finished East River bridge, say, "It's like the plan." The end of life is not gratification, even of the highest sort, not even salvation, nor yet sanctification, but service.—Rev. Arthur T. Pierson, D. D.

PERSONAL MENTION

Mrs. Nannie Webb Curtis, president of the Texas W. C. T. U., has met with a great loss in the home-going of her mother, Mrs. Julia Austin, of Fort Worth, who passed on to the other world on March 29. The father of Mrs. Curtis is critically ill at this time. Mrs. Curtis has the sympathy of her white ribbon comrades in her bereavement.

The temperance cause has suffered a loss in the passing of Mr. Barney Link, a member of the executive committee of the Associated Advertising Clubs of the World, and the man to whom credit is largely due for the elimination of liquor advertisements from billboards controlled by the association with which he was connected. Not long since Mr. Link assured Mrs. Carolyn P. Lindsay, National superintendent of Fairs and Open Air Meetings, of his intention to use his influence for the removal of beer advertisements also. His death, which occurred quite suddenly while on a fishing excursion at Long Key, Florida, prevented the fulfillment of this promise.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U., 1730 CHICAGO AVENUE, EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE

GENERAL OFFICERS:
PRESIDENT
MISS ANNA A. GORDON, EVANSTON, ILL.
VICE-PRESIDENT-AT-LARGE
MRS. ELLA A. BOOLE, BROOKLYN, N. Y.
CORRESPONDING SECRETARY
MRS. FRANCES P. PARKS, EVANSTON, ILL.
RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. E. PRESTON ANDERSON, FARGO, N. D.
ASSISTANT RECORDING SECRETARY
MRS. SARA H. HOGE, LINCOLN, VA.
TREASURER
MRS. MARGARET C. MUNNS, EVANSTON, ILL.

HEADQUARTERS NATIONAL W. C. T. U.

RED LETTER DAYS

April 14—Young People's Branch Day—Birthday of Frances J. Barnes
May 6-13—Membership week
May 13—Mothers' Day

MONTANA'S LEGISLATIVE RECORD

MARY L. ALDERSON, President Montana W. C. T. U.

The fifteenth legislative assembly of Montana passed some good legislation. Included in it was a memorial to Congress to pass a resolution for an amendment to the Federal Constitution prohibiting the manufacture and sale of intoxicating liquors for use as a beverage, submitting same to the several states for ratification. There was also a bill passed prohibiting gambling on games played upon pool and billiard tables and prohibiting minors under eighteen from frequenting pool rooms. An anti-gambling law was also passed. Heretofore Montana had had no anti-gambling law. It had a law forbidding certain gambling games, but it now has a law forbidding all gambling games. An abatement law, similar to that in force in California, was passed. The last legislature gave us another law making all places where intoxicating liquors are sold, manufactured, or given away in violation of law, common nuisances. This law is our only law for the protection of dry counties.

The legislature created a child welfare division under the state board of health. Boxing and race track gambling bills were passed by the assembly but vetoed by our good governor. An eight-hour law for women was also passed. A fine law providing for the closing of saloons on Sunday passed the house and was defeated in the senate by one vote.

The unions all over the state are interested in the Transcontinental W. C. T. U. Campaigners, who come to Miles City on May 9, and to Bozeman, May 10-11. It is expected that these meetings will be among the greatest held in Montana in the interest of prohibition and law enforcement. Arrangements are being made for a good attendance from all parts of the state and to have prominent Montana men and women on the programs. The white ribboners of the state feel that they are to be highly favored in having the National team stop at two places within its borders.

We are going to have Mrs. Lora S. La Mance in the state during April. In May we will have Mrs. Adah Wallace Unruh of Portland, Oregon, and Mrs. Amy C. Weech of Virginia. The tenth of June, Mary Harris Armor comes to us for one month. These speakers will certainly help our work greatly.

NOTICE!

Mrs. Lucia Faxon Additon, National superintendent of the department of Temperance and Labor, requests that all former superintendents of the department of Work among Railway Men communicate with her at once. Her address is Hotel Seward, Portland, Oregon.

WYOMING WHITE RIBBONERS ENTERTAINED AT EXECUTIVE MANSION

Mrs. Frank L. Houx, wife of the governor of Wyoming, recently opened the executive mansion to the Cheyenne W. C. T. U. and the union which bears the name of the National W. C. T. U. president, Miss Anna A. Gordon. About sixty-five white ribboners and honorary members and friends gathered in response to the invitation of Mrs. Houx, who, in addition to being the first lady of the state, is a white ribboner and the president of the Anna Gordon W. C. T. U. On this occasion the members of her union were hostesses, serving as ushers and assisting throughout the afternoon. The special guests were the members of the Cheyenne union, of which Dr. Ellen Wetlaufer, former president of the Wyoming W. C. T. U., is president, although many other interested temperance workers accepted the invitation of the governor's wife to be present. The speakers of the afternoon included Rev. E. E. Brace, substituting for Judge J. M. Carey, former governor of Wyoming and a prominent figure in the prohibition campaign now in progress throughout the state, who was unavoidably detained; Mrs. Ira B. Fee, who reviewed the work of the pioneer days of the state W. C. T. U., and Mrs. A. L. Putnam, a woman of wide experience in the temperance cause. Temperance readings and songs were enjoyable numbers. Piano selections by Miss Vera Houx, daughter of the governor, concluded the program.

MISSOURI PREPARING RECEPTION FOR TRANSCONTINENTAL W. C. T. U. CAMPAIGNERS

(Continued from Page Five)

the work of the W. C. T. U. in Kansas City and with the splendid material to be secured from the National W. C. T. U. the exhibit may be adjusted to suit any convention.

St. Louis Active

The St. Louis W. C. T. U. Federation had the co-operation of pastors and the state Y. P. B. president, Mr. Gus O. Nations, in the all-day prayer service for National Prohibition. Eugene A. Vogt, formerly a speaker for the liquor interests, gave an inspiring address. He is now a thorough convert to the moral and economic value of prohibition. The St. Louis W. C. T. U. won the state membership prize last year. Mrs. E. B. Ingalls, president of the Federation, is a general in her leadership, and in her direction of the work she has the loyal co-operation of the brave women of the local unions.

New Unions

Cass county has two new unions and is doing fine work under the leadership of Mrs. Cora B. Moore. Miss Roena Shaner and Mrs. Lora La Mance, National organizers, have done excellent work in the county. Jackson county also has several new unions. Mrs. W. H. Johnson, county president, is a live wire. She goes to a town to organize, makes a house-to-house canvass and after organizing, instructs and helps her new child until it knows something of its mission in life. Lees Summit union in Jackson county offered $50 for evidence that would convict violators of the local option law. In accordance with the state plan all county presidents will make efforts to organize their unorganized territory this year.

EVERY LOCAL UNION

is urged to observe

MEMBERSHIP WEEK

May 6-13

Especially helpful in house-to-house calling, for enclosure in letters, or in social visiting, are the following leaflets:

The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Other Organizations
Achievements of the National W.C.T.U.
Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union a World Power and Why.
Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

The What and Why of the W. C. T. U.
Hand Picking.
Why I Am a White Ribboner.
The Advantages of Organization.
Is It Right?
The Church and the W. C. T. U.
Busy Women and the W. C. T. U.
Price, per hundred, 35 cents; per fifty, 20 cents.

A special souvenir card containing quotation from Miss Gordon, vignette and facsimile signature, has been prepared for membership week.

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Sample of each leaflet and card will be forwarded postpaid for 10c.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

HELP TO INFORM YOUR VOTERS

by mailing to each in a follow-up system

THE PROSPERITY POST CARDS

What Every Merchant Knows.
Of Interest to Wage Earners.
Of Interest to Taxpayers.
Of Interest to Bankers.
Prosperity Statistics.

This series of post cards has been prepared in English, German, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, and Swedish.

Price, per dozen, 15 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois

April—National Y. P. B. Membership Campaign Month

Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary, who has recently done such splendid work in Tennessee, is now in Missouri, and we are looking for big results from her work there.

We are glad that two of our Y. P. B. workers are serving as state L. T. L. secretaries. Miss Mildred Moody of New York and Miss Naidien Motts of Ohio are doing conspicuously good work. We want more of our Y. P. B. workers for L. T. L. leaders.

The Columbia (Mo.) Y. P. B. is original and alert. The members are always planning new features for their work and their social times. Something which may be helpful to other Branches is the "alphabetical refreshment plan." Six different members take charge of the social each meeting and serve for the first meeting the three A's—animal crackers, ambrosia and almonds. Six others have the three B's—bread, butter and banana-salad, etc., etc. If you have difficulty in planning "surprises," this might help.

If you want a suffrage playlet for your Branch (requiring six girls), send 15 cents to the National W. C. T. U. Publishing House, Evanston, Ill., for a copy of "Yesterday and Today," by Miss Lillian Page. It's a good one!

The Fisk University (Tenn.) Y. P. B. is conducting a membership campaign. Whenever a meeting is called the assembly hall is always crowded. Last month the Y. P. B. had as a feature a stereopticon lecture, "The World on the Water Wagon," and a large number of the student body attended.

The North Dakota University Y. P. B. is doing splendid work all along the line. The course in "Alcoholism," given by the Sociology Department, has a large enrollment this semester and at the annual oratorical contest at the university two young men spoke eloquently for prohibition.

The bigger the work, the greater the joy in doing it. That whole-hearted striving and wrestling with difficulty, the laying hold with firm grip and level head and calm resolution of the monster, and tugging and toiling and wrestling at it, today, tomorrow, and the next day, until it is done—it is the soldier's creed of forward, ever forward; it is the man's creed that for this task he has been born.

—STANLEY.

I wish the Woman's Christian Temperance Union might solemnly pledge itself to still greater activities for work among the young; work with such radiant possibilities; work that insures the perpetuation of our organization, and its never-ending hostility to the legalized liquor traffic.—LILLIAN M. N. STEVENS.

Oh! for a mighty revival among the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, that leaders may be raised up to muster and train the surging youthful forces all over our land, who are willing and eager to enter our ranks!
—LILLIAN M. MITCHNER, President of Kansas W. C. T. U.

A Y. P. B. with a membership of twenty-seven was organized by Miss Christine I. Tinling at the state Normal school at Johnson City, Tenn., with Mr. Ira Gillenwater as president.

The Delanco (N. J.) Y. P. B. recently packed a barrel of delicacies for the soldiers on the border who were ill. This was done in response to a call from Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher, our National superintendent of the department of Soldiers and Sailors.

On the occasion of the visit of Mrs. Linnie Carl, National Y. P. B. field secretary, to McKenzie, Tenn., recently, written invitations to the reception given in her honor by the Y. P. B. were sent to one hundred young people. A meeting at which Mrs. Carl was the speaker, preceded the reception. It was presided over by Miss Gladys Morrison, Y. P. B. president, and was well attended. After dismissal the Y. P. B. and their special guests repaired to a hall in another part of the building. As a part of the interesting program Mrs. Carl made a happy address and gave a reading. Refreshments were served, and a happy social hour enjoyed. New enthusiasm and inspiration were gained and five new members added to the Y. P. B.

If you want ideas for your social meetings send for "Evening Pastimes" and "Temperance Served in Social Shapes," prepared by Mrs. Mary D. Tomlinson. Three cents will pay for both leaflets.

One of the important parts of our Y. P. B. work is to keep the members informed concerning various activities of the Branch. Have the secretary, at the beginning of each month, prepare a list of the various things you have decided to do during that month. If you intend to hold a debate, or to distribute literature, or hold a reception for new members, or display new posters, or have a "temperance sing," put it down and send it to your local press; and if a member has been absent, why not send him a card, with a copy of the monthly bulletin upon it? The effectiveness of your activities should be enhanced to a great extent by this method.

MINNESOTA CLEARS ITS DECKS FOR ACTION

LORA S. LA MANCE, National Organizer

Minnesota is losing no time in getting ready for the battle in November, 1918. It is one of the few states that have a provision making it necessary that an amendment, in order to carry, must receive a majority of all votes cast in the election. Some men always throw away an amendment ballot. Other men forget it. So to win there must be more dry voters who mark their ballots than there are wet and "don't care" and careless voters combined.

Miss Rozette Hendrix, state W. C. T. U. president, has a winning personality and both on the platform and as a legislative worker has amply demonstrated that she is every inch a leader.

The first outside speakers brought into the state were the National organizers, Miss Roena Shaner and the writer. In deference to their being from the South their entrance was delayed until the close of February. Perhaps it hurt the feelings of March to be considered an easy-going fellow, or perhaps Father Winter loves a joke. At any rate the two out-of-state workers were treated to an astonishing brand of weather. Not in a score of years has Minnesota had so much snow. In some parts of the state more than seven feet of snow fell between November and April. A March blizzard helped pile the snow, heaps upon heaps. Minneapolis spent more than $30,000 in cleaning the snow from the streets. Near Lyle, it is reported that a drift reached to the top of a billboard. At Hancock one drift was 900 feet long and sixteen feet high at its loftiest tip.

In a distance of twenty-eight miles between Graceville and Benson, the snow was drifted over the tops of the fences in at least 137 places. The day following this count over a foot more of snow fell. On the Appleton branch your correspondent was snowbound for two days. A snowplow and two engines finally extracted us. At one low place seven or eight telegraph poles were buried so deep that a five-foot woman could stand on the drifts and reach the tops.

The going away of so much snow was no laughing matter. Miss Shaner, in the southern part of the state, where the snow went with a rush at the final breakup, missed four days in one week, waterbound. We, in the northern part, found difficulty when the deep snow softened. The crust broke through so that horses sometimes floundered to their bodies. Going to Nelson it took two hours to cover six miles. Nelson is the home of Miss Edna Larson, state Y. P. B. secretary. When the welcome tinkle of the sleigh bells was heard the strong and enterprising Y. P. B. with its friends quickly gathered and a splendid meeting resulted. It took another two hours to get back and it was midnight before two weary women reached home.

The little town of Garfield has all the young men and women of the neighborhood in the Y. P. B. There are 140 members. When we spoke there teams could not travel. One teacher, Miss Anna Angus, plunged two miles through the snow allowed me to stand beside him and hold my umbrella above his head. It was worth all the tiptoeing and stretching necessary to "reach up"—just to stand beside him!

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

"IMBIBE FROM NATURE'S OWN CANTEEN"

(Continued from Page Six)

How we honor these stalwarts—the men and women who have laid right foundations and then day by day have builded well!

Do you often stop to think, dear Young People's Branch members, that we are just beginning our structures; some are just laying foundations for the buildings! With total abstinence from all that would injure our bodies, minds and souls let us help build the future right!

"We are builders. In this rushing age of growth and light,
We must seek to know our mission, know and build the future right.
In the structure we are building, only truth and love must go,
And the builders must climb upward, as they build they, too, must grow.
With our vision of the future, we will feel our task fulfilled,
For eternities shall view us, as we plan and as we build.

"We are fathers to the future, we are heirs unto the past,
We are tools of evolution, growth and progress first and last,
With this motto for our slogan, we must conquer in the fight—
We are builders, we are builders—let us build our future right."

AN ADVENTURE IN EQUAL RIGHTS

ELLA BEECHER GITTINGS

"In congratulating me, Joe Brent gave you a fine compliment the other day, Sue. You know Joe, don't you? He works in Daly's drug store."

"Yes, I know him. What was the good word?"

"He said I was mighty lucky that I wasn't getting one of the soda fountain girls."

"The soda fountain girls?"

"Yes, he said it would surprise me to know how many of the girls in town had a regular soda fountain habit—came every day for drinks or ice-cream. Some of them, he said, run monthly accounts and spend almost unbelievable amounts, especially when they treat their friends."

"How did he know that I wasn't a soda fountain girl? His fountain isn't the only one in town. I might go somewhere else, for all he knows."

"Don't fool yourself, Sue. We fellows keep pretty well posted about the girls in town. We have them classified. There is the soda fountain girl and the picture-show girl and the automobile girl, and so on. Then there are a few that we can't exactly place—we call them the 'real stuff.' That's what Joe thinks you are, Sue."

"What an elegant name, and how nice of you to sort and label us that way! Who are the picture-show and auto girls, may I ask? We all go to picture shows and ride in automobiles more or less, I presume."

"Oh, they are the girls who will go with almost anyone for the sake of the show or ride. The only difference is that one is a little higher-priced than the other. Some girls wouldn't go with a fellow they didn't quite like or respect just for a ten-cent show, but an auto ride with a jolly crowd is a bit more tempting. See?"

"Yes—I see."

Sue was silent for a moment, apparently listening to the band, but really watching the rings of smoke curling upward from her fiance's choice cigar, the only kind he smoked in her company, and he belonged to the old fashioned strict class, who still asked a lady's permission to smoke in her presence. At length in a lull of the music, she inquired:

"Did Joe say anything about the tobacco boys? Joe sells tobacco, does he not?"

"Why, yes, of course—who ever heard of a drug store without cigars?"

"Well, did he say anything about the amount of money the young men of the town spend there for cigars? What did the one you are now smoking cost, Fred?"

"This? Oh, this is an extra good one—in honor of my company! It cost twenty-five cents. My everyday cigars are only ten or fifteen cents."

"Just the price of an ice-cream soda or a fruit sundae. Now, these soda fountain girls—they don't usually go for their drinks or cream more than once a day, do they?"

"No, I suppose not, unless they treat, or the weather is very hot."

"And do the boys smoke only one cigar a day? If they do, they must make it last a long while, for I see them smoking morning, noon and night."

The young man laughed indulgently.

"Of course, you know better than that, Sue. Very few smokers limit themselves to one cigar a day. I don't suppose any of them do, unless it's some tight-wad—but that's a different thing from ice-cream and candy."

"How different?"

The searchlight from a passing car shone full upon Sue's uplifted face, as she asked her innocent question. A glint of mischief in her wide-open eyes made her lover flush uneasily.

"How different?" he retorted. "Better ask how not different? Who could compare soda water and ice-cream with cigars?"

"I can. They are both bought at drug stores and cost the same amount. Both are unnecessary luxuries bought to please the taste. One goes into the mouth and slips down the throat and you taste it while it's going down. The other goes into the mouth and burns out through the nose and you taste it while it's going. Both give you a comfortable sense of being fashionable and doing as the rest do. So much for the similarities—now for the differences. The girl eats her ice-cream and no one else is the wiser unless he happened to see her eating it, but the man who smokes his cigar announces the fact to every one he meets, long after he has finished it, because the strong odor lingers on his breath like onions—which no one eats when going into company for fear of giving offense to others. It also scents his clothing permanently and strongly—like musk, which is now taboo in good society. The ice-cream soda is cooling and allays thirst, the cigar is heating and creates thirst. The ice-cream has a slight food value, the cigar none. You may invite your friends to share a soda, but you compel them to share your cigar whether they like it or not."

"Come, now! That isn't quite fair, Sue; didn't I ask your permission to smoke?"

"Certainly, and I gave it, for I might as well inhale your cigar as that of the man in front of me and the man behind me and on the other side of me, for one cannot come to a band concert without breathing tobacco smoke; but the ice-cream girl doesn't spill her soda over everybody around her."

"I declare, Sue, you are the limit when it comes to making a case against something you don't like. I gave up long ago trying to match my wits against yours in an argument."

"But, Fred, I am not arguing; I'm simply stating facts without note or comment. If I've any object in view it is to defend what you are pleased to call the soda fountain girls against their detractors, who are more foolishly extravagant than the girls they condemn. Have I said anything that is not true?"

"Perhaps not, only I cannot believe that our cigars are as disagreeable to others as you pretend. People, in general, do not seem to notice them—it's only now and then a crank—"

"Who says anything about it, yes. The rest of us are too polite to let you know you are disagreeable. We just get used to it and tolerate it the same as we do engine smoke or gas odors, or any other nuisance that we cannot abate."

"But, Sue, I've heard lots of girls say that they 'dearly love the odor of a good cigar.'"

"Oh, yes, I presume some of them do learn to like it, but more of them are telling 'white lies' just to curry favor with the boys."

"Don't you like it, Sue?"

"Since you ask me—no."

"Then, why in the name of sense, did you consent to marry a smoker?"

"Why can't you see, Fred, it only proves my love for you that I was willing to take you in spite of the smoke, the same as I'd have taken you, had you possessed a squint eye or freckles if you were otherwise lovable. Wouldn't you have wanted me even if I'd been a soda fountain girl?"

"Sure I would, Sue!"

"And paid all those bills without a murmur?"

"Half as much as I spend on cigars? Well, I should hope so. Haven't you the same right to your luxuries as I have to mine?"

"Most married tobacco users who have come under my observation do not seem to think so. They would consider their wives and daughters wildly extravagant if they bought ice-cream or candy as regularly as they do cigars.'"

"Guess you are right, Sue, but we will be different. We are to be equal partners in finances as in everything else. I'll tell you what I'll do—I'll give you every day the exact duplicate of my tobacco money for you to spend on sodas, candy or any other luxury or folly you choose, and no questions asked. Will that be fair?"

"Why, Fred, what a bright idea! Fair? It's more than generous. You can't think what it will mean to me. I've always had to be so careful of my pennies. But can you afford it, dear?"

"Afford it? I must. Generous? No, only just. I'm not such a selfish cad, I hope, as to spend on myself what I could not afford for you. If the bill gets too heavy I'll simply have to cut my allowance of tobacco."

"Maybe, Fred, when I am treating the girls so gloriously and keeping my bon-bon boxes full of choice candy, I shall learn to 'love the odor of a good cigar.'"

"I hope so, dear. It's a bargain, then? Let's shake hands on it."

Each night during the wedding journey Sue's dainty gold-meshed purse opened to receive the equivalent of the day's smoke fund. If Fred was sometimes startled at the amount, he made no sign but paid without a murmur, telling himself that of course there were more treats and more expensive cigars when a man was just married; once home and settled, he would use more moderation. When Sue passed her bon-bon box as they sat enjoying their bedtime chat, he would say, deprecatingly, "No fair, Sue; this is your share, not mine," and would replenish the box frequently with sweets of his own buying.

Home at last and settled in their cosy flat, there stood on the pretty onyx table, among cigar clips, tobacco jars, and ash trays, a lovely filigree jewel box. Into this each night was dropped Sue's "folly fund," as she was pleased to call it, and each morning she transferred it to a special compartment of her own private desk.

Flowers for the dining table, the latest "best seller" in novels, foolish little "flim-flams" for the toilet table, choice confections such as she had never dreamed of indulging in, all flowed from that magic compartment, but whenever she hinted at a new rug or a piece of bric-a-brac for the house to be purchased from this fund, Fred rebelled at once. When the holidays drew near, Sue suggested using it for Christmas money.

"Nothing doing!" exclaimed Fred, forcibly, if not elegantly, "Christmas presents come out of the family budget, share and share alike, same as carfare and picture shows. See?"

Fred and Sue were strictly up-to-date, and his salary was apportioned on the latest approved budget system, any surplus from any department going to swell the rainy day fund in the savings bank. But aside from the small fund provided for in the original budget, very little surplus found its way there.

Sometimes as the months slipped by, and those always unforeseen expenses such as doctor's bills, dentist's bills, expense involved in the entertainment of guests, etc., presented themselves, the contingent fund, which at first had seemed so ample, could with difficulty be stretched to cover them. Finally, it sometimes became necessary to borrow from the clothing fund for this purpose. Then a gentle rivalry ensued for the privilege of refurbishing last year's suit or overcoat, or Fred would buy cheaper

(Continued on Page Thirteen)

THE WINNING POINT

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

Tom Landon returned from school one afternoon much excited.

"We are to have a debate next Friday afternoon, mother," he announced, "and I am on the affirmative side."

"What is the question to be debated?" asked his mother.

"'Resolved, that alcohol and tobacco are the most harmful poisons known.' Our sixth grade teacher let Lillian Roberts select the question. Lillian isn't but sixteen, but she's a high school senior and the leader of the Loyal Temperance Legion. She is daffy about temperance and prohibition, and says she is going to take the boys on our side, if they win the debate, to the city next Saturday, week, in her dad's new car, and she will take them to the Zoo. You'll help me get points, won't you?"

"I am very busy trying to finish your sister's dress for the musical recital, Tuesday evening, but your brother George could help you."

"He is a smoker."

"The very reason why he should study the question and learn that tobacco is a deadly poison. Have you literature to get the facts and statements of scientists?"

"Here's a Temperance Manual Lillian gave me."

"Get George to read it aloud while you write down the points you will need in your argument."

"All right."

That evening after the family had gathered in the sitting room, Tom made his request. His big brother laughed uneasily.

"That's all foolishness, Sport, but of course I will read you the dope if you wish. Lillian is a fine girl, but she is a crank in some ways."

"That's what a lot of folks call her, but she says it takes a crank to make things turn, and she doesn't mind being one in a good cause. Here's the Manual. Stop reading when you strike a point."

"All right. 'Alcohol is a deadly poison.'"

"That's one."

"'Even in small quantities it injures the stomach, heart and brain.' That's fine. Put it down."

"I will."

"'It not only injures the body, mind and soul, but the pocketbook and morals.'"

Tom wrote that and several other strong points as to the harm of alcoholic poison to even the most healthy. George agreed that the Manual was correct in all the statements, but frowned when he began to read about tobacco.

"'Tobacco is a plant belonging to the deadly night-shade family. The nicotine it contains is a subtle poison. It injures the stomach, lungs and heart.'" "That is not true," declared George decidedly. "Tobacco has never hurt me in any way."

"How do you know?" asked his mother. "You suffer from indigestion, and have a cough. Your heart—"

"My heart is as sound as a dollar."

"Did you get on the junior baseball team?" asked Tom with interest.

"Pshaw! You've been hearing Lillian Roberts talk about the 'tobacco heart.' Dr. Baker hasn't examined our team yet, but I know my heart is all right. This is all foolishness about a boy being stunted and his vital organs injured by the use of tobacco. Write something about those points you got on alcohol, Tom, but don't say anything about tobacco that you can't prove. The doctor will finish examining our team by Thursday and you can get his report. You'll find it won't do your side of the question any good. Unless a fellow makes a regular furnace of himself, smoking doesn't do him any harm."

"Anyway I'll put down that tobacco wastes time and money. I know that is true."

Thursday afternoon Tom returned from school much discouraged.

"Jim Lacy's father smokes and sells tobacco in his drug store," Tom told his mother. "He's got all sorts of arguments to prove that it doesn't injure people. And there will be two men among the judges who use tobacco and don't believe in prohibition. The other side would have them."

"Get your points in order, son," advised Mrs. Landon, "and hold Dr. Baker's report till the last in your argument."

"I am afraid it will not be of any use."

"I believe you will win, my boy," replied his mother hopefully.

The Landon family was sitting down to supper Friday evening when Tom came rushing in like a small whirlwind.

"We won! Our side won in the debate!" he cried joyfully.

"Must have been your points against alcohol that helped out," said George.

"But it wasn't. We were just about neck and neck, one of the judges told Lillian, when Dr. Baker came in with his report. The last speaker read it, and—what do you think! There wasn't a boy who smokes who could get on the team! Their hearts and lungs were so that it would not be safe to take such runs as baseball players do. What do you think of that, Mr. Smoker?"

The big brother was silent until his mother asked:

"Don't you think you could make the team by your senior year, George, if you gave up your harmful habit?"

"Yes, mother. I will be all right for next year's team if never touching tobacco in any form will help."

"I am sure it will, son."

"I will tell Lillian you have quit smoking for quits—as we are driving to the city tomorrow," promised Tom.

AN ADVENTURE IN EQUAL RIGHTS

(Continued from Page Twelve)

cravats, and Sue send her gloves to the cleaner's and say nothing about it.

At such times, prudence would whisper to Fred, "Smoke less and buy cheaper cigars," but instantly pride would respond, "And make Sue feel that you begrudge her luxuries? Own up that you cannot afford a gentleman's allowance of tobacco?" So, instead of diminishing, the money that went up in smoke gradually increased as the habit grew.

"Sue, just listen to this," exclaimed Fred, looking up from his newspaper one evening during the third year of their married life. "You remember that little bungalow on Fairview Road that we have always admired so much?"

"The one with the white pergola covered with red ramblers? Yes, what about it?"

"It is for sale, and at a real bargain, too—only three hundred dollars down and the rest in monthly payments. That's just about what we are paying for rent, Sue."

"O Fred, could we? It's the dearest place!"

"I'm afraid not, Sue. I'm ashamed to own it, but I couldn't raise even that amount of money just now. After all our skimping, we've only about two hundred dollars in the bank and it would not be wise to draw that out. It is little enough to provide for sickness or other possible emergencies. However, the way the price for foodstuffs and everything else has been soaring, I think we have done pretty well to keep out of debt—especially as I haven't had my salary raised since we were married."

"But, Fred, I do want that house! Just think, we've been married almost three years and we haven't even started the home we talked so much about. The place has a garden and the cutest little chicken house and a cherry tree just loaded with cherries last year."

Fred shook his head dolefully.

"No use talking about it, Sue, we just can't swing it. Maybe I'll get the long promised raise next year and then we'll find something else just as good."

The next evening at dinner, Sue laid a large, legal looking envelope beside Fred's plate.

"What is this, Sue?" he asked, looking at it curiously.

"Oh, just a deed or something like that," answered Sue with pretended carelessness. "I bought a house today."

"Bought a house! What do you mean, Sue? Where's the joke?"

"There is none. I mean what I say. I bought that bungalow we were talking about last night. I thought it all over and decided it would be the cheapest thing to do—to let our rent go to paying for it. Aren't you glad, Fred?"

"But I don't understand—where did you get the money for the first payment?"

"My cigar money, Fred?"

"Cigar money! Not three hundred dollars!"

"Yes, dear, and enough besides to buy a lovely new rug for our lovely new living room. Tell me you're glad, Fred, or I shall cry—I'm mighty near it anyway."

"Glad? Why, Sue, I can't tell yet exactly how I do feel. But, little girl, you didn't play fair! All this time when I thought you were enjoying your little luxuries, the same as I was, you were saving up for both of us. I call that a snide game, Sue."

He tried to look her squarely in the eye as he played this aggrieved role, but there was a flush on his face and his voice was a trifle husky.

"Maybe I didn't play quite fair, Fred, but I know you're glad in spite of your pretending. It was this way, dear—I couldn't spend it all on sweets and 'eats' or I'd have ruined my stomach in no time, and I won't chew gum—"

"I should hope not!" ejaculated Fred under his breath.

"Well, then, when you wouldn't let me spend it on dress or even for Christmas, it began to accumulate, don't you see?

(Continued on Page Sixteen)

AMONG OUR WORKERS

Through the joint efforts of Mrs. Pauline W. Holme, vice-president of the Maryland W. C. T. U., and Miss Christine I. Tinling, National lecturer, a Y. P. B. was organized in the Maryland state Normal school at Towson, on the outskirts of Baltimore, with a membership of approximately twenty-five. Miss L. Mabel Nims is the president.

The New Rochelle (N. Y.) W. C. T. U. had the pleasure and benefit of a visit from Mrs. Emma G. Dietrick, National and state organizer, who on March 25 addressed three Sunday schools and was the speaker at an evening meeting in Salem Baptist church. On Monday morning she addressed 725 pupils in the high school. This is the first time a W. C. T. U. speaker has been admitted to the public schools of New Rochelle, and Mrs. Dietrick awakened intense interest.

Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard, National W. C. T. U. lecturer, and former president of the Utah W. C. T. U., has been helping in local prohibition campaigns in Wisconsin. At Monroe she spoke at length at the opera house to an audience that taxed the capacity of the building. The interest and attendance were such as to surprise even those who had made careful provision for the success of the meeting.

Mrs. E. A. G. Stickney, president of the Brownfield (Me.) W. C. T. U. and also for many years president of the Oxford county organization, recently celebrated her eightieth birthday. As a token of their love for their pioneer leader, the officers of the W. C. T. U. presented flowers. Among those from Portland who greeted Mrs. Stickney on this happy anniversary was Mrs. Gertrude Stevens Leavitt, daughter of Mrs. Lillian M. N. Stevens, promoted president of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, who for many years was the leader of the Maine temperance forces, and a co-worker with Mrs. Stickney.

Mrs. Lora La Mance, National organizer, visited Fargo, N. D., April 1. Fargo has two fine unions, she reports, the Scandinavian union having a membership of more than 300. Those who cherish the delusion that prohibition is a failure in North Dakota should study Fargo conditions. This town of 22,000 inhabitants has hospitals, public buildings, fine churches, splendid school buildings and five colleges. The city will put in a million dollars' worth of improvements in 1917. It has less bootlegging than wet towns of its size. Its example helped Moorhead, across the line in Minnesota, to go dry. There is not a house of prostitution in the whole city and the moral tone is high.

Miss Eliza L. Davis, who three years ago was sent to Africa as a missionary by a colored Baptist convention of this country, has been doing active temperance work in connection with her missionary activities. Miss Davis was educated in Guadaloupe College, Texas, where she was a member of the "Y" and later of the Y. P. B. She has just held a medal contest at the Bible and Industrial Institute, Fortsville, Grand Bassa county, the first medal contest held in that section of Africa. Temperance literature has been sent to her from time to time by Mrs. Eliza E. Peterson, National superintendent of Work Among Colored People. Miss Davis reports many pledge signers, a lasting obligation with them, she says, as they regard a pledge as binding for life.

The Talbot-Dorchester-Caroline tri-county W. C. T. U. of Maryland, Mrs. Anna E. Merrick, president, has arranged for Mrs. Emma Graves Dietrick, a National organizer very popular in the state, to speak in Cambridge, Easton, Hurlock, Denton, Trappe, Royal Oak and Tilghman beginning April 11. The tri-county convention will be held in Ridgely May 9-10, with Mrs. Addie B. Parsels, National organizer, as the evening speaker. Mrs. Mary R. Haslup, state W. C. T. U. president, Mrs. Harry Challis, state Y. P. B. secretary, and Miss Carrie Green, state L. T. L. secretary, will also fill important places on the program.

NEW DEPARTMENT LEAFLETS

ANTI-NARCOTICS
Questions for Father
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents.

BIBLE IN PUBLIC SCHOOLS
Does the Reading of the Bible in Public Schools Violate Any Principle of Our Government?
Bible Reading on the Bible in the Public Schools
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents

CHRISTIAN CITIZENSHIP
Only One Vote
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents
What's the Harm in Gambling?
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents
Teaching of Citizenship in Public Schools
Price, per fifty, 18 cents; per hundred, 30 cents.

WORK AMONG COLORED PEOPLE
Encouragement
Views of Eminent Negro Men Concerning the Liquor Traffic
How One of God's Little Ones Was Saved from the Curse of Strong Drink
Truth
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents

EVANGELISTIC
Fruitage—a Responsive Bible Reading
Wine for Sacred Purposes—(A Responsive Bible Reading)
Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents

FRANCHISE
Woman Suffrage and Prohibition
Suffrage Program No. 3
Suffrage Program No. 4
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents.
Mr. Voter, Is It Fair?
Do You Think, Mr. Voter?
Franchise Songs.
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents
Woman and the Church
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents

HEALTH
Eugenics
What Is Life?
Inheritance
Alcoholism and Heredity
Round Table For Either Health or Physical Education
Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents

W. C. T. U. INSTITUTES
How to Make the Institute Count
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents

JUVENILE COURTS
A Study of Delinquents
Vocational Training
Child Labor Law and Its Enforcement
Price, per fifty, 40 cents; per hundred, 75 cents.

MEDICAL TEMPERANCE
Don't Drink Coca Cola
New Evidence Against Alcohol
Russian Physicians Warn Against Alcohol
Some Things Women Should Know About Alcohol
Price, per fifty, 25 cents; per hundred, 40 cents

MORAL EDUCATION AND RACE BETTERMENT
Leaves from a Policewoman's Notebook
Dangers of the Streets
A Child in Court
Whose Daughter?
How Can Unfortunate Women Be Rescued?
Protection for Girls
Where?
Prohibition and Purity—a program
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents
The Saloon, the Great Exploiter of Vice Conscience Spoke Out
To Men—A Closing Word
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents

MOTHERS' MEETINGS AND WHITE RIBBON RECRUITS
Two Types of Families
The Ideal Mother
The Mother's Hour
A Mother's Prayer Answered
Bibliography
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents
Opportunity—a poem
Do You Love Babies?
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents
The Body and How to Protect It
Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents
Motherhood
Price, per fifty, 40 cents; per hundred, 75 cents

PRESS
Money Spent for Publicity
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents

PURITY IN LITERATURE AND ART
Safeguarding Our Pleasures
Price, per fifty, 40 cents; per hundred, 75 cents

SCIENTIFIC TEMPERANCE INSTRUCTION
The Study of Temperance the Most Constructive Study in the Public School
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents
History of Scientific Temperance Instruction
Price, per fifty, 40 cents; per hundred, 75 cents

SUNDAY SCHOOL
The House That Rum Built (No. 2)
Compare and Think
New Recruits
Bryanisms
A Righteous Plea
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents
Playing House
A Young Campaigner
Worth More Than Taxes
Price, per hundred, 10 cents
The Sunday School Exhibit
Price, per fifty, 15 cents; per hundred, 25 cents

TEMPERANCE AND LABOR
Touching the Tap Root
Railway Regulations Concerning Drink
Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 30 cents
A Safe Journey
Railroad Man's Prayer
Price, per fifty, 10 cents; per hundred, 15 cents

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUB. HOUSE,
Evanston, Ill.

"Engirded with God's power we shall meet triumphantly the challenge of our big task —a challenge that calls for a sober America and a sober world."

Anna A. Gordon

This artistic book mark is printed in sepia tints. Price per 50, 35c.; per 100, 60c.

National W. C. T. U. Publishing House
Evanston, Illinois

BULBS 50 High Grade Flowering Bulbs Oxalis, Begonia, Gloxinia, Gladiolus, other kinds. Asparagus Fern. All postpaid. Send 25c
Old Homestead Nursery Co., Round Pond, Me.

ARTICLES IN CURRENT PERIODICALS

The Survey of March 10 contains an article by Mrs. Elizabeth Tilton on "Do We Want the Gothenburg System?" It gives a brief survey of the situation in Norway and Sweden under the government or company control system, and answers the questions raised in the article by Albert Nock in the March Century, "Should We Fight for Prohibition?" She quotes the opinions of prominent Scandinavians concerning the system in force in the Scandinavian countries. Dr. Scharffenburg, a member of the Norwegian Alcohol Commission, says, "The dark side of the system is the interest which the whole town, and especially the largest taxpayers, have acquired thereby in the sale of liquor. More or less conspicuously the whole town becomes reconciled through the system to whisky drinking and withdraws with indifference from the struggle against liquor." Dr. Bratt, a Stockholm physician and a conscientious wet, is quoted as saying: "The wine dealers, renting licenses from the Bolag, drive the whisky business precisely like any private dealer, have signs—advertise . . . and up to date there have been hardly any indications on the part of the Bolag of taking any measures save those by which the Bolag's income could be increased." Dr. Bratt declares that the companies compete with each other and the regulations are generally violated. The Norwegian Alcohol Commission, 1915, says: "The restrictive measures have not shown themselves sufficiently effective to oppose abuse. . . . As far as drunkards are concerned they have missed the mark. . . . New means must be found. . . . The Samlag has not kept pace with its task." From her study of the situation, Mrs. Tilton arrives at the conclusion:

"If in such miniature countries as Norway and Sweden, they have had difficulty in keeping the management always disinterested, what would it be in our large cities? If profits of the saloons in Scandinavia have stifled reforms, what would happen in our cities with all the surplus profits from the retail liquor business flowing up to the city hall or state house?

"History shows that in the few instances where nations have made marked headway over long periods against drink, the headway has been due not to the ideal, moderation, that keeps alive a great organized traffic in business bound to push its wares on weak and strong alike, but to a tandem—organized total abstinence riding ahead and prohibition following after."

Collier's of March 24 contains an illuminating article by Major C. B. Blethen, editor of the Seattle Times, on "One Year Dry."

The Sunday School Times of March 31 contains an interview with Mrs. Layyah A. Barakat, National W. C. T. U. evangelist, by Howard A. Banks, entitled, "When the Eastern Shepherd Calls."

Why Be Thin?

I can improve your figure—build up your strength—make you weigh what you should.

I know I can because I have helped over 35,000 women gain 10 to 35 pounds—not only gain flesh, but they are now oh, so well—and rested!

One pupil writes: "One year ago I weighed only 100 pounds—now I weigh 126, and, oh, I feel so well!"

I want to help you attain your proper weight, in your room, without drugs, by scientific, natural methods such as your physician approves

If you only realized how surely, how easily, how inexpensively your weight can be increased, I am certain you would write me at once.

You will surprise your family and friends.

Do write! I want so much to help you as only a woman can. I've had a wonderful experience Let me tell you about it. Write for my Free Booklet, No. 22.

Susanna Cocroft
Dept. 37 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago

MINNESOTA CLEARS ITS DECKS FOR ACTION

(Continued from Page Eleven)

to attend the meeting. Another teacher, Miss Eunice Landa, the president, walked four miles, getting in at dusk. She had to start back at seven o'clock the next morning to reach her school by nine o'clock. The Y. P. B. of Minnesota can challenge any state to show more resourceful or self-sacrificing young people.

For the most part the W. C. T. U. and young people's societies are of Scandinavian blood. These people are loyal and true to the cause. They are not afraid to work nor to give. Nor do they lie awake nights for fear they are doing more than their share of work. They realize the handicap of an unfair law and have taken for their slogan, "If you don't vote dry, your vote is counted wet." They intend to drill it into the ears of every voter in the state.

They are planning wholesale "hikes" to reach the farmers, and prohibition plays, contests, window displays, literature, posters, parades, street speaking, and Young Campaigners for Prohibition will be features. The pews are ahead of the pulpit in this state, but some ministers have done noble work. Rev. Mr. Anderson, a Scandinavian minister at Moorhead, gets much of the credit for making that important town dry. With but one exception both the public and the Catholic schools have cordially given our W. C. T. U. speakers full leeway.

At Lyle, the Dahl family, father, mother and three sons, furnished the entire musical program at our meetings. At Hoffman, part of the exercises were in Swedish. Here a young ladies' orchestra supplied the music. The Cambridge W. C. T. U. sent its speaker to a missionary meeting, Detroit, to a Christian Endeavor meeting, Dassel, to speak at a lodge banquet, Osakis, to a ladies' aid meeting, Crookston, to three aid meetings, and to a Swedish young people's meeting. Co-operation is in the air.

Unions were organized at Osakis and Morris in one week, and both are centers of influence. Detroit, in the Chippewa White Earth reservation, intends to do work with its Indian citizens. The Chippewas are quite civilized and are voters.

Businesslike Minnesota! Watch her climb! The goal is prohibition and she will win!

LEGISLATIVE JOTTINGS

A senate bill providing for modified local option for New Jersey was killed by the lower house of the legislature.

A measure providing for county option for Pennsylvania was defeated in the house, the vote being 72 to 127.

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast.
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies.

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

INTERESTING CHAPTER OF TEMPERANCE HISTORY IN WHICH THE UNION SIGNAL FIGURED

MRS. ELLEN A. DAYTON BLAIR, L. T. L.
Secretary Southern California W. C. T. U.

Well do I remember the day I first met THE UNION SIGNAL. It was in 1882 way up in the woods of Northern Wisconsin. I had been a "shut-in" in a sanitarium for many, many long months following my almost constant crusading in 1874, for five months in Williamsport, Pa., and for one year or more among the members of a large Bible class of young men in my church, some of them almost helpless victims of the drink curse and all frequenters of saloons. All of them became active Christians, one of them for a score of years serving as a deacon in John Wanamaker's church in Philadelphia and now having a large Sunday school in that city.

When we moved to Wisconsin in 1882 I knew nothing of the W. C. T. U., but one day some one handed me a copy of THE UNION SIGNAL. I literally devoured its every word, as I have been doing all the years since. I began at once to study how to organize a union in the little saloon-ridden lumber town where we lived. I wrote to Miss Mary Allen West, the noble and gifted woman whom we all learned to love so dearly, then the efficient editor of the paper, sending $1.50 for my subscription to THE UNION SIGNAL and requesting her to provide instructions for the organization of a union. From that time on Medford, Wis., has had a W. C. T. U., and for six years, up to the time of a great fire which destroyed half the town and all our mills, my large and flourishing Band of Hope met every Sunday afternoon in the only public hall of the town, the property of the lumber company of which my husband was a member.

Ten years later I was invited to return and assist in dedicating a W. C. T. U. temperance hall the union had built, and among the many who grasped my hand was a student of the Wisconsin University at Madison. He said, "I wish to give you this money personally and tell you that all I am today I owe to you for you persuaded my father, who strongly objected, to let me sign the pledge in the Band of Hope. I have taught my brother as you taught me, and my mother is now president of the W. C. T. U." This young man was later county superintendent of schools. Another member of that Band of Hope is now a prominent philanthropist in Madison. It would take a whole UNION SIGNAL to tell of the results of that one union and Band of Hope, or what came from the handing of one copy of our blessed paper to a perfect stranger. The paper has visited me regularly every week for thirty-six years and every day for several months during the presidential campaign of 1884. Each week the paper has grown better. Every Monday morning I must have it that I may be well informed as to the progress of our work and learn the latest reliable temperance and suffrage news.

$2.50 PER DAY SALARY PAID ONE PERSON in each town to distribute FREE circulars, and take orders for White Ribbon Concentrated Flavoring. Non-alcoholic. Big demand, steadily increasing. J. S. ZIEGLER CO., 7G, E. Harrison St., Chicago.

PLATES FOR NEWSPAPERS FREE—BONE-DRY

The National W. C. T. U., through its Publicity Bureau, is sending free plate matter into states which are in state-wide prohibition campaigns. The present plan is to supply one newspaper in each county of these states with a half-column plate each week free of charge, the state W. C. T. U., if possible, paying one-half the expense.

THE PRESS IS WITH US

Never since the first prohibition gun was fired and the first dry state put upon the map has the secular press been so willing to give of its chief asset—space—for temperance publicity. Especially is this true of the weekly and smaller daily papers. "If the ideal of national prohibition is to become a reality," says the head of a great newspaper syndicate out of a wide experience, "it will be because of the support received from the people of country communities." The liquorites realize the tremendous as a vote-maker, and are deluging country newspapers with misleading statements concerning prohibition. The anti-liquor forces must counteract the influence of the beer-and-whisky-wet plates with clean dry plates upon which truth is served to the masses. The W. C. T. U. must, like other temperance organizations, enter the open door offered by a friendly press.

VALUE OF THE RURAL PRESS AS AN EDUCATOR

OPPORTUNITY TO HELP

Obviously, the W. C. T. U. in campaign states where the population is small and scattered—and the counties many—is not able to assist the National in financing this free plate proposition. So we are asking friends of prohibition to help.

We thank all who have already responded to this call. Each contribution received is duly and gratefully acknowledged.

If you who read these lines can not contribute money yourself, please send a marked copy of this UNION SIGNAL to some one who is likely to be interested, and who is able to give generously. Soon every state will be

IN A CAMPAIGN FOR NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION

Make all remittances payable to the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Indicate the fact that your gift is for the publicity campaign.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

(State papers please copy.)

FUNNYGRAPHS

Ex-Senator Beveridge, discussing a certain monopoly, said, with a smile:

"This company reminds me of the old man in the train who said to his neighbor:

"'Would you mind lending me your specs, sir?'

"'Why, certainly,' the neighbor answered, and he took off his spectacles and surrendered them with a courteous gesture.

"'And now,' said the old man, 'since you can no longer see to read your newspaper, I'm sure you'll be willing to let me run my eye over the sporting pages.'" —Minneapolis Journal.

"Fellow citizens," said the candidate, "I have fought against the Indians. I have often had no bed but the battlefield and no canopy but the sky. I have marched over the frozen ground till every step has been marked with blood."

His story told well till a dried-up looking voter came to the front.

"I'll be darned if you hain't done enough for your country. Go home and rest. I'll vote for the other fellow." —Success Magazine.

AN ADVENTURE IN EQUAL RIGHTS

(Continued from Page Thirteen)

Then I began to figure a little, and as our savings account wasn't growing very fast, and the home we'd talked about seemed farther and farther away, I—I—just did it! Won't you forgive me, dear, and come and live with me in that darling bungalow. I'll promise—"

But Fred had her in his arms with his hand over her mouth.

"I say, Sue, let up on a fellow!"

"What do you mean, Fred?" she spluttered out between his restraining fingers, "I wasn't blaming you!"

"No, Sue, but I've been blaming myself a long while. Every time I put away your cigar money, don't you think it was a pretty good object lesson on what I was wasting on smoke? I was too proud or stubborn or weak—all three I guess—to call off the deal, but you!—you win, Sue—I surrender. No more burning up money for me and then worrying my head off to make ends meet. Gee! what a cad I've been to let you do all the saving after all—after all my big talk about equal partners."

"But, Fred, can you stop it when you've had the habit so long?" Sue was smiling through quick tears.

"Can I? It is not a question of 'can I?' I MUST!"

Sanitary Drinking Fountains

Also Drinking Fountains for Man and Beast.

Special prices to W. C. T. U. and all Charitable Societies.

This Fountain was erected by the W. C. T. U. of Luray, Va.

Write for Catalogue

J. W. Fiske Iron Works

56 & 58 Park Place

NEW YORK

The Union Signal

OFFICIAL ORGAN
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

Vol. XLIII | EVANSTON, ILL., APRIL 19, 1917 | No. 16

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

Every White Ribboner a Prohibition Patriot

Now is the strategic time to work with redoubled energy for the immediate enactment of prohibition as a war measure. The boys of the Army and the Navy must be safeguarded from saloons and dens of vice near training camps and mobilization centers, and the material resources of the nation must be carefully conserved. Already there is being drafted by Congressmen as a war measure a bill to create a dry zone around all military posts and training camps.

At this time of the nation's need the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is a "live wire" in Washington, D. C. "Every white ribboner a prohibition patriot" is the enthusiastic slogan.

CAMPAIGN EDITION

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER

BILLS FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION AND OTHER PROHIBITION MEASURES INTRODUCED CAMPAIGN FOR FOOD CONSERVATION CONDUCTED BY GOVERNMENT AGRICULTURAL DEPARTMENT

MRS MARGARET DYE ELLIS, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Legislation, Washington, D. C.

Wednesday, the eleventh instant, President Wilson spent an hour at the Capitol in conference with Speaker Clark, and majority leader, Representative Kitchin, over pending war measures. The war financing bill, providing for $5,000,000,000 in bonds and $2,000,000,000 in Treasury certificates, was reported unanimously for passage by the ways and means committee and was reported to the House by the chairman, Mr Kitchin, who announced that the bill would be called up for action on Friday, April 13th. This prompt response on the part of the ways and means committee was greatly appreciated by the President.

Conscription was also discussed, the President and the Secretary of War both favoring it. But the House, so far as can be ascertained, is not willing to commence operations, wishing to use it only as an emergency means.

Representative Little from Kansas, the only new member from that state, has introduced a bill in the House to prohibit the sale of intoxicants within twenty miles of any place which is being used as a station for the army, navy or marine corps. Mr. Little saw service in the Philippines and participated in a dozen battles and numerous skirmishes and the bill he has introduced represents the practical view of a soldier. He says that, if the evils of liquor could have been avoided in the mobilization of troops in 1898, the efficiency of the soldiers would have been increased thirty per cent.

Bills for National Constitutional Prohibition Introduced

Senator Sheppard has introduced in the Senate a joint resolution for National Constitutional Prohibition as follows:

"Section 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes are hereby prohibited."

"Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation, and nothing in this article shall deprive the several states of their power to enact and enforce laws prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

Senator Thomas and Senator Shafroth, both from Colorado, have each introduced joint resolutions for National Constitutional Prohibition.

Representative Randall of California has introduced several bills, one to exclude intoxicating liquor from National parks, one for National Constitutional Prohibition, and one divesting intoxicating liquors of their interstate character.

Representative Taylor of Colorado has introduced a bill to prohibit the sale or gift of intoxicating liquors to minors within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States; also to prevent the sale of intoxicating liquors in any ship, naval station, or building used or owned by the United States government.

Mr. Hamilton of Missouri has introduced a bill for prohibition for Hawaii.

Senator Chamberlain of Oregon, chairman of the Senate committee on Military Affairs, has introduced a bill to provide for the military and naval training and service of citizens of the United States.

"Section 40 prohibits the sale or possession of intoxicating or spirituous liquors, or tobacco, at any military or naval station, camp, fort, navy yard, or aboard ship, which is being used at the time for purposes of training under this Act, except in case of illness."

"Section 41. That no intoxicating or spirituous liquors shall be sold to any member of the military or naval forces of the United States while in uniform, nor any supplied to any such members while in uniform."

"Section 42 provides penalties. Whoever violates this Act will be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and fined not more than $1,000, or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both."

Representative Cary of Wisconsin, a member of the House District of Columbia committee, introduced a resolution which provides for a postponement of the new District of Columbia prohibition law until August 1, 1918. The law as now written will become effective November 1, 1917.

The tendency in Congress, we are glad to believe, is favorable to restrictive measures with respect to liquors and the fact that the country is now engaged in war will, we feel sure, have the effect of hastening the day of a whole nation gone dry.

Prohibition as a War Measure

We are hoping for legislation wherein Congress shall prohibit the manufacture, sale, or importation of intoxicating liquor in the United States during the duration of the war, as an emergency war measure.

Petitions and telegrams urging Senators and Representatives not to vote for further tax on liquors as a war necessity would help much just now. Two must be signed and sent, one for the Senators and one for the Representatives.

Each morning during the session of Congress, the Congressional Record comes to my desk. As I have eagerly scanned its pages, I have been impressed with the number of telegrams and other communications to Senators and Representatives from individuals and organizations of all kinds, religious and otherwise, about equally divided as to war or no war. Some demand peace; others voice an equally insistent demand that the United States shall follow President Wilson in his efforts to advance the cause of war.

Amid great applause and enthusiasm, Speaker Clark, on Wednesday, laid before the House a message received from the Speaker of the House of Representatives of Cuba, regarding the Cuban declaration of war against Germany, sent to the United States House of Representatives, assuring them of the pride felt by the people of Cuba in uniting their modest efforts with those of this great nation and concluding with these words: "The House of Representatives in Cuba takes special gratification in uniting their flag side by side to that of the glorious nation which, in days of undying memory, sacrificed the blood of her sons to the people of Cuba to secure their liberty and independence."

Food Conservation Campaign Conducted By Agricultural Department

The National Agricultural Society is now holding a convention in Washington. It was called at this time to aid the government in solving one of the most serious problems it faces. The prospect of short crops is giving great concern to officials, not only charged with the responsibility of seeing that America is fed, but keenly aware, too, of the fact that this country, in a large measure, must supply other countries. Immediate creation of a Federal food commission, with power to fix prices and to supervise marketing and distribution of food in the United States during the war, is urged.

It is recommended that agricultural colleges graduate their senior classes earlier this year than usual, so that they may go immediately to the farms. Millions of food gardens, to combat a food shortage, are recommended. This would give millions of families cheap food. "Convert every back yard, garden, and vacant lot in every city, village and town into a thriving food producing garden and the civilian population would be self-supporting," said one of the speakers.

To further its campaign for food conservation during the war, the Agricultural Department has ordered distribution throughout the country of the resolutions adopted at the St. Louis conference of agricultural experts, urging enlistment of an army of 2,000,000 boys to aid in increasing production and a Federal appropriation of $25,000,000 to meet the extraordinary needs of agriculture.

Upon the farmer rests in large measure the final responsibility of winning the war in which we are involved. The importance to the nation of an adequate food supply, especially for the present year, cannot be over-emphasized. The world's food reserve is very low. Therefore, the man who tills the soil and supports the soldier in the field and the family at home is rendering as noble and patriotic a service as is the man who bears the brunt of battle.

Setting an example to the country in saving and conservation of resources, a step necessary to the successful prosecution of the war, Mrs. Wilson, wife of the President, Mrs. Marshall, wife of the Vice-President, and wives of Cabinet members have resolved to reduce their scale of living to the simplest possible form.

Enlist Women in Effort to Adopt Scale of Simple Living

With the announcement of their determination, these women of the highest official families have issued an appeal to the women of America to do all in their power in similar manner not only as individuals, but through organizations as well, thus preventing actual suffering later on.

The Legislative Conference of the National Temperance Council will hold its first official meeting Tuesday, April 17, at the Hotel Raleigh, Washington, D. C. Representatives of twenty temperance and religious organizations, including Miss Anna A. Gordon, president of the National W. C. T. U., make up the personnel of the conference.

National W. C. T. U. Headquarters, Hotel Driscoll, Washington, D. C., April 13, 1917

Abdication of King Alcohol Demanded by New Hampshire Legislature

Maine no longer stands alone as a stronghold of prohibition in New England. The New Hampshire legislature has voted to repeal the present law and by so doing put in force on May 1, 1918, state-wide prohibition.

From 1855 to 1903 New Hampshire was under prohibition, but in 1903 there was passed by the legislature a provision by which all the towns were required to vote at the fall election every two years on the liquor question, and the cities every four years. If the majority of votes was for license, the license provision was to be in effect for the following two years, but if the majority was against license, then the state-wide prohibitory law remained in full force and effect.

The bill upon which the legislature has just taken action was a measure to repeal the present provision for a vote on the license question, in accordance with the 1903 law, and to prohibit the manufacture of alcohol for beverage purposes. It virtually puts into effect a state-wide prohibition law.

On March 21 the lower house went on record in favor of state-wide prohibition by a vote of 192 to 172. On April 10 the senate, by a vote of 14 to 9, adopted the house measure. It is believed that the governor will sign the bill.

The apparent opposition to the measure in the legislature was due not so much to a sentiment in favor of the liquor interests as to the fact that the idea of each community settling the liquor question for itself appeals strongly to the democratic New England mind. It was inevitable, of course, that such an enlightened community as the Granite state should settle the question in the only way that it can remain permanently settled, by voting for state-wide prohibition.

HONOR ROLL

—of—

PROHIBITION STATES AND TERRITORY AND DATE OF GOING INTO EFFECT

Maine			1851
Kansas			1880
North Dakota			1889
Oklahoma			1907
Georgia			1908
North Carolina			1909
Mississippi			1909
Tennessee			1909
West Virginia			1914
Alabama			1915
Arizona			1915
Virginia			1916
Colorado			1916
Oregon			1916
Washington			1916
Arkansas			1916
Iowa			1916
Idaho			1916
South Carolina			1916
Nebraska	*May	1,	1917
South Dakota	*July	1,	1917
Utah	†Aug.	1,	1917
Dist. of Columbia	†Nov.	1,	1917
Alaska	†Jan.	1,	1918
Indiana	†April	2,	1918
Michigan	*April	30,	1918
Montana	*Dec.	31,	1918
New Hampshire	†May	1,	1918

*Enacted 1916. †Enacted 1917.

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1917

Iowa††	Ohio	New Mexico

STATES WHICH VOTE IN 1918

Utah††	Missouri	Florida
Minnesota	Wyoming	Nevada

††Now have statutory prohibition. Will vote on constitutional amendment.

Florida to Vote on State-Wide Prohibition in 1918

When the voters of Florida last November elected a legislature pledged to enact a referendum measure submitting a constitutional prohibition amendment to the people, state-wide prohibition was virtually assured.

In his message to the legislature which convened recently Governor Sidney J. Catts, who was elected on a pro-American, prohibition and clean government platform, declared:

"Prohibition is the burning issue that will come before you, gentlemen. It will have to be threshed out in this session of your body. It will require the best thought of the legislature. We could ask nothing better for our state than to have it enter the dry column. Let us hope that this will be done by the house and the senate submitting a state-wide constitutional amendment at this session."

Among the first bills to be introduced was the prohibition measure. A three-fifths vote of both houses was necessary for its passage. On April 10, it passed the senate by a vote of 29 to 3; and the house by a vote of 62 to 5. It will be voted on by the people in 1918.

A very large proportion of Florida's territory is now dry under county option, 45 of its 52 counties having voted out the saloons. Public sentiment for prohibition has been growing more pronounced during the past few years, as evidenced by the addition of dry territory and the passage of anti-liquor legislation. In 1913 the legislature passed a very drastic anti-shipping and blind tiger search and seizure law, and in 1915 it passed a measure prohibiting treating, drinking in saloons, free lunches, screens, blinds, etc.

It is a foregone conclusion that the popular vote will result in a large majority for the amendment.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION COMMISSION CONFERS ON WORDING OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

In Washington, D. C., July 10, 1915, a national conference of the allied prohibition forces of America was held to consider the wording of the national prohibition amendment. After full consideration, the National Prohibition Commission was appointed to confer with prohibition leaders in Congress concerning the wording of the resolution. The Commission consists of the following members: A. J. Barton, Texas; Anna A. Gordon, Illinois; Charles Scanlon, Pennsylvania; Mrs. F. E. Beauchamp, Kentucky; Senator Morris Sheppard, Texas; Congressman E. Y. Webb, North Carolina; R. W. Miller, Pennsylvania; Wilbur F. Crafts, Washington, D. C.; Senator Charles Curtis, Kansas; Andrew Wilson, Washington, D. C.; C. A. Pollock, North Dakota; Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, Washington, D. C.; Wayne B. Wheeler, Ohio; E. C. Dinwiddie, Washington, D. C.; James Cannon, Jr., Virginia; Mrs. Ella A. Boole, New York; William H. Anderson, New York; Hon. Horace N. Towner, Iowa; P. A. Baker, Ohio.

At a well-attended meeting of this committee, held in Washington March 28-29, 1917, it was unanimously decided to approve and recommend the following:

Amendment

"Section 1. The manufacture, sale, or transportation of intoxicating liquors within, the importation thereof into, and the exportation thereof from, the United States and all territory subject to the jurisdiction thereof for beverage purposes are hereby prohibited.

"Section 2. The Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation, and nothing in this article shall deprive the several states of their power to enact and enforce laws prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquors."

This form of amendment has been introduced in the United States Senate by Senator Morris Sheppard and in the House of Representatives by Congressman Charles Randall in the Sixty-fifth Congress, and is in substance the same wording as that which was favorably reported by the Judiciary Committee of the Senate in the second session of the Sixty-fourth Congress. The principal difference between this wording and that of the Hobson resolution is the elimination of the words "for sale."

Reasons for the Change of Wording

In the judgment of the Commission existing conditions clearly justify the change. We confidently believe that the people of this nation are ready for the broader and stronger form of the proposed amendment. While the original draft of the amendment made possible the destruction of the beverage liquor traffic, aided by existing Federal powers, the form now proposed accomplishes it more directly.

Legislation is necessary to make any constitutional amendment effective, for example, legislative action is required to fix penalties, define terms and outline procedure for prosecutions. This is provided for in Section 2.

Amendment: How Enforced

Power of Congress—Section 2 authorizes Congress to enact legislation to make the amendment effective. It may employ not only the necessary but the convenient means to secure the enforcement of the article as indicated by the Supreme Court in 227 U. S. 209.

State Powers—Powers of the states are fully protected by this provision in Section 2, "Nothing in this article shall deprive the several states of their power to enact and enforce laws prohibiting the traffic in intoxicating liquor." Any state may add to the prohibitions provided in the proposed amendment, but no state can authorize what the Constitution of the United States prohibits. If the Federal authorities should be lax in law enforcement the states could act and have the moral support of the Federal government as expressed in the amendment.

Any form of amendment which includes in substance the provisions of the above proposed amendment will meet the approval of the Commission.

United Action and Victory Assured

The proposed amendment insures united action by the prohibition forces of the nation. It insures victory.

Patriotism's Call to the Colors

"Love of country" is the noblest sentiment that ever inspired patriots to service in the hour of national peril. We love our country when we fight her foes. The hour has struck for a united drive against our nation's most insidious and vicious foe, the liquor traffic. A new call to the colors has been sounded. It challenges the patriotism of all men and women to do their "bit" and their best

(Continued on Page Twelve)

WHY THE DAYS OF THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC ARE NUMBERED

BREAD AND BEEFSTEAK TO TAKE THE PLACE OF BOOZE

NATHAN A. COLE

[Mr. Cole, it will be remembered, was for six years a speaker for the liquor interests. During the 1914 campaign in Washington his eyes were opened to the evil of the license system. Some months later he publicly announced his change of attitude and has since been working for prohibition.—EDITOR.]

Wherever you go the sentiment is overwhelming against the use of alcohol as a beverage and men who patronize the saloons are getting to be ashamed of having anybody see them enter these places.

The liquor people themselves are making confidential admissions that they see the finish. Distillers and brewers are preparing for the end by making investments in other lines.

Peoria Distillers Oppose Liquor Campaign Funds as a Waste of Money

Peoria, Illinois, is known the world over as the home of the greatest whisky-making institutions in the United States. Five great establishments flourish here and have in the past contributed from $35,000,000 to $50,000,000 a year to the United States government in taxes. The men at the head of these establishments have for some time realized that they were facing a crisis. To be sure, they have made their heavy contributions to the corruption fund of the liquor interests, but for the past two years they have done this under protest, believing that it was money wasted. And, in the face of events as they have been transpiring, who shall say that their protest was not justified. They have poured money into the states only to see one after another vote dry. They are making a stand against granting the right to the people of other states to vote on the question of prohibition, but it is with the thought of delaying the end, rather than with the hope that sentiment will change.

Formerly the liquor men went into the state legislatures and bribed those whom they were unable to intimidate or coerce, but no longer is this system available, except in two or three states. The sentiment of the people themselves is so strong that even the professional politician, who believes in capitalizing public office and getting out of it all he can, is afraid to go counter to that sentiment.

Many Liquor Men Quietly Taking up Other Lines of Work

The liquor forces have been driven into a corner. They realize they are up against a death struggle and many of them are in favor of capitulating. In St. Louis, Chicago, and other cities they are quietly going out of business and engaging in respectable lines of work. Talk with any man who has made a change of this kind, whether a saloonkeeper or a brewer, and he will tell you he is glad to be out of the business and that, under no circumstances would he engage in it again. This is the best evidence of its badness.

Big Cities Lining up for Prohibition

The stronghold of the liquor forces was formerly the city, but even that is now slipping away. The fact that at the recent election in Michigan the great manufacturing city of Detroit, with an estimated population of 750,000 people, came within a paltry 7,000 of voting dry, when the liquor crowd expected a majority of 60,000 to 70,000; that Grand Rapids, the second city in the state, Lansing, the capital of the state, and Flint, another automobile city, all voted dry, shows how sentiment is crystallizing against the liquor business.

That prohibition is a fixture is assured by the way Oregon, Washington and Colorado cities voted when the liquor people attempted to repeal the dry enactments. Every one of these cities voted dry, most of them with overwhelming majorities.

There is a new spirit abroad, the spirit of righteous progress. Universal recognition of the damage alcohol has done to the human family has resulted in a determination to drive this emissary of the devil back to regions from which it came.

Commerce and Industry Now Foes of Liquor

Then, too, commerce and industry have come to recognize the fact that liquor is not only the curse of business, but that it does not return a single recompense for the damage it does. There was a time when the liquor people, through the instrumentality of men hired by them to create favorable opinion, by the juggling of figures and perversion of facts, were able to make commerce believe that the destruction of the liquor business would create industrial paralysis and financial ruin. But that time is past. Men of industry see clearly now that the liquor business, if permitted to continue, would eventually paralyze business through its creation of inefficiency. Bleared eyes and trembling hands can not operate the fast running machines that are kept running all over the country turning out the supplies this and other nations are demanding. It costs too much to pay compensation insurance on unsteady brains and nerve-torn bodies weakened by alcohol. This loss, the captains of industry realize, can be minimized by the abolition of the liquor business, and almost without exception these men are foremost in the effort to release the wage earner from the thralldom of liquor.

Injustice of "Personal Liberty" Plea

The personal liberty plea put up by the liquor interests and those who undertake to earn liquor men's money, is the most contemptible of all the fallacious arguments advanced by them. It is the plainest and meanest of all deceptions, because it appeals to the prejudices of the ignorant. No thinking man in the world believes that personal liberty has ever been involved in the fight against this vampire business. Personal liberty is too sacred a thing to have dragged in the filth and corruption of the saloon business. Personal liberty should and does mean the right and freedom of the individual to do right things. The liquor business is evil and creates evil. It debauches and degrades human beings; it drags men down to the lowest and most contemptible depth of wickedness. To prate about the personal liberty to create crime, to degenerate human beings, to carry misery and suffering and woe into homes, is to admit one's own mental weakness. No balanced brain could ever conceive such iniquity.

Rejuvenation of American Conscience

The days of the liquor business are numbered because no man or woman, except those who are its beneficiaries, can longer be found to espouse the cause of such a society-debauching agency. Every man who thinks more of righteousness and purity and honor than he does of the dollars coming from this debasing source is recording himself against the saloon. Just plain decency is prompting men to get out of the business.

There has been a rejuvenation of the American conscience and it is seen in the unanimity with which the people of all states are banishing forever a business that has not one redeeming feature.

The saloon makes drunkards, despoils homes, debases and degrades society, corrupts governmental administrations and drives men to crime. That is the indictment and the verdict is "guilty."

WHERE HE USED TO BUY BOOZE

—Seattle (Wash.) Times

PROHIBITION AS A WAR MEASURE

HOW IS IT TO BE SECURED?—OPINIONS OF PROMINENT PEOPLE CONCERNING IT

National prohibition during the period of the war is being urged by many organizations and individuals. With the experience of Europe before us and the increasing concern in this country over the food situation, it would seem imperative that some action looking toward the checking of the waste engendered by the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages should be taken.

The allied temperance forces are carefully studying various methods suggested for the enactment of war-time legislation in an endeavor to decide upon the most desirable method.

A plan which does not meet with the approval of all the temperance organizations is the laying of a very high tax upon the manufacture and sale of all alcoholic beverages, thus virtually prohibiting the continued conduct of the business, wholesale or retail.

Among the special powers delegated to Congress in times of war, is the power to establish prohibition zones around all military and naval stations, and every section of country used for military purposes. Under this provision of the Federal law, it would be possible for Congress, were it so disposed, to place practically the entire nation in a dry zone.

The control of Congress over all interstate commerce would make it possible for it to prevent the shipment of all liquors from one state or one community to another.

The subject is being discussed by press and people and the arguments to be urged in favor of it are numerous and varied.

Food and Agricultural Experts

At a conference of food and agricultural experts with Secretary of Agriculture David F. Houston in St. Louis last week, Mr. K. L. Butterfield, president of the American Association of Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, and of the Massachusetts Agricultural College, declared that prohibition for the duration of the war should be established for purely economic reasons.

"It is necessary to divert the grain and other products used in distilleries and breweries to other uses," he said, "so from an economic standpoint prohibition during the war is necessary. The country's products must be conserved. And one way of preventing waste is to curtail the manufacture of malt liquors."

F. C. Futrall, president of the Agricultural College at Fayetteville, Ark., said the experience of European nations alone should prompt the United States to enter on a period of abstinence. "It would increase the efficiency of the nation," he said. "Prohibition was needed in Europe. Drinking is largely done in the cities, and the 2,000,000 farm laborers needed to feed this nation and keep the allies from starving must come from the cities. Increase their efficiency and give them added energy by cutting off their supply of intoxicants."

U. S. Senator Morris Sheppard

Senator Morris Sheppard of Texas, dry leader in the Senate, in an interview recently, explained his position on the subject, saying:

"The United States is facing a serious food supply situation, which would be greatly relieved by the enactment of war prohibition legislation. In the manufacture of alcoholic liquors millions of bushels of grain are consumed annually. Thus a very considerable part of the crop is devoted to a destructive purpose, instead of being used for nourishment. We should eliminate the use of intoxicants, especially during the war. This has been found absolutely necessary by the countries of Europe. It makes for a more efficient army, and increases the productive ability of the civilian population.

"Prohibition advocates in Congress will not attempt to put through any emergency dry legislation except in co-operation with those now guiding the war preparations. Quite likely we will work in conjunction with the Council of National Defense, so as not to be at cross-purposes with their efforts."

—F. G. Cooper in Collier's

"Waiter, the less I drink the better I feel. By the way, what other job are you fitted for?"

"BY ALL MEANS LET US HAVE NATIONAL PROHIBITION"

GOVERNOR ARTHUR CAPPER OF KANSAS

It is to be hoped that Congress will enact immediately a nation-wide prohibitory law. I have urged this measure for years but now, with the nation at war, with every possible source of food production certain to be strained to the utmost we have neither men nor materials to waste in continuing an evil agency which the oldest nations of Europe have abolished. Forgetting, if we can, the moral aspects of this question, it must be clear to thoughtful, patriotic Americans that if we expect to escape a serious shortage of food stuffs, including grains for livestock, we must turn our resources into proper channels.

Millions of bushels of grain are now used annually in breweries and distilleries. It would seem to be a poor sort of patriotism that would permit a business so destructive as the liquor business to continue using the labor of more than 100,000 men—not counting saloonists and retail dealers—while the nation's best blood goes forth to war. By all means let us have national prohibition—and after the war let us keep it. If America's entering this great tragedy achieved nothing more than this—the wiping out of the liquor business—then those who fall will not have given their lives in vain.

Ex-Governor Willis of Ohio

Speaking on this question before the Ohio Associated Bible Conference at Lancaster, ex-Governor Willis of Ohio recently said:

"In the crisis which confronts the nation, we need every ounce of our strength and our clearest judgment to protect us from foreign foes. We want the nation prepared to win; it can win more surely sober than drunk."

U. S. Congressman Randall

"Internment of the country's liquor business for the duration of the war may be proposed to Congress as soon as the nation's temperance leaders have fully investigated the legal aspects of war-time prohibition," said Congressman Charles Randall to a newspaper reporter recently. "Without a doubt emergency legislation of this character will be pressed early in the present war Congress. The question now being most earnestly considered is whether there will be any conflict between proposed national legislation and states' rights.

"All the belligerent European nations have found it necessary either to adopt prohibition or to enforce restrictive measures. The United States now finds itself facing a similar necessity.

"I firmly believe that without war-time prohibition in Russia, which abolished the use of vodka, there would not have been the recent successful revolution that has freed the Russian people from their yoke. The Russians are a sober people now, and see things in a new light."

How strongly Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas feels the necessity for a prohibition war measure is indicated in his letter on this page.

Judge Charles A. Pollock of North Dakota

Judge Charles A. Pollock, of Fargo, North Dakota, when asked as to his views, replied:

"Congress ought to exercise its every constitutional power for a war measure to suppress the liquor traffic. That evil exterminated, men will be truer patriots, better soldiers, the war will be shorter, and greater efficiency will everywhere abound."

Judge Gemmill of Chicago

Judge William N. Gemmill of the Municipal court of Chicago expressed himself in a letter as follows:

"It seems to me that it is more essential today than ever before that our young men in this country be physically and mentally at their best. This can never result without the absolute prohibition of the liquor traffic, and such prohibition cannot become effective except through national legislation."

Speaking of the effect of the agitation for prohibition as a war measure on the sentiment for National Constitutional Prohibition, the Pittsburgh Gazette-Times says:

"No doubt public opinion will veer very strongly toward prohibition once we are actively at war. So it is probable the resolution for an amendment to the Constitution offered by Senator Sheppard of Texas as a 'vital war measure,' and designed to prohibit absolutely the manufacture, transportation and sale of alcoholic liquors will receive more friendly consideration than it might at another time. Quite likely it will pass through Congress under the war spur."

DOES PROHIBITION MEAN LESS BUSINESS?

WASHINGTON STATE'S ANSWER

C. B. BLETHEN, Editor Seattle Times, in Collier's Weekly

The wets have two stock phrases with which they damn the efforts of every man who labors for prohibition. One is: "He's a man that never had a drink; he doesn't know people who do drink; he has no way to know what he is talking about."

The other is: "He's a hypocrite; nobody likes whisky any better than he does."

Thus they condemn their enemies going and coming. I speak of this because I particularly want to emphasize the outcome of our experiment in Washington. Personally, I never have been a prohibitionist. Instead, I have been a leader of the wets.

Now, I say to you, not as a man who has never tasted liquor, but as a business man whose principal occupation it is to observe and then write of what he sees, that prohibition doesn't have to be discussed from the moral standpoint at all, though any halfwit knows there is no excuse for a saloon. It may be discussed from the standpoint of business, of commerce, of bank clearings. Let us, then, examine the business facts:

Miles of Empty Stores Did Not Materialize

We insisted, for example, that Seattle would have miles of empty stores as the result of prohibition. Yet today the only vacant places formerly used as saloons, outside the old Tenderloin, do not, I can safely say, exceed twenty in number, and each of these is in a district no longer of use in retail business. The rest of the vacancies are new stores, not yet completed. Before me as I write is the bulky list of these old saloon locations, each one tabulated like this:

J. O. Short, 915 2d Avenue. Two-story brick. Florsheim Shoe Company.

Of the 211 places vacated when the saloons were put out of business, 191 have been occupied by new businesses.

We said that taxes would go up in the city of Seattle. They went down from 18.98 to 18.11 mills.

We insisted that bank clearings would go down. The total bank clearings of 1915 were $612,928,879. Those of 1916 were $790,217,950, an increase of more than $177,000,000!

Of course, I know that Seattle has been doing a lot of shipbuilding and that her ocean-borne commerce has increased a lot. What of it? We said certain things would happen. They did not. We said that bank deposits would go down. Look:

At the end of 1915.....	$ 87,815,076
At the end of 1916.....	106,000,000

Savings-bank deposits are not available, but the banks assure me that there has been a tremendous increase in deposits and numbers of new accounts.

Gain not Loss in Population

We all agreed Seattle would lose in population. The government says we have gained more than 15,000, having, on December 21, 348,639. Post office figures confirm this.

The liquor dealers said—the business men concurring—that crime would increase, particularly drunkenness.

Note this tabulation of crime taken from police records of these two years:

	1915	1916
Arrests for all offenses...	18,325	10,653
Drunkenness, disorderly conduct, etc.	6,303	3,651
Murder	29	23
Other crimes of violence..	173	149
Suicides	95	54
Burglaries, theft, etc.....	422	254

The liquor men insisted destitution would increase. Yet the newspapers, which for years have conducted their own charity bureaus, found only about one case in twenty this winter as compared with last. Police records show:

	1915	1916
Professional begging	708	128
Abandoning families	15	3

One of the pet wet arguments has always been that the population of jails and houses of correction increases in dry territory. The record shows:

	1915	1916
King County (Seattle) jail..	2,464	1,182
Chehalis Reform School....	184	169
Walla Walla Penitentiary..	735	645

Collections are much better. The grocery stores and meat markets say that in addition to buying more, the average small-account man is paying quickly—two or three times more promptly than ever before.

There were many vacant homes and flats in 1915, although that was not a good year. You can't rent a place in which to live in Seattle now unless you search long or have good luck. We said general business would decline. While this is well covered in the statement of clearings, let me say right here that there is not a merchant in Seattle who was in business in 1915 who has not done a much better business in 1916.

Can You Beat It?

Prohibition, even in the limited form adopted by the state of Washington, is an unqualified business success. The loss to certain property owners, caused by the reduction of rentals and real estate values which were based on the continued existence of the saloon, has injured neither the city of Seattle nor the state of Washington. In fact, there is another side to the shield.

Crime has been reduced almost one-half. The money formerly passing over bars is almost entirely spent for better living, benefiting every person it reaches, beginning with man, wife and children, and running through all the lines of trade and particularly through the middle-size and smaller shops, and all of it staying at home and much of it going into savings deposits. With the raising of the living standard comes a series of other benefits. Efficiency in all lines of business has been greatly increased. This begins in the lumber and construction camps, where from thirty to fifty per cent more work is now accomplished with the same crews. It appears on the docks, where a full day's labor is had every Monday instead of practically none and a full day's labor is had Tuesday instead of the former half. It is visible in the records of industrial accidents, now cut down to less than half the average of wet years. It shows up in every business house in the large cities in the efficiency and contentment of clerks and workmen.

The sum total of human happiness has been increased immeasurably. When women and children have more and better food and clothes and thousands of men, formerly sent to jail as the result of booze every year, no longer get into scrapes and crimes that cause mental and physical anguish to themselves and all depending upon them, no one can dispute the fact that this is becoming a better world for many.

Out here in the state of Washington we are pretty dry now, but we're going to be drier. And the drier we get the better business will be—that has been proved in this first great year! More and better clothes and more and better food for the wife and kiddies! More and better business for everybody! Fewer and fewer people in the jails or behind on their bills! Can you beat it?

PROHIBITION THE FRIEND OF THE WORKINGMAN

SENATOR RICHARD JONES OF MINNESOTA TELLS OF IMPROVED LABOR CONDITIONS IN PROHIBITION STATES

The saloon has always posed as the friend of the workingman. It is in reality his greatest foe, and prohibition, as many union men are finding out, is an aid financially and in other ways. Senator Richard Jones, of Duluth, who is a union man and labor organizer, in addressing a meeting attended by nearly 1,000 workingmen, mostly union men, at Eau Claire recently, furnished convincing testimony to the fact that prohibition has benefited union labor in the states and cities which have voted dry.

Referring to Denver's experience as a dry city, Senator Jones said:

"Union labor men of Denver, Colorado, are satisfied with prohibition. Prohibition went into effect in that state January 1, 1916, and the organized labor movement has had a tremendous growth since that time.

"Clint C. Houston, editor of the Denver Labor News, official organ of union labor in Colorado, sent the following word of advice to union men of Michigan: 'If the trade unionists of Detroit and of Michigan want to better their condition morally and financially from five to seventy-five per cent they will vote dry at the coming election.'

"Chester J. Common, president of the Building Trades' Council of Denver, in a letter dated October 23, says: 'I am frank to say I voted against the prohibition movement, thinking it would hurt business in a general way. Organized labor in Colorado is in better shape than it has been for years. Our members are better fed, better clothed and have more money in the banks than any time since I have been in Colorado—14 years.'

Not a Corporal's Guard in Denver Labor Circles Would Vote for Return of Saloons.

"Wm. C. Thornton, president of the Denver Trades and Labor Assembly, also states that he voted against prohibition. 'I venture to assert,' says Mr. Thornton, 'outside of the old saloon interests, you couldn't muster a corporal's guard in the labor movement of Denver today, who would assert that they were in favor of the return of the saloon.'

"The strongest endorsement of the prohibition law in Colorado comes from Otto F. Thum, the first president of the Colorado Federation of Labor and nationally known in trade union circles.

"Mr. Thum says that prohibition has strengthened organized labor in that

(Continued on Page Fifteen)

WHY COMPENSATE THE LIQUOR DEALERS?

PROF. JOHN A. NICHOLLS

The wonderful growth of public sentiment against the beverage liquor traffic, and the great uprising in favor of state and national prohibition has at last thoroughly aroused the men interested in the liquor business. For many years they have been constantly declaring that "Prohibition does not prohibit," while endeavoring by every available means at their command to make that assertion true. They have flooded the country with their literature, and in a hundred different ways tried to break down the righteous laws which have been enacted for the protection and safety of the people. They have shown to the world their utter lack of regard for the public welfare, and proven, beyond the possibility of a doubt, the demoralizing and debasing influence of the traffic. Law has been disregarded, and the rights of the people trodden under foot. But now that the aroused consciences of men and women are moving them to action against this destructive enemy of mankind, and the sweep of prohibition — coming as the result of long years of agitation and education — points to a nation-wide freedom from the liquor scourge, the liquor men, dismayed by the prospects before them, are hastening to "cast an anchor to windward" and are everywhere clamoring for compensation. With agonizing appeals they now declare that they are being robbed of their rights, that their property is being confiscated, and the rules of justice and equity set aside, in order to promote the advance of prohibition. For many years defiant of all law, disregarding every regulation made by society to protect itself against the evils resulting from the traffic, the brewers, distillers and liquor dealers, as one voice, now appeal for what they call "justice." The handwriting upon the wall is at last clearly understood by them.

JOHN BARLEYCORN AT THE JUMPING OFF PLACE IN THE SOUTH!

—Denver (Colo.) Post

With the passage on April 10 of a measure submitting prohibition to a vote of the people of Florida in 1918, by a legislature which was elected on a prohibition platform, it is a foregone conclusion that Florida will join the group of eight white states to the north of it.

A leading liquor journal, Mida's Criterion, predicts: "If we are going to stay in business, it will be by the force of our united efforts, and in no other way. The public shows no change in heart. There is no indication that the prohibition forces are weakening any. They are growing stronger, and the recent elections must be our battle cry. It is now up to us, and up to nobody else. Unless we carry our message all over this great land, there will be one unbroken stretch of hot sand from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and from the Canadian border to the Rio Grande!" Hence, the "compensation" cry.

Let us examine this demand in the light of reason and the facts, and then give to the traffic the justice which of right belongs to it. The first statement made by the interested brewers and distillers is, that we are trying to confiscate private property for public benefit. This is a complete misrepresentation. The passage of a prohibition law does not take from brewer, distiller or saloonkeeper any of the property used in the business. The land still remains, the buildings and machinery are still there. But, organized society, having discovered that the business of making and selling intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes is, as decided by the Supreme Court, a menace to public health and morals, and detrimental to the public welfare, simply exercises its undoubted right in declaring that this property shall no longer be employed for the manufacture of such drinks. As "there is no inherent right in a citizen to sell intoxicating liquors" there can be no inherent right to manufacture the same. The power exercised is exactly the same as is used in the suppression of a slaughter house when it becomes a public nuisance, dangerous to the health of the community. The court, having been shown that the business is dangerous to the health of the community, orders it to cease. No compensation is granted, the buildings are not taken away from the owner, and may be used for any proper purpose. The rights of the community take precedence of any claim of a private owner. The slaughter house might have been erected at a time when the population in its vicinity was sparse, and its presence was not objectionable. But, as people took up their residence in its vicinity, the conditions were changed, and these new settlers had a right to demand that the air should no longer be contaminated by the odors of the slaughter house. The general principle, everywhere recognized by the courts, is that no man can use his property in such a way as to impair the general welfare, the protection of which is one of the first duties of government. Why should a brewer or a distiller be exempt from this just rule? The liquor business has been shown to be against the public welfare. It has been granted special privileges, which it has everywhere abused. It has impaired the progress of the nation, injured its efficiency, and retarded its welfare. We have been patient and long suffering with it, but at last, exercising our undoubted right to protect ourselves from its baneful presence, we demand that its poisonous odors shall no longer desolate the land. The owners can still do as they choose with their buildings, but when converted into packing houses, ice houses, and other proper plants, their use will promote the general welfare, and increase the nation's prosperity.

But, the liquor interests claim that the business has been tolerated so long that it has acquired certain vested interests, and on that account compensation is due them. This simply shows the patience with which society has tolerated a wrong; it establishes no right to compensation.

In the next place the brewers and distillers do not come into court with clean hands. They have been engaged for long years in a systematic effort to break down the law. They have aided and encouraged illicit dealers in both wet and dry states. They have supplied them with their products, defended them in the courts, and upheld them in their law breaking. Judged by all the correct standards of equity, if they ever had righteous claim they have forfeited it because of their lawless efforts.

As to the wholesale and retail liquor dealers, they are in an even worse plight. In the case of these dealers, the special permits, called licenses, are only granted for a limited term, generally one year. They have been allowed a monopoly of a very profitable business. In the state of Massachusetts the citizens have the power to refuse to renew the contract every year. Every state prohibition law passed simply provides that on and after such a date these special privileges shall cease. This robs the dealers of no right, deprives them of no property. It says, in effect, the liquor traffic is dangerous to the general welfare, and society, therefore, in order to carry out the true purposes of government, orders that this traffic shall cease.

As a matter of fact, if the laws had been honestly and efficiently enforced, nearly all saloonkeepers would have been deprived of their licenses long ago. Nearly every saloonkeeper in the land has violated hundreds of times the regulations

(Continued on Page Fourteen)

The Union Signal

Official Organ of the
NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION
Published Weekly by the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union
Evanston, Illinois

EDITOR-IN-CHIEF, Miss Anna A. Gordon
MANAGING EDITOR, Miss Julia F. Deane

Address all letters and manuscripts intended for the editors to The Editorial Department, The Union Signal, Evanston, Ill. Unavailable manuscripts will be returned only when sufficient postage accompanies the request.

SUBSCRIPTIONS

SUBSCRIPTIONS may commence with any issue. No receipt will be sent for remittances of $1 or under.
THE DATE on the wrapper indicates when your subscription expires.
REMITTANCES should be made by draft on New York or Chicago, or by Post-office Order. Cash is sent at your own risk unless registered.
CHANGE OF ADDRESS. Give both your old and your new address when you desire a change.

PRICE, $1.00 PER YEAR IN ADVANCE
Foreign Postage, 52 Cents Additional
CAMPAIGN EDITION (MONTHLY) 35c A YEAR

Address all business communications to
THE UNION SIGNAL
EVANSTON, ILLINOIS

Entered at Evanston, Ill., postoffice as second-class matter.

463

Evanston Illinois, April 19, 1917

National W. C. T. U. Convention, Washington, D. C., December 2–7, 1917

CHANGE OF PLANS

With extreme reluctance the National W. C. T. U. officers have been obliged to greatly modify the plans of the Transcontinental Campaigners. A number of state presidents report that under present conditions of war excitement it will be impossible to carry out the big plans suggested for conferences with the two teams of National speakers. It is deeply to be regretted that the trip from Chicago to San Francisco must be indefinitely postponed. The National speakers who were to accompany the General Officers on these trips will, we hope, aid our great cause in the campaign states.

IMPORTANT INFORMATION ON PAGE TEN

The plan for work during the war, outlined by the General Officers of the National W. C. T. U., on page 10, is sufficiently broad in its scope to afford every member of our organization an opportunity for service. Read it carefully, present it for consideration at your local union meeting; study conditions in your own community with a view to adapting the plan to meet the needs of your city, county or state. The registration plan will be given in detail in the next issue. Witness by your earnestness and enthusiasm the truth of the slogan, "Every white ribboner a prohibition patriot."

The Temperance Educational Quarterly should be ordered directly from the headquarters of the Bureau of Scientific Temperance Investigation, 561 Thirty-third St., Milwaukee, Wisconsin, rather than from National Headquarters. The price of the Quarterly is 50 cents a year.

WHY A PROHIBITION WAR MEASURE?

The newspapers report that the liquor interests are endeavoring to forestall a movement for national prohibition as a war measure by voluntarily offering to decrease the amount of grain used in the manufacture of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes, and to utilize their plants to a greater extent than heretofore for the manufacture of alcohol for munitions.

Serious as is the question of food shortage and the necessity for saving our food products there are other equally convincing reasons for demanding the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages for the period of the war.

While every one of the many general arguments in favor of prohibition can well be urged at this time, there are four that are especially applicable to the present situation.

The economic argument has been so ably dealt with by prominent reform leaders, as given on page five of this issue, that no further word on that phase of the question need be said.

Of equal importance in this national emergency is the necessity for the conservation of the health and efficiency of every citizen, whether enlisted for duty in the Army or Navy, or as a civilian. In a peculiar sense, America today needs men and women who are one hundred per cent efficient and one hundred per cent healthy to meet the trying demands of the hour. The heads of the big city health boards agree in declaring that alcohol is always and ever a health handicap. We can ill afford at this time of national peril to let strong drink jeopardize the well-being of our potential defenders. Big business says it cannot conduct its commercial enterprises satisfactorily and successfully with employes who use alcohol, or in neighborhoods infested with saloons. How then can Uncle Sam expect to carry on a great defensive war with soldiers who are subjected to the temptation to drink alcoholic beverages.

But not less urgent is the social reason. Not even the dealers in liquor themselves would dare to argue against the advisability of closing the saloons in times of great disturbance or disaster, riots, strikes, earthquakes, fires or other calamities. Within the past few years the governments of Sweden and of Norway put into effect nation-wide prohibition during great industrial strikes. It is conceded that any occasion that gives rise to violent outbursts and vehement dissensions, calls for the shutting off from the populace of all supplies of poisonous drinks that inflame the passions. Today we are being besought to control ourselves, to refrain from heated discussions on any subject related to the war, lest by ill-timed, careless, hasty words, the hot fires of hate be set burning and fanned into a conflagration which may mean disaster. This danger will be tremendously minimized if the places for the sale of those drinks that loosen a man's tongue and unleash a man's passions are closed by the government.

Above all else, do we not owe it to our defenders, especially to the young recruits who are enlisting in large numbers, to give them while recruiting, training and mobilizing, an environment with a minimum of danger to temptation, and a maximum of health and safety? Has our government any right to ask parents to give their sons in defense of the United States unless it can assure them of as decent surroundings during training as those which afford protection to them at home? It is not to be wondered at that parents are deeply concerned over this phase of the problem. Among the various letters received the following voices the fears of many mothers:

"I have just returned from a mass meeting intended to arouse the spirit of patriotism in our boys and their parents, looking to the enlistment of a sufficient number to satisfy the demand from this place. Our boys will be sent, most of them, to a city where vice is legalized and where the political machine has been able to effect a compromise on every temperance measure that has come before our legislature for years; where it owns and operates places known as 'cribs,' in which nude women are kept in public view to tempt the men as they pass by. I would rather my boys were sent to the bottom of the ocean, even unwarned, than that they should go into military training and come out degraded and debauched."

This is a matter in which every white ribboner is vitally interested. While we are informed that a bill is being drafted by two of our Congressmen with a view to enacting a measure to create dry zones around all military posts, reservations, and training camps, public sentiment must be aroused immediately to secure the speedy passage of this provision, and if at all possible the making of this zone sufficiently extensive to include virtually the whole of the United States. Immediate action is demanded. Every day's delay means danger to someone's boy, perhaps yours.

THE ACID TEST OF PATRIOTISM

The alien who habitually defies the law is not eligible to citizenship in the United States of America. This, as we interpret it, is the substance of a decision just handed down by Judge Kenesaw M. Landis of the United States District Court. It will prevent two hundred and fifty saloonkeepers of Chicago who have violated the Sunday closing law from securing their citizenship papers. It will oblige these same two hundred and fifty saloonkeepers to radically reconstruct their ideas of "personal liberty" in this "land of the free," gained, no doubt, from political liquor bosses, who have given them to understand that American citizenship means taking advantage of all the privileges of the republic but obeying only such laws as suit their convenience and pleasure.

But how can we expect different or better results when for years we have permitted the liquor interests virtually to control the Americanizing of aliens. We have watched with a sort of detached interest the organizing of foreigners by the liquor bosses into leagues of "personal liberty," where they are taught flagrant disrespect for any law that interferes with their business, and apparently we have failed to recognize in these methods an attack on the fundamental principles of patriotism. In this time of crisis we awake to the alarming realization that patriotism and "personal liberty" are diametrically opposed to one another; that true patriotism means holding the pleasure and privileges of the individual subservient to the welfare of the nation, and that it can have nothing in common with an institution that serves only its own selfish interests. Looking at the question from any and every point of view, the reasonable mind must arrive at this conclusion—the welfare of the nation whether in times of peace or times of war is menaced by the existence of a traffic that marches under that banner of lawlessness, "Personal Liberty."

General Federation of Women's Clubs Asks for Prohibition as War Measure

An appeal to the government for "national prohibition as a means of eliminating material and moral waste" has been made by the General Federation of Women's Clubs meeting in New Orleans, Louisiana.

"The vast quantities of grain now used in the manufacture of liquor may be used to feed our armies," the resolution said. "The women of America are loyal, but they ask for this fortification against a colossal evil."

How About a "Diet of Beer?"

Under the title, "Cheaper Food or Else Beer," the Ohio State Journal recently published an article by Adolph Frenckel in which that gentleman urged that "Prohibitionists are inconsistent when they urge the banishment of beer and take no steps to reduce the cost of potatoes, bread," etc.

Prof. G. O. Higley of Ohio Wesleyan University immediately challenged the statement of Mr. Frenckel in an article also addressed to the Ohio State Journal, in which he presented the following analysis of the beer-food claim made by the brewers:

"Mr. Frenckel should know that there is an enormous waste of good food in the brewing process because:

"(a) Much insoluble matter, largely protein, remains as draff, or brewer's refuse, and is fed to animals,

"(b) Of the sugar and other solid matter present in the wort, and subjected to fermentation, two pounds are destroyed for food purposes by being converted into alcohol or into carbon dioxide gas, for every pound that remains as solid matter in the beer. The prohibitionist is, therefore, to be commended in opposing such a wicked waste of food as occurs during brewing.

"The limitations placed upon the manufacture of beer in the warring countries of Europe are largely for the reasons just mentioned, and show that the governments of those countries understand this matter and are trying to save their grain for food.

"So far as other efforts to lower the high cost of living are concerned, the prohibitionist is probably doing as much as the wet and with as little effect.

"2. Mr. Frenckel says that 'Beer is nourishing liquid food made out of wholesome tissue building grain,' etc.

"Now, it is quite true that barley is a tissue building grain. However, in the malting and fermentation processes little sugar and less protein remains in the beer. In a half pint of average beer there is only about two-fifths of an ounce of solid matter, mainly sugar, but containing about one-thirtieth of an ounce of albuminoid matter which is not true protein and does not build tissue. Thus instead of a man being able to exist indefinitely on a nickel's worth of beer per day, as Mr. Frenckel recklessly states, the facts are as follows:

"The two-fifth ounces of sugar, dextrin and albuminoids in a glass of beer will furnish about 50 calories of the 2,500 calories needed daily by a man engaged in light work.

"Thus, Mr. Frenckel's man who is to 'exist' indefinitely on one nickel glass of beer per day would require not one but fifty glasses per day, costing $2.50; and even if the man could drink three gallons of water per day and could stand the narcotic effect of the pint of alcohol mixed with it, and the kidney-destroying action of the resins from the hops, he would get, after all, practically no tissue building food whatever.

"3. Even at the present high prices, a nickel will purchase about sixteen ounces of flour, or fourteen ounces of the much poorer food, potatoes. This weight of flour would produce 1,600 calories of energy and the nickel's worth of potatoes, 241 calories, as contrasted with the fifty calories from the solids contained in a nickel glass of beer.

"If Mr. Frenckel will carefully consider this question he will see that he gave mighty poor advice when he suggested a diet of beer as a means of escaping high food prices."

Peruvian Government Offers Award of $500 for Temperance Text Book

The National Congress of Peru at its last session offered a prize of $500 for the best text book from which to teach temperance in the public schools of the republic, says the New York Tribune.

Every work submitted must be original and especially written for this contest. The author is allowed complete liberty with regard to the size of the book, the manner in which the subject is to be treated, etc., except that the subject matter must be suitable for use in the primary grades. Manuscripts, which must be in Spanish, will be received up to May 31, 1917.

The jury that will award the prize is to be composed of the Director General of Public Instruction, the Director of the Normal School for Men, the president of the National Temperance Society, a member of the temperance society, elected by the society, and one teacher, selected from the faculties of the public schools of Lima. The jury will submit its decision to the government not later than June 30, 1917.

This official recognition of the harm of intemperance, which is becoming a serious problem, especially in the mining regions, in both Peru and Bolivia, is most gratifying. The government is right in thinking that a most successful way to annihilate this evil is to incorporate in the public school curriculum scientific temperance teaching.

UNION SIGNAL QUIZ

Do You Know the Answers to These Questions? They May Be Found in THE UNION SIGNAL of April 12

Ten questions, the answers to which will be found in the preceding number of THE UNION SIGNAL, will appear each week. The use of these questions as a part of local union programs is suggested.

1. Why does total abstinence appeal to men as a sensible course of action? Give Dean Farrar's reasons.

2. What is the attitude toward alcohol in athletic circles according to the statement of an athletic director of the University of Chicago?

3. Why is national legislation needed to deal with the liquor evil?

4. How does the personal license of the parent affect the personal liberty of the offspring?

5. Is the Gothenburg system of regulating the liquor traffic a success in Norway and Sweden?

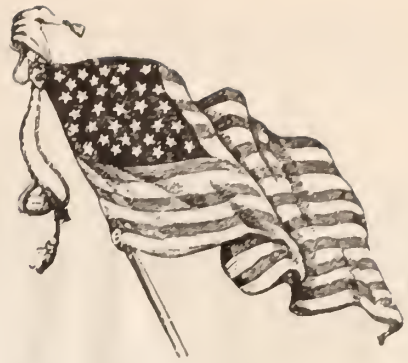
6. What two prominent state capitals voted dry at the April elections?

7. Can you name the prominent city of Minnesota that, after a year's trial of prohibition, voted for its retention by a greatly increased majority?

8. Has prohibition been instrumental in any way in bringing about the Russian revolution?

9. What action has been taken looking toward the adoption of national prohibition as a war measure?

10. In what lines of service in the present war is the W. C. T. U. planning to assist?



O Beautiful for Patriot's Dream

O beautiful for spacious skies,
For amber waves of grain,
For purple mountain majesties
Above the fruited plain!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

O beautiful for pilgrim feet,
Whose stern, impassioned stress
A thoroughfare for freedom beat
Across the wilderness!
America! America!
God mend thine ev'ry flaw,
Confirm thy soul in self-control,
Thy liberty in law.

O beautiful for glorious tale
Of liberating strife,
When valiantly, for man's avail,
Men lavished precious life!
America! America!
May God thy gold refine
Till all success be nobleness,
And ev'ry gain divine!

O beautiful for patriot's dream
That sees beyond the years
Thine alabaster cities gleam
Undimmed by human tears!
America! America!
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown thy good with brotherhood
From sea to shining sea!

—Katharine Lee Bates.

Cultivation of Vacant Lots

LELLA M. SEWALL, National W. C. T. U. Superintendent of Flower Mission and Relief Work

At this time, when the subject of food has become a public question, a vital question, the seriousness of which cannot properly be estimated today, the department of Flower Mission and Relief Work has a great opportunity to enlarge its activities in the cultivation of vacant lots. In many of the states much work could and should be done to arrange for planting vegetables. This work can be accomplished entirely under the auspices of this department of the W. C. T. U. in some places, elsewhere, in co-operation with other societies. Interest the children to plant the gardens—this is one way, an important way, to arouse their patriotism!

Cultivation of vacant lots has always been a satisfactory line of work in this department, and excellent things have been accomplished; never before, however, has there been a time when this work was imperative! Let this department work as it has never worked to see that these waste places are cultivated, planted with vegetables, to help and help materially the effort to avert a possible food famine. Comrades of this department, W. C. T. U. comrades everywhere, do what you can, do all you can, and may God abundantly bless your efforts.

1661 Beacon St., Brookline, Mass.

Patriotism's Call to the Woman's Christian Temperance Union

Members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union throughout the country are responding loyally to the call for Christian patriotism. Each one is eagerly asking, "What can I do to help?" The most pacific among us must feel this impulse to devoted service. Beseeching letters have poured into National Headquarters with the query, "What is the W. C. T. U. going to do in this crisis?"

The first effort of our National organization, comprising nearly half a million women, will be to use its powerful influence and superb machinery, as one of the allied temperance forces of the country, to secure from the extraordinary session of the Sixty-fifth Congress the enactment of nation-wide prohibition as a war measure. Just what form this legislation will take will be determined later. The boys of the Army and Navy must be safeguarded from evil influences. Saloons and dens of vice near training camps and mobilization centers must be done away with. The material resources of our nation must also be carefully conserved.

RELIEF WORK TO BE STANDARDIZED BY RED CROSS RULES

For many years the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union has had a department of Work Among Soldiers and Sailors through which much effective service for total abstinence and relief has been accomplished. The work for soldiers, sailors and marines and for general relief is now to be standardized by Red Cross rules. Mrs. Ella Hoover Thacher of Washington, D. C., National superintendent, through her state associates already has her special plan of work well in hand. This includes renting electric fans and furnishing fruit and delicacies for army base hospitals, social welfare work at army training camps and mobilization centers, serving coffee and doughnuts, or cake and lemonade, to soldiers and sailors as they entrain, and giving to each a copy of the soldiers' Temperance Songster and a total abstinence pledge card.

Another of the great departments of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Flower Mission and Relief Work, Miss Lella M. Sewall of Boston, National superintendent, is ready to extend its service in this hour of the nation's need. When, if at all, the demand comes for general war relief work in the United States, detailed plans will be issued by Miss Sewall. The work for soldiers, sailors and marines, and for general relief during the period of the war will be reported from the National W. C. T. U. unit to the American Red Cross through Mrs. Thacher and Miss Sewall, National superintendents.

Already the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union is pledged to promote the plans of the Bureau of Immigration for Americanizing immigrant women through the organization of classes for teaching Americanism and national loyalty, in co-operation with the Department of Labor, the Bureaus of Immigration and Naturalization and the Americanization Committee of the National Chamber of Commerce. At this time, when thousands of women are becoming American citizens and still other thousands from the allied countries must be feeling a new thrill of sympathy for the United States, there is such an opportunity for Americanization work among these women as may never again exist. Mrs. Ella B. Black, head of another great department of the National W. C. T. U., Work Among Foreign-Speaking People, is, through the state superintendents of this department, promoting these plans. Mrs. Thacher, Miss Sewall and Mrs. Black are all in close touch with the National General Officers in the important program of effort under their respective departments.

WOMAN'S BUREAU UNDER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

The National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, in common with the National Suffrage Association, the General Federation of Women's Clubs and the Congress of Mothers, is one of fifteen of the twenty-seven national organizations of women federated in the National Council of Women, now on record as ready to co-operate with the Federal Department of Labor in securing work for unemployed women and girls. This co-operation was agreed upon by the National W. C. T. U. at its convention held in Indianapolis, Indiana, last November. When the need for national emergency measures developed a telegram was sent by Secretary Wilson of the United States Department of Labor to the presidents of the most important national organizations of women, asking their co-operation in a movement to enlist for service the forces of their great organizations. Under the Federal government it was proposed to organize a Woman's Bureau to deal with the work and welfare of women. In accordance with this plan the Department of Labor is to be represented on an executive board by Commissioner Caminetti; the National Woman's Council, by Mrs. Philip North Moore, president, and fifteen organizations federated in the Council, including the National W. C. T. U., by their respective presidents. Other organizations of women will be independently represented on this Board. At a meeting of the women's organizations of the National Council of Women held in Washington, D. C., April 3, Mrs. Moore, presiding, Miss Gordon represented the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union. At this meeting it was voted to establish immediately in Washington a national clearing house for women's service, each organization to list its available resources and the definite work it is prepared to do.

CENSUS TO ENLIST WOMEN IN SERVICE CLASSES

It was also voted to register with the government the qualifications of every woman available for national service. The National General Officers feel that each W. C. T. U. member will rally loyally to this plan. Registration cards will be forwarded to the state presidents, who will direct their circulation in each state and be held responsible for a complete canvass covering every city, town and district in the territory under their jurisdiction.

When properly filled out these cards are to be returned to the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union, Evanston, Illinois. As soon as the cards of all organizations are assembled a national census of woman's labor and voluntary war service will have been accomplished.

"All constructive peace makers," declares the World's Peace Foundation, "know that the basis of peace is an organization of free nations." The W. C. T. U. members who will most promptly and enthusiastically respond to the organization's official plans for emergency service will be those who for many years have ardently advocated international peace and arbitration. They believe it is now our sacred duty in loyalty to suffering humanity to unite with our entire nation in defending the high principles of our Christian civilization, and thus to answer patriotism's call.

ANNA A. GORDON,
President.
ELLA A. BOOLE,
Vice-President-at-Large.
FRANCES P. PARKS,
Corresponding Secretary.
ELIZABETH P. ANDERSON,
Recording Secretary.
SARA H. HOGE,
Asst. Recording Secretary.
MARGARET C. MUNNS,
Treasurer.

General Officers of the National Woman's Christian Temperance Union.

NATIONAL TEMPERANCE LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL MEETS

A legislative conference at which many National temperance organizations were represented was held at Hotel Raleigh, Washington, D. C., Tuesday, April 17, at 9:30 a. m. The National W. C. T. U. was represented by its president, Miss Anna A. Gordon; vice-president-at-large, Mrs. Ella A. Boole; treasurer, Mrs. Margaret C. Munns; National Legislative superintendent, Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, and the president of the West Virginia W. C. T. U., Mrs. Lenna Lowe Yost.

THE GREAT SUNDAY SCHOOL PETITION FOR NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION

The headquarters of the National W. C. T. U. Sunday School department showing Mrs. Stella B. Irvine, National superintendent of this department, and Mr. Irvine, preparing the Sunday School petition for presentation to Congress.

SUNDAY SCHOOL PETITION

"To the Members of Congress of the United States of America, Washington, District of Columbia:

"We the undersigned young people, members of the Sunday Schools of the various states, desire to say that we are trying to fit ourselves for the duties of citizenship. In order to become good and useful citizens it is necessary that we should have healthy bodies, clean minds and clean characters.

"With this end in view, we are doing our part by diligent study in day school and Sunday School, by useful work on farm, in mills, mines, factories and stores. It is our earnest desire to prepare ourselves for faithful and efficient service when we shall be called upon, as men and women, to assume the burdens now being borne by our elders.

"Much has already been done to make this possible for us. Schools have been furnished for all, homes for those who are needy and hospitals for the sick. Provision has been made for the sanitation of our cities, and our homes. Quarantine regulations have been established to prevent the spread of disease, not only among us but even among cattle and sheep. Liberal appropriations have been made for the protection of game, the preservation of the forests, fruit trees and grain crops against the ravages of moth and blight. We are thankful for all that has been done to make our beloved country a good place in which to live.

"But, Honored Sirs, there is prevailing in our Nation a deadly disease, carrying thousands to untimely graves; a disease that is filling our homes with sorrow and misery, our almshouses, hospitals and insane asylums with impoverished, sick and demented persons. This disease is alcoholism, and against its ravages we have no adequate protection. The poison which produces it is sold in practically unlimited quantities. The venders are protected by law in a traffic which is the source of a great majority of sickness, poverty and crime, and a barrier in our path to usefulness.

"We appeal to you, Fathers and Brothers, to eradicate the cause of this disease; to make it unlawful for any one to sell, or traffic in any manner, in alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes. We appeal to you to give us the opportunity to grow up in an atmosphere free from this pestilence.

"As the future citizens of this United States, we pray for protection from this dreadful contagion and we earnestly plead for

"NATIONAL CONSTITUTIONAL PROHIBITION"

Because of circumstances the National W. C. T. U. superintendent of the Sunday School department has deemed it wise to send on to Washington the major part of the great Sunday school petition or that part of it which is mounted. Names are coming into the headquarters of the department and these are being mounted and will be sent on from time to time. Meanwhile let the good work go on and let the petition become as large as possible. It now numbers over 100,000 veritable signatures of boys and girls of the Sunday schools in the United States.

The departure of the petition was celebrated in the home of the National superintendent, Mrs. Stella B. Irvine of Riverside, Cal., by a large reception at which the special guests were the members of the W. C. T. U. and the pastors and wives of all the churches. The general public was also invited and interested people thronged the spacious parlors during the afternoon.

In the center of the long living room the rolls of petitions were piled high in pyramid fashion, reaching nearly to the ceiling. It was a beautiful sight. The petitions were rolled on tube centers and encased in outer pasteboard tubes on which were printed in large type the words, "Sunday School Petition for National Constitutional Prohibition," and the full text of the petition underneath the flag in colors. This was tied with white ribbon, making an attractive and striking appearance. The pyramid rested upon "Old Glory" and was capped with tiny silk flags.

There was an impressive program of dedication. Mrs. Irvine gave the address, a quartet of voices sang "Prohibition Victory" and the petition was sent on its way with most appropriate remarks and a prayer by Dr. B. S. Haywood, pastor of the First Methodist church.

The petition went by express to Washington, D. C., April 2, and will be placed in charge of Mrs. Margaret Dye Ellis, National superintendent of Legislation, at National W. C. T. U. Headquarters.

At the opportune time it will be used as seems best and the department has the pledge of Prohibition Congressman Randall to speak in behalf of the youth whose names are on the petition and the thousands of others who would have signed it had opportunity been afforded them.

HER CHILDREN'S RIGHTS

JENNIE N. STANDIFER

"When did you return home?" I asked a handsome, black-eyed woman as we sat on a rustic bench waiting for a car running from the suburbs to the city.

"Last week. I am back in Mississippi to stay."

"How did you like the West?"

"It is fine in many respects. Women vote in the state in which we sojourned, and that, as you know, is a long stride in the march of progress. Only one thing brought me back to the South. We lived in a wet state and it did not agree with Jim. As he is my 'better half'—so called—I thought it my duty to consider his good."

"Of course that was right, but I was under the impression that you were living in a dry, healthful climate."

"It was another kind of 'wet' that was harmful to Jim. You remember he drank before we married, but he vowed he would never touch another drop of liquor if I would only take his name—and being in love, I believed him. He didn't have many temptations so long as we lived here, and he kept as sober as a judge. When he had a splendid salary offered him for work in the West I did not think that living in a wet state would cause him to backslide. There were two babies to be provided for, and Jim seemed to be thoroughly cured of the drink habit.

"My husband's work, after we moved, often kept him out late at night. Our house was securely protected and I was not afraid when left with only the children. One night Jim did not return until after the clock struck one. When he came in I smelled whisky on his breath and saw at once that he was drunk. I did not waste time lecturing him, but took the babies into the guest room and locked them and myself in. Next morning I told Jim plainly but firmly, that I could not and would not have a drunken man in my house. As a mother, I had the right to protect my children and I would not take the risk of having them maimed for life or killed by an inebriate. He declared they were perfectly safe and solemnly promised to keep sober.

"It wasn't a week until Jim came staggering up the steps, drunk again. I had bolted the door and his latch-key was of no use. I refused to let him in until almost daylight, when a sudden drop in the temperature caused me to fear he would take cold and have pneumonia. He was sober enough when I opened the door but sulky. Again I took the children to the guest room and locked the door.

"Next morning I laid down the law of my house with renewed emphasis. No drunken man should ever enter my door, no matter who he was or what was the state of the weather. Jim was deeply penitent and made his usual promises with customary seriousness.

"A few nights later, he came reeling home, drunk as a lord, and pounded loudly on the door for admittance. I paid no attention to his knocking, although the neighbors were aroused and Jim grew furiously angry. By two o'clock he was sober enough to be penitent and humble. He begged to come in but I advised him to go to a hotel as I intended to keep my vow. At last he went away. He did not return until late the next afternoon. I had kept the doors locked all day, and responded to his knock through the closed door. I repeated my assertion that I was going to protect my children from a drunken man, and further declared that I was going to return to Mississippi. I laughed incredulously at his oft repeated promises to never touch another drop of liquor.

"For one solid week I kept the house securely locked, but while the children took their afternoon naps I would sit on the porch dressed in my most becoming gown. One day as I sat looking over some statistics of feeble-minded children, Jim came for his daily call. After greeting him with a cheerful 'Good-evening,' I read aloud an article which stated that ninety per cent of the idiots and weak-minded children sent to asylums were the offspring of drinking men. Jim looked very grave, but only observed that our children were not idiots, nor afflicted with weak minds.

"Another afternoon I read to him some newspaper accounts of murders committed by men while under the influence of liquor. One drunken brute had killed his wife, while another murdered his own mother.

"Upon another occasion I showed him pictures of maimed and deformed children, who would go through life hampered because of the abuse of drunken parents. Our baby had been asleep. She awoke and called 'Daddy.' He started to go to her but the door was locked. He begged for the key. I firmly refused to let him enter the house.

"'You may come tomorrow afternoon,' I said smilingly, 'and tell the children good-bye. I leave for Mississippi on the five-thirty train.'

"'Don't you need money?' he asked, taking a roll of bills from his pocket.

"'No, thank you, I have saved enough from my allowance for my expenses,' I answered pleasantly.

"'When will you come back?' he asked anxiously.

"'Never, unless this state goes bone-dry, and becomes a safe home for the children. I am going to live in Mississippi—a prohibition state—and take boarders. None but teetotalers can board with me, no matter what they offer to pay. Good evening, Jim.'

"He stared a moment and then as I started toward the door cried: 'Stop a minute. If you will let me, I will go with you. I may not get so large a salary but we can live on much less. Happiness counts for more than money.'

"'Does it count for more than the delights of drinking?' I asked.

"'Yes. A happy home is more than all else combined. I will sign a pledge of total abstinence for life and God helping me—keep it. I will go to the driest community to be found in a dry state, and you and the babies shall have your rights.'

"'Come in and help pack, Jim,' I invited.

"So here we are for a short visit before going to live in H———, where Jim will have only day work and be with a firm that will not employ any but teetotalers. It takes grit and grace and tact—along with the patience of Job and persistence of Satan—for a woman to stand pat for her children's rights and bring a man to his senses but a good man is worth the struggle. Here comes my car. Come to see me and let me tell you what equal suffrage has done for the West, and we will plan to bring a like blessing to Mississippi."

FEELING THE PULSE OF THE LIQUOR INTERESTS

HUMOR IN ANTI-PROHIBITION MANUAL

"One of the failings which the liquorites attribute to the prohibitionists is lack of humor," remarks the Chicago Evening Post. "But the supreme burst of unconscious humor by the wets is always found in that comic stand-by known as 'The Anti-Prohibition Manual.' This year it excels itself. Its most dramatic story is embodied in the reprint of a letter to a wine company from an Oregon physician, in which the doctor tells how a little boy died because the state dry law made it impossible to get brandy in time to administer the stimulant that would have warded off death. This, of course, is sad and pathetic, and is played up feelingly with a picture of an anxious physician sitting by a child's cot—though the child's name is not given. But the tragedy of the incident is distinctly lessened when the doc adds these feeling words about the fate of the brandy which the law held out on him at the express office: 'It is still in the express office awaiting the arrival of the 26th, and then I don't know whether I'll take it or not, as the scorching weather demands beer.'

"This is in 'The Anti-Prohibition Manual,' page 48. We know you won't believe it, but it is. Honest!"

SOMETHING CHEERFUL ABOUT BOOZE

Almost the only lively item that we have seen on the subject of "Booze" in recent months is from the New York Evening Sun:

"Diet—Avoid eating with your drinks as food overloads the stomach, taking up room that the National Liquor Dealers' Association has planned to fill with something else. You may fool the insurance doctor as to how many drinks you take per day but it is harder to keep the truth from the undertaker."

Some critics may object that these observations are not so awfully humorous after all but just consider the subject.—Collier's Weekly.

—

You perhaps have noticed some sign of a division between distillers and brewers, the beer-makers threatening to pull away from the whisky-makers on the ground that their product is harmless where the others' isn't, that one drink is associated with peace and sweet music while the other provokes riot and discord. Let the distillers and brewers go to it with bottle and spigot, cork puller and bung starter. No one cares which of them loses, or even if both of them do. —Toledo (O.) Blade.

NATIONAL PROHIBITION COMMISSION CONFERS ON WORDING OF PROPOSED AMENDMENT

(Continued from Page Three)

for their country. This nation cannot be prepared for present and future crises unless it is a sober nation. It will not be a sober nation until it is a saloonless and liquorless nation. The door of national opportunity to accomplish this is wide open. It speaks to the people "that they go forward." To this unfinished task of national freedom, let American patriots dedicate and consecrate themselves. By "this sign" and patriotic motive we shall conquer and our country shall be made free from its greatest curse.

WHY GOVERNOR CAPPER WAS LATE

Among the little people of his home city and state Governor Arthur Capper of Kansas is a universal favorite. It is no mere trick of chance that has brought Governor Capper the loyalty of the children. It is because he is always and everywhere their unfailing friend. He is a firm believer in prohibition and one of the reasons for this is because prohibition is good for the children. On many occasions he has said, "I am immensely proud of the fact that Kansas has half a million boys and girls who never saw an open saloon."

The children who read THE SIGNAL will remember that on Governor Capper's fiftieth birthday he had a party to which all the children in Topeka were invited. Every child in the city who accepted the governor's invitation was supplied with ice cream and given free tickets to nine movie theaters where pictures of particular interest to children were shown. On that day street cars carried the governor's guests free of charge. Automobiles were provided for crippled and "shut-in" children, and special firemen and policemen were detailed to see that no harm befell the little ones.

His kindness to the children on numerous occasions has so won their hearts that it is not at all to be wondered at that on a recent occasion some Kansas children "kidnapped" the governor and that he remained their willing prisoner while an audience of grown people waited. It happened in this wise: Governor Capper was to speak at an important meeting in a certain town. The children of one of the rural schools learned that the governor would pass that way en route to the meeting. The teacher and the children put their heads together, and what do you think they did? At about the hour the governor would pass, children began to assemble at the roadside. Eager eyes spied an automobile in the distance. It was the governor! Quickly the children filled the road and formed a barrier, and what could the governor do but stop the machine and surrender to his youthful captors? As he stepped from the automobile the children cheered and cheered again, and the governor who loves the children talked to them as he knew so well how to do, and while he talked to the children grown folks gathered not far away to hear him speak and wondered what had happened that he did not appear. But Governor Capper is a friend of the older people, too, and suddenly he remembered the audience that was waiting for him. Re-entering the automobile, he said goodby and drove away to keep his appointment, and that is the reason Governor Capper was late. The picture shows Governor Capper and some of the children who "held him up."

BABY WEEK CAMPAIGN

MAY 1-6

LEAFLETS

For Distribution

Save the Babies
Give No Alcohol to Children
Alcohol and Nursing Mothers
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

Safeguard the Babies
Booze and Babies (Cartoon)
What Mother and the Children Get (Cartoon)
Physicians Not Using Liquor
How Drunkards Are Sometimes Started
Price per 50, 15 cents; per 100, 25 cents.

POSTER

The Nation
Which Does Not Protect Its Children
Is Doomed

Price 10 cents; three for 25 cents

"Baby's Health Nation's Wealth"

SOUVENIR

A tag with face of beautiful child and the words, "The Home versus Saloon"
Price per 100, 25 cents

DECORATIONS

Prohibition Fans with prohibition map and list of prohibition states on one side and the slogan, "Protect Our American Youth by Prohibiting the Liquor Traffic," on the reverse side. One side of the fan is in blue, the other white, so that by placing these alternately a very pretty effect is obtained and a silent lesson in prohibition given.

Price per dozen, 35 cents; per 100, $2.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

SANITARY DRINKING FOUNTAINS

¶We make a large variety of ornamental Drinking Fountains for man and beast
¶Special Prices to Charitable and Temperance Societies

THE J. L. MOTT IRON WORKS
118-120 Fifth Ave., New York
WRITE FOR CATALOGUE

Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works
Copyright by the J. L. Mott Iron Works

WHY COMPENSATE THE LIQUOR DEALERS?

(Continued from Page Seven)

governing the special privilege granted to him.

The liquor men are fond of citing the fact that in England when a saloon or public-house is closed compensation is given. But for long years the English courts have ruled again and again, that there is no vested interest in a license. But a few years ago, when the last conservative government was in power, they introduced and passed a licensing law to protect the liquor interests, which had supported them at the polls. It provided for the reduction of licenses, but also made provision for compensation. In order to provide money for this purpose, the fees were increased, and the added amount was placed in a separate fund, out of which the compensation is paid. In other words, this fund is simply an insurance fund, paid in by the liquor dealers, and out of which they are compensated in case of the refusal of the magistrates to grant a renewal of the license. It is because of this special law, passed as the result of a political deal, that the saloonkeeper there is paid when his license is cancelled.

In America we have no such law. The compensation cry by the liquor dealers is a last despairing effort to stay the onward march of a righteous cause. Morally, if any such claim could be justly made, it would be made, not by the beneficiaries of a dangerous business, but rather by the innocent sufferers and victims of the traffic. No tongue can tell, no pen can describe the awful ravages of this great world curse. Coming clothed in the garb of innocence, amid all the allurements of social gaiety, it has led tens of thousands to their ruin. In this land today thousands of homes are abodes of sorrow, because of our toleration of this wrong. Little children, the children of ignorance and poverty, have been robbed of the joys of youth in order that breweries might flourish, and saloons prosper. Men who might have been mighty factors in the world's betterment, have been led into paths of destruction by means of the law-protected dram shop. We cannot compensate these victims of liquor's greed, but we can at least, by exercising the power of righteous citizenship, make the streets safe for coming generations, and free the nation from its greatest foe.

PLATES FOR NEWSPAPERS FREE—BONE-DRY

The National W. C. T. U., through its Publicity Bureau, is sending free plate matter into states which are in state-wide prohibition campaigns. The present plan is to supply one newspaper in each county of these states with a half-column plate each week free of charge, the state W. C. T. U., if possible, paying one-half the expense.

THE PRESS IS WITH US

Never since the first prohibition gun was fired and the first dry state put upon the map has the secular press been so willing to give of its chief asset—space—for temperance publicity. Especially is this true of the weekly and smaller daily papers. "If the ideal of national prohibition is to become a reality," says the head of a great newspaper syndicate out of a wide experience, "it will be because of the support received from the people of country communities." The liquorites realize the tremendous as a vote-maker, and are deluging country newspapers with misleading statements concerning prohibition. The anti-liquor forces must counteract the influence of the beer-and-whisky-wet plates with clean dry plates upon which truth is served to the masses. The W. C. T. U. must, like other temperance organizations, enter the open door offered by a friendly press.

VALUE OF THE RURAL PRESS AS AN EDUCATOR

OPPORTUNITY TO HELP

Obviously, the W. C. T. U. in campaign states where the population is small and scattered—and the counties many—is not able to assist the National in financing this free plate proposition. So we are asking friends of prohibition to help.

We thank all who have already responded to this call. Each contribution received is duly and gratefully acknowledged.

If you who read these lines can not contribute money yourself, please send a marked copy of this UNION SIGNAL to some one who is likely to be interested, and who is able to give generously. Soon every state will be

IN A CAMPAIGN FOR NATION-WIDE PROHIBITION

Make all remittances payable to the National W. C. T. U., Evanston, Ill. Indicate the fact that your gift is for the publicity campaign.

NATIONAL WOMAN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION

(State papers please copy.)

IOWA LEGISLATURE PASSES "BONE DRY" MEASURE

Special Correspondence

A "bone dry" measure has passed the senate and house of the Iowa legislature, and has been signed by Governor Harding. It makes the place of delivery of liquor in Iowa the place of sale. Inasmuch as Iowa already has a law making the sale of liquor a crime, this will permit prosecutions in every case where delivery of intoxicating liquors can be proved. This bill, together with the Federal act, will prohibit the sending of liquor advertisements, order blanks, etc., through the mail. It will be unlawful for liquor to be advertised in newspapers or on billboards or in any other way.

All Iowa is looking forward to May 1-3, when the National W. C. T. U. campaign conference leaders, with Miss Anna A. Gordon, National president, will be in Des Moines. Already many requests are being received for entertainment and for reservations for the banquet to be held in the Harris Emery Tea Room on the evening of May 3. The Des Moines Chamber of Commerce has entered heartily into the plans for entertaining our honored guests. A great inspirational uplift and impetus for the constitutional amendment campaign is expected from the presence of these workers.

At a recent meeting held in Des Moines Mr. C. W. Judd, secretary of the Merchants' Bureau of the Chamber of Commerce, had this to say in regard to prohibition in Des Moines:

"At the present time the city of Des Moines is enjoying the benefits of a dry city, and prohibition has proved to be one of the most beneficial moves ever attempted from the retailers' standpoint. People have more money and are paying their bills more promptly than ever before.

"Prohibition has been of inestimable value to the city as a whole and it has almost entirely eliminated the employe who felt that he must live in a wet town. When Des Moines went dry there was a large outgoing of this class of workmen. This is the main cause of Des Moines merchants having a higher class of employes than before."

EVERY LOCAL UNION

is urged to observe

MEMBERSHIP WEEK

May 6-13

Especially helpful in house-to-house calling, for enclosure in letters, or in social visiting, are the following leaflets:

The Relation of the W. C. T. U. to Other Organizations

Achievements of the National W.C.T.U.

Price, per fifty, 60 cents; per hundred, $1.00.

The Woman's Christian Temperance Union a World Power and Why.

Price, per fifty, 50 cents; per hundred, 90 cents.

The What and Why of the W. C. T. U.
Hand Picking.
Why I Am a White Ribboner.
The Advantages of Organization.
Is It Right?
The Church and the W. C. T. U.
Busy Women and the W. C. T. U.

Price, per hundred, 35 cents; per fifty, 20 cents.

A special souvenir card containing quotation from Miss Gordon, vignette and facsimile signature, has been prepared for membership week.

Price, per fifty, 20 cents; per hundred, 35 cents.

Sample of each leaflet and card will be forwarded postpaid for 10c.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE,
Evanston, Illinois.

PROHIBITION THE FRIEND OF THE WORKINGMAN

(Continued from Page Six)

state, and it is in better condition today than ever before.

"'Brewers and maltsters,' writes Mr. Thum, 'have suffered loss in their trade, but the other departments of the brewery workers are still intact—bottlers, drivers, enginemen and stablemen. These are all thriving.

Saloons Prevented Building of Denver Labor Temple.

"'In Denver we have been for many years trying to get the boys to build a labor temple, but were always thrown down by a sinister influence—the saloons. We have 108 unions in Denver and they meet in twenty-eight different buildings. The saloons saw to it that we were not bunched in a labor temple. But now that we are well rid of the saloons we are able to get together, and in a very short time we will have a labor temple to cost about $25,000.'

"Mr. Thum's high standing in the American labor movement stamps the above testimony as absolutely reliable.

Denver Musicians Granted Wage Increase of $5 Per Week.

"The Denver Labor Bulletin, in a recent issue, says that the musicians in that city have secured a wage increase of $5 per week. In view of the wets' claims that musicians in Denver are walking the streets seeking employment, this is significant. Certainly there cannot be a scarcity of labor for musicians when it is possible for them to force an increase of $5 per week.

Machinists' Union Moves Into Larger Quarters.

"The correspondent of the machinists reports that Machinists' Union No. 47, moved next door in the Florence building into larger and more convenient quarters. Evidently the machinists' union is not suffering loss of members on account of prohibition in Colorado.

"Since prohibition went into effect Denver bricklayers have increased their wages from $6 to $7 per day. Not so bad, is it, when it is remembered that in wet Detroit these men received about $5.70 per day.

"Carpenters in Denver have succeeded in securing the first wage agreement with the contractors in that city for a number of years. It provides for an increase of five cents per hour—forty cents a day—the eight hour day, and Saturday half holiday.

New Sugar Mill to Be Built Exclusively by Union Labor

"The Building Trades' correspondent boasts that a new quarter million dollar mill is to be erected at Brighton, in which union labor will be employed in every branch of the work. It is the first sugar plant in Colorado to be erected exclusively by union labor.

"The lathers have increased their wages from $4 to $5 per day—eight hours at that—since Denver went dry.

"In July of this year Mr. E. R. Hoage, organizer for the American Federation of Labor in Colorado, sent in to headquarters his official report of conditions in his state. This is what Mr. Hoage said:

"'Organized labor is in better condition than it has been for years.'

"To repeat: The above facts are taken from the report of local union secretaries who are giving the actual conditions in their organizations. They are not colored to suit wet adherents or dry adherents. They are absolutely reliable, and they prove conclusively that organized labor has not lost, but has actually made tremendous gains in Colorado since prohibition was inaugurated."

How Prohibition Worked in Seattle

"Union labor in Seattle has also forged ahead wonderfully since prohibition went into effect," said Senator Jones. "Labor leaders in the state of Washington, formerly wet, are now strongly dry. Every union has had a steady increase in wages, its membership has grown materially and conditions generally are much better than they were at the time prohibition went into effect.

"This is proven from the reports of local secretaries writing to the Seattle Union Record, official organ of the labor movement in the state of Washington.

Biggest Labor Day Celebration in History of Tacoma

"The unions in Tacoma last September held the largest Labor day celebration in the history of the city. Certainly this fact does not bear out the statement of our wet friends who claim that prohibition has had a blighting effect on the movement in that state.

"Frank W. Cotterill, secretary of the Building Trades Council in Seattle, writes a very interesting letter with reference to the situation.

"'Generally speaking,' says Secretary Cotterill, 'organized labor has increased in membership by at least 3,000 since January 1, 1915, and members have kept in better standing than ever before.

"'There have been no decreases in the wages in any line of employment and in many cases there have been increases. There is far less unemployment than a year ago and the outlook for the winter is better.'

"E P. Marsh is the president of the Washington State Federation of Labor and Mr. Marsh writes as follows:

"'I voted against the prohibition law two years ago because I did not believe it would work out, especially because of the fact that we had several thousand men and women, good trade unionists, making a livelihood from the liquor business. From my observation covering the period of ten months the state has been dry, I would state emphatically that I would never vote for a return of the saloon system.

"'We have had two great strikes since the state went dry and they have been marked by the sobriety of the men involved and a vigorous prosecution of their strikes.

In Dry Shreveport

Conditions in Shreveport, La., a dry city, were described by the speaker. He said:

"Tom J. Greer, president of the Louisiana Federation of Labor, in a recent letter writes: 'Since the influence of the liquor traffic has been removed from union politics we have made tremendous gains in Shreveport.

"'The following facts show what Shreveport labor has done since the town went dry in 1908:

"'Membership in labor unions has increased from 1,800 to 3,700.

"'Home owners among union men have increased forty per cent since Shreveport went dry.

Large Increase in Union Men

"'Carpenters receive 55 cents per hour; are able to work twelve months in the year. In that town of 20,000 white people, the carpenters' union has increased its membership from 65 to 375 since the town went dry.

"'When Shreveport was wet the painters' union had 35 members, worked 10 hours a day for $2.75. Today the painters' union has 145 members, eight hours a day and 55 cents an hour, or a scale of $4.40 per day.

"'Barbers have shortened their hours of labor, raised wages continuously and have a 100 per cent organization since Shreveport banished saloons.

Ice Plant in Former Brewery Employs Six Times as Many Workers

"'A brewery under the wet regime employed six non-union brewery workers. Today an ice factory at the same location employs forty union ice workers.

Dry Shreveport vs. Wet New Orleans

"'The wage scale in Shreveport compares favorably with any city in the country. New Orleans has 2,700 saloons, with the lowest wage scale in the country.'

"Still labor's wet 'friends' try to tell us that a dry town is detrimental to union labor; that it throws men out of jobs.

"There is just one thing wrong with that kind of a statement.

"It isn't true."

HELPS

for those engaged in the

Americanization of Foreign-Speaking People

Americanization of Immigrant Women
Price per 50, 50 cents; per 100, 90 cents.

Citizens in the Making
Price per 50, 40 cents; per 100, 75 cents.

Americanizing the Foreigner
Price per 50, 20 cents; per 100, 35 cents.

For DISTRIBUTION

a large variety of leaflets has been prepared in the following languages:

Arabic	German	Portuguese
Bohemian	Holland	Roumanian
Chinese	Hebrew	Russian
Croatian	Hungarian	Slovac
Danish	Italian	Spanish
Finnish	Norwegian	Swedish
French	Polish

Price per 100, 30, 25, 20 and 15 cents

POSTCARDS

Of Interest to Wage Earners
What Every Merchant Knows
Prosperity Statistics
Of Interest to Bankers
Of Interest to Taxpayers

German	Norwegian	Spanish
Italian	Polish	Swedish

Price per 50, 60 cents; per 100, $1.00.

NATIONAL W. C. T. U. PUBLISHING HOUSE
Evanston, Illinois

You Can Be So Well

Don't you know, ill health or chronic ailments, in nine out of every ten cases, are due to improper food, poor circulation, insufficient exercise, incorrect breathing, incorrect poise and restless slumber!

I give exercises that strengthen the impaired organs.

Remove those unnatural conditions and your ailments vanish. This may surprise you, but I am doing it daily; I have done it for eighty thousand women.

No Drugs or Medicines

You follow my directions in your room.

Are you too thin or too fat? You can weigh exactly what you should.

Medical magazines advertise my work; leading doctors approve it; their wives are my pupils.

Regain Health, Poise and Cheerful Spirits. You can. Tell me your faults in health or figure. I will help you. And I want to, so much. I will respect your confidence. Write for my Free Booklet No. 21.

Susanna Cocroft

Dept. 37. 624 Michigan Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.00 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 35c a year
Club rate for ten or more subscriptions, 25c a year

THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 25c a year
Sample Copies to Subscription Solicitors, Institutes or Conventions, sent free upon request.
Single Copies, 2c each . . . Per 100, $1.75

SUBSCRIPTIONS TO FOREIGN COUNTRIES

THE UNION SIGNAL . . . . $1.52 a year
Campaign Edition (monthly) . . 47c a year
THE YOUNG CRUSADER . . . . 37c a year

Address Evanston, Ill.

HAVE YOU USED THE "QUIZ?"

Have you as yet used THE UNION SIGNAL Quiz in your meetings? If not, why not announce that you will use the questions for a certain week or two weeks in your next meeting. Then when the day comes choose sides as in an old-fashioned spelldown, and have the leader ask the questions. (Of course, as a case of last resort, she will be able to answer the question herself, or settle any difference of opinion!)

If your attendance is not large enough for this method, write the questions on slips of paper, pass them at random, and have the ladies answer in turn, the others helping where there is need.

